

To My Death I Fight

By: BahamutReishiki

It's been seven months since Ichigo managed to defeat Aizen during the Winter War. Just recently settling into new life as a normal human, he is shocked when he finds out he has been accepted into the prestigious Honnouji Academy. Unwilling to go, but not having a choice in the matter, he reluctantly decides to attend but wonders just what the next year will bring.

Status: complete

Published: 2014-02-03

Updated: 2018-01-29

Words: 1039951

Chapters: 64

Rated: Fiction M - Language: English - Genre: Adventure/Humor - Characters: Ichigo K., Ryuko M., Satsuki K. - Reviews: 2,311 - Favs: 2,589
- Follows: 2,288

Original source: <https://www.fanfiction.net/s/10077052/1>

Exported with the assistance of FicHub.net

To My Death I Fight

Introduction

Who'll Stop the Rain?

If You Don't Know Me By Now

I'll Take You There

Instant Karma

Go Your Own Way

I Can't Help Myself

Just My Imagination

Tired of Being Alone

Bohemian Rhapsody

Living for the City

Riders on the Storm

Wish You Were Here

Disco Inferno

Psycho Killer

Won't Get Fooled Again

Behind Blue Eyes

Walk on the Wild Side

Tangled Up in Blue

Fire and Rain

One of These Nights

Carry On Wayward Son

Let's Stay Together

Have You Ever Seen the Rain

I'm Still in Love with You

Family Affair

Until You Come Back to Me

I Will Survive
Bad Moon Rising
God Save the Queen
Heart of Glass
Paranoid
Inner City Blues
Tonight's the Night
The Long and Winding Road
Respect Yourself
You Wear It Well
Tell Me Something Good
School's Out
Slipping Into Darkness
Blumenkranz
Something About England
The Guns of Brixton
The Magnificent Seven
Train in Vain
Guns on the Roof
London's Burning
Police and Thieves
The City of the Dead
Death or Glory
Zu der Nacht des Krieges
Don't Let the Sun Go Down On
You Make Me Feel Brand New
Killer Queen
Turn Back the Pendulum
Laughter in the Rain
Fly Like An Eagle

Can't Stand Losing You

Stairway to Heaven

Burning Love

Coat of Many Colors

Come and Get Your Love

After the Love has Gone

It Has to be This Way.

Never Can Say Goodbye

Who'll Stop the Rain?

Edited - November 6th, 2014: This is a new version of chapter one. As my story's progressed I went back and read this chapter only to find several glaring plot holes. The quality was also terrible (by my standards) so I rewrote most of it. If you're interested in the plot holes I'm afraid you'll just have to read the story. I would be more than willing to list everything I fixed BUT that would ruin the story for those coming in fresh and eager. One thing I will say is that this chapter's date has been changed to July 15 - which is Ichigo's seventeenth birthday.

---

...

---

Chapter 1 - Who'll Stop the Rain?

"Get your lazy ass down here, Ichigo!" The tranquil morning stillness was shattered completely by the piercing and annoying voice of Isshin Kurosaki, patriarch of the Kurosaki family, "I have important news!"

"Yeah, yeah, I'm coming,"

Ichigo Kurosaki, seventeen years old and a former substitute shinigami, sighed and looked out the window of his room before sitting up with a groan. A little more than eight months had passed since he had sacrificed his shinigami powers to defeat Sosuke Aizen once and for all. Sitting on the edge of his bed, one hand rubbing his face, Ichigo looked at the calendar on his desk and scowled. Today was his birthday which meant his dad would be pulling all sorts of stupid tricks.

As he finished getting dressed, the scowl never leaving his face, Ichigo left his room and headed downstairs. If the past three years had taught Ichigo anything it was that his dad never skipped an opportunity to 'train' his son. Body tensing in anticipation of his father's surprise attack Ichigo stopped and paused when he saw Uryu Ishida calmly sitting on the couch. Looking around, confident that this was a trick, Ichigo asked, "Why are you here, Uryu?"

"What makes you think I had a choice in the matter?" Uryu countered, a small amount of annoyance tinging his voice. Pointing his finger at Isshin he added, "Perhaps you should ask your father. He is the one that dragged me here, after all."

Turning to his dad, who to his credit had an innocent look on his face, Ichigo asked, "What the hell is going on? Why is Uryu here?"

"That's such a simple question, my lucky son!" Isshin proclaimed brightly as he jumped out of the chair, "You've been accepted into the prestigious Honnouji Academy, home of the brightest young minds in all of Japan, and it was all thanks to your handsome and extremely connected father!"

Ichigo turned to Uryu, who shared the same look of confusion, and let out a tired sigh. Raising a hand to his temple, a migraine threatening to erupt due to his father's idiocy, Ichigo growled and said, "What the hell are you talking about?"

"It was back during my days as a young and attractive bachelor!" Isshin excitedly began as he wrapped an arm around his son's shoulders. Annoyed at his dad's childish attempt to include him in his fantasies Ichigo tried to pull free only for Isshin to tighten his grip, "Masaki was off at college so your lovable father was left all alone. To combat the increasing loneliness in my heart I decided to travel across the country on a well-deserved vacation!"

Uryu rolled his eyes at Isshin, "While your story is no doubt fascinating, Mr. Kurosaki, I fail to see why you had to bring me here."

Isshin chuckled condescendingly, causing Uryu to mutter obscenities under his breath, and sighed wistfully, "Your eagerness to hear my story is appreciated, Uryu, but I'm just getting to the good part. Anyway, it was nine days into my vacation when I met an extremely funny and attractive woman."

"Hold on a minute," Ichigo interrupted. He was shocked that his dad, the bumbling idiot who never matured past childhood, was confessing to knowing another woman besides his mother. Rubbing his eyes, the sheer impossibility of his father's story overwhelming him, Ichigo asked, "You actually met a woman? Are you sure that she wasn't just a man dressed as a woman?"

Without warning Isshin let go of Ichigo before spinning around and attempting to kick his son in the face. Barely pausing in surprise at the unexpected attack before ducking down, the breeze from his father's attack rustling his naturally orange hair, Ichigo waited for his father's leg to pass overhead. Clenching a fist Ichigo swung his arm towards his dad's stomach only to be shocked when he missed. Leaping over his stunned son's head and landing on the couch, careful to avoid hitting Uryu, Isshin launched himself from the piece of furniture, tackling Ichigo and sending them both tumbling to the ground. Frowning disappointingly as he watched his son's struggles, the shouts and protests muffled by the carpet, Isshin cleared his throat and continued talking as if nothing just happened.

"As I was saying, it was when I was in Tokyo twenty two years ago that I met the woman. She was tall, beautiful and incredibly... well-endowed." To Uryu's horror Isshin began making suggestive gestures with his hands, "She was the incarnation of everything a man wanted in a woman but alas my heart was already taken by your mother!"

Fed up with having his face smashed against the floor Ichigo managed to gather enough strength to briefly overpower his father. As Isshin stumbled back, a look of mild surprise on his face from Ichigo having managed to escape his patented delinquent chokehold, he was sent flying into the wall as Ichigo kicked him in the stomach. Seething angrily Ichigo gave his dad, who was currently lying dazed on the floor, an annoyed glare, "Goddamn idiot."

"How could you treat your father with such disrespect?"

Completely uninjured Isshin leapt off the ground and dusted his clothes off before giving Ichigo a stern look, "I suppose this means you don't want to know how your awesome father managed to get you into Honnouji Academy."

Ichigo scowled but didn't say anything. Truthfully he was interested for two reasons. The first was that he never heard of Honnouji Academy. The second, and much more important one, was that what he dad said would determine how badly Ichigo would kick his ass when this was all over. Folding his arms, the scowl never leaving his face, Ichigo rolled his eyes and said, "Just get on with the damn story already."

Isshin nodded sagely and coughed to clear his throat, "It all started one mysterious day twenty two years ago..."

22 Years Ago

Sometimes Isshin couldn't help but wonder if sealing away his shinigami powers was the only way he could have saved Masaki's soul from disappearing from existence. If Kisuke Urahara was the genius everybody lauded him to be, than he should have been able to invent a gigai that allowed him to use some of his powers at the very least.

It was too late for him to do anything about it though. Isshin had willfully and gladly sacrificed his power to save Masaki even though she was a Quincy. If given the same choice once more, he would do it once more. He was in love with her and nothing anyone could say or do would change his mind. That did not mean he wanted to sit around and be helpless if Masaki ever got into trouble or danger. He had saved her life once already and he wasn't looking to fail a second time.

When he stopped by Kisuke's shop to ask about improving his gigai, the handsome bastard seemed to mull over his question for a few seconds before proudly declaring that he should be able to whip something up in a couple of days. The exuberance and excitement Kisuke emitted disturbed Isshin. Nothing good could come from the maniacal gleam in the former captain's eye, but left with no choice in the matter he nevertheless complied.

Stopping to pick up his new gigai a few days later, which had been modified to keep Masaki's soul safe from the hollow dwelling inside her, Isshin began to have second thoughts when Kisuke began giggling crazily while holding the gigai. The shop keeper informed Isshin that the upgraded gigai would have reflexes and strength triple that of a normal human. Kisuke lamented that he wanted to do more, but he would begin risked degradation of the spiritual thread connecting Isshin's soul with Masaki's.

" I'm really bored. I wonder if there's a movie theater nearby."

Isshin suppressed a yawn as he explored Tokyo. He had originally come to the city since he heard the Tokyo Fashion Week was about to begin. As he purchased the train ticket, his imagination was running in high gear as his mind was filled with images of hot and beautiful women modeling revealing dresses and bikinis. That did not mean he would ever touch. The only one for him was Masaki, but that didn't mean he couldn't go and enjoy the models as an art critic.

If he had known what he was getting into, he would have skipped coming to Tokyo entirely.

Instead of bikinis and dresses, he watched women strut out wearing clothing and outfits that boggled his mind. Who in their right minds would want to wear something that took four hours to prepare? It wasn't modeling, he quickly realized, but a subtle contest between designers to see who could make the most stupid outfit. He didn't know who was winning, but his interest was surely losing.

"What am I going to do for fun now?" Isshin grabbed his face in frustration. He had planned on staying in Tokyo for a week for the show. He even booked a hotel room for seven days, damn it. Now with the show a bust, he had literally nothing planned. Sighing miserably, he kicked his foot against the sidewalk and grumbled, "I suppose I could go to Tokyo National Museum or something."

So deep was he in his thoughts, that Isshin was completely unaware that his mindless walking had taken him directly past perhaps the most high-end and expensive hotel in Tokyo. The hotel, which catered to those participating in Tokyo Fashion Week, reserved the best rooms and penthouses for the designers and couturiers. As he waited to cross the street on the other side of the hotel, he was nearly thrown forward and into the path of an oncoming car as a large explosion hit him in the back.

"Damn, what was that?" Quickly picking himself off the ground, Isshin turned around and saw that the explosion had originated from the entrance of the hotel. Tongues of orange and yellow flames rose from the destroyed entrance and thick smoke was billowing out from the first two floors. As his ears picked up the far off sound of sirens approaching, Isshin threw caution to the wind and ran past the escaping civilians and into the hotel.

Almost immediately Isshin's nose was assaulted by the smell of burning flesh, forcing him to cover the bottom half of his face with his sleeve in an attempt to filter it out. All around him bodies of peoples unfortunate to have been caught in the explosion littered the ground. Isshin knew, with a morbid sense of realization, that if he could still see the dead, the air would be filled with the floating and broken souls of those surrounding him.

Shaking his head to clear it of the depressing thoughts, he cupped his hands around his mouth and shouted over the blaring alarms, "Hello? Can anyone hear me?"

He didn't see anyone, but his enhanced senses, courtesy of Kisuke, picked up subtle coughing coming from the lounge directly across the lobby. Sprinting forward, careful to not step on any of the bodies out of respect for the dead, Isshin braced his shoulder and slammed the doors open.

The lounge, which had catered exclusively to millionaires and those able to afford bills ranging in the thousands of dollars, was a mess. Tables and chairs, made from the most expensive woods and materials, lay burnt and broken.

" Is anyone in here?"

Isshin's eyes noticed something moving near the back of the lounge. Covering his mouth with his sleeve to keep out the smoke, he pushed forward through the heat towards the survivor. Reaching them only a few seconds later, Isshin quickly determined that the person had been pinned beneath rubble when the explosion went off. Without much effort, he picked up the concrete and wood that must have weighed over two hundred pounds. Quickly pressing two fingers against the woman's neck, he was relieved to see she still had a pulse.

" Ma'am? Can you hear me?" When Isshin didn't receive a reply apart from a grunt of pain, his heart rate picked up. Quickly and carefully picking the woman up bridal style, he said to her in a comforting voice, "Don't you worry ma'am. I'm going to get you out of here."

Isshin hadn't even made it halfway to the lobby when there was another harsh coughing and a man shouted, "Drop the bitch and get on the ground!"

The speaker was a man dressed in full military camouflage and wielding a pistol. He had been part of a group that had planned to take the couturiers and designers staying at the hotel during the Tokyo Festival Week hostage for millions upon millions of dollars in ransom. That had all went to hell when one of the idiots set off the bomb that was supposed to be for the police. Now he was the only one left and he wasn't about to let his ticket out of here just leave.

Raising his shaking pistol towards Isshin's face, he snarled, "I said drop her and get on the ground!"

Isshin weighed his options. He was sure he could avoid the bullet the man fired, but he wasn't sure he could do so while holding the woman.

"I cannot do that," he answered stoically, "I'm a doctor. I cannot leave a patient behind."

"You think I'm fucking kidding around?" the man yelled before coughing up some blood. Wiping the bloody drool on the back of his free hand, he shouted over the flames, "I'm not joking around here!"

Isshin was about to answer when there was a sound similar to that of a whip before the man's arm was severed off at the elbow. As the man dropped to his knees, his remaining hand gripping what was left of his right arm, Isshin took the chance to flee. As he turned and ran back into the lobby, he could have sworn he caught a glimpse of a figure watching him leave. Ignoring it as a product of smoke inhalation, he ran through the lobby and back outside. As he took in several gulps of smoke-free air, he was instantly greeted with over a dozen police officers in full combat gear. Upon noticing the woman in his arms, they quickly raised their weapons and ordered him onto the ground.

"Don't shoot!" he shouted, "I found her inside. She injured and needs medical attention!"

The situation was tense for several seconds until one of the officers turned his head and pressed a finger against his ear. After speaking to someone over the radio, he nodded to his fellow officers to stand down and let Isshin pass. Racing down the steps of the hotel, Isshin was escorted by an officer to a waiting ambulance, where several paramedics were on standby. As he delicately put the woman on a gurney, Isshin turned to leave only to find a delicate hand gripping his wrist.

" Hold on..." the woman whispered to the paramedics. Turning her eyes to Isshin, who noted the exotic coloring, she asked, "Who are you?"

Isshin gave her a reassuring smile, "The name's Isshin Shiba."

" Isshin Shiba?" The woman closed her eyes for a moment before smiling, "I'm... Ragyo Kiryuin. Thank you for saving me..."

End Flashback

Ichigo stared at his father in mute shock as the tale finally came to an end. After nearly a minute of absolute silence passed, his mind desperately trying to come up with something to say, Ichigo took a deep breath and said, "That has to be the biggest load of crap I've ever heard. Couldn't you have at least tried to come up with something more believable?"

"But it's all true!" Isshin argued impetuously like a child, "Your amazing father is a hero!"

Before Ichigo could come up with a retort he was stopped when Uryu spoke up in haste, "Hang on a minute, Ichigo, I remember reading something about this. I can't place the exact time but a little over twenty years ago there was a terrorist attack in Tokyo during the fashion week."

"You're kidding me," Ichigo turned to Uryu in surprise. He found it hard to believe that his dad, despite being a former shinigami, was capable of doing something like he described in his story.

"I find it hard to believe myself," Uryu conceded as he wracked his mind for the limited details he knew. The young Quincy had read up about the attack a couple of years ago but found actual details, not those propagated by the media, to be sorely lacking, "The details are sketchy but the goal of the terrorists was to kidnap and ransom several of the most powerful CEOs and couturiers in the world for hundreds of millions of dollars. Fashion companies twenty years ago were quite wealthy, Ichigo, and Ragyo Kiryuin was one of the richest and most powerful even back then, before Revocs came to dominate the global market."

Ichigo gave Uryu a blank stare, "That's all well and good but explain that in simple words."

Uryu coughed into his hand and adjusted his glasses before explaining, "Ragyo Kiryuin is the CEO and founder of Revocs, the most powerful and influential clothing designer and distributor in the world. Revocs controls roughly ninety percent of all apparel sales, making Ragyo one of the richest people in the world."

That made a lot of sense to Ichigo, but he couldn't help but ask, "That makes things a lot easier to understand, but what's the deal with the blackboard behind you?"

Uryu turned around and saw, to his confusion, that he had somehow drawn a map of the world with various percentages across each continent on a blackboard that hadn't been there a moment ago, "I'm not quite sure..."

Ignoring the implausibility for the moment Ichigo looked at his dad and dryly asked, "How does your story have anything to do with me? You're not going to tell me Ragyo Kiryuin controls Honnouji Academy, are you?"

"Your intelligence makes me proud, my son!" Isshin raced out of the room, sounds of paper rustling and objects crashing to the ground in his wake, before he sprinted back with a framed piece of paper in his hands, "I got a call from Ragyo about a week after saving her life. She thanked me and wanted to know what she could do to repay me. I, the generous man that I am, could not accept payment and refused but Ragyo was a persistent woman. That is why it came as a big surprise when I received your letter of acceptance to Honnouji Academy along with a handwritten letter from Ragyo herself!"

"I don't know," Ichigo wasn't fully convinced by his father's absurd story. There was no chance in hell that his bumbling idiot of a father knew someone as rich and powerful as Ragyo Kiryuin, "I find it suspicious that she waited more than twenty years before paying you back. This seems too much like a scam to me. Are you sure you weren't scammed into giving up your credit card?"

"Do you take your dear old father for an idiot?" Isshin shouted passionately, causing Uryu and Ichigo to collectively facepalm. Upon seeing his son's lack of respect Isshin stepped forward and head-butted him, "Did you think this letter of acceptance was simply dropped in the mail? It was hand delivered by Ragyo's personal secretary. It came in a fancy case and everything!"

When Isshin noticed Ichigo simply staring at him, a look of both confusion and annoyance on his face, Isshin grumbled and folded his arms childishly, "What's wrong with you? You were invited, personally by Ragyo, to one of the best schools in Japan. You should be jumping in joy alongside your old man!"

"Thanks but no thanks," Ichigo ignored his father's shocked sputters, "I'm fine staying at Karakura High School. Why would I go to some fancy school in Tokyo when I can stay right here?"

"I find it difficult to say this, Ichigo, but your dad has a point," Uryu interjected, a sour taste in his mouth upon agreeing with Isshin, "This is an opportunity most people will never get. Honnouji Academy is one of the best academies not only in Japan but in the entire world. The selection process is notoriously difficult. Ragyo Kiryuin handing you a full scholarship is the educational equivalent of winning the lottery. You shouldn't refuse to go just because you're stubborn."

"Your womanly friend has a point, my ungrateful son," Isshin shouted, causing Uryu to sputter in embarrassment and rage at the comment.

"What did you say?"

Isshin sadly patted Uryu on the shoulder, "There is no reason to be ashamed of your secret. Sewing is a fine pastime! To think that my son was this open-minded about his friends! Tell me, does your father know of your dark and embarrassing secret?"

"My father?" Uryu sputtered, "Ryuken is the one that taught me to sew in the first place!"

"Ah," Isshin adopted a sagely stance, "That explains so much about my old friend. Such as why he didn't play sports or why it took him forever to get married. To be honest, I was kind of surprised he even got married. With his looks and fashion sense, I would have thought otherwise."

While Uryu sputtered indignantly, Ichigo rolled his eyes, "Do I even have a say in the matter?"

"Of course you do, my ignorant son!" Isshin exclaimed seriously, "You can say whatever you want but as of last week I've enrolled you as a third year student at Honnouji Academy. Now, there's no need for the stunned silence. Your awesome father deserves what's coming to him."

"Everything, huh?" Ichigo grinned maliciously while cracking his knuckles. His father deserved the beating he was about to receive wholeheartedly, but just as he began to sneak up on his dad, there was a sudden knock at the door.

"A guest this early in the morning?" Isshin pursed his lips as he tried to think if he missed any appointments. Ducking beneath a haphazardly thrown punch from his son Isshin knew that it was Monday, which meant the clinic was open, but he didn't have any appointments until the afternoon. Vaulting into the air, avoiding Ichigo's sweeping leg, Isshin decided to answer the door anyway. As a doctor he took the Hippocratic Oath. Turning away a potential patient, someone who might need medical attention, never crossed his mind. Slamming his feet into his son's back, forcing Ichigo back to the floor once more Isshin nodded his head and said, "Whoever's outside must be important! Ichigo, stop lying down on the job and go see who it is while I entertain your friend with further tales of my manly exploits!"

"Whatever," Ichigo groaned as he pulled his body off the floor for the second time in five minutes. Ignoring the look of terror on Uryu's face as his father dragged him towards the photo albums Ichigo realized a normal person would have felt guilty. He personally knew how boring his dad's stories were. Usually he would not want anyone to suffer listening to his old man prattle on about stuff he made up but Ichigo decided that Uryu deserved whatever was coming to him.

Suppressing a yawn as he walked to the door, his mind making a mental note to get more sleep, Ichigo opened the front door to the clinic and was greeted with a teenager roughly his age with flat green hair and eyes. While the color of the teen's hair was strange enough it was his outfit that drew the full brunt of Ichigo attention. Instead of wearing what Ichigo, and most sane people, would call normal clothing the teen wore a full white trench coat and pants with several sets of spikes jutting forward from his waist and shoulders.

Wondering how the hell the teen could sit down without impaling himself Ichigo decided to cut his losses while he still could and began closing the door, "I'm sorry but I'm not interested in anything you might be selling."

Before Ichigo could fully close and lock the door the teen jammed his foot in the opening, "Perhaps I should have worn something a bit less unique. Anyway, the name's Uzu Sanageyama, Student Council Athletic Committee Chair of Honnouji Academy."

Ichigo gave Sanageyama a deadpan expression, "Who?"

Sanageyama looked at Ichigo in confusion, "Didn't you receive your letter of acceptance last week?"

Ichigo closed his eyes and let out an aggravated sigh as he tried to figure out a way he could murder his dad without getting caught. As much as he hated admitting it he had to give his old man credit. Ichigo didn't think the bumbling idiot was savvy enough to transfer him to another school long enough in advance that he couldn't do anything about it. Either his dad was a genius or insane and Ichigo was leaning towards the latter option, "Look, I don't know what my old man told you but I'm not going to Honnouji Academy.

For a couple of seconds Sanageyama was surprised by Ichigo's refusal. This wasn't the first time he had to visit a prospective student. Usually by the time he explained why he was there Sanageyama had to shake the prostrating student off his leg. Smirking as his opinion of Ichigo increased Sanageyama gave a hearty laugh, "I wasn't expecting you to say that! Oh man, if Gamagori heard you say that he would try dragging you all the way to Honnouji Academy."

"Gamagori?" Ichigo had no idea who that was, "Who the hell is -"

"It is very rude to leave guests outside, Ichigo!"

Grumbling as the sounds of heavy footsteps drew closer Ichigo let out a sigh and leaned to the side. As Isshin came crashing through the air, his bare foot barely missing his son's head by only inches, Ichigo reached up and clenched his hand around his shirt. Spinning around once, his grip never faltering, Ichigo quickly let go and watched his father impact against the street with a hollow thud.

Huffing in irritation, both at his father's childish antics and the fact that he tried doing it when they had a guest, Ichigo gave Sanageyama a frustrated look, "I suppose you can come in if you want."

Sanageyama nodded and gave Isshin a cursory glance before taking Ichigo up on his advice, "What about your dad?"

Ichigo gave the unconscious body of his father a quick look before shrug

---

...

---

Uryu watched Sanageyama walk into Ichigo's house and immediately suppressed a look of shock. He knew of Satsuki Kiryuin's Elite Four, if only in passing, and the exploits of Uzu Sanageyama, both during and prior to his enrollment at Honnouji Academy, were impressive. Glancing at the green haired youth's shinai Uryu extended his hand, "Uzu Sanageyama... I can't say this is a surprise considering who you work for."

"What can I say?" Sanageyama chuckled as he shook Uryu's hand. Looking around Ichigo's living room, missing the slight narrowing of the Quincy's eyes in the process, Sanageyama whistled appreciatively as he flopped down on the couch, "So who are you?"

"I am Uryu Ishida."

It would be a lie to say Sanageyama wasn't surprised by the name. He recalled Satsuki mentioning an Uryu Ishida several times in the past. What were the odds that he would meet the person Satsuki talked so highly of on his mission to gauge Ichigo Kurosaki's power and personality? Chuckling quietly at the irony of the situation Sanageyama folded his hands against the nape of his neck, "You're just as smart as Lady Satsuki said."

"Lady Satsuki?" Ichigo, confused by the strangely archaic honorifics Sanageyama was using, turned to Uryu in confusion, "Who is he talking about?"

Uryu gave Ichigo a tense glare as he fixed his glasses, "It's none of your concern, Ichigo."

"Don't pull that on me," Ichigo countered, "He obviously knows who you are."

Seeing no way to avoid having the conversation Uryu gave Sanageyama a curt glance before beginning, "Last summer my father enrolled me in a two week internship at Revocs. I, of course, protested going but Ryuken insisted working under Ragyo Kiryuin would be a good learning experience and broaden my horizons. I met Satsuki Kiryuin on my first day. I only spoke with her a handful of times but she is an intelligent and driven woman who is not to be underestimated. However, I'm sure Sanageyama didn't come to Karakura Town to hear about my life."

If Uryu had to admit the truth he didn't want to explain what he did last summer.

When Ryuken informed him of his internship at Revocs blue he gave him only one day to get his affairs in order before he would need to leave. That wasn't even enough time to tell his friends, which made explaining why he disappeared when he came back extremely awkward. Luckily Orihime had been there. Her fantastical tale, accompanied with drawings that still confounded Uryu, that he had been abducted by aliens and brought to a world reduced to a nuclear wasteland where he had to collect bottle caps and fight mutated animals was enough to cause everyone else to shake their heads and collectively groan.

"True enough," Sanageyama smirked and reached into his Goku Uniform. Pulling out a thick envelope and tossing it to Ichigo Sanageyama explained, "Honnouji Academy's fall term begins in twenty three days. As a new student you're required to attend Student Evaluation Day. It's all simple stuff, really. Lady Satsuki will determine your initial placement and potential to wear a Goku Uniform."

"Goku Uniform?" Ichigo looked up from the papers in his hand, a confused look on his face.

Uryu grumbled, a look of mild irritation in his eyes, before he began explaining once more, "Goku Uniforms are the standard uniforms of Honnouji Academy and are imbued with special threads known as Life Fibers. The percentage of Life Fibers in a uniform indicates the overall power. A higher percentage enables the wearer to accomplish feats of strength most people could only dream about.

Ichigo stared at Uryu, a deadpan look in his eyes, and asked, "Just how the hell do you know all this?"

"Like I explained..." Uryu smugly turned away from Ichigo with a grin on his face, "... I may have only spoken to Satsuki Kiryuin a handful of times but I never said our talks weren't productive."

Ichigo didn't need to know, and Uryu wouldn't tell him unless the situation was dire, that Satsuki attempted to recruit him. It wasn't as overt as simply asking him to come to Honnouji Academy but Uryu was intelligent enough to realize he was being led along during some of his conversations with Satsuki. If Satsuki's subtle prods at convincing him to enroll at Honnouji Academy weren't bad enough there was one other thing that caused Uryu to refuse to work with her.

During the last few days of his internship, after most of the others quit or returned home, Satsuki had pulled him aside and brought him to a highly secure room. Uryu remembered watching in more than mild interest as Satsuki inputted at least a twenty digit code before ushering him into the room, inside of which sat several high density bundles of Life Fibers. Satsuki allowed him to examine them, under the single rule that he not remove any of the Life Fibers from the room. A rule, in hindsight, that Uryu had been glad to follow. As he stared at the glowing red fibers, a nauseous feeling growing in the pit of his stomach, Uryu could feel the Life Fibers giving off a small but substantial amount of spiritual energy.

"That right," Sanageyama propped his feet on the coffee table and leaned back against the couch, "The strength of a Goku uniform comes from the number of stars stitched on it. The normal Honnouji Academy uniform contains no Life Fibers and those that wear them are called No-Stars. After that are the One-Star students and the Two-Star club captains."

Upon noticing Ichigo's attention on his Blade Regalia Sanageyama grinned as he pointed to the three four pointed stars stitched into the fabric, "This is a Three-Star Goku Uniform. Only the Elite Four of the Honnouji Academy Student Council has the right and privilege to wear one."

Ichigo frowned as he tried to think who in their right minds would allow students access to such dangerous things. It made no sense to him, "Isn't it a little dangerous to give students super-powered clothing?"

"You have to understand Ichigo," Uryu began with an overly exaggerated sigh. He couldn't fault Ichigo for his lack of knowledge. Not a lot of people left Karakura Town except for business trips and vacations. Turning to Ichigo, memories of what he saw outside of Karakura Town fresh in his mind, Uryu said, "Karakura High School is perhaps the most normal, or least if you look at it from a different perspective, school in the country. Despite how absurd it sounds most academies are completely controlled by the Student Councils, who are subsequently backed by their family's businesses. The Kiryuin Conglomerate is a good example. Through a mixture of espionage and blackmail Satsuki Kiryuin is indirectly controlling all but a dozen or so schools."

"I knew that."

Ichigo wasn't as stubborn as other people thought. He had been suspicious of his dad constantly making up excuses about why they couldn't leave Karakura Town for anything, even vacation. One night on patrol he decided to take a little detour out of Karakura Town. What he saw past the outskirts of the city stunned him into silence. It turned out that most of the world was a wasteland. When he confronted Kisuke Urahara about it, since the former captain knew just about everything, the man gave a frustration-inducing smirk and hinted that things were quite strange around the world. Needless to say Ichigo turned around and left without asking anything else.

"This place is quite nice. It reminds me a bit of home," Sanageyama admitted, nostalgia evident in his voice, "But you don't need to worry about anything like that. Lady Satsuki is aware of the power Goku Uniforms possess. Every student is carefully screened and tested before receiving a Goku Uniform. In the three years she's been the Student Council President Lady Satsuki hasn't made a single wrong decision. If anyone attempts to go around her orders they are immediately met with harsh and direct punishment."

"You kill people over stealing some clothes?"

"It's much more complicated than that, Ichigo," Uryu interjected again, letting Ichigo know he was about to start on another one of his lectures, "Goku Uniforms are designed and distributed by Satsuki Kiryuin, who modeled them after her mother's line of clothing. If anyone were to somehow acquire a Goku Uniform they could reverse engineer Life Fibers, which would lead to a global arms race involving increasingly powerful clothing."

"I still find this hard to believe," Ichigo crossed his arms and let out a heavy sigh, "Clothing with superpowers still sounds really stupid to me."

"I wouldn't worry too much," Sanageyama lightly tapped his Goku Uniform as he leaned forward and uncrossed his legs, "Lady Satsuki wouldn't allow you to come to Honnouji Academy if she thought you were a spy. Everything about you, from your history to who you know, has been investigated under Lady Satsuki's orders."

"Great," Ichigo grumbled and turned away, "I have a stalker now. That's just what I needed."

Sanageyama shrugged but his expression tensed upon hearing Ichigo's casual insulting of Satsuki, "I don't pretend to know what Lady Satsuki thinks but she was impressed with what she found. I'm more than sure you'll get at least a One-Star Goku Uniform once you arrive and take your evaluation. Hell, you might even make Two-Star if you try out of the Kendo Club. I heard you're quite skilled with a sword."

"How do you know about that?"

"If you really want to find out, come to Honnouji Academy," Sanageyama looked at his cell phone and sighed, "Great, it seems my work is never done. It's been nice chatting with you but I have to get going. I hope you decide to go to Honnouji Academy, Ichigo. Perhaps we could have a little spar."

As soon as Sanageyama left, Ichigo turned on Uryu, "Why does it feel as if I'm out of the loop?"

Uryu seemed mystified as well. Eyes narrowed slightly and propping his fist in front of his face, the Quincy answered, "I am not quite sure. From my limited interactions with Satsuki Kiryuin, she does not seem like the type of person to take interest in anyone without similar mental fortitude and force of will as herself."

"You seem to know all about what's going on," Ichigo's eyes narrowed dangerously, "Did you have anything to do with this?"

"Who do you take me for, your dad?" Uryu seemed insulted by the accusation, "If I went through all the trouble of getting you into Honnouji Academy, wouldn't it make sense that I would get myself enrolled as well?"

"Oh, shut it already," Ichigo grumbled at Uryu's logic, "So who is this Satsuki person anyway?"

"Satsuki Kiryuin..." Uryu wracked his brain for the information, "She's driven, motivated and possesses an utter disdain for anyone that doesn't meet her own personal criteria and standards. When I started my internship at Revocs there were fifteen of us. The very first day we were brought into a room where Satsuki Kiryuin was waiting for us. Before we knew what was happening Satsuki began speaking about how all clothing is sacred to humanity and that it is our fate to wear it. Right then and there half of the interns dropped out and I think Satsuki expected that to happen."

That was a rather terrible story, so Ichigo said the only thing on his mind, "Well... shit."

"That is exactly my point," Uryu nodded and looked out the window. He was surprised, perhaps even more than Ichigo, to see Sanageyama. Satsuki Kiryuin was an intelligent woman. She wouldn't have sent one of her most loyal followers to Karakura Town without a very good reason, "Her interest in you is quite surprising. Be careful, Ichigo. Satsuki Kiryuin is not someone to mess with so take my advice and stay far away from her if you do go to Honnouji Academy."

Ichigo scowled, more out of frustration than annoyance, and opened his mouth to say something when the front door began shaking. Ignoring the muffled protests from his father, demanding to be let back inside, Ichigo ran a hand through his hair, "Damn, why do I have to go to Honnouji Academy?"

"You should look on the bright side."

Ichigo turned to Uryu and was immediately annoyed by the smug look on his face, "And what exactly is the bright side to all this?"

"At least Honnouji Academy won't be boring." Uryu answered with an amused hint to his voice. He knew Ichigo well enough to realize trouble followed him like a magnet. It was only a matter of time, perhaps even days, before something surprising happened at Honnouji Academy, "Just try not to get into too much trouble."

"Go to hell, Uryu."

"Believe me, I'm in heaven right now," Uryu answered smugly as he walked past Ichigo towards the front door. Holding onto the handle of the door but not yet pulling it open Uryu turned around and snapped off one final comment, "I can't wait to hear you tell everyone where you'll be going next year. I'm sure Tatsuki will be more than thrilled to hear about it."

As the weight of what he would need to do came crashing down upon his head Ichigo failed to notice Isshin quietly opening the window and letting himself back in the house. He did, however, feel the subtle change in the air and quickly spun around his father's meager attempt to tackle him. Grabbing Isshin in a chokehold before slamming the older man into the ground Ichigo gave Uryu a dry look and asked, "Why don't you go back home and sew something. I heard Orihime wanted you to make her a new dress."

"I told you, it's just a hobby!"

---

...

---

In the darkened Student Council Chambers of Honnouji Academy several people watched the information scrolling across the screen in front of them. Situated on the screen, wearing the standard Karakura High School male uniform and a familiar scowl, was an image of Ichigo Kurosaki. The picture, which appears to have been lifted directly from Karakura High School's servers, took up the entire left half of the screen while data and statistics about Ichigo streamed down the right side.

"He looks like a delinquent," the largest figure in the room growled irritably as he stared at Ichigo's picture, "Just look at his hair! There is no doubt that his punkish attitude will bring disorder and chaos to this academy!"

"There's no need to raise your voice when we're standing right here, Gamagori," A shorter figure with teal hair chided from where he was sitting. Pressing a few keys on his laptop, the command instantly traveling to the screen, Houka Inumuta's collar automatically unzipped itself as he began speaking, "Ichigo Kurosaki - Age 16.

Third year student at Karakura High School and is currently ranks fifth in his class."

"Karakura Town?" a regal voice muttered quietly. Holding the nearly empty teacup gently in her hands she nodded her head, "I see... continue, Inumuta."

Inumuta nodded and immediately several pictures of Ichigo's family appeared on the screen, "Ichigo Kurosaki is the eldest of three siblings, the other two being Karin and Yuzu Kurosaki - Age 12. His father is Isshin Kurosaki, who runs a small family clinic. Hmm... it says his mother, Masaki Kurosaki, is deceased and yet..."

The regal figure turned away from the screen, her eyebrows raised in mild interest, "What is it?"

A frown marred Inumuta's face as his fingers raced across the keyboard. As he searched databases and servers, the data he was looking for conspicuously absent, Inumuta's eyes narrowed as he let out a frustrated sigh, "It says that Masaki Kurosaki was murdered nine years ago but there is a strange absence of media coverage. From all accounts Ichigo's mother was a well-liked woman in Karakura Town. There is only one police report and even that fails to mention the cause of death or any suspects."

"Is that why Strawberry is always scowling?" Nonon Jakuzure, Honnouji Academy Student Council Non-Athletic Committee Chair, stood up to get a better look at Ichigo. After a moment of staring at his picture, Nonon's mouth spread in a mischievous smirk, "He may have a stupid name but he's quite good looking."

"You dishonor yourself in front of Lady Satsuki, Jakuzure!" Gamagori shouted, his eyes gleaming a malevolent yellow.

The regal figure turned her gaze to Gamagori, her piercing blue eyes causing the argument to immediately cease, "Calm down, Gamagori."

Gamagori deflated slightly, "Of course, Lady Satsuki."

Satsuki Kiryuin, daughter of the illustrious Ragyo Kiryuin, stared at the image of Ichigo Kurosaki for several seconds. Three days ago her mother called to inform her that Ichigo would be attending Honnouji Academy yet Satsuki could not find a logical reason for the decision. Her mother may control the Board of Directors for Honnouji Academy but she was usually content to let Satsuki do what she pleased. To so suddenly show a vested interest in a random teenager implied she knew something about Ichigo that Satsuki did not.

"If I may continue," Inumuta's fingers were a blur on the keyboard as he rapidly typed in commands, "Pertaining to your request, Lady Satsuki, I expanded my search from Ichigo Kurosaki to his immediate family, both paternal and maternal, and found something quite interesting."

With one final keystroke from Inumuta the image of Ichigo vanished only to be replaced by several digital newspaper clippings. Leaning forward, her attention focused on the headlines describing a terrorist attack in Tokyo, Satsuki's blue eyes narrowed when she failed to find a single picture of the attack. Inumuta, sensing her irritation at the lack of evidence, adjusted his glasses and explained, "As you can see, Lady Satsuki, there are absolutely no images of the actual terrorist attack. All the media sources describing the attack come from third party witnesses."

Satsuki frowned before closing her eyes, "This is quite suspicious, Inumuta. Am I to assume this has something to do with Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"Not Ichigo but his father," Inumuta corrected before bringing up an image of Isshin, "While the lack of photographic evidence is suspicious every single source I could find agrees that Isshin Kurosaki, or Shiba as he was known back then, somehow saved your mother's life during the attack."

So it appeared her mother was inviting Ichigo Kurosaki to Honnouji Academy because his father saved her life more than twenty years ago. Satsuki, rather than being satisfied with that answer, only found her annoyance at the situation growing. If there was one thing she hated in the world it was nepotism. People should not advance due to familial ties but because they earned it through hard work and dedication.

"We must face the facts of the situation," Satsuki said after a moment of quiet contemplation, "Ichigo Kurosaki will be attending Honnouji Academy at the start of the fall semester. Gamagori, are the preparations for the next school year nearly complete?"

"Just about," Ira Gamagori answered proudly. As the Student Council Disciplinary Committee Chair of Honnouji Academy it was his duty to make sure those unworthy of wearing Goku Uniforms did not try to abscond with one. He could not count the number of times another academy sent a spy to steal a Goku Uniform, "All the new One-Star students have been announced and their uniforms are prepared and waiting to be picked up. The elections for the new club captains are nearly complete and Iori is distributing their Two-Star Goku Uniforms as we speak."

Satsuki sipped the last of her tea, the bitter liquid going down smoothly, as she listened to Gamagori's report, "Very good. Ichigo Kurosaki will be here in twenty two days. Let us make sure that he receives a warm welcome. Jakuzure, have one of the club captains meet him upon his arrival."

"Which club would you prefer, Lady Satsuki?" Jakuzure's pink eyes glinted maliciously as she thought of various ways to make Ichigo's life miserable.

"It does not matter," Satsuki answered calmly, her mind already focusing on other events, "My mother might have gone over my head to allow Ichigo Kurosaki admittance to Honnouji Academy but it is still my decision whether he is qualified to stay."

There was a pregnant silence as the three members of Satsuki's Elite Four allowed her words to sink in. After about a minute of silence a sharp ringing noise echoed from Inumuta's laptop. Looking at the ID of the caller Inumuta turned to Satsuki, "Sanageyama has finished his task in Karakura Town. Shall I connect him?"

Satsuki nodded, "Yes."

Inumuta pressed a single key before there was a slight rise in the ambient static in the room as his laptop connected to the speakers on the screen. After a moment, the static dying down to nothing, Sanageyama's voice filtered in, "Hey Inumuta, is everything working?"

"You are speaking to Lady Satsuki! Show some respect!" Gamagori rebuffed.

"Forgive me, Lady Satsuki," Sanageyama's tone was apologetic before he resumed speaking, "Anyway, I just left Ichigo Kurosaki's home. He's definitely an interesting guy to say the least. However... I got the feeling that Ichigo doesn't want to go to Honnouji Academy."

"What do you mean Ichigo Kurosaki does not want to attend this prestigious academy? Speak some sense, Sanageyama!" Gamagori shouted, his disbelief speaking for all four people currently in the room.

"It turns out his dad enrolled him without telling him about it," Sanageyama paused for a moment, causing only the ambient sounds of Karakura Town to come over the connection. After a few seconds of silence, interspaced by what sounded like someone muttering to themselves, Sanageyama's voice reappeared, "Ichigo seemed quite pissed off when he found out."

"We might be able to use that against Ichigo Kurosaki if the need arises," Satsuki announced as several plans came to mind, "Do you have anything else to report?"

Sanageyama was about to say no when he remembered Uryu's presence in Ichigo's house, "Yeah, I think he's close friends with Uryu Ishida."

That was a name Satsuki did not think she would hear again anytime soon. Uryu Ishida was a brilliant teenager whose theories and ideas concerning Life Fibers greatly intrigued her. It was his theory of using a zigzag cross-stitch, after all, that increased the power of her Goku Uniforms by nearly fifteen percent. After his internship at Revocs Satsuki had subtly tried to convince him to enroll at Honnouji Academy but Uryu had politely refused.

"Uryu Ishida is a name I did not think I would hear again," Satsuki closed her eyes and smirked, "Thank you for the report, Sanageyama. You are free to return to Honnouji Academy while the rest of you are to finish the fall preparations."

As the three members of the Elite Four bowed and left to complete their tasks, leaving Satsuki completely alone, the Student Council President stared at the screen in front of her with a scowl adorning her face. She was not naïve enough to believe her mother would have allowed Ichigo Kurosaki admittance to Honnouji Academy based simply on the actions of his father. Her mother was an extremely sophisticated and intelligent woman. There was something, a piece of the puzzle, she was missing that would help explain her mother's actions.

"Who are you, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Satsuki steeped her fingers in front of her face. If her mother had a vested interest in Ichigo Kurosaki attending Honnouji Academy than Satsuki could not be too careful. As she focused on her plans, Satsuki paused when her ears picked up the subtle sound of someone walking towards her. Immediately recognizing the gait she asked, "What is it, Soroi?"

Soroi Mitsuzo bowed his head respectfully, "I know it is none of my business, Milady, but I could not help overhearing your interest in that young man."

Satsuki smirked at the smell of freshly brewed tea, "Yes, I suppose Ichigo Kurosaki fascinates me. He has managed to garner my mother's attention yet I cannot find any reason for such respect."

A slight frown marred Soroi's face as he stared at the picture of Isshin Kurosaki, "I have spent years in the service of your family, Milady, yet the reasons behind Lady Ragyo's actions have always puzzled me. I do know, however, that Lady Ragyo's interest in the young Ichigo Kurosaki stems from the actions of his father."

Satsuki carefully scrutinized over the facts as she listened to Soroi speak. There were no images of the actual attack or Isshin Kurosaki rescuing her mother but the eyewitness reports obtained by Inumuta indicates he was able to save her mother's life without sustaining a single wound in the process. Such a feat of strength was something she was more than capable of doing herself but something about the situation bothered her. Satsuki wracked her mind, hoping that some small connection would allow the pieces to fall into place, but gave up after a minute. Leaning back in her chair, the fingers on her right hand strumming the armrest, Satsuki looked out the window and said, "Your words may hold a trace of the truth but I will not allow Ichigo Kurosaki to attend Honnouji Academy without proving himself first."

"As you wish, Milady," Soroi gave a soft bow of his head as he poured Satsuki a cup of tea. He had given his opinion on the matter, however small it may be, but once Satsuki made up her mind nothing anyone said or did could change it.

If You Don't Know Me By Now

As with Chapter 1, this is the new and improved Chapter 2. The changes in this chapter were mostly focused on Kisuke's fight with his opponent (no spoilers up here for you new readers!) When I wrote this chapter, Kill la Kill was only on episode 17 or so, which meant a lot of the relative powers and abilities of the characters were still mostly unknown. Now that the anime is finished (which is both a shame and a relief to me as a writer), I have gone back and rewrote EVERYTHING in the fight. From the beginning to the end is completely new dialogue and action. I even managed to make Kisuke even more Kisuke-ish than before, which is surprising.

As a callback to my original author's note. I hadn't expected the reaction to this story to be as great as it was. Even 18 chapters later, the amount of reviews, favorites and alerts continues to grow more and more each day. Thanks to each and every person that takes the time to review my chapters.

---

...

---

Chapter 2 - If You Don't Know Me By Now

"Ichigo!"

From where he was standing in his front door Ichigo sighed. As the shouting coming from his friend, Keigo Asano, drew closer, he waited until the last second before stepping to the side and holding his arm out. Keigo, enraptured at seeing Ichigo, was unable to notice the arm until the last second and was harshly clotheslined. Ichigo, while still a normal human, possessed greater than normal physical strength and easily stopped Keigo's forward momentum.

While the teen's head and neck were stopped abruptly, the laws of physics dictated that the rest of him continue to move forward. Keigo's legs flew into the air before his entire body crashed to the ground in an undignified heap.

Lowering his arm, and looking at his friend with annoyance, Ichigo said, "Hey Keigo, Mizuiro."

Mizuiro Kojima stepped on the prone form of Keigo, eliciting a groan of pain from the teen, and waved back to Ichigo, "Hey Ichigo. Tatsuki said you were throwing a farewell party, right?"

"Unfortunately," Ichigo grumbled and folded his arms, "My idiotic dad wouldn't stop bugging me until I agreed to this. Then he had the nerve to try and hang out with us."

"Ah," Mizuiro muttered knowingly, "I suppose that is an issue."

As Mizuiro walked into his house, Ichigo turned and closed the door just as Keigo was about to follow them, causing the teen to slam face first into it and fall back onto the ground. Ignoring the cry of pain from outside, Ichigo walked back to the living room where everyone was either waiting for him to return or talking amongst themselves.

"So Ichigo," Tatsuki Arisawa grinned at him and punched his shoulder hard enough to make Ichigo wince, "Just when were you going to tell us you were transferring schools?"

Rubbing his sore shoulder, Ichigo scoffed, "It's not like I had a choice or anything. I only found out about it last week."

"That's no excuse for waiting five days before telling us," Tatsuki argued back. Before Ichigo could even retort, she reached to the side and pulled a bewildered Orihime Inoue in front of her body, "Did you even stop to think about how any of us would feel about it? Orihime was devastated when she found out you were leaving!"

"Come on, Tatsuki!" Orihime blushed in embarrassment and tried to desperately pull herself out of her best friend's grip, "Don't say things like that. If Ichigo wants to go to another school, I'm fine with that. Really! He shouldn't have to stay here because of me!"

"Damn it, Orihime!" Tatsuki turned Orihime around until she was face to face with the well-endowed girl and began shaking her like a rag doll, "It's been over four years! Tell him how you feel before it's too late!"

"How I feel? I... but... Ichigo..." Orihime's face turned a deep red from embarrassment before she managed to escape Tatsuki's grasp and ran out of the living room, her friend hot on her heels.

Watching them go, a bewildered and confused expression adorning his face, Ichigo just silently shook his head, "Damn it, I'm confused."

"You cannot possibly be this dense," Uryu sarcastically asked from where he was sitting.

"Oh shut up," Ichigo snapped back, "I don't see how this is any of your business."

"It is my business when you are so oblivious to what is right in front of your eyes," Uryu adjusted his glasses, a knowing smirk on his face, "I knew you weren't intelligent Ichigo, but I never thought you were this stupid."

Reaching to the nearby table, Ichigo grabbed the first heavy object he could and threw it at Uryu. The Quincy opened his eyes just in time to be beamed in the forehead by a coffee mug, propelling his body backwards along with the chair he was sitting on.

"Excuse me," Mizuiro casually stepped over Uryu's unconscious body. Sitting down on the couch, his cell phone once again in his hands, he asked, "So Ichigo, did you find out anything interesting about this Honnouji Academy?"

"Not much," Ichigo admitted, "Uryu seems to know a lot about it, but he's being awfully quiet about it. Most of what I know comes from that weird guy that came to the house last week. I think his name was Sanageyama or something like that."

"Weird," Mizuiro typed something on his phone before turning to look at Uryu's prone form, "Uryu's been out for a while now. Are you sure you didn't kill him?"

"He's fine," Ichigo walked over to Uryu's body before gently, to him at least, kicking the quincy. Sputtering back to the realm of consciousness, Uryu coughed and glared at Ichigo.

"That was completely uncalled for Ichigo!"

"I see you're awake," Ichigo replied, completely unbothered by Uryu's glare, "You know anything else about Honnouji Academy that you failed to tell me already."

Quickly standing up, the blood that was trailing down from his forehead mysteriously gone, Uryu fixed his glasses and began speaking, "There is not much that I could add to what Sanageyama told us last week. The only thing I can think of is that the number of stars affixed to your Goku Uniform determines more than just your ranking in the school. The more stars you have, and therefore the more power, the better your standard of living is. One-Star students live in standard dormitories while Two-Star students have houses all to themselves."

Their conversation was interrupted when Isshin's head appeared from the kitchen, "Ichigo, there's someone on the line for you."

Uncaring as to what his dad wanted, Ichigo waved him off dismissively, "Tell them to call back later."

Isshin disappeared back into the kitchen, and for a moment Ichigo and his friends could hear him talking to someone on the phone.

When he reappeared a minute later, he said, "Come on Ichigo! This girl sounds rather interested in speaking with you."

Ichigo had no idea who his dad was talking about, and judging by the looks on his friends' faces, no one else did either.

"Who the hell is your dad talking about?" Tatsuki asked as she walked back into the living room, a noticeably less embarrassed Orihime following her.

"I have no idea," he answered with an annoyed sigh, "I better go answer the phone before he decides to do something stupid like putting it on speaker. Hey dad, what line's the phone on?"

"None!" Isshin walked out of the kitchen, his new cell phone in his hand, "The girl called on my cell phone! How she got my number I'll never know. She's going to call back on the video phone!"

Ichigo's breath hitched in his chest as his dad just said the worst thing he could. A few weeks after defeating Aizen, Kisuke stopped by their house alongside his assistant, Tessai, and said they were there to work on something Isshin had asked them to do. After being shoved out of his own house for nearly two hours, Ichigo returned to find a new television in the living room. When he saw nothing else changed, he pulled Kisuke aside and asked what he did. The former captain, with an insufferable grin on his face, told him that he installed what the living call a 'video phone.' Using some of Soul Society's technology, they managed to adapt it for normal usage. Ichigo had asked Kisuke why the hell they would need it in his house, to which the shopkeeper had said:

" Because Yoruichi wouldn't let me put it in my shop."

When the television turned on with an all too familiar crackling of electricity, Ichigo turned and saw a stern-faced girl appear on the screen, "Ichigo Kurosaki I presume?"

Ichigo stared at the girl for a couple of seconds in absolute silence. With neatly cut black hair that fell to below her shoulders and a stern expression on her face, the resemblance between her and Byakuya Kuchiki frightened Ichigo. After taking a moment to assure himself that he hadn't somehow stumbled into a parallel universe where Byakuya was a woman, he crossed his arms and asked, "Who are you?"

"Hey Ichigo," Tatsuki squinted her eyes slightly and pointed her thumb at the screen, "You know her?"

"Satsuki Kiryuin," Uryu stared at the screen, "I did not think we would speak again."

"Uryu Ishida," Satsuki turned toward the Quincy, "It is a pleasure to speak to you once more. I was unaware that you were familiar with Ichigo Kurosaki."

Uryu adjusted his glasses with his index finger, "Must I repeat what I told you while I interned at Revocs? I prefer to keep my private life separate from my work. I'm sure someone such as yourself appreciates such a belief, or was I wrong in my understanding of you?"

Satsuki gave Uryu a barely-noticeable smirk but did not say anything. Turning her gaze across Ichigo's living room, making sure to make eye contact with each and every one of Ichigo's friends, she said, "You keep interesting company, Ichigo Kurosaki. Inumuta prides himself on being able to gather information, but it seems he failed to find out quite a lot about you."

"Am I supposed to be flattered?"

"You should be," Satsuki reached off the screen and when her hand came back, it was holding a cup of tea, "I'm going to be perfect honest with you, Ichigo Kurosaki. I do not appreciate having someone like you, who gets through life solely on the deeds of their parent, attend Honnouji Academy. It is a disgrace and I will not tolerate your presence for one minute in my academy!"

"Oh please," Ichigo rolled his eyes at her veiled threat, "You think I even want to attend your stupid school? I was more than happy to stay in Karakura until I finished high school, but my idiot of a father enrolled me in Honnouji Academy without even asking me about it first. Just hearing your voice is making me wish I didn't have to go even more."

For a moment it looked like Satsuki was about to snap at Ichigo's defiance but instead, a smile graced her face, "Bold words Ichigo Kurosaki. It seems the information about you was indeed correct, but all you have done is bluster meaninglessly. Are you able to stand upon your two feet like a human or do you cower behind those with true power like a dog?"

Ichigo was about to reply when he realized that her anecdote made absolutely no sense. Sure the meaning was clear as day, but the way she phrased it just threw him off balance. Looking towards the only source of information in the room, he asked Uryu, "Do you have any idea what she just said? Is there anything I can say to make her go away?"

Purposely avoiding looking at Satsuki, Uryu answered, "What you just asked is as impossible as having Orihime keep herself from blurting out whatever exists in that nightmarish imagination of hers. The best course of action would be to listen to what Satsuki has to say. Anything else would most likely not be in your best interests."

"Fine," Ichigo sighed in defeat. Turning back to Satsuki, he said, "What do you want from me?"

Satsuki narrowed her eyes, "What I want from you is inconsequential, as I have already obtained all I needed to know. Watch yourself upon your arrival at Honnouji Academy, Ichigo Kurosaki. Not everyone will be as tolerant of your presence as myself."

With that last warning given, Satsuki's image disappeared from the screen. There was a pregnant pause before Tatsuki said, "God, what a bitch."

"Tatsuki!" Orihime cupped her hands over her mouth in shock, "That's not a nice thing to say. So she was a little mean... that doesn't mean you can call her that!"

"I have to agree with Tatsuki, Orihime. Satsuki Kiryuin was quite rude to Ichigo."

Everyone jumped slightly as Yasutora Sado, known as Chad to his friends, appeared out of nowhere behind Orihime. None more so than Orihime, who literally leapt in the air and into Tatsuki's arms out of fright.

"Chad," Ichigo's mind was trying to piece together how Chad had appeared out of thin air, "Where the hell did you come from?"

"The front door," Chad pointed behind him, "I was walking by when I saw Keigo crying near your house. I asked him what was wrong and he said you locked him out, but when I tried opening your door I found it unlocked. After that, I just let myself in. I hope you don't mind."

"It's not a problem," Ichigo didn't want to think about how such a large person could be so stealthy.

"Hey Chad," Mizuiro frowned and put his phone away, "Anyway, I don't know about the rest of you, but I got the feeling that Satsuki was threatening Ichigo."

Mumbling to himself, Uryu began explaining to the rest of them what he knew, "Satsuki Kiryuin holds a tight grip on Honnouji Academy. Ichigo's acceptance to the school and reluctant attendance has thrown a wrench into her plans that she has not yet begun to account for. This call was a way for her to gauge Ichigo's personality and intelligence. There is no doubt in my mind that she purposely called when we were all here so as to see how Ichigo would react in the presence of those close to him."

Ichigo rubbed his face in annoyance, "This is just great. I haven't even left home and I already have an stalker. Hey, did any of you notice that she looked and acted a lot like Byakuya?"

Uryu nodded, "I noticed a passing resemblance."

"A little, although she had blue eyes," Chad answered.

"Oh! Do you think she's his daughter from an illicit affair with a human woman?" Orihime asked. In her head she was already imagining Satsuki as a shinigami, cutting down hollows while Byakuya and Rukia watched on with pride and awe. As Ichigo saw the glazed look in Orihime's eyes, signaling she was going to be gone for a while, he could have sworn he heard his dad suddenly choke and cough.

"Who?" Tatsuki asked.

Ichigo flinched subtly as he remembered that Tatsuki had never actually met Byakuya Kuchiki. Out of all his friends, she was the only one to have little experience with the Soul Society apart from when Aizen had arrived in Karakura Town after defeating the captains in the fake Karakura Town.

"It was just someone from the Soul Society, Tatsuki," he admitted. Turning to leave the room, he looked at Uryu, "I'm going to go kill my dad. Ignore everything you may hear."

"That will not be a problem," Uryu responded, "I was not too pleased to speak with Satsuki once more myself. Our last encounter did not end amicably."

Stalking out of the living room into the kitchen, where he knew his dad to be hiding, Ichigo was considering just what he was going to do him when he heard his father's voice speaking to someone on the phone, "Are you sure about this? It's not too late you know."

Leaving the living room and entering the kitchen, Ichigo looked around for where his dad might be hiding but, to his surprise, he found the room completely empty. Scratching his head and looking around, he noticed the back door was slightly ajar. Walking over and looking outside, he saw nothing and was about to turn away when he heard his dad's voice.

"I know but..."

Ichigo frowned at the exhausted tone in Isshin's voice. When he tried and failed to hear whoever his dad was talking to, his dad spoke again, "I see your point. Are you sure about this? I mean... fine. I suppose I'll talk to him and send him over as soon as possible. Bye."

Pulling his phone away from his ear, his arm falling to his side, Isshin said, "Ichigo, you really need to learn some manners. It is impolite to eavesdrop on other people's conversations."

"Yeah, well," Ichigo put his hands in his pockets and walked outside, "You're one to talk. How many times have I caught you trying to listen in on me?"

"Too many to count," Isshin admitted with a chuckle, "But as your father, I am entitled to stripping you of your liberties and rights if it helps make you safe. Who knows what type of illegal activities you get up to when I'm not around to stop you."

Ichigo groaned and rubbed the bridge of his nose, "You know exactly what I was doing last year. Anyway, what was that all about?"

"It was Kisuke," Isshin's voice was somber, as if he had just heard a piece of bad news, "He wants you to come to his store as soon as possible."

"Why?" Ichigo was confused. Ever since he lost his shinigami powers, Kisuke had said that he didn't need to come by his shop anymore. It wasn't that he was no longer permitted to come so much as he didn't want Ichigo to remember everything he had lost in the process of saving both the Soul Society and the World of the Living. While he was initially incensed at that, he had quickly realized his point when Kisuke said that Rukia had stopped by when he was there. The fact that one of his closest friends, shinigami or not, was right next to him and he was unable to see or sense here gave Ichigo all the incentive he needed to leave Kisuke's shop.

"He wouldn't say," Isshin groaned and rubbed his chin, the early makings of a beard already apparent, "But he said it was very important that you come over as soon as possible."

Ichigo didn't see any reason why he shouldn't go. Kisuke wasn't one to drag him to his shop in the middle of the day without a good reason, "But what about my friends? I can't just ditch them."

"Don't worry," Isshin pat his shoulder in a comforting gesture, "I think I can take care of your friends while you're gone."

Ichigo stood there, thinking about what Kisuke wanted, as his father walked back into the house, a mischievous grin on his face. As he stood there, thinking about what Kisuke wanted, Ichigo heard his father shout, "Who wants to see Ichigo's baby pictures?"

---

...

---

Nearly half an hour after Kisuke called, Ichigo found himself standing outside the former captain's shop. It had been so long since he had come by that Ichigo was confident that Kisuke had done something strange to the shop, like perhaps adding another floor or two.

"Hey Kisuke."

When Ichigo's greeting went unanswered, he frowned and knocked on the door. Didn't his dad say that Kisuke was waiting for him at his store? If that was the case, then where was that idiotic shopkeeper.

"Damn it, Kisuke," Ichigo growled and slammed his hand on the door, "This better not be another stupid joke."

Kisuke never left his shop unattended for even a minute. There was always someone there to manage the business of catering to shinigami and humans. It had originally been because if Aizen somehow managed to locate his hideout and came by while Kisuke was away, there would be no telling how much damage the traitorous captain could accomplish with everything hidden inside. That did not mean Kisuke always made the right choice. When he and Yoruichi went on their 'vacation' last fall, he had left an irritated Tessai in charge. After Ichigo received several subtle and several not-so-subtle threats by the behemoth of a man to volunteer at the shop after school or else, Ichigo had wisely decided to stay out of the way until Kisuke got back. That, however, was not nearly as bad as when he left Hiyori in charge for a few days.

Ichigo still did not comprehend how Hiyori set normal water on fire like that.

Slightly disturbed by what he might find inside, Ichigo braced himself and, to his surprise, managed to slide open the door without any resistance. As he stepped inside and his eyes adjusted to the darkness, he stopped and muttered, "What the hell...?"

The neatly organized rows of merchandise interspaced with items from the Soul Society hidden under weak illusions that would cause any human without the proper knowledge to skip over them lay in broken and destroyed piles on the ground. Ichigo carefully stepped over several opened cans of food and noticed something odd on the floor. Every few feet there were several strange gashes cut into the floor. Kneeling down to inspect them further, Ichigo ran a finger over one of the gashes and quickly drew his hand back. Whatever had created the gashes had been sharp enough to leave the edges jagged and razor sharp.

"What happened?" he muttered before quickly leaping back as the sound of something crashing to the ground startled him. Eyes looking around for the source of the sound, his mind assuming that it belonged to whoever did this to Kisuke's store, he let out a breath of relief when he saw it was simply the door to the back of the shop falling off its hinges.

Cursing his inability to sense spiritual pressure, Ichigo cautiously crept towards the back of the store where Kisuke lived. Pressing his back against the wall near where the door had fallen off, he peered around the corner, his eyes darting through the darkness for any unexpected surprises. Seeing no one inside, he walked into Kisuke's room and flicked on the lights.

From just that one glance it was apparent that a fight had taken place. There were several spots of blood on the ground that led across the room towards the back door, which Ichigo noticed had been blown off the hinges from the inside.

As he carefully stepped across the room, Ichigo nearly tripped on something strewn haphazardly on the ground. Quickly regaining his balance before he fell, he looked down at what tripped him and saw that it was a pink umbrella cut neat in two. Reaching down to pick it up, he was surprised when it took both of his arms to lift it off the ground and even then Ichigo didn't think he could hold it for more than a minute or two.

When his cell phone rang, Ichigo nearly had a heart attack and dropped the umbrella, almost hitting his foot in the process. Fishing his phone out of his pocket and looking at the caller id, he was relieved when he saw it was Kisuke.

"Kisuke?"

"Hello Ichigo," Kisuke's voice came echoed out from the speakers on his phone, "By your tone of voice I assume you've seen the state of my shop. I would apologize for the mess but unfortunately I'm a little preoccupied at the moment."

"What's going on? Where are you?"

"Oh nothing much," Ichigo heard Kisuke wince over the phone, "I'm currently hunkered down in a construction building in the eastern part of town. If you're wondering why, it's because I had an uninvited guest arrive at my shop just a little while ago."

"Guest?" Ichigo might not have been able to sense spiritual pressure anymore, but he could feel something off about the whole situation.

From where he was leaning against a concrete support pillar twenty-three stories above Karakura Town, Kisuke looked at the trail of blood cascading down his left arm with a grimace. He supposed he should consider himself lucky that the injury to his shoulder was not deep enough to reach the tendons. Taking a deep breath and leaning his head back until it was resting against the concrete, he adjusted his hat and began explaining, "Before I say anything, I would like to point out that I had never seen this person before in my life, and that is saying a lot."

Kisuke's shinigami senses picked up movement nearby. Quickly turning his head, he let out a breath of relief when he saw it was just a rat. Focusing back on the phone, he began explaining, "I'm sure by now Uryu has mentioned where he was last summer. What he might have failed to tell you is that when he came back, he may have absconded with something that didn't belong to him. It wasn't like I expected him to bring me a bundle of Life Fibers, but he was quite adamant that there was something strange about them."

"Strange?"

"I'm not quite sure myself," Kisuke admitted. The attack could not have come at a worse time. Yoruichi was back in the Soul Society helping Sui-Feng with something completely unrelated to her job as a captain while Tessai had taken Ururu and Jinta out somewhere. If even one of them were here, Kisuke was certain he would not have had to retreat, "But whatever the case may be, I'm fairly certain that my current predicament is related to the Life Fibers. I am unsure as to how she managed to find out I had them or even where I was. Luckily I was able to escape with only minor injuries."

"Who attacked you?" Ichigo demanded to know what happened. Even if he was currently powerless, it tore at him that he was unable to do anything to help.

Kisuke sighed and tipped his hat forward, casting his eyes in shadow, "To be perfectly honest I'm not quite sure that whoever attacked me was even a human. There was something... off... about them, but they were strong. At least at the level of a captain."

Back in Kisuke's shop, Ichigo's heart plummeted at that piece of information. He didn't know anyone, apart from the arrancar, that could fight a shinigami captain evenly. Who could have attacked Kisuke with enough power to not just injury the former captain, but also cause him to flee for his life? Nervously swallowing the bile rising in his throat, he asked, "Are you sure about that?"

"There is no doubt in my mind as to their purpose for attacking me," Kisuke answered seriously, but Ichigo could tell he was distracted by something, "I'm sure you want to know what I did with the Life Fibers. To be honest, it was just something I worked on in my spare time. Whatever they are, Life Fibers are something else. It took me months just to figure out how they work and up until a few weeks ago to get them to actually do anything. In retrospect, that might have drawn her attention to me. Perhaps there is some sort of security built into the Life Fibers that acts as a sort of homing beacon. Whether that is true or not, I'm pretty sure she didn't appreciate my answer."

Ichigo was just about to open his mouth to ask something when Kisuke interrupted him, "Ichigo, I need you to do something for me."

Biting his lip, Ichigo responded, "What do you need me to do?"

Kisuke was silent for a few seconds, "I need you to go into the Secret Training Room under my store. Once you're down there, walk straight away from the ladder and look behind a funny looking rock to the right. There will be something there that I think you will find to be of great use when you go to Honnouji Academy. I would say more but - "

Whatever Kisuke was about to say was cut off as a large explosion reverberated through the phone, "Kisuke! What the hell happened?"

There was silence before Kisuke's crackling voice came through, "Sorry about that Ichigo. It seems that she's managed to find me sooner than I anticipated. I'll talk to you later. Do not try and find me, and make sure she does not find what I left you."

"Kisuke!" Ichigo shouted at his phone but the former captain had already ended the call. His numb fingers quickly lost their grip on the device, causing it to fall and bounce off the floor. Ichigo stood there, in the middle of the darkened shop, for what seemed like hours before he took a deep breathe and headed towards where the entrance to the underground training room beneath the tatami mat was.

Kisuke was counting on him after all.

---

...

---

In a burst of shunpo, Kisuke leapt over the rooftops across the industrial section of Karakura Town.

The sheer remoteness and lack of witnesses made this part of Karakura Town the best place to make a stand against his pursuer. While a battle between shinigami and other supernatural spirits weren't usually seen by normal humans, his opponent was quite different. Kisuke had seen her stop following him for a few seconds just to kill a potential witness or two. Even Aizen wasn't as callous and amoral as to kill people left and right, but the girl chasing him already racked up a body count in the double digits.

" I have to keep luring her away from any more innocent bystanders." Kisuke jumped off the edge of a warehouse before tucking his knees up and breaking through a glass window. Rolling to a stop inside an abandoned factory, he quickly turned and began moving across the catwalk above the rusty and broken machines dozens of feet below.

" I also have to stall her long enough for Ichigo to get to my shop," Kisuke slashed Benihime forward, slicing the steel door blocking his path to the roof in two. Quickly ascending the stairs and noticing he was alone, at least for the moment, Kisuke carefully took a couple of steps outside, "This girl's sensory abilities are frightening. If she is so easily able to follow me, than it is no stretch of the imagination that she could easily track Ichigo."

When she first appeared in the front room of his shop, Kisuke has sensed something off with her but chalked it down to his agitated nerves. He was still getting over Aizen finally being defeated after nearly a century of plotting and scheming against the Soul Society. When he saw her head towards the section where he kept his sweets, Kisuke decided to go into the backroom to check on some of his experiments. His shop was quite infamous for giving away candy at a large discount to children, so he didn't really think much of it. As he looked over the numbers coming out of one of his experiments, only years of training with Yoruichi saved Kisuke from a potentially fatal stab to his heart. While dodging to the side at the last minute, Kisuke didn't escape unharmed. Instead of piercing him through his heart, his adversary instead managed to cut deeply into his shoulder.

As Kisuke cautiously walked across the roof, his ears picked up the subtlest of changes in the air behind him. With his mind already analyzing his opponent's fighting patterns, he grimaced and leapt to the side just as a purple blade sheared through the concrete roof like it was butter. Skidding to a stop across the roof from where his opponent was now standing, Kiuske raised Benihime in a defensive position. Going on the offensive against such a strong and unpredictable opponent would be tantamount to throwing his life away.

Noticing something out of the corner of his eye, Kisuke looked at his sleeve and frowned slightly at the small cut along the length, "She nearly got me that time. While I am getting used to her speed and strength, it appears that she has something else up her sleeves. I'll need to be more careful from now on."

A flash of light from the sun glinting off purple metal let Kisuke know that he needed to focus. Ducking and strafing to the side, he began parrying the precise and deadly strikes from his assailant. Whoever taught her how to fight was very skilled, if the difficulty he was having keeping up with her was any clue. Parrying the purple blade off Benihime and to the side, Kisuke spun around and swung his zanpakuto only to once again hit nothing but empty air.

" She's too good."

Kisuke's eyes widened as he was quickly forced to brace his forearm against his zanpakuto in order to block the overhead strike that came out of nowhere.

" As much as I am getting used to her incredible strength, it's her speed and reaction time that makes everything so much more difficult. No one of her size and stature should possess the power to give a shinigami captain a difficult time. If she were a Quincy or a bount, then I wouldn't be surprised, but I'm feeling nothing from her."

Jumping over the purple blade that nearly bisected him in two at the waist, Kisuke quickly stabbed his zanpakuto into the roof and spun around. As his sandaled foot shot out to connect with his assailant's face, he grimaced when he once again missed. Landing awkwardly on the roof to avoid leaving himself open to a counterattack, Kisuke pulled Benihime out of the roof and turned to his opponent.

"How very interesting."

Ever the scientist, Kisuke's mind began analyzing his opponent's abilities as best as he could, "Even with less than a second of warning, she still managed to not only avoid my attack, but also widen the distance between us to lessen the chance of another surprise attack from me. The question that's bugging me is how she keeps managing to do it. It is illusions, clones, or some other type of technique?"

Feeling a slight breeze through his hair, Kisuke reached up and noticed that his favorite bucket hat, the same one Yoruichi had given him many years ago as a gift, was missing. Looking down at the roof, Kisuke saw that it was neatly split in two from front to back.

"Well now," Kisuke drawled as he knelt and picked up the pieces of his hat, "I do believe you killed my hat. That wasn't very nice of you. While I would love to chide you about such rudeness, I must admit that I did not think you would track me down so quickly. Your ability to sense my location is truly frightening. If you don't mind me asking, how did you manage to find me so quickly?"

Kisuke's opponent looked oddly at him before smiling cutely, "That's easy! Nobody can stop me. I can go wherever I want to!"

"You don't say..." Even though he was smirking on the outside, internally Kisuke was grimacing. If this girl could track him, someone who Aizen couldn't find even if he wanted to, then he was going to need some extra help if he wanted to get out of this fight alive and in one piece. With both Yoruichi and Tessai gone, and Shinji's group either back in Soul Society or out of town on personal errands, it seemed as if Kisuke had picked the worst day to get into a fight.

Glancing at his injured shoulder, which was still bleeding quite heavily, Kisuke decided to stall for time, "It's been quite some years since I fought someone able to keep me on my toes. It looks like I'll have to take this fight seriously or I might actually die."

"That's quite the funny word - might," Nui Harime beamed happily at the praise Kisuke was giving her. Clapping her hands together and sticking her tongue out in a cute gesture, she added, "But that's a bad choice of words. You actually believe I'm not going to kill you? I didn't know you were delusional, Mr. Urahara."

"And you know my name. That's both disturbing and flattering."

Due to the lull in the fight, Kisuke took a moment to more carefully analyze Nui Harime's appearance. With exaggerated and long blonde hair pulled up into twin drill-style pigtails and a pink Lolita-style dress, she looked to be the epitome of what kids nowadays call a princess. It was odd, now that Kisuke thought about it, that Nui's attire reminded him of what Ururu had tried to pick out for herself a few months ago. While Kisuke wasn't against the idea, if you consider cheering her on to be neutral, Tessai had been the voice of reason and explained to Ururu the fallacies of such scandalous clothing.

Focusing on Nui's blue eyes, one of which was covered by an eye patch consisting of scrunched together katakana that he couldn't make out from where he was standing, Kisuke thought back to the moment he realized how dangerous Nui Harime truly was.

When Nui first appeared at his shop, she had been carrying a pink parasol that had been sturdy enough to initially block his zanpakuto. It was only after he released Benihime's shikai and sliced the parasol in two that Nui had brought out her current weapon. If that wasn't strange enough, Kisuke had noticed a dark look flash across Nui's face for the barest of moments after he destroyed her parasol.

The purple blade Nui wielded was perhaps the most dangerous variable about her. While she possessed superhuman speed and strength, her blade is what gave her a distinct advantage over him. Even Benihime's shikai cannot stand up to it for extended durations without developing chips and cracks along the edge.

"Do you mind answering a simple man's curiosity, young lady?"

Nui seemed to think about it for a moment, her finger tapping against her nose, before answering, "Sure!"

"It's about your name," Kisuke knew what he was about to say might be dangerous, but it should also give him some valuable information depending on what she said, "Nui Harime. That is quite the odd name if I do say so myself. Nui means 'sewing' and Harime 'stitch.' Those would be quite odd names in a normal situation, but given the fact that you seem to be after whatever Life Fibers are, I would have to assume there is a connection between you and them. Am I wrong?"

Nui blinked owlishly once before smiling. If someone who didn't know her saw the smile, they would assume she was happy about something. Kisuke, on the other hand, saw something extremely dangerous in it. He needed an avenue of escape.

"While I have enjoyed the time spent playing with you, I am a businessman. If I don't get back to my store soon, hooligans and ruffians are sure to break in and steal all my stuff. Do you mind if we continue this little play date of ours at another time? I know some people that would love to meet you."

Nui Harime plucked at her lip with her right thumb in an attempt to look cute. Kisuke, however, noticed something disturbing and odd about her movements. Whenever she moved or attacked, it was always her right arm or head that moved normally. Everything else seemed to not look quite right. Her legs seemed to bend stiffly at the knee and her left arm seemed to be perpetually stuck in the same position unless he looked away. It was as if she was trying, and failing, to mimic a human.

"Nope!" she said cheerfully, a smile slowly forming on her face, "But you already knew that, didn't you?"

"I thought as much," Kisuke answered, a cold sweat breaking out across the back of his neck. There was something incredibly unsettling about that smile.

"Well..." Nui planted her purple scissor blade into the roof, the sharpened blade easily piercing through the concrete. Leaning upon it, she propped her cheek on her hand, "It's cute that you're trying so hard to run away, but I'm going to need those Life Fibers back."

"Life Fibers?" Kiskeya focused everything he had on predicting Nui Harime's next move. He knew without a doubt that she was about to attack him. Every single fiber of his being agreed with him on that, the only problem was that she was too damn unpredictable for his genius mind to figure out what it was she was going to do, "I must insist that I don't know what you're talking about. I am but a simple purveyor of goods and sweets. I wouldn't happen to know a thing about Life Fibers."

"Hmm..." Nui blinked before smiling widely, "It's so adorable that you're lying directly to my face. I'm going to have to punish you now."

Kiskeya blinked once and found Nui in the air directly in front of him with a psychotic grin on her face. Jumping back to avoid being hit, he quickly found himself rapidly exchanging blows with Nui's Scissor Blade.

"Amazing!" Nui's infuriating girlish voice announced with glee, "This is really fun, but are you going to tell me where the Life Fibers are?"

"I thought I told you already," Kiskeya ducked beneath Nui's purple Scissor Blade before jumping straight up in the air. As he waited for Nui to follow him, as he knew she would, Kiskeya added, "I don't know what Life Fibers are."

Disappearing in a burst of shunpo, much to Nui's surprise, Kiskeya reappeared behind her and purposely swung Benihime at her neck. Easily dodging the beheading strike, as Kiskeya anticipated, Nui was unprepared for the equally fast sandal to the face that threw her through the air and into the side of a nearby building with enough force to create an audible boom.

"That should buy me some time to think of a more permanent solution for dealing with Nui." For as much strength and power Kisuke put into that kick, the former captain knew that his opponent wasn't even hurt. It was quite strange dealing with an opponent who was either much more durable than a shinigami or arrancar, which was looking more likely by the second, or whose regeneration was so staggeringly fast that the moment his foot left her cheek, Nui was already completely healed.

As Kisuke waited for Nui to come bouncing out of the rubble and debris with a smile on her face and completely injured, he went over his limited options, "Kidou is out of the question. I've already tried to cast a level 90 binding kidou on her and she didn't even feel it. Perhaps it has to do with the strange feeling I feel coming from her. Spiritual energy may simply not affect her. I need to get to Isshin as quickly as possible and inform him about what's happening. As long as Nui is allowed to run freely through Karakura Town, Ichigo will be in danger."

"What are you thinking about Mr. Urahara?"

Kisuke's eyes widened in surprise as he felt Nui Harime appear directly behind him. Slowly turning around, he locked gazes with her single blue eye, which was filled with an unholy mirth. With a sickeningly sweet smile on her face, Nui swung down with her purple Scissor Blade and cut a large gash across Kisuke's back.

"Huh?" Nui looked at the blood dribbling off her Scissor Blade before looking at Kisuke, "How odd. I could have sworn I bifurcated you. You are really full of surprises Mr. Urahara."

"Ha... ha..." Kisuke breathed raggedly as he stared down Nui. What she did just now to get behind him was impossible, strike that, merely implausible. There should have been some warning before she appeared, but yet it was almost as if she simply imagined herself behind him. If Nui's abilities were actually based on imagination, it would be nearly impossible to beat her.

"You're still alive, huh," Nui pouted childishly and rocked on her heels, "This is becoming really boring, so I'm going to have to wrap things up now. Try not to die too quickly, Mr. Urahara."

Spinning around and laughing girlishly, Nui threw her hands out and exclaimed, "Mon-Mignon Prêt-à-Porter!"

As Kiseuke found himself surrounded by copies of Nui Harime, as weak compared to the original as they may be, he recalculated the odds of his survival and found it to be dropping by the second. As the Nui copies laughed and leapt at him, Kiseuke smirked and ruffled his hair.

"So, you're going to zerg rush me huh?" Raising Benihime up, spiritual energy coursing through the blade, Kiseuke prepared himself for perhaps the last fight of his long life, "That's fine by me, but you're going to have to work for it."

---

...

---

"Ugh... this used to be so much easier when I could just jump down."

It was times like this that Ichigo realized how much he took his shinigami powers for granted. Kiseuke's Secret Training Room was nearly a quarter mile below the surface with the only way down being via jumping or taking the ladder so conveniently provided. In the past, Ichigo had taken the easy way down and simply jumped while using his spiritual pressure to soften his landing. Now that he was just a normal human, he was forced to take the hard way down.

Landing on the dirt with a soft impact, Ichigo massaged his hands to get the blood circulating through them once more, "When Kiseuke gets back, I'm going to have him install an elevator. This is just ridiculous."

Huffing in frustration, Ichigo looked around the training grounds. It looked just as he remembered it. The artificial sunlight emanating from some unseen light source kept the giant room in a state of perpetual afternoon, the painted clouds overhead only seeming to add to the fakeness of the room. Taking a few steps forward, his eyes surveying his surroundings for any surprises, Ichigo tried to remember where Kisuke told him to look.

"He said something about a funny looking rock..." he mumbled and began walking away from the ladder, "What could that mean?"

Ichigo's question was soon answered, much to his eternal annoyance. Kisuke had said it was a funny looking rock. What the bastard failed to mention was that by that, he meant it was a rock in a terribly bad caricature of Ichigo. It even made Rukia's drawings look like the work of a master.

"That bastard," Ichigo growled. If Kisuke survived whatever was happening to him, Ichigo was going to kill him for this terrible insult. Putting aside his completely rational hatred for the man, for the moment at least, Ichigo looked around the rock for whatever it was Kisuke had left for him. When he found it, Ichigo was caught completely off guard by what it was.

"The hell does that bastard take me for?"

Carefully wrapped in plastic and tied neatly together with string was a school uniform. Turning it over, in case Kisuke was playing mind games with him, Ichigo noticed a piece of paper fall gently to the ground. Ignoring the uniform for the moment, he reached down and picked the piece of paper off the ground. Unfolding it, he saw it was a letter addressed to him from Kisuke.

Dear Ichigo,

If you are reading this note then I am either dead or missing... just kidding! I'm joking so wipe that frown off your face.
Anyway, you may be wondering why this uniform is so special or why I hid it behind this funny looking rock in my basement. Well, this uniform is quite special since I designed it using the Life Fibers your friend Uryu procured for me. If you see Uryu before I do, please make sure to thank him for his wonderful donation. The applications of Life Fibers are tremendous and I fear I have only just begun to scratch the surface of the possibilities.

Onto more serious matters, this uniform is made purely from Life Fibers, which Uryu claims make it a Kamui or something. I would have chosen something more awesome like Super Amazing Uniform of Unbridled Power but Yoruichi thought that sounded stupid. I feel I should mention that Uryu warned me about the inherent risks of attempting such a feat, but I think I managed to negate all possible ramifications.

This Kamui is tailored specifically for your body. You might be asking yourself how I was able to accomplish such a wonderful feat. The answer, my naïve pupil, is quite simple. I merely snuck into your room in the middle of the night, stripped you down naked, and measured each and every aspect of your body. I also took a few blood and DNA samples because you can never have enough of those lying around. Once I was done, I used a marker to doodle all over your face in ink that you cannot see.

That was another joke... or was it?

Actually, your father was kind enough to give me every detail about your body. So make sure to wear this special uniform when you go to Honnouji Academy. Oh! Don't forget the most important aspect about this Kamui... it's hand wash only, so be sure to brush up on your laundry skills!

Your Superior,

~Kisuke Urahara~

P.S. - I should probably mention that you shouldn't get blood on it, but it's not like you're going to get into a fight to save humanity or anything.

P.P.S. - Don't tell anyone what this is. Pretend like it is a normal uniform.

P.P.P.S - Oh, I almost forgot, you should begin thinking of a name for your uniform. I know what you're thinking, 'why the hell is crazy old Kisuke Urahara making me choose a name for a uniform?' Well, that is a stupid question Ichigo. Everything I do has a purpose, even something like what I just wrote. Didn't you say the same thing about your zanpakuto once? Stop thinking stupid questions Ichigo. And yes, I can read your thoughts even though I wrote this letter days ago. I am THAT good.

"Idiot," Ichigo spat and tucked away the note in his pocket before looking at the uniform.

At first glance it looked like a normal school uniform except for the odd color scheme. It looked similar to the grey blazer and trousers that were standard at Karakura High School except that instead of being grey, it was white with black highlights along the legs, arms and near the collar. Tearing the plastic off the Kamui, he was not going to call it that, it just sounded stupid, Ichigo unfolded it and held it up at arms length.

There was something else strange about the Kamui, but it took Ichigo a few moments to realize what it was. Located near the collar, situated near the front of both shoulders, were designs in the shape of closed eyes.

"What's so special that Kisuke risked his life to hide you?" Ichigo flipped the Kamui around and even inside out, as if there was a secret he could only find if he looked hard enough. Not finding anything, he eventually gave up and began heading back to the ladder, the Kamui tucked firmly under his arm, "Ah, screw it. I'll find out from him when he gets back. It's not like anything can kill that man. I mean, if Aizen couldn't take him out, then who can?"

I'll Take You There

So like I promised, I edited and revised Chapter 3. I personally feel that it's much better than what it was before. I mostly focused on editing and revising the conversations between Ichigo and Isshin as well as the very last part. You may be wondering why I did this. It is because this chapter was written before the end of the Kill la Kill anime and several facts came to light that contradicted what I wrote. Usually I could work around this and claim AU status, but I generally like to keep as close to the source material as possible.

Edited May 4th, 2016 - Some of you might notice a new introduction to this chapter. In reality, it's a section from later in the chapter that I revised and moved to the beginning since it takes place a few weeks prior to the rest of the chapter - the day after the events of Chapter 2. The original characterization of Ragyo and Hououmaru were atrocious and it was mentally painful to go back and read what I feel is subpar storytelling. So I rewrote the section from scratch while keeping both the original spirit and purpose completely intact. Nothing about the section has changed.

---

...

---

Chapter 3 - I'll Take You There

Ragyo Kiryuin was a woman who preferred to flaunt her wealth and power.

Lightly swirling the half-filled glass of 1907 Heidsieck champagne as she stoically gazed over the sprawling compound that was Revocs headquarters, dozens of buildings rising from the ground around her office, the CEO of the most powerful clothing conglomerate in the world smirked in amusement. Most people would find the concept of consuming champagne that cost nearly half a million dollars abhorrent, better relegated to a collection in a wine cellar never to see the light of day again. But she was not like most people. Such a paltry sum of money was pocket change when her company made that much every twenty seconds.

Nearly double their revenue from five years ago.

Her attention shifting minutely when a familiar presence respectfully walked into her office, the faint clacking of heels growing louder with every purposeful stride, Ragyo folded one arm underneath her bosom and asked, "I assume dearest Nui accomplished her mission?"

Rei Hououmaru calmly adjusted the pair of aviator sunglasses sitting upon the bridge of her nose at the inquiry. Flicking a finger against the PDA in her hand as she marched to a halt on the other side of Ragyo's desk, the Revocs symbol stitched across the lapel of her pure white uniform glittering in the brilliant lighting, the secretary politely bowed her head, "The Grand Couturier failed to retrieve the stolen Life Fibers."

"Quelle ironie," Ragyo wistfully sighed as the light shining from her silver hair, infusing every corner of her office with the brilliance of a rainbow, noticeably dimmed. It should have been more shameful that the Grand Couturier failed to accomplish such a trivial task, especially when one considered her impeccable record at recovering stolen Revocs property. But beyond a minor twinge of annoyance at the loss of the Life Fibers, the elder Kiryuin felt nothing more than frustrated apathy.

"Perhaps sending dearest Nui was the wrong choice..."

Aside from a brief but understandable sigh, the dark skinned secretary silently waited until Ragyo placed the half-finished glass of champagne down on her desk before asking, "Why did you send the Grand Couturier to retrieve such a trivial amount of Life Fibers, Ma'am? Over two hundred million dollars worth of Life Fibers and related equipment were stolen in the last four months by government-sponsored organizations while another one hundred million was lost to the nudists. It seems out of place to order the Grand Couturier to Karakura Town when her services are far better used elsewhere."

"Vous avez raison..."

Marching slowly across her office, the extravagant white dress tightly hugging her body and accentuating her assets never once touching the floor, Ragyo stared at the sun rising lazily to the east and smirked dangerously, "But it is necessary to ensure Life Fibers spread across the planet. Despite my best efforts some countries still harbor suspicions about the success of Revocs. But leak a few classified reports on the physical benefits of Life Fibers and these same countries go out of their way to bring my clothing inside their borders. If only every annoying government would behave the same way..."

The multicolored light emanating from Ragyo's hair shifted brightness as the corners of her mouth twisting into an annoyed frown, "The problem, Hououmaru, is that these particular Life Fibers came from here ."

Hououmaru's posture stiffened at the reminder of the previous summer's disastrous events, an embarrassing blight on the company's image that had yet to be corrected. The breach in research and development, the most heavily guarded department in the building, had occurred several minutes after midnight. And whoever managed to infiltrate their state-of-the-art security system had known exactly when to strike. By the time the Grand Couturier arrived just over a minute after the alarm was triggered, both the intruder and nine bundles of Life Fibers had vanished into the wind.

After an extensively thorough investigation, all they could determine was that the intruder somehow moved faster than the cameras were able to track.

"Which is why I decided to send the Grand Couturier... despite my reservations on the matter."

The gradual shifting of Ragyo's tone from mild annoyance and irritation towards veiled interest momentarily took the loyal secretary off guard, her amber eyes widening in confusion at her boss's behavior. Chuckling under her breath at Hououmaru's not-so-subtle reaction, the CEO of Revocs leaned her head backwards and sighed, "Nui's mission wasn't simply to recover my stolen Life Fibers. I wouldn't dare waste the valuable time of an artiste over something so easily replacement. No... she was to find out who delivered them to a small shop in Karakura Town and how someone as inconsequential as Kisuke Urahara was able to activate them..."

Slowly trailing off when she noticed a particular absence, a presence that should have already arrived, Ragyo narrowed her eyes suspiciously, "Where is Nui?"

"I'm afraid the Grand Couturier is currently recuperating from her mission," Hououmaru informed the older woman, who quirked an eyebrow in confusion.

"Recuperating?"

Hououmaru briefly returned her attention to the PDA in her hands, the information displayed on the screen cycling through the events of the Grand Couturier's mission, "After sifting through her understandable anger, I was able to piece together a clear picture of what transpired in Karakura Town. It appears that Kisuke Urahara was an exceptionally intelligent and dangerous individual who deduced the Grand Couturier's origins and purpose from nothing more than her name. After failing to interrogate Kisuke Urahara in his empty shop, where she somehow lost her parasol, the Grand Couturier was forced to chase the man across most of Karakura Town."

"Quite the dangerous man, indeed," Ragyo chuckled in amusement before looking over her shoulder at Hououmaru, "Is there something you're not telling me?"

"You are such a scamp, Ma'am. You knew I wasn't finished speaking," Hououmaru shook her head dejectedly. There were moments where the director's sense of humor came across as somewhat alien. Sighting lightly as she took a moment to recompose her emotions, the loyal secretary stoically continued, "Once she finished dealing with the man, who in her own words refused to cooperate, the Grand Couturier returned to his shop only to discover someone else had been there during her short absence."

Ragyo smirked sadistically at the supposedly unfortunate news, her amusement born more from rising interest in Kiskeya Urahara more than anything else, "This man must have been quite the cunning adversary if he distracted dearest Nui long enough for an acquaintance to retrieve whatever he was hiding. It's truly shameful he refused to speak before dying."

"There is some good news, Ma'am."

"When Kiskeya Urahara's acquaintance took whatever the man was hiding, they forgot to reseal the entrance to the hidden chamber underneath his shop," Hououmaru informed Ragyo without looking away from the PDA, "The Grand Couturier discovered a seemingly impossible room nearly four hundred meters in length filled with an assortment of equipment and machinery necessary to manipulate and safely weave Life Fibers into clothing."

"How interesting," Ragyo closed her eyes and chuckled as she sat down, the rainbow undertone from her hair shifting alongside her emotions, "There are so few facilities in the world capable of crafting the necessary equipment to properly contain Life Fibers. It should be fairly simple figuring out which organization is working with Kiskeya Urahara... although I do have my suspicions. I presume the Grand Couturier attempted to determine the serial number of the equipment in his shop?"

"From her... report... it seems Kishio Urahara custom-built nearly every piece of equipment. The rest, however, can be traced only indirectly to the nudists. And there is one additional piece of news," Hououmaru adjusted her sunglasses, an old habit she had never been able to break, and braced herself for the resulting storm, "The Grand Couturier has expressed her opinion that the man most likely created a Kamui."

The amused smirk on Ragyo's face instantly vanished, replaced by an expression of complete shock. Weaving something as godly as Kamui was impossible for a mere human, a work of beauty they constantly strove to obtain yet always failed to grasp. It wasn't as simple as weaving clothing of out pure Life Fibers and call that abhorrent creation Kamui. It required years for a human to obtain the necessary experience to manipulate Life Fibers with enough dexterity to avoid getting devoured. The knowledge of cross-stitching the Kamui's pattern appropriately took a careful eye, honed from countless failures and successes. And even that wasn't enough for a human to create the most holy of clothing.

"A Kamui, you say?"

There was no mistaking the subtle undertone of bitter vitriol in Ragyo's voice. Leaning back against the chair, the rainbow undertone permeating the office dimming, she furrowed her brow when something crossed her mind. A year. Kishio Urahara, an apparent stranger to the truth of Life Fibers, managed to create a Kamui from scratch in less than a year. And that wasn't counting the possibilities of failed attempts. Her maroon eyes narrowed furiously at the notion, an expression of anger that was quickly picked up by Hououmaru, "And we're sure he's dead?"

"The Grand Couturier's clones personally witnessed Kishio Urahara bleed to death," Hououmaru replied stiffly before hastily adding, "Do you wish for me to send a clean-up team to Karakura Town?"

"Non," Ragyo strummed her fingers against the side of the desk. Normally it would be a simple matter to investigate how much Kishio Urahara knew about Life Fibers. Yet this type of situation required a more delicate approach, "Kisuke Urahara not only outsmarted dearest Nui but somehow managed to weave a Kamui. His intelligence, even after death, is not to be underestimated. Do we know how he contacted his associate?"

"A call from a phone registered to the Urahara Shop was registered during the period when the Grand Couturier temporarily lost sight of the man," the secretary briefly paused as she brought up the relevant information on her PDA, "However, it's proving somewhat difficult to trace the number."

Silence filled the office as Ragyo stared pensively out the window, maroon eyes narrowed in quiet contemplation. Kisuke Urahara was a man that should not have been able to weave a Kamui out of the blue. The skills necessary for a human to craft Life Fibers into such a garment required years of practice. He should have been on her radar years ago, especially if his knowledge about Life Fibers was so advanced. She found it difficult to believe that a single man... a stranger to the fashion world... learned enough about Life Fibers in only a year to craft one of the most holy garments in existence.

It infuriated her.

The rhythmic tapping of her manicured finger halting when something came to mind, Ragyo's tone was dangerously cold as she asked, "How was the Grand Couturier injured?"

"... a Bleach Bomb, Ma'am."

A fracturing crack echoed sharply through the office when the half-filled glass of champagne on the desk next to Ragyo suddenly shattered. Amber eyes widening fractionally behind the aviator sunglasses as she watched the director's expression shift from mounting annoyance to shocked bewilderment, Hououmaru nervously coughed into her hand while ignoring the increased beating of her heart, "The device was hidden underneath the floor of the room, Lady Ragyo. While the Grand Couturier managed to escape the relatively contained blast in time, the injuries she sustained were enough to force her to retreat."

Sighing softly at the stifling pressure bearing down on her shoulders, a clear sign of Ragyo's building irritation at Kiskeya Urahara's final actions, Hououmaru took a brief respite and straightened her posture before calmly adding, "Perhaps I should clarify my earlier comment. The Grand Couturier is indeed still recuperating. However her wounds healed only hours after returning. She simply refuses to accept that another human tricked her at the last second."

"Such an épouvantable man..."

It was inconceivable to the CEO of Revocs that a pathetic man like Kiskeya Urahara could have gathered the necessary components to construct a working Bleach Bomb. She knew, of course, how to build such a weapon. It was a straightforward process provided one could properly cross-stitch the Life Fibers intricately woven throughout the device. Not to mention the dangers of the explosive prematurely detonating if a single Life Fibers was out of place. So for obvious reasons she never officially authorized research into Bleach Bomb beyond theoretical applications.

Not because she lacked the necessary resources. Rather, she simply didn't want to deal with the constant annoyance of nudists trying to either destroy or steal her research.

Kiskeya Urahara, on the other hand, was someone whose mere existence upon the face of the planet left the Kiryuin matriarch utterly bewildered. This seemingly unimportant man not only managed to weave a Kamui in under a year, a feat none of her employees other than the Grand Couturier could hope to duplicate, he also built a functional Bleach Bomb despite her moratorium on the necessary equipment. That he did all this with the dérisoire Life Fibers stolen from Revocs was impossible for her to comprehend.

There had to be another answer. She refused to believe Kiskeya Urahara was that competent and experienced at weaving Life Fibers.

"La vie est drôle."

Ragyo leaned against her hand and sighed, the tension draining from her features alongside the overbearing pressure in the air. There wasn't any point worrying about Kisuke Urahara when the man was long dead. She could deal with an errant Kamui in due time. However, the Grand Couturier was an entirely different matter. Dearest Nui hadn't been the same ever since that annoying man permanently disfigured her face, destroying one of her lovely eyes and shattering her mind with one traitorous swing.

"Please inform the Grand Couturier to come to my office. There are certain matters I need to discuss..."

An amused smirk slowly pulled at the edges of the Kiryuin matriarch's mouth as Hououmaru bowed respectfully before sharply turning around and leaving. Listening patiently to her secretary's heels as the rhythmic clacking faded into the distance, Ragyo closed her eyes and laughed. It was painfully clear to her who Kisuke Urahara called during his battle against dearest Nui. There was only one man who could have pulled off such a remarkable, and annoying, stunt like this so flawlessly.

And he just so happened to live in Karakura Town.

"I cannot wait to see how you've raised young Ichigo, Isshin. It should prove to be quite the enlightening experience."

---

...

---

August 7th, 2002

Ichigo stared out the passenger side window of the car, his face periodically lit up a sickly yellow color by the halogen streetlights racing by along the empty highway. No matter how many times he thought about it, he continued to find it odd that as soon as they passed through the outer limits of Karakura Town the lush forests and fields that he had visited many times in his life abruptly gave way to what could at best be described a desert and at worst a wasteland.

The landscape spanning for miles on either side of the winding highway was a barren and almost sickly brown with dust storms blowing the loose topsoil up into the air every now and then. The sky itself wasn't any different than what he was used to seeing back home, except that if he concentrated and narrowed his eyes he could just barely make out a hint of an unnatural red color permeating everywhere he looked.

"Ichigo," Isshin Kurosaki called out his son's name as he briefly pulled his eyes away from the road. He knew Ichigo wasn't sleeping, his son tended to snore in the car if he did fall asleep, but still decided to ask, "Hey, you awake?"

Ichigo waited a few seconds before answering, "Yeah. What do you want?"

Isshin sighed dramatically at Ichigo's lackluster reply. It was clear his son was still peeved at him for the sudden transfer to Honnouji Academy and away from all his friends, "I'm sure you must be curious about why the world outside Karakura Town is like this. Aren't you wondering why the thick and green forests gave way to this hellish landscape?"

"Not really, no."

"Well, if you really want to know," Isshin continued, completely ignoring the fact that Ichigo wasn't interested in finding out why, "No one really knows what happened. All that we, and by that I mean Kisuke and the Soul Society, have been able to find out is that someone or something decided to take out most of the world using nuclear weapons. The Soul Society was able to use Kido to clean up the residual radiation, but the damage was already done. Nearly 75% of the population was killed and only major towns and cities like Karakura and Tokyo survived the conflict intact."

Nearly three-quarters of humanity was dead? Ichigo couldn't believe something like that. His dad had to be making it up, "You're joking with me right? If that really happened, why didn't I know about it?"

Isshin gawked at Ichigo's question before breaking out into laughter, "Because, my dear boy, of the biggest cover-up in the history of the world!"

At Ichigo's continued perplexed expression, Isshin decided to continue explaining, "For about three years after the nuclear war the Soul Society, apart from cleaning up the radiation, set up what I might as well call Kido Amplifiers throughout each remaining city and town. Once they were all set up, they released a much more powerful version of the memory modifier your friend Rukia tried to use on me to convince the world that the nuclear exchange never happened. Instead of that, most of the world thinks everything that happened was the result of a massive, and costly, regular war like World War II was."

As Isshin finished speaking and changed lanes on the empty highway, Ichigo's mind was still trying to come to terms with what he had just found out. Sure he knew something was wrong with the world outside of Karakura Town. His forays into the outside world during his time as a shinigami was proof enough, but it was the realization that something of that magnitude of destruction happened that boggled him.

"Why would the Soul Society wipe their memories?" he asked trying to sort out the confusion in his mind.

"I'll start with the simple answer - it was to preserve the balance of souls between the living and the dead," Isshin answered mysteriously as he yawned into his hand. He had been driving for quite a while now, and a look at the dashboard clock said it was almost dawn, "You remember how the Quincy killed too many hollows and threatened to destroy the balance of souls? Well, the number of people that died during the nuclear exchange put that to shame. As good as the Soul Society is, even they couldn't handle a couple of billion souls suddenly appearing all over the world. The shinigami did the best they could, even the captains had to help, but it took them nearly twenty years to konso most of the souls. Even then it left over five hundred million souls to transform into hollows and escape to Hueco Mundo.

Half a billion hollows? Ichigo couldn't believe there could even be that many hollows. He wasn't even sure he had killed a thousand of them when he was a shinigami. Still, something his dad said was still bothering him, "You said that was the simple answer. What else is there?"

"I see you are indeed sharp, Ichigo. It's no wonder you got accepted into Honnouji Academy," Isshin said proudly, a mock tear crawling down his cheek. As much as he wanted to hit his dad for being an idiot, Ichigo restrained himself. He could always hit his dad after he heard the story, "The truth of the matter is simple - The Soul Society was fearful of what could happen. The Captain-Commander may be the strongest shinigami alive, but he saw the devastation nuclear weapons caused and feared the consequences of someone doing it again. If he didn't order the erasure of humanities memories, someone would have the idea to start another nuclear war and perhaps this time it wouldn't be as limited as the first one. Apart from you and perhaps several hundred people scattered across the Earth, everything believes the only two nuclear bombs dropped were during World War II.

Ichigo was silent for perhaps half an hour after listening to his dad's explanation for the state of the world. How was he supposed to react after hearing that the world had effectively ended once and the Soul Society decided to give a do-over? As his mind circled around that concept over and over again, Ichigo decided to ask a question that had been bugging him for some time.

"Has there been any sign of Kisuke?"

Isshin sighed, letting Ichigo know all that he needed to hear, "Not yet. Yoruichi has been running herself ragged looking for him. From what he told you on the phone, it sounded like he was in a lot of trouble. Yoruichi checked out the area you thought he was at and found traces of his blood, but no body."

"Damn it!" Ichigo cursed and slammed his hand against the car door, "I should have gone to help him. I could have done something, anything!"

Isshin slammed on the brakes, bringing the car to a screeching halt in the middle of the empty highway. Turning to Ichigo, an angry look on his face, he said, "Since when was my son a coward?"

"Ichigo, I know Kisuke well enough to know that he must have had a good reason for making sure you stayed far away from him. I may not have any clue about what he was doing and quite frankly the thought of his experiments fills me with dread. I suppose the point I'm trying to make is that you should trust that Kisuke knew what he was doing. He risked his life to make sure you got whatever it was that was in his store."

Isshin started the car again but didn't speak any further, deciding that giving Ichigo some time to process what he just said was for the best. When several minutes had passed, Isshin rubbed the back of his neck with his hand and asked, "So what was it that Kisuke left for you? Was it a weapon or something? I told that man to leave you out of his nonsense but damn it all to hell if that bastard listens to a word I say."

Ichigo rolled his eyes in annoyance, "If I didn't tell you the first twenty times, what makes you think I'll tell you the twenty-first time you ask?"

"Aw come on!" Isshin's voice devolved into an annoying replica of a child's, "You can tell your father!"

"Shut it, old man!" Ichigo turned and looked out the car window in annoyance. The sun was just beginning to peak over the horizon to the east, bathing the red and brown landscape with the colors of dawn and causing the streetlights to begin turning off one by one.

"Ichigo," Isshin's voice returned to normal, "Whatever it is Kisuke wanted you to have, I'm sure he had a good reason for hiding it. Perhaps he thought you could get some use out of it or something. All I know is that the man was not someone to do something without a good reason. He knows just how much the Soul Society, the entire world, owes you for taking care of Aizen."

Ichigo looked at the Kamui he was wearing with confusion. The Student Evaluation Day was later in the afternoon, which meant his dad had to wake him up at the crack of dawn in order to drive him to Honnouji Academy in time. When he discovered that he would be required to wear the Honnouji uniform, he took one look at it before throwing it away in disgust. He could barely put up with wearing the Karakura High School uniform, and that was only because the school board allowed students to customize their uniforms to a certain extent. Honnouji, on the other hand, had such a strict dress code that wearing Kisuke's Kamui, the weirdly colored uniform it was, was by far the better option.

The Kamui was something that continued to plague his mind. At first Ichigo had been doubtful about the uniform since Kisuke made it for him. In fact, anything that man created caused Ichigo to take a step or two back and carefully observe the situation before trying it out. When nothing happened for a couple hours and the Kamui remained an inanimate article of clothing, Ichigo decided to try it on. As he put it on and finished zipping up the blazer, he found that it seemed to fit him perfect, perhaps even too perfectly. Another thing that bothered him was that it never seemed to get too dirty or stained. Anything that he accidentally spilled on the Kamui bled right off the clothing, usually onto the floor causing Ichigo to clean it up.

The minutes passed in silence but eventually Ichigo was brought out of his musings by the appearance of lights in the horizon. They were nearing the bridges that led to Honnou City, which meant it would be less than an hour until they arrived. Perking up and stretching his sore neck at the thought of the trip almost being over, Ichigo was surprised when he dad said, "I feel that as your father it is proper to warn you that this world is not a safe place to live in."

Memories of the Winter War and the Soul Society briefly passed through his mind, causing Ichigo to sarcastically reply, "Gee, what gives you that idea?"

"Hey! I'm being serious here!" Isshin flustered and smacked Ichigo on the back of his head, eliciting an angry growl from his son, "I'm not talking about the Soul Society, hollows or anything like that. You're a teenager, despite everything you've been through, so your knowledge of the world is sorely lacking. Hey, don't give me that face! Tell me something Ichigo, if you had to guess the average number of hollow attacks on a town or city every year, what would it be?"

Ichigo seriously thought about the question before answering, "I don't know. I'd say about one hundred or so."

"Try one, if they're unlucky and they have a spiritually sensitive human living there," Isshin replied with a knowing chuckle, "It may shock you, but Karakura Town is basically the Bermuda Triangle of hollow attacks. I tend to chalk it up to how spiritually rich the land around the town is. It may shock you, but the number of hollow attacks in Karakura Town is roughly equal to about half of the rest around the world."

To be fair, Ichigo had always suspected something like that was true. Sure he was shocked, but the evidence had always been there. There weren't even ten thousand shinigami in the Soul Society to protect humans and souls from hollows. How could they possibly patrol and defend the entire world without stretching their forces thin? It would make more sense if hollows concentrated their attacks on one particular area in the world.

"Like I said, the danger I'm lecturing you on comes from the living," Isshin cracked open the window and allowed the cold, late summer morning air to quickly fill the car, "I couldn't help but overhear your conversation with Uryu about whatever Goku Uniforms are. I may be but an ignoring and bumbling father, but even I would be hesitant to take free power if you don't know the cost. You know, perhaps even better than me, what happens to those that are given power then aren't able or ready to control."

Ichigo glanced down at his Kamui, thoughts and memories of when his hollow took control of his body in Hueco Mundo racing through his mind. He didn't like to think back at what his hollow did to Ulquiorra, but he knew it would never have happened if he had just been strong enough to fight the espada. Sighing and running a hand through his hair, he leaned back and said, "Don't pull that stupid crap with me. If you're so worried about me then why are you sending me to Honnouji Academy?"

"The answer is quite simple Ichigo." Isshin's face was framed in shadows before he smiled goofily, "Sending you to Honnouji Academy is a tax deduction! By moving you across the country, I'm saving oodles of money every year!"

"Cheap bastard!" Ichigo smashed his elbow into his father's face, causing the car to swerve across several empty lanes before Isshin managed to regain control.

"That was a cheap shot, Ichigo!" Isshin whined childishly while he rubbed his sore cheek, "What did your poor, normal father ever do to deserve such retribution?"

"You know exactly what you did," Ichigo answered before adding, "And you're nowhere near normal."

Isshin huffed indignantly, "Remember my story about Ragyo Kiryuin?"

"The one you made up? Yeah, I remember it."

"I wasn't perfectly honest with you," Isshin admitted, "Ragyo is a very mysterious and complex woman. After I rescued her from the bombing, she and I kept in touch throughout the years. Masaki knew about this, of course, and knew that my correspondence with Ragyo was nothing more than a friendship between two adults. Did you know that Ragyo sent me a picture when her daughter, Satsuki, was born? Masaki was so torn up about it that she wanted to have kids as soon as possible."

"What does that have to do with anything?"

Isshin sighed and gazed out the driver's side window, "What you don't know, and I hope Masaki never knew, is that something happened to Ragyo. When I first met her she was just a normal woman in charge of one of the largest companies in the world. She would laugh at my jokes and got along with Masaki, but as the years passed she seemed to change. She became cold, distant and more dedicated to her company. The birth of her daughter was perhaps the last time she sounded like the woman I first met. I don't know what happened to her, or even what could have caused it, but do not think for a moment that being admitted into Honnouji Academy is something she did out of generosity. Keep your eyes and ears open, Ichigo."

Ichigo stared at his father for several seconds as what Isshin said was processed. He had seen the look on his dad's face before whenever he visited their mother's grave. It was the look of someone who had lost something without ever having a chance to save it. As he opened his mouth to offer some sort of comfort, Isshin's mood quickly swung full circle.

"But that's enough talking about those sad memories!" Isshin exclaimed at the top of his lungs, "There is still some time before we get to Honnou City. Let's have a proper father and son talk! We'll start with the secret manly dating tips I used to woo your mother!"

Ichigo groaned in the palm of his hand and stared desperately out the window. Glancing at the highway only a few feet away, he wondered if he could survive leaping from a moving car as a normal human without breaking his leg.

Dear god, he hoped so.

---

...

---

"Ichigo..."

The elder Kurosaki's voice was stern and full of authority, a stark departure from his usual persona, as the sun rose over Honnou City. His face framed in shadows as he brushed dust off Ichigo's Kamui, he stared his son straight in the eyes, "I shouldn't have to explain your fortune this day. This is a big opportunity not just for you, but for your sisters as well. I have worked tirelessly to make sure you lived in a good home and received a proper education. Do not bring shame upon our family as you usually."

Ichigo slapped away the older man's hand and rolled his eyes, "Oh shut it, old man."

Isshin stumbled at the harsh insult before slamming his forehead against his petulant son's, "Why do you refuse to accept your father's helpful advice?!"

Equally annoyed and pissed off, Ichigo reared his head back and smashed it into his father's nose, "Helpful my ass! I only have a single shot at building my reputation! I don't need your stupid nonsense screwing that up for me!"

"But Ichigo - "

Isshin began protesting but Ichigo had already pushed his way through the crowd of parents and citizens of Honnou City towards the group of new and current students standing outside the entrance to Honnouji Academy. Adjusting the collar of his Kamui nervously, he tried his best to ignore the pointed stares from the surrounding students. It wasn't as if he cared that his Kamui's colors were nowhere near the same as the standard gray of the Honnouji uniforms. What really irked him were the constant whispers about his short and spiky orange hair. It seemed as if people assumed he was a punk everywhere he went.

Standing in the midst of the crowd, his hands in his pockets, Ichigo wondered what everyone was waiting for. Peering over the crowd, he saw nothing blocking students from entering the academy, but something seemed to hold them back.

"Listen up!"

A man, taller than Kenpachi by at least another foot, appeared out of nowhere in front of the students. Flanked on both sides by at least twenty One-Star students, he had short and combed blond hair and dark skin. Ichigo may have been surprised by the massive man's height and size, but his attention was focused on the three black four-pointed stars emblazoned across his chest.

"I am Ira Gamagori! Honnouji Academy Student Council Disciplinary Committee Chair! I welcome you all to Student Evaluation Day! " The massive man shouted with enough force to cause the crowd of students to tense back slightly, "For those of you who have recently been granted the honor and privilege by Lady Satsuki to attend Honnouji Academy, there are three rules you must follow!"

"Rule Number One! All students are to bow down to Lady Satsuki whenever she graces you with her presence!"

" Is this guy for real?" Ichigo didn't know what to make of Gamagori. If he hadn't been paying attention, he would have assumed that he had somehow been conned into joining the military. If that was the case, then he was seriously going to kill his dad as soon as possible.

Gamagori held up two massive fingers as he continued, "Rule Number Two! Food and drinks are prohibited in the hallways and classrooms except during designated times!"

"Rule Number Three!" Gamagori's eyes seemed to zoom in on Ichigo out of the entire crowd, "Honnouji Academy has a strict dress code. Uniforms are distributed solely by Lady Satsuki! Anyone caught wearing anything else shall suffer harshly!"

"You! Step forward!" Gamagori shouted at Ichigo. The crowd of students, seeing whom it was that Gamagori had singled out, quickly and quite mysteriously vanished from around Ichigo. When Ichigo made no motion to listen to Gamagori, apart from folding his hands in his pockets and adopting an expression of utmost irritation, Gamagori stalked forward, a yellow gleam in his eyes.

"You are violating one of Honnouji Academy's rules! Consider yourself lucky that this is your first day here. I do not expect a new student such as yourself to have already memorized the rules. You must change immediately!" Snapping his fingers, Gamagori reached out and took the standard No-Star uniform so conveniently provided by one of the One-Star students flanking him, "You will leave the premises of Honnouji Academy until you have changed!"

Leave the premises? If Ichigo understood what Gamagori meant by that, he would need to go with Isshin all the way back down to the base of Honnou City, get changed and then come back up. There were a few issues with that logic, first of which was that he didn't want to get changed and damn Gamagori to hell if he thought he was going to make him. Ichigo had fought people larger and tougher than him in the past. Well, he may have had spiritual powers when he did that, but the concept was still the same.

"You expect me," Ichigo glared at Gamagori harshly enough to make the massive teen flinch slightly, "To go back out there and change? I just spent the last five hours listening to my dad talk on and on about things I don't, nor will ever, care about. There is nothing you can do or say to me to make me do that again."

From somewhere in the crowd of people behind him, Ichigo could have sworn he heard his dad break down and start crying at his declaration, but his eyes were focused completely on Gamagori. The massive teen folded his arms across his chest, his left eye twitching slightly every second or two. As he looked ready to retaliate against Ichigo, he seemed to reel himself back.

Without taking his eyes off Ichigo, Gamagori reached out into the air just as a clipboard came hurtling through the air and into his hand. Flipping through the pages attached to it, he grumbled as he came across Ichigo's registration and profile.

"Ichigo Kurosaki!" Gamagori tapped his pen on the clipboard as he finally found the name he was looking for. He was curious about why the name sounded familiar to him and now he realized why, "It fill me with pride that you are right on time. I was convinced you would be tardy on your first day of class and I would have to hunt you down and subdue you."

"What?" Ichigo took a moment to process what Gamagori just said, "On time for what exactly?"

"It need not concern you!" Gamagori shouted bombastically, "I will give you a pass on your current attire for this day! Let the Student Evaluation Day begin!"

Ichigo mentally suppressed the comment he wanted to say. It wouldn't do to antagonize someone that looked to be at least five times his size at the moment. As Gamagori moved out of the way, allowing the new students to meander into Honnouji Academy, he heard a voice from the crowd that froze him cold.

"That's my boy! Ichigo, go and make your papa proud!"

Ichigo heard snickering and chuckles coming from the crowd and fellow students. Realizing he needed to nip this in the bud immediately, he grabbed the clipboard out of Gamagori's hands, located his dad in the crowd, and threw the piece of wood like a lethal Frisbee. The clipboard sailed threw the air faster than most people could see and managed to nail Isshin in the forehead with an impact loud enough to echo through the air and disturb several nearby birds.

"Damn idiot," Ichigo seethed while dusting his hands off. Walking past several shocked and awed students, including Gamagori, Ichigo folded his hands in his pockets and entered Honnouji Academy.

His first thought was that there was too much space. The actual school buildings had to be nearly a quarter of a mile behind the entrance, leaving a large and suspiciously empty courtyard. As he followed the line of students, half of which seemed to be unnerved by the grandiose size of Honnouji Academy, Ichigo thought he sensed someone watching him. Glancing inconspicuously back and forth while making sure not to draw attention to himself, he eventually looked up at the top of Honnouji Academy and thought he saw someone, but the strangely bright light between them made it hard to tell.

" Who is that?"

Hearing excited breathing coming from his side, Ichigo looked down and saw a girl with brown eyes and hair staring up at his with stars twinkling in her eyes. Honestly a little scared by the fanatical look the girl was giving him, Ichigo asked, "Can I help you?"

It was almost as if the girl was waiting for Ichigo to ask her that particular question. Jumping in front of him and pumping her fist into the air, the girl began speaking rapidly, "That was so awesome! You came out of nowhere and stared down one of Lady Satsuki's Elite Four just like a sheriff from an old Western who had just strolled into town. I wish I could do that. Then I could clean up crime during the night as a masked vigilante!"

Ichigo watched in a mixture of horror and amazement as the girl began adding various stances and poses at specific times of her speech. When she finally finished speaking, he could only stare at her in confusion and asked, "Who are you?"

"Oh! Silly me!" The girl slapped her forehead with the palm of her hand hard enough to leave a red imprint of her hand, "I forgot to introduce myself. I'm Mako Mankanshoku!"

Ichigo looked at her outstretch hand for a moment before hesitantly accepting it, "Ichigo Kurosaki."

"You're name is Strawberry?" Mako's eyes lit up and she seemed to drool a little out of the corner of her mouth, "I love strawberries! Strawberries are delicious, especially when they are dipped in home-made chocolate and with whipped cream-"

"My name means 'to protect one thing' not strawberry!"

"Ohhh," Mako let out a sound of understanding before she abruptly switched topics, "Oh! How do you think you'll do on Student Evaluation Day?"

"I don't know," he answered with a shrug, "I have no idea what it is."

"Student Evaluation Day," Mako began ranting again, "Is where students as lowly and meager as us are granted the opportunity to determine whether or not we will be given a Goku Uniform."

That explained some things, "So, it's like a physical or something?"

"Nope!" Mako answered a bit too enthusiastically, "If it was something like that, I wouldn't be here. I'm a dedicated underachiever. Something like that would make my delicate skin break out in a rash. All that you need to do is stick your arm out, close your eyes and wait ten seconds for the strange machine to determine your score."

Ichigo was getting close to the main building now. Looking up at Honnouji Academy, he frowned when the figure he saw earlier had disappeared, taking with it the light that previously illuminated the top of the building "Score?"

"Yup!" Mako nodded vigorously, "They say it is out of 1000 but I'm proud of my all time high score of 30. When the proctor saw my score, he said it was the lowest one he had ever witnessed. Even in failure Mako Mankanshoku is a winner!"

"That sounds... fascinating," Ichigo found Mako's pride in failure quite terrifying. Perhaps in time he could get used to it, but for the moment he had other things to worry about, such as what this test actually was. He was having trouble separating Mako's fantasies from what was reality.

"What's with your uniform?" Mako switched topics and began teleporting around Ichigo at random locations, poking and prodding his Kamui in various places, "It looks so funny! Are those eyes? Why is it black and white instead of gray? Does it transform into a suit of armor when you flip a switch?"

"Hey!" Ichigo held his hand out in a stopping gesture, "What's with all the questions?"

"I don't have many friends. Actually, I don't have any. Will you be my first friend?"

Her question brought Ichigo out of his thoughts. Looking at Mako and seeing the innocent and hopeful expression on her face, he said, "I suppose."

Mako seemed to be on the verge of hugging him, which Ichigo would have prevented by leaping back, when a One-Star student began shouting through a megaphone.

"All students must split into two lines. Boys on the left and girls on the right! Please keep the lines orderly and in single-file."

"Ah! That's my queue to vamoose!" Mako began panicking and ran towards the line on the right, "I'll see you later Strawberry."

"For the last time, my name doesn't mean strawberry!" he shouted at her before realizing Mako had gone out of earshot. Muttering about it not being worth the effort coming to Honnouji Academy, Ichigo walked towards the line on the left.

It was surprising that he didn't need to wait long for his turn at whatever the examination was. Even though the line had to have been nearly one hundred students by the time he got on, it had taken barely twenty minutes for him to nearly reach the front. When it was his turn to go, he entered the room.

The student wearing a labcoat with a single black four-pointed star pointed for Ichigo towards the nearest empty chair. Sitting down in the chair, the One-Star student glanced at Ichigo's hair and then his face before saying, "Please roll up your sleeve and place your hand in the machine."

"Why?"

"Don't question the exam," the One-Star student warned Ichigo. Instead of wasting the effort of arguing back, which was something he was finding to look more and more worth it, Ichigo swallowed his retort before it could leave his throat and did as he was told.

With his right hand stuck in the machine, Ichigo propped his head on his left arm and waited nearly a minute for the machine to finish. When he was told he could remove his hand, he asked, "So what's my score?"

"Hold on," the One-Star said while the machine continued beeping. When it finally stopped, the One-Star looked at the screen conveniently hidden from Ichigo and gasped before rising out of his seat and rushing off out into the hall.

With everyone staring at him once again, although it wasn't at his hair this time, Ichigo decided to find out what had scared the crap out of the proctor. Getting out of his chair, Ichigo leaned over the table and looked at the computer facing away from him. Highlighted on the screen in bold red letters was:

Student Name: Kurosaki, Ichigo

Life Fiber Resistance - 90.3%

---

...

---

"Give me a ticket to Honnou City."

The clerk sitting in the ticket counter looked over the top of his newspaper at the clump of wadded up money and coins placed on the other side of the glass. While he reached through the oval-shaped hole in the window and grabbed the money, he couldn't help but be surprised. No one bought tickets to Honnou City. The only people that traveled there were those that had annual passes and who paid up front. Punching a few keys on his computer, the familiar sound of the printer starting soon after, he looked at the girl staring impatiently at him and decided to ask, "I don't mean to impose, but are you sure you want to go to a place like that? Honnou City isn't exactly the best place for a proper young lady."

"Proper?" The girl rolled her eyes at the clerk's unwanted interference. Why did everyone she met think she was some delicate little flower that couldn't take care of herself? Motioning for the clerk to hand her the ticket, she said, "Thanks for the advice but give me my ticket."

Grabbing the ticket out of the clerk's reluctant hand and placing it one of the many pockets on her black and white jacket, Ryuko Matoi adjusted the silver case strapped to her back and walked towards the nearest bench. She had about an hour until the bus was scheduled to leave so she had plenty of time to kill, which meant she was going to be quite bored until then. Plopping down with a loud sigh, Ryuko ran a hand through her black hair, her fingers brushing against the single red highlight in the process, and leaned back until her head was resting against the back of the bench.

"Great," she muttered in annoyance, "Two weeks in this city and not a single clue."

Ryuko had been so sure that a clue about the identity of her father's murderer would be here, in Osaka, but it appeared she was wrong yet again. Whenever she would ask, but mostly order, people to tell her if they'd seen a woman wielding a Scissor Blade, they'd either look at her funny or clam up. Placing a hand on the silver case holding her own Scissor Blade, colored red, Ryuko sadly thought back over the last six months and everything that happened.

"I'm beginning to think this is pointless," she moaned and kicked the silver case hard enough to dent it, "Twelve cities. I've been to twelve cities in six months and not one person knows anything! At this rate, I'm going to die before finding out anything about my dad."

Usually Ryuko would stay in a city for about a couple of weeks before moving on, but she'd only been in Osaka for four days. She had a lead concerning the identity of her father's murderer, her very first one since that fateful day, but she doubted the accuracy of the information. Stuff like that just doesn't fall into her lap. Ryuko wasn't used to having things going her way, so she was more than a little apprehensive about the whole situation.

She first heard the rumor when she was interrogating students at Naniwa Kinman High school for information. While she was shaking down two students who had the nerve to try and attack her, a third student had approached her with information about the woman with the Scissor Blade. When they asked for a lot of money for the information, Ryuko pointed her Scissor Blade at their throat and threatened to cut off something important unless they told her everything they knew.

The student, after wetting his pants out of fear, said the rumor mills placed a woman with a purple scissor blade in close proximity with the Student Council President of Honnouji Academy, Satsuki Kiryuin. Ryuko hadn't initially believed a murderer would be associated with the Kiryuin name and demanded to know the truth. The student, now shaking in fear, said he was telling the truth. The rumor was Satsuki Kiryuin was intimately familiar with the woman with the purple Scissor Blade. In fact, she might even be the killer.

Groaning in annoyance, Ryuko reached into her pocket and pulled out a lemon. Taking a bite out of it without even a hint of hesitation, she glanced at the nearby clock and realized she still had forty-five minutes.

" I've almost found the woman who killed you dad. You just need to wait a little longer. The woman with the Scissor Blade will pay for what she did. I promise."

Instant Karma

I present to you chapter 4 of To My Death I Fight . This chapter gave me a little trouble, all of which came about after Episode 18 of Kill la Kill was released and I witnessed first-hand just how evil and completely insane Ragyo is. So while I had this chapter done on Thursday, I had to rewrite a lot of it in order to not completely veer off canon. In retrospect, I think that made this chapter flow much better. And, for those of you keeping track, this is the last full chapter before the Kill la Kill anime starts so expect to see events that happened in Episode 1 appear in Chapter 5, with some modifications of course.

Oh, I have decided that the theme music of Ichigo's interactions with Mako is Ditty for Daddy .

---

...

---

Chapter 4 - Instant Karma

"Be careful with those Life Fibers!"

Iori Shiro, president of the Sewing Club and designer of all the Goku Uniforms currently spread throughout Honnouji Academy, cursed behind his breathing mask as he watched the procession pass below. Leaning over the railing of the scaffolding that hung over the dozens of currently empty sewing machines below, Iori carefully watched as several members of his club in full biohazard suits moved a large bundle of glowing red Life Fibers that had recently arrived at the academy towards Concepts and Designs.

Turning towards the monitor to his right, Iori tapped a few keys and pressed a finger against his ear, "What is the status on containment?"

"No problems to report, sir," one of the Sewing Club members responded as she watched the Life Fibers being brought carefully through the steel door separating the rest of the club from Concepts and Designs, "Everything is proceeding nominally. Full containment will be achieved in less than three minutes."

"Good. See that you inform me once containment is obtained. I do not want a repeat of the last breach," Iori closed the connection and turned away from the railing towards the series of monitors behind him. It was from here that he was able to monitor and view the progress on every single Goku Uniform being created by the Sewing Club. Most of them, the One-Star and Two-Star uniforms, did not need him to constantly watch their progress. The only uniforms that Iori monitored beyond the initial creation were the experimental Goku Uniforms his club was currently trying to produce.

What they were creating was the culmination of months of effort and sweat. It had taken more time and money than he originally thought, but Iori was finally ready to move beyond the conceptual stage and actually sew a Five-Star Goku Uniform.

Iori had to thank Inumuta when he got the chance. If it wasn't for his financial backing, the sheer cost of the Life Fibers needed for this experimental uniform would have bankrupted the Sewing Club long before this point.

While he was observing the various cameras and monitors throughout the club, there was a hiss of static in Iori's year. Without looking away, he said, "What is it?"

"Containment has been obtained," the Sewing Club member from earlier informed him from outside the door separating her from the dangerous Life Fibers, "Everything is green down here."

"I'm getting the same readings up here," Iori rapidly pressed a few buttons and brought up three-dimensional model of the room, "Everything is working at full efficiency. Negative pressure has been obtained. Have the team brought to decontamination before returning to work. It's better to err on the side of caution."

As he hung up on the club member, Iori leaned over the desk and groaned, "Creating a Five-Star Goku Uniform will be child's play compared to finding someone that can actually wear it."

Contrary to popular belief, while willpower and strength of mind were important for gaining control over a Goku Uniform, the real variable was the wearer's Life Fiber resistance percentage. Iori, as well as Lady Satsuki, did not understand what genetic factor made some people more resistant to the influence of Life Fibers than others. Lady Satsuki had financed genetic testing of twin students that had wildly different resistances in the hopes of finding some previously unknown genetic marker, but unfortunately apart from the normal differences between the genetic codes of twins, there was nothing to indicate such a wildly differing resistance value.

The common One-Star uniform, which is composed of only 10% Life Fibers, required a paltry 4.2% resistance for the wearer to not be consumed by the power. A Two-Star uniform, on the other hand, required the wearer to have a resistance above 16.5%, which was still less than the 29.3% that each of the Elite Four had to control their Three-Star uniforms. The fact that the resistances increased drastically with each level of Goku Uniform had Iori trying to guess how high someone's resistance needed to be to wear a Five-Star uniform and not go berserk.

" The data from the experimental Four-Star uniform indicated that a minimum resistance of 45.4% was needed. If I extrapolate that value upwards, I should be able to obtain a reasonable volunteer resistance."

When Iori heard the elevator doors behind him open with a pressurized hiss, he turned around and saw Satsuki Kiryuin walking towards him, flanked on either side by Nonon Jakuzure and Uzu Sanageyama. All three were wearing the same type of breathing apparatus as Iori in order to prevent breathing in any microscopic Life Fiber fragments inadvertently released during the creation of Goku Uniforms.

"Greetings, Lady Satsuki," Iori bowed respectfully to the Student Council President as she walked towards him with a determined gait to her step, "I was not expecting you to respond to my message so quickly."

"I was informed by Inumuta that you have valuable information concerning Ichigo Kurosaki."

Behind Satsuki, Nonon Jakuzure turned to Sanageyama and whispered, "Who's Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"He's the kid that Lady Satsuki's taken an interest in," Sanageyama explained. When he saw Jakuzure still had a perplexed, and irritated, look, he continued, "He has short, spiky orange hair with a perpetual scowl. He's the one you have a crush on."

"I don't have a crush on him," Nonon squeaked as she kicked Sanageyama squarely in the shin, "I just didn't remember his name. That's all!"

Ignoring the argument between her two subordinates, Satsuki followed Iori over to the nearby monitor, who began feverishly typing in commands. After a few seconds had passed, without turning to Satsuki he said, "Here is Ichigo Kurosaki's profile. Until Student Evaluation Day it was normal, apart from his means of getting accepted into Honnouji Academy. Take a look at what his Life Fiber resistance value is."

As a picture of Ichigo Kurosaki, scowl and all, appeared on the screen, Satsuki leaned in, her eyes narrowing as she beheld the displayed data, "That is impossible."

"I'm afraid it's true," Iori didn't bother looking at Satsuki. He knew her long enough to know that she was displeased with what he was showing her, "It has been confirmed that Ichigo Kurosaki's resistance to Life Fibers is close to 90.3%. A value, that I don't think I need to say, is higher than yours."

The origin of Satsuki's resistance to Life Fibers was a secret to all but her and the one who did it to her. While she publicly announced her resistance of 83.5% and how it was proof how far above everyone she was and why they needed her to govern them, internally it was a bitter gift from the one she hated the most. Yet out of nowhere came Ichigo Kurosaki, the son of someone who supposedly had nothing more than a chance meeting with her mother, with a resistance even higher than hers.

She did not believe for a moment that Isshin Kurosaki, Ichigo's father, only met her mother once and was able to live his life as he saw fit. Soroi had been adamant that her mother had been injured in the explosion before Isshin rescued her, a completely and utterly laughable notion to Satsuki, and yet she could not find any trace of her mother being admitted to a hospital. She needed to find out what the true connection between Isshin and her mother was, but it was not going to be easy or simple.

"Iori, have you double-checked the data?"

"As soon as Ichigo Kurosaki's resistance was discovered," The Sewing Club president answered, "We even triple-checked it before having him retake the examination a second time under the pretense of a mechanical issue. The same percentage was displayed on the second machine as was on the first."

"I see," Satsuki closed her eyes and evaluated how this discovery was going to affect her plans. She, of course, could adapt to many variables, but she needed more information. If Ichigo Kurosaki was special enough to warrant her mother's personal attention, it could only mean a few things. She needed to find out why he was sent to Honnouji Academy.

"Sanageyama," she barked out, catching the Athletic Committee Chair by surprise, "I believe it is time that we tested Ichigo Kurosaki's resolve and worthiness of attending Honnouji Academy. Do you have anyone available for such a task?"

"Unfortunately I don't," Sanageyama chuckled nervously. It was never good to give Lady Satsuki bad news, "All athletic clubs captains are currently out participating in the Japanese Inter-school Sports Tournament and should be back by tonight. I would have been there myself if this business concerning Ichigo Kurosaki hadn't come up."

"You disappoint me, Sanageyama," Satsuki said, "But I suppose I will have to make due with what is available. I'm sure there are members of the athletic clubs that crave strength and power. You will choose one of them for this task. Tell them that if they want to remain a Two-Star, they need to dispose of Ichigo Kurosaki before the day is out."

"Yes, Lady Satsuki."

"I should be able to create the necessary Two-Star Goku Uniform within two hours," Iori chose that moment to give his personal input, "It should be finished before the academy finishes lunch."

"Good," Satsuki continued to stare at the data displayed on the monitor, her eyes never leaving the picture of Ichigo, "I don't want Ichigo Kurosaki to assume he is safe at Honnouji Academy."

---

...

---

"This place sucks."

As he ate his lunch in relative peace and quiet, Ichigo quickly decided that his day had been anything from normal and, coming from someone like him, that was saying quite a lot. He still wasn't quite sure what had happened, but ever since he took that stupid exam he couldn't help but feel as if someone was watching him.

Perhaps he was being just a little paranoid, but his experience dictated that something was going to go down and, whether he liked it or not, it would most likely be involving him in some way or another.

"I wonder what dad is up to?"

After being forced to take his exam a second time due to so-called 'technical issues,' he had decided to go speak to his dad. Ichigo knew without a doubt that Isshin would be sticking around for as long as Ichigo would allow him to stay. That usually meant he would have to physically force him to leave. Once he made his way back to the entrance to Honnouji Academy, however, he found his dad long gone without so much as a goodbye. While he was silently grateful for the lack of a large, tearful and hammy goodbye from his dad, Ichigo couldn't help but feel just a little upset.

"Ichigo!"

Upon hearing the familiar voice rapidly approaching him, Ichigo turned and saw Mako Mankanshoku waving vigorously at him. Hesitantly waving back at her, he bore witness to an amazing scene as Mako literally sprinted at him, her body ducking and weaving through the crowd of confused students. Just as she reached Ichigo, Mako tripped over her untied shoelace, causing her body to hit the ground face first and roll for several meters, leaving a trail of dust in her wake.

Ichigo stared at her most likely unconscious body with a mixture of confusion and bewilderment evident on his face, "Are you alright?"

In one swift motion Mako planted her hands on the ground and pushed herself back onto her feet. With a trail of blood dripping down from her nose and several cuts on her face, she gave him a thumbs up, "I'm peachy!"

Ichigo looked at the blood on her face before shaking his head and focusing back on his lunch. He had already realized that Mako was her very own breed of insanity. Asking any questions would be tantamount to encouraging her behavior. Just as he was about to take a bite from his food Ichigo, to his annoyance, found Mako hovering inches from his face.

"What do you want?"

With a wide smile on her face, Mako asked, "Good afternoon Ichigo! How did your Student Evaluation go?"

"Fine, I guess," he replied with nothing more than a passing shrug. He didn't see the point in telling her about the commotion that had occurred after he received his score.

"I did fine as well!" Mako thumped a fist against her chest, "I managed to break my all time high score with a 50!"

Ichigo was nearly blinded by the pride being emitted by Mako but, being the person that he was, he felt the need to point out the obvious to her, "I don't think that's something you should be taking pride in."

"Of course it is!" Mako exclaimed excitedly, "Being special isn't limited to just being good at sports, chess, or even public speaking. It can mean many things. I am special because of the impossibility of my low exam score. Mako Mankanshoku achieves the impossible despite all the odds stacked against her!"

Ichigo stared at Mako's reaction with a disturbed expression, "I think your definition of special is not the same as mine. Why don't you go and make some more friends or something?"

"Make more friends?" Mako brought a finger up to her lip and appeared to be deep in thought, "I suppose if I make more friends, since you're a boy it should be a girl so it all evens out. She will need to be friendly, selfless, a total badass and have a great figure."

As Mako's tirade devolved away from what type of personality her imaginary friend would have towards her chest size, Ichigo could only continue to stare at her, his mind trying to put together what was going on in front of him.

"What the hell's going on in that mind of hers? She's worse than Orihime."

Even though he was unfortunately focused on Mako, Ichigo's ears managed to pick up the faint whistling of something sailing through the air towards him. Without thinking, he quickly raised his lunch tray just as the thrown knife reached him, causing the steel weapon to become embedded up to the hilt in the tray.

"The hell is this?"

After blocking two more thrown knives, courtesy of his hidden assailant, Ichigo had decided that was enough. Standing up, Ichigo looked around the area for the perpetrator. It did not take him long to locate the thrower, but that was mostly because he either wasn't trying to hide or was simply doing a terrible job at it.

Ichigo stared up at the mysterious figure that had dared to ruin his lunch, "Who the hell do you think you are?"

"Prepare yourself, Ichigo Kurosaki!" His mysterious assailant shouted brazenly with his tongue sticking out from between his sharpened teeth. Licking the knife held in his hand, he pointed the weapon at Ichigo, "I, Jack Naito, president of the Knife Throwing Club, will take you down!"

Even as Jack Naito was giving his introduction, Ichigo was already trying to figure out who the hell he was and what he wanted. Shifting his gaze away from Jack to his murdered lunch tray and then back, once again, to Jack, Ichigo decided that he didn't have a clue what was going on.

"Eh?" Ichigo scratched his ear with a confused expression on his face, "Who are you?"

"Are you deaf?" Jack angrily asked as he leapt down off the building, which had to be three stories high, and landed on the ground nearby without any difficulty. Spreading his arms to his sides, several knives magically sliding in between his fingers from somewhere deep in his sleeves, he grinned sadistically at Ichigo, "I am here to take you down, Ichigo Kurosaki! Your presence at Honnouji Academy is no longer permitted!"

Ichigo continued to stare at Jack in confusion. Determining that he was getting nowhere fast he turned to Mako, "Do you have any idea what the hell this guy is talking about?"

"He's a Club Captain," Mako began explaining in a sage-like tone, "That means he is wearing a Two-Star uniform. Although I thought he was part of the Acrobatics Club..."

"You are correct!" Jack said, "I was part of the Acrobatics Club until Sanageyama honored me with my own club. I get to keep this Two-Star uniform as long as I take you down, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"Two-Star uniform?" Ichigo stared at Jack Naito's uniform with a discerning eye. It was the standard gray of Honnouji Academy, but embedded along his sleeves were dozens of knives. What made him stand out the most was the large, glowing red blade sticking out from his head, "From his ridiculous uniform, I thought he was just nuts."

With a twitch in his eyes, Jack swung his arms back and shouted, "Perish, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

The six knives held in between Jack's fingers sailed through the air towards Ichigo, only to be stopped when Ichigo, with a bored expression, brought up his lunch tray with a single arm and expertly blocked all of them.

"What?" Jack took a nervous step back before angrily asking, "How the hell did you do that? No one can block the attack of someone wearing a Two-Star uniform!"

What Jack Naito didn't know was that Ichigo was friends with someone that could fire over one thousand arrows a second. Compared to something like that, a few knives were nothing, even as a normal human, "Is that all you got? Because right now, you're just making yourself look like an idiot."

"That's the spirit!" Jack Naito grinned and leapt back, six more knives already between his fingers, "I wouldn't want this to be too easy! Let's see how you deal with the next salvo!"

"Hold on just one moment," Ichigo held his hands up in the universal symbol for 'timeout' and turned to Mako. As he handed her his knife-riddled tray, he said, "Get out of here."

"What?" Mako seemed shocked that Ichigo was telling her to leave. At first Ichigo thought it was because she was worried about him, but that quickly changed when she asked, "But what about your lunch?"

Quickly catching himself before he face vaulted, Ichigo sighed and said, "You can have it. I'm not that hungry anymore."

While Mako ran away to who knows where, Ichigo focused completely on Jack Naito. Upon seeing Ichigo staring at him, the club president crossed his arms across his chest and laughed, "You are either very brave or very stupid to fight against me without a Goku Uniform, Ichigo Kurosaki, but it wouldn't matter if you did! You will fall to my power!"

As Jack threw his knives at Ichigo, more appearing in his hands just as he threw the ones already held between his fingers, Ichigo quickly vaulted over the shoulder-high wall he had been sitting on. As knives rained down on the other side of the wall, Ichigo carefully analyzed his options.

" I hate to admit it, but he has some skill," The problem Ichigo was facing wasn't so much Jack Naito's skills and power, but his own diminished powers. Seven months after he lost his powers fighting against Aizen, Ichigo sometimes needed to consciously remind himself that he was just an ordinary human without any spiritual powers. That meant no spiritually enhanced reflexes, strength or speed. If he had even one of those three things he could take someone like Jack down with his eyes closed but now, as a normal human, he needed to rely solely on his intellect. If he was going to beat Jack, and by god he wasn't going to be killed by this asshole, Ichigo needed a plan.

" I can't get close to him," Ichigo began stealthily moving behind the wall. He couldn't afford to stay in the same spot. Eventually Jack Naito was going to get annoyed, and possibly pissed, that Ichigo was hiding, " He doesn't seem to be that bright. I should be able to take him by surprise. "

"Hiding like the coward you are, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Ichigo's eyes widened as Jack Naito's voice mocked him. Looking up, he saw the Knife Throwing Club president standing on the wall above him, a disturbing smirk on his face.

"Did you really think you could hide from me?" Jack mockingly asked Ichigo. As he spread his arms open, dozens of knives appeared in a flash of light in Jack's hands, "Now, witness the true power of a Two-Star Goku uniform! Trillion Drive!"

"Damn!" Ichigo cursed and leapt back as the knives in Jack's hands suddenly shot forward accompanied by trails of smoke and fire.

---

...

---

"Oh man," Sanageyama chuckled at the display hundreds of feet below, "Ichigo has guts, I'll give him that much."

"It is unbecoming of you to support an enemy of Lady Satsuki," Gamagori rumbled, "Shall I be forced to discipline you?"

"No need to get antsy," Sanageyama folded his arms and grinned, "I'm just saying it can't hurt to give the kid props when he deserves it. How many people do you know that would willingly stand up to a club captain?"

"Hmph," Gamagori grumbled but did not press the issue any further, "Ichigo Kurosaki is a fool if he thinks he can take on a Goku Uniform by just relying on his own strength."

"I would not worry too much about the outcome of the fight," Inumuta answered, the collar of his Goku Uniform automatically unzipping as he began speaking, "By my calculations, the probability of Ichigo Kurosaki successfully avoiding that last attack with only minimal injuries is less than five percent. The only conceivable way that he could survive is if he is hiding some innate talent or skill that my programs have failed to find. There is only one person in Honnouji Academy that could avoid such an attack without wearing a Goku Uniform, and that is Lady Satsuki."

"Are you suggesting that this hoodlum is in the same league as Lady Satsuki?" Gamagori growled at the much smaller Inumuta.

"I am just reiterating what the data hypothesizes," Inumuta defended without showing any signs of nervousness. Pushing up his glasses using a single finger, he began explaining to the relatively less intelligent Gamagori, "Although, I find it strange that Ichigo's behavior upon the start of the fight goes against both his appearance and personal history. Instead of simply rushing head on, he retreated to where he could not sustain any damage from the club captain's attacks. A bold, but curious, move on his part. I'm looking forward to analyzing the valuable data I will undoubtedly obtain later on."

"No one cares about your stupid data Doggy," Jazukure grinned mischievously at Inumuta's slight tick in his eye before turning back to the scene below. She had thought watching Ichigo Kurosaki get the crap beat out of him would be boring. After all, who could stand up to a Goku Uniform? But Ichigo Kurosaki was surprising her, "This day is getting more and more interesting, wouldn't you agree Lady Satsuki?"

Satsuki ignored Nonon's question in order to focus entirely on the fight below. Standing on top of Honnouji Academy, her sword planted on the ground and her eyes locked squarely on Ichigo Kurosaki, she appeared to be the epitome of regality. In spite of her stoic outward appearance, Satsuki's mind could not help but notice something off about Ichigo Kurosaki. Upon first glance everything seemed normal, but soon enough she began to understand what it was that had caught her eye.

"Gamagori."

"Yes, Lady Satsuki?"

"When Ichigo Kurosaki arrived this morning," Satsuki's eyes narrowed imperceptibly as Ichigo's form was enveloped in Jack Naito's Trillion Drive attack, "Was he wearing the mandatory No-Star uniform?"

"No," the Disciplinary Committee Chair answered with a shake of his head, "Ichigo Kurosaki was blatantly ignoring the dress code of Honnouji Academy upon his arrival. When I ordered him to change, he refused."

"I see... and tell me, did he call his uniform by any specific name or refer to it as such?"

Gamagori thought back to his limited interaction with Ichigo Kurosaki before answering, "No. He seemed to view it as nothing more than a standard uniform. Do you wish for me to confiscate it upon the fight's conclusion?"

"No. Let him be for now," Satsuki ordered. Perhaps she was simply over thinking things. There was no way Ichigo's uniform could be what she thought it was. The number of people in the world that could successfully create one could be counted on one hand, and they all worked for her mother. If Gamagori's knowledge was to be taken as accurate and correct, Ichigo was wearing nothing more than a uniform. If it happened to be what she thought it was, the answer should come soon enough.

Gripping the hilt of her sword, Bakuzan, tight enough to cause the leather on weapon to crackle audibly, Satsuki waited for Ichigo to make his next move. She would know soon enough whether he deserved to stay at Honnouji Academy.

---

...

---

"Ha ha ha!"

Jack Naito gloated as he witnessed Ichigo Kurosaki take the full force of his attack, Trillion Drive, at point blank. Although, now that he thought about it in hindsight, Sanageyama had ordered him to test Ichigo Kurosaki, not kill him. Jack didn't care if his attack killed Ichigo as much as it might mean the loss of his new Goku Uniform.

Leaning forward on one knee, Jack Naito surveyed the dust floating in the air for any sign of Ichigo, "Don't tell me that did you in, Ichigo Kurosaki. The fun's only just begun!"

It was at that moment that Jack made a stupid mistake. When he had assumed Ichigo perished in his attack, he had stepped as close as he could in order to witness the results, which allowed Ichigo to reach out and grab his ankle.

"Fun, huh?" Ichigo's voice said from inside the smoke, "I guess I can work with that."

"Hey! Let go!" Jack tried to pull free from Ichigo's grip but it was like trying to escape a vice. Before he could even consider using his knives, Ichigo pulled downwards, causing Jack's body to bounce on the wall before being dragged to the ground in an undignified heap.

As he shook his head to regain his bearings, Jack looked up and saw Ichigo looming over him. Ichigo had a gleeful look on his face and was cracking the knuckles on his hands in preparation for the beatdown he was about to give. Reaching down and grabbing the front of Jack's Goku Uniform, Ichigo lifted him off the ground before slamming his knee into his stomach. That should have ended the fight.

Key words being should have.

When Ichigo's knee made contact with Jack Naito's stomach, it had felt as if he had slammed it into a wall. Sure, by the gagging sounds, it had done some damage to Jack but there was no reason why his knee felt like it had almost been shattered.

"Inconceivable!" Jack gasped as he quickly recovered and appeared back on his feet. Leaping back up onto the wall, he pointed an accusing finger at Ichigo, "How did you survive my Trillion Drive? I threw hundreds of knives at you!"

"First of all, you only threw like thirty or forty knives," Ichigo nonchalantly corrected the new club captain as he brushed dust off his Kamui. Apart from a small cut on his cheek that was beginning to leave a trail of blood, he was completely fine, "Second, your attack wasn't even that special. Your knives moved in a straight line, which means that if your opponent happens to be faster than you, they can simply dodge it. Your attack caught me off guard initially, but I managed to avoid almost the entire thing."

What Jack didn't know, and Ichigo couldn't understand, is that more than one of his knives had hit Ichigo. While only one managed to graze his skin and draw blood, a few more made contact with his body but, to Ichigo's astonishment, were easily stopped by his Kamui without so much as a sting of pain. It was remarkable, and probably something he needed to keep a secret for the time being.

"Dodging is not fighting!" Jack Naito shouted to cover his nervousness. He had been sure that Ichigo Kurosaki had been hit by his knives and yet, here he was, standing in front of him with only a single scratch in his cheek as proof he had even been subjected to his attack. What the hell was Ichigo Kurosaki? Jack Naito didn't know and he wasn't about to let himself be caught off guard again. He had foolishly gotten too close to Ichigo after unleashing his Trillion Drive attack and had suffered because of it.

Jumping away from Ichigo along the wall, Jack flicked his wrists and summoned six more of his knives into his hands. He had been foolish to think that he could have memorized and learned everything his Two-Star Goku Uniform could accomplish after barely an hour. Trillion Drive was his most powerful attack but, as Ichigo so frustratingly pointed out, it wouldn't work against someone like him. Once he was done here, Jack thought, he would spend time working on upgrading Trillion Drive. All he needed was a target.

Perhaps he would go after that girl that Ichigo had been talking to.

Ichigo, on the other hand, was not looking forward to a fight on his first day at Honnouji Academy. Watching Jack jump away from him, he rubbed the bridge of his nose and decided to ask the question plaguing his mind, "I don't have time for this. Can you just tell me what I did to piss off Satsuki so I can go finish my lunch before Mako eats all of it?"

"Don't think you've won!" Jack jumped in the air and twisted his arms back, "Your luck can only last so long before I hit you, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

As the latest salvo of knives shot towards him, Ichigo sighed and decided enough was enough. He had hoped that coming to Honnouji Academy would allow him to have a semi-normal high school experience without the constant reminders of all that he lost as well as the gangs of thugs who kept trying, and failing, to kick his ass for stupid reasons. Seeing Jack Naito exhibiting superhuman abilities due to his Goku Uniform meant Ichigo didn't need to hold back anymore.

He leaned his head to the side to avoid the first knife and sidestepped two more before shooting forward. Ducking beneath a fourth knife, Ichigo leapt off the ground and easily made it to the top of the wall. In one swift motion, he pushed forward and began sprinting along the narrow wall towards Jack, his body leaning to the left and right to avoid the obvious, and hastily, thrown weapons.

"Stay away!" Jack shouted as he continued to try to hit Ichigo with his knives. This was impossible! How the hell could Ichigo Kurosaki, who up until just a minute ago couldn't even stand up to him, be able to easily avoid his attacks? He was a club captain! His Two-Star Goku Uniform should have been able to deal with Ichigo Kurosaki without any effort. This shouldn't be happening!

"Shut the hell up!"

Ichigo's hand shot out and grabbed hold of Jack before he could jump away. As he pulled the bewildered president of the Knife Throwing Club towards him by his collar, Ichigo remembered what had happened the last time he had tried to hit him. So instead of trying to do the same thing a second time, Ichigo decided to go for the low blow. Picking his leg off the ground, Ichigo swung it back as far as he could before driving it forward into Jack Naito's groin.

Much like Ichigo expected, Jack collapsed as soon as his knee made contact. Letting go of Jack's Goku Uniform, Ichigo allowed the club captain to fall to the ground below, his hands holding his injured pride. Rubbing his sore knee, thankfully not the same one as last time, Ichigo watched with annoyance as Jack managed to get back to his feet, albeit on shaky knees.

"Don't... don't think you've won," Jack gritted out as he stood up fully erect, knives sliding back into his hands, "Can you fathom the difference between your power and my own? I don't need to get close to you to hit you. As long as I keep my distance I can continue to attack you without worrying about your cheap shots!"

Ichigo stared at Jack before summing up his opinion on the matter, "Are you serious?"

With an exasperated sigh, Ichigo rubbed the blood from his cheek onto the sleeve of his Kamui. Kisuke did say that he shouldn't get blood on it, but Ichigo had made it a point to not take everything Kisuke said at face value unless given a very good reason. A hastily scrawled postscript at the bottom of a mysterious letter was not, to Ichigo, a very good reason. If avoiding getting blood on his Kamui was so important, then Kisuke would have told him why.

Hopping off the wall, Ichigo landed on the ground with a slight grunt and rotated his shoulder to loosen up the cramp in the joint, "Don't you have anything better to do than fight me?"

Jack growled fruitlessly at Ichigo. If he didn't beat Ichigo Kurosaki, then his new Goku Uniform would be confiscated and he would be demoted back down to a lowly No-Star. Jack was not going to allow that to happen ever again.

As he prepared to attack Ichigo, both of them missed the blood on Ichigo's sleeve slowly disappear into the Kamui until there was nothing but the original pigmentation remaining. They also failed to see the eyes near Ichigo's collar opened ever so slightly, exposing just a hint of red and black irises.

"Oh ho. This is completely unexpected."

Several stories up in the main Honnouji Academy building, a shaggily dressed man scratched at the back of his neck as he observed Ichigo's fight against Jack Naito through a pair of binoculars. It had been extremely fortunate that the angle allowed him to see Ichigo wipe the trace amount of blood onto his sleeve. A few more feet to the right and Aikuro Mikisugi would have never witnessed what just transpired.

"Oh man," Aikuro drawled out with a wistful sigh, "Talking to him is going to be really weird..."

---

...

---

Singing in a terribly off-key tone as he drove down the nearly empty highway back to Karakura Town, Isshin was willfully ignorant of the strange glances he was receiving from his fellow drivers. He was fully aware that he had an awful singing voice, as Masaki made sure to point out several dozen times during their marriage, but he refused to let something like that deter him. Tapping his hands against the steering wheel as he continued singing along to the song in a voice that could shatter glass, Isshin abruptly froze when he detected a new presence in the car.

"Gosh, you really can't sing."

Isshin stopped tapping his fingers at the hauntingly familiar voice. Glancing into the rearview mirror at the teenager sitting right behind him, he frowned and asked, "How did you get back there? The doors were locked."

Sitting in the backseat with her hands folded cutely across her lap, Nui Harime giggled playfully as she turned her attention away from the rather interesting cloud passing in front of the sun. She could feel the amount of annoyance permeating the vehicle rising, which brought a saccharine smile to her face, but the Grand Couturier really wished she had managed to record Isshin's awful singing. Having something like that was priceless. It would have made the perfect blackmail material or, better yet, a Christmas gift!

"That's a silly question, you old goat," Nui bobbed her head back and forth, smirking at Ichigo's nickname for his dad, "I can go anywhere I want. Nobody can stop me! I thought you of all people would know that by now, you know."

"I am aware of that," Isshin reluctantly admitted, pulling his eyes away from the rearview mirror and back onto the road.

Nui Harime huffed and pouted at Isshin's rather callous dismissal of her grand entrance. Didn't he know how polite she was being? It wasn't every day that she decided to introduce herself instead of getting right down to business. Leaning backwards in the seat with her single sapphire eye focused solely on the back of Isshin's head, the Grand Couturier playfully kicked her feet through the air and sighed dramatically, "Gosh, I guess you don't have a sense of humor anymore. Anyway... I'm only here because Lady Ragyo wants to see you."

"Is that right?"

Isshin drummed his fingers against the steering wheel while resisting the urge to look over his shoulder at the Grand Couturier, who was undoubtedly smiling. He should have known there was more to Ragyo's plans besides using her position as the chair of Honnouji Academy's board of directors to admit Ichigo on a full scholarship. But wanting to meet him after what happened last time? That came as a complete surprise. Subtly clearing his throat while adjusting the rearview mirror in order to better see the blonde teenager sitting right behind him, Isshin waited until the sole oncoming vehicle passed them before remarking, "I thought I made it perfectly clear that I never wanted to speak to her again. Not after what she did to Ichigo..."

"Gosh, you really like thinking about the past!" Nui exclaimed with a hint of annoyance, her face twisting into a beaming smile as she clapped her hands together and leaned forward in the seat, "Lady Ragyo forgives you for betraying her trust, you know. She told me so herself! So you don't have to worry about her trying to kill you!"

Whether or not Ragyo was still upset, and likely plotting to either kill or horribly maim him, after all this time didn't bother Isshin in the slightest. Stuff like that came with the job. He was more concerned about what she had in store for Ichigo, "Well... Ragyo has quite the imagination. If my memory is correct, and it is, she was conducting inhumane experiment on unwilling volunteers. Including her own daughters."

"That's not a very nice thing to say, you old goat! Besides, it's not like Ichigo died or anything!" Nui's singsong tone contained the barest traces of menace and annoyance before she sat up and reached down into her pink Lolita-style dress. Pulling out the crisp and unblemished photograph she took just a few hours ago during Student Evaluation Day, the scowling visage of Ichigo as clear as day, the Grand Couturier hummed thoughtfully and added, "But that's all in the past! What's really important is that Ichigo is at Honnouji Academy where I can see him any time I want!"

"Don't patronize me," Isshin attempted to glare at Nui Harime only to give up when she stuck out her tongue in response, "Whenever you take an interest in something, it always ends up badly. So I strongly recommend that you stay far away from Ichigo."

The Grand Couturier's saccharine expression forcibly tightened at Isshin's blatant threat, the sapphire color of her remaining eye slightly darkening. Pouting childishly while kicking the back of his chair with her pink boots, Nui tilted her head and mockingly sighed, "Golly, that was quite that rude thing to say! I know when I'm not wanted, you know. But I can't help wondering what Ichigo will think when he finds out the truth about you and Lady Ragyo."

A small frown pulled at the corners of Isshin's mouth as he scratched his chin, "The truth, huh? I already regaled Ichigo with my heroic exploits the day I met Ragyo."

"Don't be coy, you silly old goat."

Nui's single eye widened dangerously as she giggled childishly and leaned forward, a deranged expression on her face, "I bet you told Ichigo the old story about how you saved Lady Ragyo from a bombing! That's really cute, but we both know that's simply not true!

You must really be scared of telling Ichigo the truth if you're lying about something as silly as that!"

"There are some things that should only be learned when the time is right," Isshin answered, refusing to play along with the Grand Couturier's mind games. Truth be told, she actually had a point. But as much as he wanted to tell Ichigo the truth about how he really met Ragyo twenty-two years ago, Isshin knew it would be far better for his son to figure it out on his own, "Ichigo might not be a genius like Ryuken's son but he's a lot smarter than you think. I'm sure he'll be able to figure out everything about Ragyo given enough time."

"Aw, that's really sweet of you," Nui's voice dripped with saccharine happiness as she clapped her hands together. While she would love to keep talking with Isshin, especially since it was all about Ichigo, she did have a job to do. It would be really disappointing, not to mention a large and ugly blemish on her nearly perfect record, if she returned to Lady Ragyo without the old goat. Shuffling over in the backseat until she was sitting exactly in the middle, the Grand Couturier cutely fixed her dress before smirking, "But you're worrying over nothing. Lady Ragyo just wants to hear about Ichigo, including all the intricate and personal details. That's all! I super promise there's no ulterior motive!"

"She could have called."

Isshin's answer was punctuated with a small shrug of his shoulder, one eye focused on the visibly pleased Grand Couturier in the backseat while he subtly reached towards the hidden compartment underneath the steering wheel. Given Ragyo's propensity for overly dramatic reveals, not to mention her fashion sense, he figured something like this would eventually happen. Coughing lightly as he pressed a finger against the concealed latch, the compartment silently sliding open, Isshin arched an eyebrow, "But it's interesting that Ragyo sent you of all people..."

A deathly silence filled the vehicle as Isshin trailed off while raising his hand, the miniaturized Bleach Bomb clasped firmly between his fingers. Based on the same designs as the one Kisuke constructed in the hidden chamber underneath his shop, which detonated and injured Nui Harime when she decided to investigate, glowing blue circuits intersected across the device's pure white surface. Holding his thumb over the button that would trigger a five second countdown before the Bleach Grenade, one of only three in existence, went off, Isshin narrowed his eyes and jokingly chuckled, "Of course, this will hurt... a lot. After all, it is a grenade. But I'm sure it'll hurt you a lot more."

Nui's sapphire eye widened in shock and fear at Isshin's thinly veiled threat before she recomposed herself and cutely pouted. It wouldn't be proper for the world's best couturier, whose designs are worn by most humans, to get all riled up about something so trivial. A smile once more stretched across her face as she crossed one leg over the other and leaned forward, the Grand Couturier's voice was full of venom as she spoke, "Gosh, that is a real thoughtful gift but Lady Ragyo knew would be a stick in the mud! I think her exact words were 'Isshin is not a man that can be bullied' or something. So I went on a little field trip and did some extra credit!"

Cautiously staring into the review mirror when Nui gleefully reached into her dress, the saccharine smile plastered on her face widening, Isshin choked and nearly dropped the Bleach Grenade when he saw what she pulled out, "Those are - "

Held mockingly in each of the Grand Couturier's hands were Karin and Yuzu's most precious keepsakes. There was the special mint-condition autographed card Karin received from her favorite football star, which Isshin was absolutely sure she always kept next to her bed, as well as the stuffed animal Masaki had given to Yuzu only a few days before she passed away. Isshin knew his daughters were too smart to fall for any of Nui's tricks, so the only way she could have gotten her hands on them was if...

"I see you understand now, you silly old goat!" Nui announced cheerfully, cutting off Isshin's train of thought in the process, "You may be super strong but your family is an entirely different game!"

Isshin gripped the steering wheel hard enough to turn his knuckles white as he let the Bleach Grenade fall harmlessly into the passenger seat. Leaning back against the headrest while letting out a deep sigh, he hunched his shoulders in defeat and muttered, "I suppose I really don't have a choice. So when does Ragyo want to see me?"

As Nui Harime leaned forward and happily explained that Lady Ragyo wanted to see him right away, because it was super important that they meet and talk about Ichigo, they failed to pay any attention to the bus traveling in the opposite direction down the highway. Yawning loudly as she propped her head against the window, one hand curled protectively around the handle of the guitar case at her feet, Ryuko Matoi stared out over the bleak landscape with an absolutely bored expression on her face. She was bored out of her mind. After nearly five hours of traveling, with only a single pit stop along the way, she could feel her mind beginning to unravel.

Stretching her back while stifling another yawn, Ryuko looked away from the window and closed her eyes. It wouldn't be much longer until she reached Honnou City. If she wanted any shot of avenging her dad's murder and hunting down the bitch that killed him, she couldn't afford to be at anything less than one hundred percent.

Go Your Own Way

I present Chapter 5 of To My Death I Fight . Man, having to wait each week for the next episode of Kill la Kill is a real bummer. On one hand, I want to get this out to you, my readers, as quickly as possible. On the other hand every week I get punched in the face with a wham line, character reveal or, as this week pointed out, what actually happened to a specific character. I hate having a chapter done and finding out that half of it had been rendered AU from the new episode of Kill la Kill. Luckily for me, and you, this week wasn't that bad. I hardly had to change anything.

I made a slight edit to Chapter 3 in Ragyo's conversation with Rei. For those of you who have seen this week's episode, it will make sense why I did it. Oh, and FYI, it will be a cold, cold, COLD day in hell before I have Ichigo's Kamui be anything like Senketsu or Junketsu.

Edited January 18, 2015 - I fixed up most, if not 99%, of the grammatical tense and spelling mistakes. There may be one or two remaining but I think I've gotten most of them. One of the most prevailing things I fixed was my consistent spelling of 'Bakuzen' instead of the proper 'Bakuzan.' Several scenes have been cleaned up, including the dialogue and descriptions, which should help you, my readers, to easily follow what is going on. So enjoy this newly updated Chapter 5, containing more than 1,000 words of additional stuff!

---

...

---

Chapter 5 - Go Your Own Way

"I will not be defeated by the likes of you!"

Jack Naito's breath was heavy and ragged as he glared at Ichigo Kurosaki. His fight against the orange haired youth was just about to reach the ten minute mark but he had yet to score a second hit against the new student, which should have been impossible. He was wearing a Two-Star Goku Uniform, granted to him by Lady Satsuki to deal with Ichigo Kurosaki, yet they seemed to be evenly matched.

"Don't you know when to quit?" Ichigo asked while taking a deep breath. Bringing his arms back up into a standard defensive stance, his muscles already feeling the initial effects of exhaustion, Ichigo scowled when he saw Jack Naito beginning to angrily grit his teeth.

"You think you can beat me?" Jack Naito sneered as he flicked his wrists and prepared to once again use Trillion Drive. He could see Ichigo was starting to get tired. Perhaps this was the time the new student's freakishly inhuman stamina would actually fail him, "I don't know how you're still standing Ichigo Kurosaki, but you can't dodge forever! Eventually you'll screw up! When that happens you're going to die!"

"You keep thinking that," Ichigo grumbled as he slid his right foot backwards along the ground, "Just use your next attack already. I want to try and get something to eat before lunch is over."

"Why you son of a -"

Jack's curse was cut short when a brilliant burst of light shone down from the top of Honnouji Academy. As the courtyard of the academy was bathed in the white light, the shadows fleeing from the abrupt change in illumination, the two combatants paused and turned towards it for differing reasons. Craning his head upwards, one hand held over his forehead, Ichigo squinted his eyes and thought, "Who the hell turned on the floodlights?"

As he grew accustomed to the abrupt change in brightness Ichigo was able to barely make out Satsuki Kiryuin slowly descending down a flight of translucent steps. Glaring imperceptibly at the Kiryuin heiress as she approached him, her Elite Four flanking her on both sides, Ichigo had to admit that Uryu was completely right about her. Satsuki radiated strict mental control, her face set in a grim expression that conveyed power and authority to those around her. If he hadn't fought against and alongside people with similar personalities Ichigo knew he would have been cowed, if only a little, by Satsuki's expansive presence.

Her heels clicking softly against the ground as she reached the courtyard, her Elite Four walking solemnly behind her, Satsuki didn't take two steps before two rows of One-Star students appeared out of nowhere and bowed deeply to her. Momentarily settling her eyes on Ichigo, her brow creasing at the lack of fear on the former shinigami's face, Satsuki turned her focus on Jack Naito.

"Jack Naito!" Satsuki bellowed with authority as she slammed her sheathed blade against the ground, "You have failed in your mission!"

"B-But I still have time, Lady Satsuki!" Jack Naito fruitlessly pleaded, his body shaking with fear. Taking a nervous step backwards, the knives in his fingers clattering to the ground, he loudly gulped and muttered, "You said I had until the end of the day to deal with Ichigo Kurosaki. I still have a few hours left!"

Satsuki's eyes narrowed in response to Jack's excuse before slamming Bakuzan against the ground once more, "You, who have been granted the power of a Goku Uniform, dare ask for more time when you cannot even wound someone like Ichigo Kurosaki? How will more time change that? The answer is simple. It won't! You are weak, Jack Naito! You do not deserve the power of a Goku Uniform!"

"N-No..." Jack broke out into a cold sweat as he turned and fled from Satsuki Kiryuin, using his Two-Star Goku Uniform to force a path through the columns of One-Star students surrounding him and rushed towards the entrance of Honnouji Academy. Unfortunately for the flee Jack Naito his impromptu escape wasn't as surprising as he wished.

Ichigo only managed to catch a glimpse of Ira Gamagori rushing past him, his brown eyes barely tracking the larger student's movements, before the Disciplinary Committee Chair leapt into the air and crashed back into the ground in front of Jack Naito. Towering over the cowering student, his form nearly tripling in size, Gamagori spread his arms out as several spiked whips emerged from his sleeves.

"Why are you running? Gamagori rhetorically asked, his booming voice reverberating throughout the courtyard. Glaring at the sweating student kneeling on the ground in front of him, his eyes nothing more than gleaming yellow points of light, Gamagori twisted his wrists as he began smashing Jack Naito with his spiked whips, "You are not worthy of wearing one of Lady Satsuki's Goku Uniforms! Take it off!"

For nearly twenty seconds Gamagori continued to assault Jack Naito with the whips from his Goku Uniform, the club captain's body flailing back and forth almost comically from the many impacts. Eventually Gamagori raised his arm above him and, accompanied by a roar, swung his whip downwards with enough force to crater the ground underneath Jack while at the same time strip him of his Two-Star uniform. While the Knife Throwing Club president lay unconscious and injured on the ground, a trail of drool and spit leaking out of his mouth, and nearly naked apart from his underwear, Gamagori stared down at him derisively.

"Jack Naito, from this moment forward you are hereby demoted to No-Star," Gamagori informed the unconscious former club captain, uncaring about his state of being. Dusting off the captain's Two-Star uniform, which had mysteriously been folded during the commotion, Gamagori extended his arm as a One-Star student appeared at his side to take the uniform.

"You seem perturbed by what you just witnessed, Ichigo Kurosaki."

Ichigo turned away from the beaten and bruised body of the former Two-Star student towards Satsuki, who had started approaching him while his attention was focused on Gamagori. Noticing her uniform lacked any of the black, four-pointed stars most of the student body possessed Ichigo waited until Satsuki placed the sheathed sword back on her waist before answering neutrally, "He said you were the one that gave the order to attack me. Why the hell would you do this to him?"

"Someone like him who has been given power is nothing," Satsuki said, nearly halfway to him by now, "He was nothing but a pig in human clothing, fit for nothing save wallowing in his own powerlessness. Those without power will inevitably flock to those that have power. That is a cardinal rule of the world. Why would you even care about someone like that?"

"To be honest I really don't care," Ichigo retorted, his answer causing Satsuki to quirk an eyebrow in mild curiosity, "That guy was a real pain in the ass but he didn't deserve what Gamagori did to him. What gives you the right to do that?"

"What gives me the right, you ask?" Satsuki's voice was cold as she finally came to stop several feet in front of Ichigo. Crouching down as she drew her sword, Bakuzan's black metal gleaming malevolently in the sunlight, Satsuki burst forward and attempted to decapitate Ichigo.

Ducking under the first swing Ichigo was forced to immediately lean to his left when Satsuki followed her initial attack with a vertical swipe aimed at severing his left arm from his body. Rolling along the ground away from Satsuki, hopping backwards when she stabbed Bakuzan into the dirt, Ichigo scowled and raced towards the Student Council President. Leaning his neck to the side as he closed the distance, Bakuzan shining brightly inches from his neck, Ichigo attempted to smash his elbow into Satsuki's face only to be surprised when she avoided the blow and retaliated by slamming her foot into his chin.

Ichigo stumbled back from the surprise attack but quickly recovered. He hadn't been expecting her to have such flexibility, and now his chin was paying the price for his stupidity. Spitting out a wad of blood from when he bit his tongue, he quickly retaliated with a kick to Satsuki's side that was blocked at the last minute by her sword. However, it still caused her to skid several feet along the ground from the force behind the kick.

"That was a cheap shot," he muttered and wiped the trail of blood leaking from his lips onto his sleeve.

"Your skills are quite impressive, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki stoically announced as she turned around and sheathed Bakuzan with an audible click. Walking back towards the flight of stairs, the rows of One-Star students bowing as she passed, Satsuki paused as she reached the first step and looked over her shoulder, "But fighting someone of your level is beneath me. Consider your admittance to Honnouji Academy... approved."

Ichigo watched her go, but there were many things he wanted to find out, starting with why she had decided to attack him. There was something strange going on at Honnouji Academy, and he was sure Satsuki Kiryuin was at the center of it all. Taking a step forward to demand answers from her, he found his path blocked by Gamagori, who had literally appeared out of the sky.

"Ichigo Kurosaki!" Gamagori's voice echoed through the area before it quickly changed into that of a businessman's, "In order to attend Honnouji Academy, you will need to fill out these forms in triplicate. I do not expect you to finish every single form today, so I will start you off with the Student Residential Contract, Heating and Electric, Amenities, Health Insurance, Life Insurance, Proof of Citizenship and the down payment on your dormitory room. The total cost for everything comes out to 102,000 yen."

While Gamagori was listing various things Ichigo didn't care about, One-Star students had begun piling stacks of forms in his arms until he could barely see over the top. When he heard about a bill in the hundreds of thousands of yen, Ichigo stuck his head around the stack of forms, "What the hell are you talking about? Doesn't my full scholarship to this stupid school mean I'm here for free?"

Gamagori's eye twitched, "Indeed."

With almost restrained reluctance, Gamagori grabbed the total bill off of the stack of papers and promptly ripped it in half, "Due to the actions of Lady Satsuki's mother you pay for nothing. I do not like that. Watch yourself, Ichigo Kurosaki. If you step out of line even a single time, I will be forced to administrate punishment unto you."

"Punishment unto me?" Ichigo couldn't help but wonder what the hell Gamagori was trying to say. He had an idea, a terrible one, of what Gamagori meant and it sent shivers down his spine, "That better not mean what I think it does. Just to let you know, I'm not into that kind of stuff."

After hearing Ichigo's words, Jakuzure and Sanageyama burst into laughter, Nonon actually falling to the ground while holding her sides. When Gamagori turned towards them, a furious look on his face, they quickly stopped and began whistling innocently.

"Man, I think I'm going to like you," Sanageyama gave Ichigo a two finger salute before turning around to follow Satsuki, "Don't forget to sign up for the Kendo Club, Ichigo. I could use someone like you as the club president."

Ichigo watched Satsuki and her Elite Four walk away before he dropped the forms on the ground. The stack of papers had to weigh at least fifty pounds and Gamagori expected him to sign them all before the end of the night? Jack Naito might have been insane but Ichigo couldn't understand why Satsuki had intervened in the fight.

"Ichigo!"

" Oh, damn it... "

Appearing out of nowhere, her feet kicking up trails of dust off the ground, Mako Mankanshoku slid to a stop next to Ichigo with one of Jack's knives lodged harmlessly in her hair. As she ate the remainder of his lunch, using another of the knives as a makeshift fork, Mako looked at Ichigo with starry eyes, "That was uber cool!"

"Uber cool?"

"Yeah!" Mako threw away Ichigo's lunch tray, causing it to beam a One-Star student in the face, and began mimicking Ichigo and Jack Naito's poses from the fight, "You were all like 'pow pow pow' and he was all 'you cannot defeat me' and then you were all like 'this fight is beneath someone of my stature!' It was so amazing! If Lady Satsuki hadn't stepped in, you would have totally won for sure!"

"No I wouldn't," Ichigo admitted, causing Mako's face to freeze in shock. As Satsuki, and the light she constantly emitted, disappeared, he continued, "Jack had the advantage in both strength and power over me. I may have been faster but it was only a matter of time until he managed to get a lucky hit."

Mako waved her hand in front of her face, "Don't drag yourself through the mud Ichigo! You would have won for sure! Wait just a second! Could it be...?"

Before Ichigo could protest or stop her Mako dove into the stack of forms and contracts and began throwing them haphazardly into the air. Eventually finding what she was seeking Mako let out a shout of triumph as she pulled out a single piece of paper, "You got a room in the Honnouji Academy dorms! That is awesome! I heard the standards of living there are way above the One-Star Residential District! Only those with oodles of money can afford to live there. Let's go check out your right, Ichigo! My family is going to be so jealous!"

"I don't think that's a -" Ichigo tried to tell Mako not to, but the hyperactive girl was hearing none of it. Grabbing Ichigo's wrist, she began pulling him in the direction of the dorms.

---

...

---

" Ichigo," Isshin's voice came through the phone in a serious tone, "Sorry that I couldn't stay to say goodbye. Something important came up back home and I needed to rush back to Karakura Town."

"Like I was worried," Ichigo grumbled into his phone. From where he was lying down, he had to admit that his dorm was a lot classier than he would have assumed. When he heard he would be living in a dorm, he had been expecting something along the lines of a single room. Instead, as he opened the door he found that he had a kitchen, living room, bedroom and several other things he hadn't expected to find. It was more of an apartment than a dorm, "Just don't do anything stupid when I'm gone."

" What?" Isshin shouted into the phone loud enough to cause Ichigo to hold it away at arm's length, "How can you dare to say that?"

"You know damn well why."

" I don't want to hear that you obtained the love of several women, but if it happens, makes sure you pick out your favorite," Isshin paused for a far greater time than he should have before finishing, "I have to go. I'll talk to you tomorrow, Ichigo. Goodbye and have fun."

Staring at his phone for several minutes after his father hung up, his mind trying to understand what had just happened and what he should do, Ichigo eventually decided to lie back down and stare up at his ceiling. He was sure his dad knew more about why he was here at Honnouji Academy but Ichigo wasn't going to confront him about it. Ever since finding out his dad was a shinigami of such power that he could effectively fight Sosuke Aizen, a feat that he couldn't do before training in the Dangai, Ichigo had decided that allowing Isshin some leeway was the right thing to do. If his dad decided he needed to know something, he would make sure Ichigo would find out.

Letting a weary sigh escape his lips, the clock in his dormitory kitchen faintly ticking in the background, Ichigo was about to try and go to sleep when he glanced to his left and noticed something odd about his Kamui. As he focused on the white uniform hanging limply on the wall across his bedroom, the fabric lightly shifting in an unfelt breeze, Ichigo sat up and narrowed his eyes, "That's different..."

What drew his attention and pushed away any remaining weariness were the two half-opened eyes on the collars of his Kamui. When he first saw his uniform Ichigo had been completely certain Kisuke's strange designs were of closed eyes, without a trace of the iris or pupil, yet now he could clearly see rings of orange, blue and yellow in those sleepy-looking eyes.

Ichigo stared at the Kamui for almost a minute, the clock in the background adding to the tension permeating his dormitory, before he decided to take a closer look at it. The lack of light in his bedroom apart from the meager illumination his orange desk lamp provided was causing the shadows to jump chaotically around the Kamui. Walking slowly across his bedroom Ichigo grabbed the Kamui from its hanger and held it at arm's length, his eyes scrutinizing every detail he could see.

"Something's not right here..."

Leave it to Kisuke to make a school uniform without telling him it wasn't normal. As his thoughts drifted back to the annoying letter the shopkeeper left for him Ichigo decided to lean in and get a closer look at the Kamui's eyes. When his face was less than a foot away from those mysterious eyes, the individual threads of the Kamui nearly visible, Ichigo was thrown off guard when the Kamui's eyes suddenly shot open.

"What the fuck?" Ichigo dropped the Kamui out of surprise and backpedaled as his uniform began moving on its own.

" More... "

If Ichigo wasn't surprised that the voice was clearly coming from the Kamui, he was in for a shock when it began warping and changing before managing to mimic standing up. After it managed to bring itself up off the floor, the Kamui's bloodshot eyes darted around his room before focusing solely on Ichigo.

" Blood... feed me more blood!"

In one swift motion the Kamui leapt at him. While that should have been an impossible feat, Ichigo was more concerned with the fact that it was apparently gunning for him and he did not want to know what would happen if it caught him. While he knew there was an afterlife, he didn't want his cause of death to be 'my clothes ate me.' He knew without a doubt that everyone in the Soul Society wouldn't let him live that down. He would take fighting Aizen over something like that any day of the week.

Quickly rolling out of the way as the Kamui reached him, its sleeves twisting through the air, Ichigo sprung back up and immediately darted towards his bedroom door. Thankful that he had decided to leave the door open, he raced through it, his hand grabbing the handle as he went, and slammed it shut before locking it.

"The hell is going on?" Ichigo braced his body against the door as it began shaking and creaking from the Kamui throwing itself against the frame. How could something that is essentially clothing be so strong? It was impossible and yet, if Kisuke was involved, Ichigo wasn't surprised something like this had happened. As he tried to make sense of what was happening, Ichigo came to two conclusions. Either Kisuke, through some godless ritual, managed to bring his uniform to life or someone here at Honnouji Academy managed to spike his food with something.

The Kamui continued to fruitlessly attempt to break through the door for several more minutes, the wooden frame holding firm under the assault, but Ichigo wasn't going to let that thing out no matter what it took. Bracing his shoulder against the door his hand firmly holding the handle on the off chance the Kamui figured out how to open the door, Ichigo scowled, "Fuck this. I'm going to call Yoruichi and Tessai and explain everything. They must know something about what's happening to my Kamui."

Reaching to his pocket for his cell phone and quickly cursing when he realized he left it in his bedroom Ichigo waited for the Kamui's escape attempts to slow and eventually stop. The door might have been closed but the Kamui was essentially clothing. It might try to escape by sliding underneath the door if it realized it could. Carefully stepped away from his bedroom towards the kitchen, his eyes glancing back and forth between the kitchen phone and the bedroom door, Ichigo heard the same feminine voice begin begging at him.

" Don't go... please don't go..."

Ichigo paused in mid-step at the desperate tone. Turning around, his mind trying to figure out if he went insane, Ichigo decided to ask, "What the hell are you?"

" I don't want to go back to sleep..."

The voice was starting to sound more and more desperate with each word. Pinching the bridge of his nose, Ichigo knew he should just wait for it to go back to sleep. It was the most sensible thing to do, after all, but his time as a shinigami and dealing with the Soul Society and everything else had opened his mind to things he would rather have forgotten. Really wishing he wasn't about to say what was on his mind, he asked, "Damn it all. If I open this door, do you promise to not attack me?"

"... Yes..."

Mentally noting to kick himself in the morning for considering what he was about to do Ichigo groaned and swung the door open. He had been prepared for his Kamui to leap out and attack but when nothing happened he took a hesitant step back into his bedroom. That was when he saw the Kamui.

Against common sense, as well as every law of nature Ichigo could remember, the Kamui was standing up under its own power in the middle of his room. While it still retained the same colors as his normal black and white school uniform the rest of its body had shifted into something completely different. The bottom of his Kamui was hovering just off the floor using some unseen source of power. The sleeves of his jacket were hollow and deflated, yet were held stiffly in the air, almost as if there was something filling them. What drew his attention was the pair of eyes that had started this whole mess. The orange, blue and yellowed ringed irises were completely focused on him, the intent in his uniform's gaze causing apprehension to grip Ichigo. Lastly the chest area of his jacket had opened up and shifted into a gaping maw full of several fang-like structures.

"I'm not going to ask again. What are you?"

The Kamui brought a hollow sleeve up to its collar, which seemed to be functioning as its forehead, and rubbed it before the gaping mouth answered in a feminine voice, "I am a Kamui."

"I already knew that," Ichigo should have known his uniform was different from the very start. It had been made by Kisuke, after all, and that insane shopkeeper never made anything normal when he could help it, "But what exactly are you? I don't know what being a Kamui means but I'm pretty sure clothes aren't supposed to talk, move or crave my blood like a vampire."

" I don't know..." the Kamui seemed almost depressed, its eyes closing sadly, as it answered, "I remember my creation by Kisuke Urahara and then nothing until I tasted your blood earlier. I need more! I will not go back to sleep again!"

With a crazed and bloodshot look in its eyes the Kamui leapt through the air at Ichigo. Shifting his stance while mentally berating himself for falling into such an obvious trap Ichigo reached out and tried to grapple with the Kamui. To his shock and surprise the Kamui not only managed to weave itself around his fingers, which being made of clothing made sense, but also began wrapping its sleeves around his arms.

" That's it! Wear me! Put me on! Let me drink your blood!"

"Like hell I will!" Swinging his arms to the side, Ichigo slammed the Kamui into the wall of his bedroom hard enough to crack the plaster, but at the same time daze the Kamui. As its sleeves limply slid off his arms, and its eyes adapted a dazed look, Ichigo quickly grabbed it and tossed it in his closet before slamming the door closed.

As the Kamui quickly recovered and stared slamming its body against the closet door, loud echoes reverberating through his room, Ichigo leaned against the door and rubbed his face, "I'm being attacked by my own clothing. This is a freaking nightmare. When I find Kisuke I'm going to kill him."

There was a more pressing issue for Ichigo at the moment. If his Kamui was technically alive, he was going to need to get a new school uniform. Bracing a chair against the closet door to prevent it from escaping, Ichigo began walking out of his bedroom. He would have to be an idiot to try and sleep there with that thing in his closet, "Damn it, I'm here for barely a day and my clothes come to life and try and eat me. I'm going to have to ask Mako tomorrow where I can get a new uniform."

" No!" The Kamui slammed itself against the closet door hard enough to move the chair, "You cannot wear anything but me. I won't allow it!"

"Give it a rest. There's no way you're getting out of there," Ichigo said before realizing he had effectively just ordered his clothing to shut up, "I must be hallucinating. I know I'm going to wake up tomorrow morning in my bed and my uniform will be nothing more than normal clothing."

" Please!" To Ichigo's shock the Kamui sounded like it was crying, "Let me taste your blood! I don't want to go back to sleep!"

Ichigo stopped in the doorway, "Is sleeping really that bad?"

When he received nothing but silence from the Kamui Ichigo sighed and banged his head against the wall. Why did his life, even as a normal human without any spiritual powers, have to be so screwed up? After thinking things over for a moment he asked, "Do you have a name? I find this whole situation odd enough without knowing my school uniform's name."

There was an almost pathetic scratching at his closet door as his Kamui spoke, "No... I don't have a name."

"No name huh..." Ichigo, despite his best efforts, could not help but be reminded of Zangetsu. He remembered when his zanpakuto had scolded him for trying to wield him without knowing his name. Ichigo had seen what happens when a shinigami ignores his zanpakuto. Kenpachi had been enough of a wakeup call for Ichigo to never take Zangetsu for granted again.

Ichigo didn't want to have to think up a name on the fly. It was too hard to think of something good and he wasn't about to go the Kon route and give his Kamui a ridiculous name. He needed to call it something appropriate, "Alright, I've decided on a name. It comes from an old friend that sacrificed a lot for me. I think he would appreciate it if I named you after him... Mugetsu. How does that sound?"

" Mugetsu..." The Kamui seemed to mull it over for a moment, "That is an acceptable name."

"Now that you have a name, I have another question. Why do you want my blood?"

" Your blood is the only thing keeping me awake," Mugetsu replied almost nostalgically, "Without your blood, I will soon go back to sleep."

"So why do you need me to wear you?" Ichigo asked, folding his arms across his chest.

" My creator made me specifically for you to wear. No one else can wear me. That is why I will never allow you to wear anything else! I shall be the only thing you will ever wear!"

The way Mugetsu seemed excited to be worn by him was a little freaky but Ichigo put that on the backburner for the moment, "Why did Kisuke make you?"

" I don't know," Mugetsu confessed, "All I remember upon my creation is Kisuke Urahara standing above me before sealing me away..."

"Kisuke, you bastard," Why did that idiotic shopkeeper have to do something like this to him? Ichigo had to leave it to Kisuke to complicate his life even now. Sitting down on the ground, Ichigo grumbled, "Just to let you know, Mugetsu, I find the whole concept of wearing something living and breathing both horrifying and embarrassing. If you truly are alive wearing you would be wrong on many different levels. You are your own person... or Kamui, I guess. Why should I wear you instead of sending you back to Kisuke's store?"

" Wearing me will give you great power," Mugetsu answered, "Those cheap Goku Uniforms will not stand a chance against our combined power!"

"I don't need power," Ichigo said, "What's the point of having power if there is no reason to use it? Although I would be happy living a normal life I think at this point that is nothing but a pipe dream. I have a sneaking suspicion that Satsuki Kiryuin is soon going to come after me. I've known people like her. They never stop until they get what they're after. If you are as powerful as you claim I could easily stop her before things get too bad."

Ichigo had noticed the looks Satsuki gave him when she confronted him earlier. Usually that wouldn't faze him, but it was the fact that she seemed to be more interested in his Kamui than himself. It didn't make much sense to him at the time but now that Ichigo found out his Kamui was alive, he had the feeling that Satsuki knew what it was.

"Damn it," Ichigo cursed before sighing audibly. Banging his head against the closet door Ichigo rubbed the bridge of his nose and groaned, "Fine, I'll wear you but only under one condition."

Mugetsu couldn't hide the excitement in her voice as she slammed her body against the door, "What is it? I'll do anything!"

"Kisuke Urahara was attacked about a week ago," Ichigo informed his Kamui as a scowl developed on his face, "One of the last things he mentioned was about Life Fibers. After speaking with you I have the sinking feeling whoever attacked Kisuke was actually trying to get to you. If I wear you I want you to promise to stick by my side as I find out what happened to him. After that I'll let you decide if you want to continue sticking with me. How does that sound?"

"That's not a problem!" Mugetsu exclaimed as her sleeves began fumbling with the handle to the closet door, "I will follow your ambitions no matter where they lead! Use my power any way you want, Ichigo! Just please don't let me go back to sleep again!"

Ichigo didn't know what to blame for his decision to wear Mugetsu. Perhaps the lack of sleep was finally getting to him or maybe it had to do with being attacked for no reason only a few after arriving at Honnouji Academy. Whatever the case may be if he was really starting to lose his grip on reality it couldn't be any worse than having a murderous and insane hollow living within the depths of his souls.

Carefully moving the chair away from the closet door, his fingers tightly gripping the handle, Ichigo took a moment to brace himself before asking, "Ok, so how does this -"

Whatever he was about to say was cut off as Mugetsu literally jumped on top of him and began putting herself on his body.

---

...

---

"Please do not try to escape meeting with Lady Ragyo by jumping out of the elevator... again," Rei Hououmaru strongly cautioned while absentmindedly smoothing out a crease on her sleeve. Turning towards Isshin, who had just finished speaking with his son and was now staring out the window, she added, "The glass surrounding us is reinforced to withstand barrage from an Anti-Tank rifle. By the time you successfully breach the elevator we would have already arrived."

"I think I'll take my chances," Isshin answered as he turned towards the surprisingly thick glass. Rapping his knuckles against the mostly transparent material, a hollow echo permeating the elevator from the contact, he sighed once he saw what floor they were already passing, "I know the second we step into her office Ragyo will try to kill me. She is the type of woman to hold grudges... really long grudges."

Rei Hououmaru didn't bother replying to Isshin's ridiculous accusations against Lady Ragyo. Staring at the digital readout above the elevator doors, the number approaching triple digits, the Revocs secretary hid a satisfied smirk when she felt a subtle shift in her uniform. Stepping forward as they arrived, her white heels clicking softly against the ground, Hououmaru turned around and swept her arm towards Ragyo's office, "The Director is right this way."

"I remember my way around," Isshin mumbled while staring apprehensively down the hallway. Taking one final look at the elevator behind him, his mind quickly calculating his chances of escape to be roughly zero, Isshin hung his head dejectedly as he began the short trek towards Ragyo's office. Folding his hands in his pockets as he purposely dragged his feet, Rei quickly passing him to open the doors, Isshin hoped Ragyo wasn't still upset at him about their last meeting.

Isshin's hopes were dashed the moment Rei Hououmaru finished opening the doors to Ragyo's office. Quickly ducking when he saw several rainbow colored strands of Life Fibers whipping towards him, the threads skewering the wall behind him as they missed, Isshin frowned and cautiously stood back up, "It's great to see you again, Ragyo."

"I would prefer if you didn't greet Isshin so vigorously, Ma'am," Rei sighed as she closed her eyes and reached into the breast pocket of her white suit. Pulling out a pair of aviator sunglasses, the reflective tint on the lenses blocking the bright rainbow light illuminating the office, the Revocs secretary stepped backwards as she mentally calculated the cost of repairing the damage, "It seems I will need to call your interior designer."

"Forgive my enthusiasm, Hououmaru. I just remembered Isshin so rudely leaving last time without saying goodbye."

Curling her index finger into the palm of her hand, the strands of rainbow Life Fibers rapidly retreating back into her body at her mental command, Ragyo Kiryuin allowed a smirk to grace her features as she stared at Isshin for the first time in years. Tilting her head to the side, her cheek propped up against her hand, the rainbow light emanating from the Kiryuin matriarch's silver hair intensified as she gazed at the man standing in front of her, "It's been quite some time since we spoke, Isshin. How have you been?"

"I've been better," Isshin answered dismissively as he looked around Ragyo's office, "But did you have to send your little helper? You could have just called if you wanted to see me."

Ragyo chuckled as a silver eyebrow quirked upwards in feigned shock. Regally standing up, the entire office quickly illuminated by the rainbow light shining from her silver hair, the CEO of Revocs slowly walked around her desk with her arms clasped under her bosom, "I hope my precious Nui didn't trouble you too much. You know how difficult it is to give orders to an artiste as free spirited as the Grand Couturier."

"I'm not as into artwork like Masaki was. It felt like every other weekend she was begging me to take her to a different museum or gallery!" Isshin closed his eyes as he laughed boisterously. It took the better part of five years, and a few subtle threats from his wife, but he managed to develop the ability to hide his boredom whenever Masaki held a flyer for a new exhibit in front of his face. Subtly aware of Ragyo's footsteps drawing closer, the rainbow light permeating the office continuously growing brighter by the second, Isshin pointed a thumb over his shoulder at Hououmaru and said, "It's been bugging me for some time now but Hououmaru's not wearing a normal suit."

"Oh?" Ragyo glanced over at Hououmaru, who had silently turned her attention to Isshin, and asked, "And what, my dear Isshin, makes you think that?"

Isshin ignored Ragyo as she continued to approach him before answering, "It wasn't until the elevator that I managed to get a good look at it but there is definitely something off about her suit. I may have a terrible sense of fashion but even I know someone working for one of the biggest companies in the world shouldn't be wearing shorts with a business suit."

"Comment tres amusant! You always preferred to play the part of the fool, Isshin," Ragyo's eyes were filled with a look that set Isshin's nerves on edge. He had seen that look many years ago. It was the exact same one that made Masaki very, very upset with him for a variety of reasons. As the Kiryuin matriarch circled around Isshin, her lips curled upwards into a facsimile of a grin, she continued, "Even back then you hid your sharp mind behind the façade of a jester, projecting an idiotic persona to throw others off guard. It is only when the audience is gone that the true brilliance locked deep in your mind shines forth but I'm curious about one thing. For almost twenty years you've known about COVERS yet you haven't made a single move to stop me. I wonder why that is..."

"Perhaps I hoped someone else would see how insane you are and stop you before it could fully awaken," Isshin countered with a reluctant shrug, "Souichiro might have done some truly disturbing things but eventually he began to see you for the monster you are. It's just a shame he realized it far too late to actually do anything to stop you."

"You always say the nicest things, Isshin," Ragyo coyly teased. Placing a hand on his shoulder, her chin resting next to his ear, she whispered, "Then again, you were the only man I ever truly loved. When you so callously ignored my feelings I was forced to settle for Souichiro."

Isshin frowned and pulled his shoulder out of Ragyo's grasp, "You know my heart has been, and always will be, for Masaki. The fact she is no longer with us does not change anything."

"Must you be as defiant and hard-headed as always?" Ragyo half-asked before sighing dramatically and leaning forward, the light emanating from her hair intensifying, "But I wouldn't expect anything else from a man such as yourself. You are, after all, the only person on Earth I will allow to talk to me like that."

"I know you didn't call me just to catch up on old times," Isshin pointed out as he looked at his watch and noticed the time. Turning towards Ragyo, his eyes locked with hers, he added, "If that was all you wanted to do you would haven't sent your little helper to come get me. The last time we saw each other I had just rescued my son from your clutches and Masaki was standing over your crippled body. It's a miracle Ichigo managed to survive and live a healthy and normal life after what you did to him."

"Ichigo Kurosaki..." Ragyo dragged out each syllable as she strutted forward and stood next to Isshin, "It was quite the pleasant surprise to find out the experiment didn't kill him. I do so want to see how well your son has thrived."

"You stay away from my son," Isshin's voice was tinged with anger before he scoffed and pushed Ragyo's hand away from his arm, "Let's cut through the crap, Ragyo. You see Ichigo as nothing more than an experiment, don't you? I may not have recognized some of the machines in the room where I found Ichigo but I sure as hell noticed the Life Fibers. What were you trying to do to my son?"

"The same thing I tried on both of my daughters, of course," Ragyo replied without a hint of remorse, "I attempted to infuse my daughters with Life Fibers but unfortunately they were too weak. There are so few people in the world able to merge with Life Fibers and live. Satsuki was too incompatible while my second daughter was too frail and died before the procedure was finished."

Isshin knew all this already but hearing Ragyo say it without a remorse or care was almost too much for him. Pushing past the Kiryuin matriarch, his footsteps heavy as he headed towards the exit of her office, he paused and looked over his shoulder, "Sometimes I wonder if you still have a soul, Ragyo. Now unless you have anything else to say I'm going home."

Ragyo turned her body fully towards Isshin, her lips curled into a maniacal smile, and held an arm out, "I will permit you to leave, Isshin, but do not assume you were victorious. My interest in your son has only increased now that I know he has both lived and thrived these past seventeen years. Perhaps I will even have my daughter court him. The merging of our bloodlines will be truly magnificent. Hououmaru, please escort Isshin out of the building. It would be rude to keep him around when he has more important places to be."

As she watched Isshin leave her office, Hououmaru gently closing the door behind her as she left, the smirk on Ragyo's face dropped ever so slightly. Maroon eyes closing as she listened to Isshin's footsteps fading into the distance Ragyo didn't turn around when she sensed another presence in her office, "I take it you heard everything?"

"Of course I did!" Nui Harime cheerfully stated while sitting on the edge of Ragyo's desk, her feet kicking freely and lazily in the air. With a large grin plastered on her face, the purple eyepatch hidden beneath a bang of blonde hair that managed to escape her pink bow, the Grand Couturier stuck her tongue out and giggled, "It was super interesting to meet him after all these years! That old goat is just as strong as I remember!"

Ragyo chuckled in amusement as her thoughts focused on the man that just left her office completely unscathed. Looking over her shoulder at the petite Grand Couturier, her lips curled upwards into a smirk, the CEO of Revocs asked, "Is that so? I hope you didn't do anything to provoke Isshin. You know quite well what happens to those that truly manage to get on his bad side."

"You don't have to worry about me," Nui huffed and puffed out her cheeks. Kicking her feet against Ragyo's desk, her pink boots tapping lightly against the polished metal, the Grand Couturier clapped her hands together and leaned forward, "It was really easy to go to Isshin's house when he wasn't around. I just waited around and took his daughters' most precious things! Nothing else would bring him here, you know. Isshin seemed really upset after I showed those things to him so I made sure to leave them in the car before I left!"

"La vie est drôle," Ragyo replied as she walked across her office towards the windows circling the wall, her heels clicking softly against the marble floor. Crossing her arms under her bosom, the white dress never shifting for a moment, the Kiryuin matriarch gazed out over the expansive building complex stretching out into the distance, "I am ordering you to stay away from Isshin and his two daughters... at least for the moment."

Nui leaned her head back, her single sapphire eye blinking owlishly, and smirked, "Can I still play with Ichigo? I really want to meet him and introduce myself, after all!"

The rainbow undertone from Ragyo's hair flared brightly as she considered the Grand Couturier's request, "But of course. You can play with Ichigo as much as you want. Just make you remember to behave yourself."

Clapping her hands together once more as she leapt off the desk, her body gently floating down to the floor with nary a sound, Nui Harime's mind immediately began planning every possible thing she could do with Ichigo in the future. Puffing her cheeks outwards as she remembered the other business she still needed to do, memories of six months ago fresh in her mind, Nui Harime huffed as she left Ragyo to her thoughts, "It really bums me out that I cannot play with Isshin anymore! He's way more fun to hang with than the other Isshin."

Ragyo's eyes narrowed as the smirk on her face dropped, "How much longer are you going to keep referring to that man as Isshin?"

---

...

---

"You seem quite pleased with the day's events, Milady."

Sitting in a chair, clad in a form fitting white robe tied gently around her waist, Satsuki gently smiled as she sipped the tea Soroi offered her, "You know me far too well, Soroi."

Satsuki was quite pleased with how the day's events progressed. Not only was Iori's research into improving her Goku Uniforms pushed forward by Jack Naito's ignominious at Ichigo Kurosaki's hands, every blow and attack landed upon recently demoted No-Star recorded in detail by Inumuta, but she was finally able to confront the teenager that garnered her mother's personal interference in Honnouji Academy's matters. Although she was impressed with Ichigo Kurosaki's ability to fight a Two-Star Goku Uniform, a feat previously achieved only by her Elite Four, she hadn't expected the orange haired teenager to track Bakuzan's movements.

Soroi Mitsuzou took a step back, the sterling silver tray held delicately in his hands, and bowed his head slightly, "Forgive my bluntness but I can't recall ever seeing you so fixated on another person."

"Fixated you say..."

Satsuki's smirk vanished as she stared through the large windows taking up the entire wall of her private chambers. Gazing at the moon lazily hovering in the sky overhead, the nearly dark room illuminated with a pale white glow, the Kiryuin heiress paused momentarily before finishing, "I will admit my initial impression of Ichigo Kurosaki was inaccurate. He is far more skilled and intelligent than Inumuta's data indicated but there are still too many variables about his transfer to Honnouji Academy. That is not to mention the uniform he was wearing..."

Despite the impossibility of the situation Ichigo Kurosaki was in possession of an actual Kamui. She had first noticed the peculiarities of his uniquely colored uniform during Ichigo's fight against Jack Naito but it was not until she confronted the orange haired teenager that she could confirm her hypothesis. During that confrontation the question of where Ichigo managed to acquire his Kamui was forefront on her mind. Kamui, by definition, were woven completely from Life Fibers, which had to come from Revocs. Either someone at Revocs created Ichigo's Kamui or there existed a third party that possessed the required expertise and Life Fibers to create such a masterpiece.

How he managed to tame his Kamui was another question that plagued Satsuki's mind. According to her mother's rather morbid explanation humans that Kamui find unworthy of wearing them are slowly and painfully shredded and eaten by the Life Fiber uniform. That Ichigo could wear a Kamui so casually without showing any sign of fatigue or exhaustion spoke wonders about his mental fortitude. Junketsu, the Kamui her father called her wedding dress, required someone with great spiritual and mental fortitude to tame it.

"You say that I am fixated on Ichigo Kurosaki?" Satsuki muttered as she closed her eyes and leaned back, "Perhaps there is some truth in your words, Soroi, but no matter how I feel on the subject Ichigo remains a thorn in my side. If he turns out to be an enemy I will not hesitate to ruthlessly cut him down. If my mother saw fit to send him to Honnouji Academy I can only presume she is aware of my plans."

Soroi's eyes drooped down at Satsuki's words before he respectfully asked, "What do you plan to do about Lady Ragyo?"

Folding her hands in front of her mouth Satsuki's lips curled into a smirk as she replied, "My mother knowing of my plans might work to our advantage. If she believes she knows the full extent of what I have planned her moves will become predictable. While she continues to think I remain in the dark, unaware of her machinations behind the scene, Inumuta and the others will activate several contingency plans to make sure everything proceeds as scheduled."

"Very well, Milady," Soroi placed an arm across his chest and bowed his head, "Will there be anything else?"

Satsuki shook her head, "I wish to be left alone."

As Soroi left Satsuki to her own thoughts, the aged butler placing the pot full of tea on the stand before leaving the room, she tilted her head towards the large windows overlooking Honnouji Academy and the city stretching out into Tokyo Bay. There was a storm approaching on the horizon. Satsuki didn't know when it would arrive but she was certain all those involved would feel its impact. In order to emerge as the only victor in the upcoming conflict Satsuki needed to make sure her forces were adequately prepared.

I Can't Help Myself

So here is the revised version of chapter 6. It's at least 1.300 words longer than the original chapter but the main point is that I've fixed grammatical errors, plot holes, sentence and conversation structure, weird character interactions or characterizations and, lastly, edited in a few subtle foreshadowing clues and hints that will really have you guessing. I hope you enjoy this chapter since I really took the time and effort to fixing it up.

---

...

---

Chapter 6 - I Can't Help Myself

Two days after he agreed to let Mugetsu be worn by him Ichigo was starting to regret not thinking things through. The problem wasn't that it, or rather she as Mugetsu's voice suggested, lied to him. On the contrary, ever since the moment he had put on the fully awakened Mugetsu Ichigo had felt power course through his body reminiscent of when he was a substitute shinigami. Of course there were subtle differences between his shinigami powers and Mugetsu but it was quite the refreshing feeling to not feel completely powerless anymore.

" I just felt your blood pressure and heart rate spike, Ichigo," Mugetsu's feminine voice had a hint of concern to it as the eyes on her uniform blinked and looked up at Ichigo, "Are you feeling ok?"

"I'm fine. Don't worry about it," Ichigo mumbled while covering his mouth as if to yawn.

That right there was the main problem he had with Mugetsu. While he could hear every word his Kamui said with absolute clarity, the problem was that no one else could. When Mugetsu had first spoken to him outside of the privacy of his dorm room, it had been in the middle of one of his classes and nearly scared the shit out of him. Ichigo had quickly looked around, thinking the other students would be looking at him weirdly. To his surprise, none of them looked like they had heard anything. Apparently he was the only one who could hear Mugetsu's voice, which was a relief. He didn't want to have to explain why his school uniform was talking.

The issue was talking back to Mugetsu without looking insane. He had tried many things to preserve the image of his sanity, ranging from covering his mouth when talking to Mugetsu or waiting until he was alone before responding. That didn't stop the looks he was beginning to receive from the other students, despite his precautions. The only one to not find his behavior odd was, of course, Mako, who said she found nothing wrong with Ichigo making friends with his school uniform.

" Are you still concerned about Satsuki Kiryuin?"

"Yeah," Ichigo turned towards one of the windows overlooking the Honnouji Academy courtyard below before speaking, "I have a feeling she knows about you, including what you are."

" What do you plan to do?" Mugetsu's eyes swiveled upwards in an attempt to make eye contact with Ichigo, "You know that with my power, she doesn't stand a chance against you."

"I don't want to fight her," Ichigo said with a sigh, "If she knows that you're a Kamui, then there is nothing I can do about it until she confronts us. If you're right, Mugetsu, about your power being too much for Satsuki, then she won't confront us for a while. That should give me enough time to think of a plan."

" You have a point Ichigo," Mugetsu conceded before adding, "When are you going to give me more blood and transform into my true form?"

"When I feel like it," Ichigo reminded Mugetsu with a hint of annoyance in his voice, "Like I told you a few minutes ago, there's no reason for me to transform into your true form without a good enough reason. Why do you keep pestering me about it?"

" Because you do not understand," Mugetsu sounded both insulted and upset as she spoke, "Kamui are made for fighting. Wearing me and not fighting is a direct insult to my power. Do you not like wearing me, Ichigo?"

"Hey," Ichigo felt a pang of guilt upon realizing that he had somehow upset his Kamui, "I didn't say I would never transform. It's just that without having a good reason to do so, transforming would be a complete waste of your power."

Mugetsu looked up at Ichigo for a long and tense moment before her eyes closed and he heard her mentally sigh, "I understand your logic, Ichigo, but promise me that within the next day or two you will wield my full power. I don't know why I didn't activate my true form upon being worn by you so can you please do that?"

The pleading in Mugetsu's tone made Ichigo feel as if he was talking to a child. Sighing and rubbing the back of his neck, he acquiesced and said, "Fine, I guess I can do that. I just have to figure out a way to do it without anyone noticing though."

" You won't be disappointed!" Mugetsu practically shouted in joy and Ichigo was glad no one else could hear her voice. It would have been really hard for him to explain why his school uniform was speaking, "With my power at your disposal there will be no limit to what you can do!"

"Don't get too excited. We still have to figure out why -"

"Hi Ichigo!"

To Ichigo's complete and total surprise Mako Mankanshoku slid up out of nowhere right next to him. As he looked down the hall that had been empty just a moment ago, Mako smiled and saluted Ichigo, "Good morning, Ichigo! I slept great last night! Did you enjoy your first day of classes? The first day is always the hardest because Lady Satsuki makes the Disciplinary Committee intimidate everyone."

"It's been fine so far," Ichigo answered with a nonchalant shrug of his shoulders, "It's just getting around in this place is so damn confusing."

"You don't need to worry about that," Mako waved her hand in front of her face, "Everybody gets used to the twists and turns of the school eventually. If you don't, then your body will be found one way or another."

"That's disturbing," Ichigo found Mako's lack of regard for the lives of her fellow students disconcerting, but then again, Gamagori did beat the crap out of that student yesterday before stripping him naked and killing him. If stuff like that happened on a daily basis at Honnouji Academy then Ichigo could see why Mako might not find the situation morally repugnant.

"So what class do you have next?" Mako clapped her hands together and asked, "I just came from math. I don't see why people always think I don't belong in the class. I don't really pay attention but everybody was really upset at me last year."

Ichigo knew he shouldn't ask but he still did, "What did you do?"

Mako thought deeply for a couple of seconds before answering, "I don't know. The teacher was going over Riemann something and said no one had been able to solve the number thingy. I remember frowning, saying that he was wrong and then I blacked out for a while but apparently I talked and talked for a really long time. When I was done the teacher seemed really shocked! His mouth was open and everything and I told him that if he didn't close it flies would go right into it like it was a cave or something. When he asked if I wrote anything down, I said yes and showed him a picture of my house. I don't know why he started crying afterwards."

"That sounds... interesting, Mako," Ichigo didn't know what to make of Mako's story but going by the way she tended to exaggerate things around him, he was leaning towards her making the whole thing up.

"It sure is!" Mako gave Ichigo a thumbs up before gasping, "Oh! I nearly forgot! Guess what happened to me today, Ichigo!"

"I give up. What happened?"

"I made a brand new friend!" Mako exclaimed happily as she reached off to the side and pulled back a visibly confused Ryuko Matoi, who seemed just as perplexed about what was going on as Ichigo. Blissfully ignorant of her new friend's state of mind, Mako pointed to the red bang in Ryuko's hair and continued, "This is Ryuko, my new friend! She's in almost all of my classes and everything! I met her this morning after teaching Mataro a valuable lesson about skipping school and mugging people!"

Still getting used to Mako's randomness and seemingly infinite energy, Ryuko weakly raised a hand and said, "Hey."

"Don't worry about Mako," Ichigo waved off Ryuko's half-hearted hello as Mako turned towards the window, "She not really all there."

Mentally sighing in relief upon realizing Ichigo was nothing like Mako and was actually quite normal, Ryuko gave a relaxed smile, "Actually, I kind of like having someone like her around. Compared to everyone else in this city, Mako's not that bad."

"Tell me about it," Ichigo groaned. Personally, he was trying to grasp the concept of how all the One-Star students looked and even sounded identical.

"Hey, what's up with your uniform?" Ryuko leaned in to get a closer look at Mugetsu's eyes. As Ryuko examined Mugetsu, Ichigo was glad Kamui don't need to blink, "Weird, it's almost like it's watching me. Freaky."

" Ichigo," Mugetsu said with concern, "She's scaring me."

"Huh?" Ryuko turned towards Mako, who was staring at a butterfly flying outside, "You say something Mako?"

"What?" Mako blinked owlishly as she looked away from the butterfly, "Did I say something? I don't remember saying anything."

"Never mind," Ryuko rubbed her forehead and closed her eyes, "So what's your name?"

"Ichigo Kurosaki."

"Ichigo, huh?" Ryuko grinned mischievously, "That's quite the name you have, strawberry."

"It means 'to protect one thing' not strawberry!"

"Ichigo's right Ryuko!" Mako interjected, "He hates it when people call him Strawberry. Why, just yesterday he beat up several One-Star students who wouldn't stop calling him that. It was an amazing sight to see five people heaped into one pile."

"One-Star students?" Ryuko looked upwards as she tried to remember something, "Aren't they those people that look like clones or something?"

Ichigo tried to answer but Mako suddenly slid in between him and Ryuko, a determined look on her face, "Ryuko is just like you, Ichigo! She is a transfer student that arrived just this very morning."

"I actually arrived yesterday," Ryuko corrected, "So you're a transfer student as well, Ichigo?"

"Yeah, my dad and I arrived a few days ago for that stupid Student Evaluation Day crap," Ichigo complained, "It was a total waste of time."

"It is not a total waste of time," Mako protested defiantly, "That exam is what determines your initial status here at Honnouji Academy! Only an idiot would ignore the score they get!"

There was an awkward silence as Ichigo let what Mako just said sink into her head. After finding out what his score was, Ichigo had been visited by Gamagori. The behemoth of a teen had said that his score was high enough to grant him a One-Star uniform. Ichigo had taken one look at the uniform with a single four-pointed black star on it before saying he didn't want it. To say that Gamagori had been peeved would be an understatement.

"You would like Ichigo's dad, Ryuko," Mako said excitedly, "He is so cool!"

Ichigo's eyes widened in fear as the thought of Mako meeting his dad entered his mind. It had taken him years to learn to deal with his dad's own brand of stupidity and insanity. If Mako were to meet his dad, it might turn out to be too much for him, "When did you meet my dad?"

"It was during Student Evaluation Day!" Mako exclaimed exuberantly, "After I finished the test and went for a stroll outside, I saw this old man showing pictures to a bunch of the students. I wanted to see the pictures so I asked him, politely of course, if I could. The nice man blushed and showed them to me. He said that if I were to ever go to Karakura Town, to come by the Kurosaki Clinic, 'cause Isshin Kurosaki's door is always open to a friend of Ichigo!"

Ichigo groaned and face palmed at the description of his dad's behavior. Just when he thought his dad left him in peace and without damaging his reputation any more than he already did, he finds out that nothing had changed. He could only hope that what his dad did or said would not spread through the school grapevine.

"Your dad's name is Isshin?" Ryuko's hair overshadowed her eyes as she asked the question.

"Yeah," Ichigo shrugged, "The bastard's always doing things like this just to piss me off. The man's a doctor and yet he acts like a child when I'm not around to beat some sense into him. The incredible thing is that he's never lost a patient. Why do you want to know?"

"It's just that..." Ryuko turned and began walking away from him, "... my dad's name was Isshin."

Ichigo caught the meaning of Ryuko's statement but said nothing as he watched Ryuko walk away with Mako hot on her heels, oblivious as ever to her surroundings. As the two girls disappeared into the crowd, Ichigo groaned, "Man, I feel like an ass."

" You couldn't have known her father was dead or that he shared a name with your own father," Mugetsu stated factually.

"Yeah," Ichigo admitted, "But I still feel like I should apologize to her."

" Apologize for what?" Mugetsu questioned, "You did nothing wrong. It seems as if her father has passed away quite recently. It might be best to allow her some time to calm down before talking to her."

"I suppose you're right, but I still want to apologize."

As Ichigo began to go after Ryuko and Mako, he found a firm hand on his shoulder stopping him.

"Hey now," an older voice drawled out, "Just where do you think you're going, young man?"

Ichigo turned around and saw Aikuro Mikisugi standing behind him. The lazy-looking and perpetually scruffy history teacher stared at Ichigo from behind his thick glasses before running the hand not currently holding Ichigo's shoulder through his shaggy blue hair,

"Orange hair... you must be Ichigo Kurosaki. It's such a relief that I finally found you. You're like the only person in Honnouji Academy with such unique hair but it was quite hard to find you."

"What do you want?" Ichigo pulled his shoulder out of Aikuro's grip and scowled, "I have somewhere to be."

"Ah, not so fast," Aikuro wagged a finger knowingly, "There is a slight issue that came up involving your transcript. It turns out that there was a mix up between your record and another student's. While that's not a bad thing, it'll take at least a week for your proper records to be faxed over. In the meantime you need to take a placement test to determine what classes you take."

"Placement test?" A feeling of dread seeped into Ichigo's soul at the thought of standardized testing, "Are you sure about that?"

Aikuro leaned forward and pointed at his face, "Does this face look unsure to you? Now come on, Ichigo. The test isn't that bad. Your transcript said you're a smart kid so I'm sure you" figure out everything quickly enough."

"Oh!" Aikuro exclaimed as he remembered something important, "You don't need to worry about missing your next class. I've already cleared it with your professor. Now come on, my class is on the sixth floor."

Realizing that he wouldn't be able to apologize to Ryuko until at least after he finished taking the stupid placement test, Ichigo reluctantly followed Aikuro through Honnouji Academy.

" Something about this doesn't sit well with me," Mugetsu stated, *"Be on your guard Ichigo."

"I know, Mugetsu," he whispered.

---

...

---

"Hey wait up Ryuko!"

Mako Mankanshoku raced through the hallways of Honnouji Academy in pursuit of her new best friend. Catching up to Ryuko just outside the building, she waved her arms frantically in the air as Ryuko groaned and smacked her hand against her face, "Huh? What's wrong, Ryuko?"

"I acted like a complete idiot!" Ryuko grumbled beneath the palm of her hand. Why did she have to overreact like that when she heard the name of Ichigo's dad? A lot of people were named Isshin in Japan. The fact their fathers had the same name was merely a coincidence but the way she acted made Ryuko feel like an inconsiderate jerk.

"Don't worry about it!" Mako answered nonchalantly as she seemingly tried to wave away Ryuko's troubles, "Ichigo may seem like a delinquent but he's actually really nice! I'm sure he doesn't even care about what happened!"

Ryuko frowned as she remembered something important, "Hey Mako, who's the top dog at this school?"

"Why that's simple!" Mako clapped her hands together and took a deep breath, "It's - Bow, Ryuko! Bow!"

Ryuko didn't have time to understand why she was panicking before Mako, with a surprising amount of strength, grabbed the back of her neck and forced her head downwards. After several seconds of struggling, Ryuko managed to pull herself out of Mako's grip. Crouching down below the line of students that had quickly formed around the two of them, Ryuko looked and saw a large man slowly walking towards them.

"He looks like he's in charge here," she mumbled.

"Yup!" Mako said while still bowing, "He's a Three-Star!"

Ryuko looked carefully at the man. Sure he looked strong and could probably defeat her in a straight up fight, but whatever it was that made him special boggled her, "What the hell's a Three-Star?"

"His name is Ira Gamagori, one of the Elite Four and the Disciplinary Committee Chair of the Student Council," Mako explained, "He's really, really tough and strong. Compare to No-Star students like you and me, he could defeat us with both hands tied behind his back!"

"No-Star?"

"I forgot that you're a transfer student!" Mako smacked herself in the face before explaining, "Honnouji Academy school uniforms are quite special and can grant you awesome powers if you wear one. These Goku Uniforms can make you a superhero. Student Council President Satsuki Kiryuin gives students Goku Uniforms based upon their abilities and willpower. To sum up a really short story, Goku Uniforms are awesome! Do you want me to explain again?"

Everything was beginning to make sense to Ryuko. Shaking her head and narrowing her eyes in contemplation, she paused momentarily before asking, "So what you're saying is that she's the one in charge of this place?"

"Yes, yes!" Mako nodded enthusiastically, "Lady Satsuki is in charge and everything but if you're looking to make her your friend, she's already taken. I've heard from a desk neighbor that Lady Satsuki's taken an interest in our dear friend, Ichigo!"

Ryuko turned her attention from the increasingly bright light emanating from to her left, "Ichigo? How does he know her?"

"It's one of the nine big mysteries of Honnouji Academy," Mako answered cryptically, "No one knows why Lady Satsuki is interested in Ichigo. He's only been here a few days and every time I see him he's by himself reading or talking to his uniform. Once I saw Lady Satsuki talking to him almost like they were equals! It was such a strange sight since I'm like his only friend!"

"You don't say..." Ryuko paused as she thought back on her limited interaction with Ichigo. He hadn't seemed like the kind of person to be dating the head of Honnouji Academy but then again she wasn't somebody who knew this sort of thing, "So they're like a couple?"

"Nope!" Mako shook her head, "Ichigo may be special in his own way but Lady Satsuki is in a league of her own. There are only one or two people in the entire world that can compare with her elegant radiance."

Ryuko tried and failed to wrap her mind around Mako's logic. Stopping her train of thought before it could cause her to develop a headache she stared at the ground and mumbled, "So Satsuki Kiryuin likes to hang out with Ichigo?"

"Who knows!" Mako confessed, "But Ichigo doesn't seem to like being around Lady Satsuki all that much. The day before yesterday, which was two days ago, I was hanging out with Ichigo when Lady Satsuki appeared in a shaft of blinding light! She tried to talk to him but Ichigo kept his mouth shut and said as little as possible. The tension got so bad that I thought Ichigo's scowl would be permanently etched on his face. Ah, speak of the devil! Here she comes now!"

Realizing that the bright light that she had earlier ignored had not vanished but actually grew brighter, Ryuko turned around and saw a girl about her age slowly descending the translucent steps. Narrowing her eyes as she noticed the content look adorning Satsuki's face, as if to say that everyone was unworthy of her attention, Ryuko growled deep in her throat as she steadied her nerves. If she was going to confront Satsuki about her dad's death, she needed to make up her mind now. She couldn't afford to let such an opportunity pass without at least trying. Standing up and ignoring the strange feeling of weakness in her knees, Ryuko stepped forward directly into Satsuki's path.

"So you must be the big shot here?" Ryuko sneered haughtily while holding her hands within the pockets of her blazer to hide the nervousness she felt, "I have a question for you."

"You bitch!" Several of the One-Star students surrounding Ryuko leapt out of place towards her, "How dare you speak to Lady Satsuki like that!"

Ryuko allowed the silver guitar case on her back to fall to the ground with a thump. Gripping the handle while spinning around on her ankle, she slammed the case into the face of the closest assailant before using her momentum to knock him into the rest of the students. As the One-Star students flew backwards away from her, either unconscious or close to it, Ryuko undid the latches on the case and drew out a shining red blade.

"Oh no! Ryuko!" Mako shouted in surprise as she watched her newest and best friend spin the weird blade that was in the case instead of a guitar around her wrist. As much as Mako wished she could do something cool and awesome like that, she knew if she tried she would end up having a horrible industrial accident, "Oh my gosh, it's a huge scissor!"

"That's right, Mako. This blade came from a giant pair of scissors," Ryuko didn't take her eyes off of Satsuki's Kiryuin deepening frown as she explained, "I'm guessing by the look on your dear president's face she's seen something like this before. Am I right, Satsuki Kiryuin?"

Satsuki looked down at Ryuko derisively while her mind spun into high gear. To think that after all this time the other half of the Scissor Blade, the weapon designed to cut and destroy Life Fibers and a critical tool for her plan's completion, would end up being delivered right to her doorstep. The irony was so poetic that Satsuki allowed herself to smirk, "So what if I have? What are you going to do if I have... Ryuko Matoi?"

Something about the way Satsuki spoke filled Ryuko with rage, "Damn it. You're the woman with the Scissor Blade, aren't you?"

"Perhaps," Satsuki coldly shrugged before asking, "If I said that I was, what would you do about it?"

Ryuko grit her teeth and charged up the stairs towards Satsuki with her Scissor Blade held aloft at her side. There was no doubt in her mind that Satsuki Kiryuin was the woman who murdered her dad in cold blood all those months ago. She would have died that night as well if she hadn't run out of the manor before the bomb went off. Jumping into the air, her Scissor Blade held in a reverse grip, Ryuko descended towards Satsuki while shouting, "Damn you!"

"Ten! Ken! Fun! Sai!"

Just before the tip of her Scissor Blade could touch a single hair on Satsuki's head, Ryuko found herself blindsided by an enormous boxing glove that sent her body cartwheeling through the air in the opposite direction. Flipping along the ground several times, her face and body accumulating several cuts and scrapes, Ryuko dug her Scissor Blade into the ground as she skidded to a stop. Staring up at her new opponent as Satsuki Kiryuin continued to watch carefully, Ryuko spat on the ground and pushed her body to stand back up. Whoever the hell hit her had a really strong punch. Turning the Scissor Blade over in her hands so that the edge was facing upwards, Ryuko ignored the pain lingering throughout her body and prepared to face her newest challenger.

"Come on then!" Ryuko shouted as she raced towards her diminutive opponent.

---

...

---

"My, my," Aikuro drawled out while staring out through a pair of binoculars down at the courtyard, "Kids these days. They have no idea how things work."

Ichigo ignored Aikuro's attempt at small talk in order to focus on his test, but as he answered question after question, it was becoming increasingly clear that something strange was going on. Aikuro had said this was a placement test, which meant it should contain material of about the same level as what Karakura High School offered, but it was too easy. Apart from maybe one or two questions that he needed a few minutes to think about, Ichigo hadn't found anything difficult about it. It was almost too easy.

"But then again," Aikuro continued rambling, ignorant to Ichigo's growing annoyance with him. Ryuko Matoi and Mako Mankanshoku had just appeared out in the courtyard and it appeared as if Satsuki Kiryuin was about to make her way down for some reason, "Growing up, I didn't have anything as fancy as a Goku Uniform to increase my strength and speed beyond that of a normal human's. It's almost unfair, but you cannot say the same thing, can you Ichigo? After all, a Goku Uniform is nothing compared to your Kamui."

The pencil in Ichigo's hand nearly snapped in half as Aikuro lazily admitted that he knew he was wearing a Kamui.

" How does he know Ichigo?" Mugetsu said in a panicked voice. If a Kamui was able to sweat, she would be dripping with it, "He shouldn't know about me!"

Realizing that the whole test had been a farce to get him alone, Ichigo stood up and glared at Aikuro, "How do you know about my Kamui?"

"The answer to your question is quite simple, Ichigo," Aikuro removed his foggy glasses and suddenly he was surrounded by a bright purple light, "I know almost everything about Kamui and the Life Fibers composing them!"

"The hell is going on here?" Ichigo was both frightened and disturbed by what he was seeing. One second Aikuro was a lazy and unmotivated teacher and the next he suddenly de-aged and turned into someone that looked like he should have been a model. Seeing Aikuro strike a pose, Ichigo voiced his concern, "What the hell are you doing?"

" Why is he stripping Ichigo?" Mugetsu asked in a frightened voice.

"The school uniform you are wearing is what is known as a Kamui," Aikuro explained, ignoring Ichigo's shocked reaction. Quickly changing to a different pose, he continued, "Kamui are clothing created purely from Life Fibers. They are, in essence, the ultimate Goku Uniform in terms of power, speed, and strength. While there are many flaws and weaknesses in Goku Uniforms, Kamui have none of them. They are also able to adapt and change to fit most situations the wearer finds themselves in."

"That's all very good," Ichigo averted his gaze from the increasing disturbing Aikuro, "But put your damn clothes back on."

"Do not be disturbed by my body, Ichigo," Aikuro sternly warned. As his shirt suddenly became unbuttoned and fell down his shoulders, he continued explaining while ignoring the twitch developing in Ichigo's eye, "Kamui require the blood of their wearer in order to function at full power. If the wearer is not worthy or refuses to give blood, the Kamui will not be able to achieve its full power and will fall back into hibernation."

"To hell with this," Even though the information was incredibly useful, Ichigo wasn't about to stand around and watch a grown man strip. Making his way to the door, he said, "I don't need to stand here and watch you strip like a damn pervert."

Before he was even halfway to the door, Aikuro slid in front of him. The teacher's shirt was now entirely missing, meaning that the only thing between Ichigo and a visit to a therapist was a pair of pants. Shifting poses once again, Aikuro asked, "Do you know what a Life Fiber is, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"Gee," Ichigo answered sarcastically, "That's a tough one. Why don't I think about it and come back some other time?"

"Life Fibers..." Aikuro trailed off as the purple light shining around him grew in intensity, "... are fibers that have somehow gained a life of their own. This newly found life allows them to be woven together into clothing for both offensive and defensive situations. No one knows where Life Fibers originally came from or how they can accomplish such magnificent feats. Some believe they are merely a trade secret of Revocs. A mere invention that has allowed them to become the major distributor of clothing and other apparel throughout the world. Others think that Life Fibers are alien in nature and have come to earth for a sinister purpose."

Ichigo folded his arms, his eyes firmly closed as he took in what Aikuro was telling him, "What's the point of telling me all this?"

"The point, Ichigo," Aikuro posed before continuing, "Is that your Kamui is more special than you think. To my knowledge there should only be three Kamui in existence and yours is not among them. The question of who could have created your Kamui intrigues me."

"Does it really matter who made Mugetsu?" Ichigo asked, annoyance evident in his voice.

"I suppose it doesn't," Aikuro admitted seriously before he, much to Ichigo's horror, began unzipping his pants, "There is just one last thing I should mention. Since I found out about your Kamui in such short notice it took a little greasing of palms but I have -"

It was at that point in time that Ichigo, in an effort to both preserve his masculinity and keep his sanity intact, drew his arm up and punched Aikuro square in the jaw. As the undercover nudist collapsed to the ground while rubbing his cheek, Ichigo stepped forward and loomed over him.

"Let's get one thing straight," Ichigo growled while cracking his knuckles, "You take off one more piece of clothing and you won't be waking up for a week."

Sitting up and rubbing his cheek, Aikuro gave an unsatisfied pout as he pointed to his desk, "In the second to bottom drawer is something you will find to be useful in the future. Think of it as a gift from someone who understands your situation."

"Why should I believe you?"

"Because, Ichigo," Aikuro leapt to his feet without a trace of pain on his face, "Unlike what you may want to believe, my interest in you is purely academic and intellectual. To find a Kamui being worn by someone with no connections to Revocs is a surprise not just to me, but with the group I work for. I want to see how far you will go with Mugetsu."

While he was still suspicious of Aikuro, especially after he started stripping, Ichigo walked over to his desk and opened the drawer. Inside he found something completely unexpected. Sitting alone in the drawer was a spaulder. Picking it up and turning it over in his hands, he frowned and asked, "What's this for?"

Zippering up his fly in order to keep up his disguise as a normal, but lazy and unmotivated teacher, Aikuro answered, "That, Ichigo, is how you will feed blood to Mugetsu. Normally a Kamui can draw out enough blood through the skin to stay awake but that is only after they've transformed once. Judging from the scowl on your face I see you still haven't worn Mugetsu's actual form."

Grabbing the spaulder out of Ichigo's hand, Aikuro pointed to the two glowing blue bands wrapping around it. As he pressed them inwards, causing the twin needles hidden within to emerge, Aikuro explained, "When you press your hand down on the spaulder, it will fire two extremely sharp needles into your shoulder. That should allow enough blood to reach Mugetsu to initiate its transformation. Although..."

Ichigo didn't like the way Aikuro trailed off, "Although what?"

Aikuro chuckled nervously as he handed the spaulder back to Ichigo, "I don't know how to sugarcoat this so I'll just say it. Kamui are meant to cover as little skin as possible... for various reasons too long and complex for me to explain. If that's not bad enough, every one of the three Kamui I know about were specifically designed for the female body. I'm not quite sure what will happen if you activate Mugetsu."

A cloud of depression hung over Ichigo's head as he tried to not visualize what an extremely revealing Mugetsu would look like. Having the power of a Kamui meant nothing if he had to fight half-naked all the time. Eventually it was Mugetsu who managed to bring Ichigo out of his funk, "Do not worry, Ichigo. I was woven together by Urahara Kisuke specifically for you. There is no doubt that he tailored me for a male wearer."

"I hope you're right," Ichigo muttered as he strapped the spaulder onto his left shoulder and locking it into place. Rotating his shoulder and making sure his movements wouldn't be impeded by the new accessory, Ichigo paused and asked Aikuro, "Wait a second. You're just a teacher. How do you know all this?"

"I believe that's a question for another time," Aikuro answered cryptically as he pointed to the window, "Since I do believe your attention is about to be focused on something else."

Focusing Aikuro's line of sight, Ichigo looked out the window and noticed a large crowd of students gathered below. While at first he was unable to make out what was happening, his eyes widened in shock when he saw Ryuko on the receiving end of a rather brutal beating.

"What the hell's going on down there? Why isn't anyone helping her?" Ichigo growled in outrage as he watched Ryuko get hit repeatedly by a barrage of quick punches from her diminutive opponent. Forcing open the window and shattering the lock in the process, Ichigo stepped onto the frame and motioned to his spaulder, "Hey pervert, how fast does this thing work?"

"It should take no more than a second," Aikuro explained as he buttoned his shirt back up and reached for his glasses, "Although I recommend you -"

Ichigo had stopped paying attention to whatever Aikuro was saying as soon as he got an answer. Before he leapt out of Honnouji Academy and began freefalling towards the ground, he asked, "You ready Mugetsu?"

"Of course Ichigo," his Kamui answered, "But you should know that you will only have four minutes since this is the first time I've transformed. Make it count."

"Right!" Ichigo jumped out of the window and slammed his right hand into the spaulder covering his left shoulder and winced slightly as the needles entered his skin. Immediately following that, his body was enveloped in a bright white light with several stars.

Up in the classroom, once more clad in his lazy disguise, Aikuro sighed as he watched Ichigo make a beeline for Ryuko, "... take the stairs. I guess Ichigo just isn't one for patience, but did he have to punch my beautiful face? Oh well, as much as I'd like to see little miss Satsuki get embarrassed I have to get going. Things to do and secrets to reveal and all that nonsense. Now where did I put the trapdoor remote control? It's been so long since I've tested it I need to make sure the batteries are still working."

---

...

---

"This is it!" Takaharu Fukuroda drew his arm back as he prepared for the final punch. As much as he had been dominating the fight he had to give the transfer student credit for lasting this long. He'd already hit her with several volleys of punches and yet she was still conscious and on her feet. There were One-Star students who hadn't lasted as long as her.

"Here comes the stinger!"

Takaharu shot towards Ryuko, who could barely stand on her feet. Weakly gripping the red Scissor Blade in her hands, the blade shaking every few seconds, Ryuko gasped for air painfully as she watched Takaharu rush at her with his right arm cocked back. She couldn't believe all her ambitions and goals were about to end at the hands of some lackey of Satsuki Kiryuin. As she stared defiantly at Takaharu, Ryuko felt everything crawl to a stop as a bright flash of blue light appeared in her peripheral vision.

"Where is that light coming from?"

Using one of his oversized boxing gloves to block out the light, Takaharu turned around and squinted in an effort to make out what was happening. Although he was not able to see anything Takaharu was able to tell that whatever was emitting that bright light was falling rapidly towards the ground from the main building of Honnouji Academy.

"What... what's going on?" Ryuko stared up at the light before she felt her knees starting to buckle. Stabbing her Scissor Blade into the ground, the hardened Life Fiber blade easily piercing the rock and soil, Ryuko grit her teeth as she made a conscious effort to not fall down. Her beating from the Boxing Club captain had all but exhausted her and Ryuko knew if Takaharu hadn't been distracted by the light, he would have easily finished her off and she would never find out who killed her dad.

As every student, including Satsuki Kiryuin, stared transfixed on the falling light, they were suddenly brought back to reality when a sonic boom reverberated through the air and a large crater appeared on the wall of the academy just a few meters above the ground. Takaharu, unable to even see what the object was, was not prepared for whatever it was to rocket towards him faster than he could possibly react. Eyes wide as a burst of pain spread across his face, the diminutive Two-Star was sent clear across the courtyard into the far wall as a white armored fist slammed into his face.

Ryuko didn't know what to think as her opponent, the same person who had been kicking her ass, was sent clear across the academy by a single punch. Staring transfixed at where Takaharu had crashed into the wall, she turned her attention to the enveloping cloud of dust and smoke when a familiar voice said, "Sorry I couldn't get here sooner, Ryuko."

"Ichigo?" Ryuko didn't know what to think but knowing that he had most likely saved her life caused her shock to be replaced by relief, "Don't worry about it. You sure do know how to make an entrance."

"You should get out of here," Ichigo's voice echoed faintly from inside the dust, "This guy isn't going to stay down for long."

Ryuko was about to point out that Ichigo had decked Takaharu but stopped when she saw a figure rapidly running back towards them. It was Takaharu and she didn't need to be a genius to realize he was pissed. Giving Ichigo a quickly thanks, she made a break for the entrance of Honnouji Academy while knocking away several One-Star students stupid enough to get in her way. Grabbing a deliveryman's moped, while making sure to leave his deliveries in a neat pile on the ground, Ryuko took off into the distance accompanied by a trail of smoke.

" That Ryuko girl sure knows when to fold her cards," Mugetsu pointed out before adding, "Three and a half minutes."

"Yeah..."

Satsuki stared into the clearing smoke with narrowed eyes as thoughts swirled in her mind. Judging from what she witnessed, if barely, it seemed her earlier assumption about Ichigo Kurosaki's unique uniform were indeed accurate, "So you had a Kamui all along, Ichigo Kurosaki. What else are you hiding from me?"

A white boot stepped out of the smoke before there was a release of energy, allowing all the gathered students to see Mugetsu in her true form.

Mugetsu had transformed from a simple school uniform into something resembling form-fitting armor that covered Ichigo from his neck down. He wore what looked to be a black bodysuit beneath interlocking white armor that protected everything apart from several parts of his upper legs and arms. His hands and feet were completely covered in the white armor, making it appear as if he wore greaves and gauntlets. In the middle of his back as well as behind both of his shoulders were three exhaust vents, a light blue glow seeming to emanate from within them.

" This is my true form," Mugetsu said with pride evident in her voice, her eyes turning to look at Ichigo. After transforming, via the infusion of Ichigo's blood, Mugetsu's eyes, which had previously been just beneath the collar of his school uniform, extended upwards and outwards until they resembled spaulders jutting several inches above his shoulders, "Can you feel the power coursing through your body, Ichigo? This is the power of a Kamui!"

"Yeah," Ichigo muttered as he flexed a covered hand. He could feel Mugetsu's power coursing through his body and for just an instant thought he could do anything. Turning his attention to Satsuki, he scowled and asked, "Does it really matter if I have a Kamui or not?"

Satsuki didn't take her eyes off Ichigo as she slowly and deliberately reached for Bakuzan at her waist, "Do not speak so naively, Ichigo Kurosaki. You may possess a Kamui and all the power it entails but do you think you are a match for -"

The entire student population of Honnouji Academy took a collective nervous breath as Ichigo appeared to vanish from right in front of their eyes. As he moved across the courtyard faster than their eyes could keep up, Ichigo reappeared directly in front of Satsuki Kiryuin with his hand firmly placed on Bakuzan's pommel, preventing her from removing it from its scabbard.

"I don't think you need to do that," Ichigo warned softly as Satsuki glared at him with an annoyed look in her eyes. Ignoring the indignant shouts coming from Gamagori and Sanageyama, Ichigo added, "From where I'm standing, fighting you would be beneath me."

Satsuki's eyes widened as Ichigo threw her words from their first encounter back in her face, but she was saved from having to answer as an enraged voice shouted, "How dare you speak like that to Lady Satsuki!"

Ichigo jumped backwards as Takaharu's fist punched through the air his head had just occupied. Easily landing on the ground several meters away, Ichigo stared at the miniature club captain. Takaharu's right eye was bruised and a heavy trail of blood was dribbling from his nose. While the captain didn't move, he turned his eyes towards Satsuki, "Are you alright, Ma'am?"

"I am fine," Satsuki answered calmly.

"That's good," Takaharu grinned, rage visible in his eyes, "That means I can go all out on this street punk! Now die, you bastard!"

Ichigo watched Takaharu race towards him with a faint scowl on his face and a disinterested look in his eyes. Waiting until the Boxing club captain had almost closed the distance between them and brought up his enormous right boxing glove to deliver a critical hit, Ichigo calmly raised his left hand and caught the attack in the palm of his hand with ease. While the force behind the attack was enough to cause the ground to shatter and crack behind Ichigo, the Kamui-wearing youth had shown no sign of trouble in stopping the attack.

"I-Impossible!" Takaharu stammered as he watched an attack from his Athleticism-Augmented Two-Star Goku Uniform get blocked with seemingly no effort on Ichigo's part. Gritting his teeth and pushing more and more power into his attack, Takaharu began to sweat nervously as Ichigo continued to stand in front of him with a bored look on his face.

"It's not impossible," Ichigo calmly corrected as he began applying pressure to the Life Fiber boxing glove held firmly in his hand. As Takaharu's weapon of choice began developing hairline fractures along the surface, exposing the bright red light of the Life Fibers held within, Ichigo explained, "It's merely improbable."

" Two minutes left Ichigo," Mugetsu warned, *"Finish up and get out of here."

Completely oblivious to what Mugetsu was telling Ichigo, Takaharu took the opportunity to leap back and out of Ichigo's grasp. Glancing at the cracks on his boxing glove, he grit his teeth as the veins in his forehead became more and more prominent. How dare Ichigo humiliate him in front of not only the entirety of Honnouji Academy, but Lady Satsuki as well! This was a slight against his honor as both a boxer and an athlete. Releasing the full power of his Goku Uniform, Takaharu fired a corkscrew punch that looked as if a stream of boxing gloves were emerging from his hands, "Don't think that's all I got, tough guy! Feel the power of my Athleticism-Augmented Two-Star Goku Uniform!"

"Man," Ichigo muttered as he leaned to the side to avoid the first punch, "Isn't that a mouthful or something?"

Despite the speed and power of his corkscrew punch, Takaharu found to his growing frustration that he had yet to land a hit on Ichigo Kurosaki. His punches were supposed to be too fast for anyone not wearing a Two-Star Goku Uniform or greater to see, let alone dodge, and yet Ichigo Kurosaki was ducking and waving around every single one of his punches without even a hint of trouble.

"Stop toying with me, you bastard!" he shouted. Realizing he needed to release his full power, he reached for the cord wrapping around his wrist only to find a shadow surrounding him. Looking up, he saw Ichigo descending towards him, a fist cocked back.

"That's enough!"

Before Ichigo could hit Takaharu, Satsuki appeared in his path with Bakuzan drawn. Using the flat side of the midnight black blade as a makeshift shield, Satsuki managed to block his Kamui-enhanced punch only with a large amount of effort. With one hand tightly gripping the hilt of her blade while the other was propped up against Bakuzan's edge, Satsuki not only managed to stop Ichigo's punch but also push him away. As Ichigo was forced back from Satsuki's unexpected counterattack, he quickly twisted out of the way as Satsuki pressed her momentary advantage and tried to sever the Life Fibers composing Mugetsu.

"You have failed, Takaharu Fukuroda," Satsuki said sternly as she stepped away from Ichigo while sheathing Bakuzan, "Not only have you proven unable to fulfill your orders, you have also failed to take down someone who poses a great threat to the security and stability of Honnouji Academy. Leave my sight. I shall decide your punishment for such an abysmal failure soon enough."

Takaharu began sweating nervously and knelt on one knee, "Please forgive my failure, Ma'am!"

Satsuki ignored the prostrating Boxing Club captain in order to focus on the more immediate and pressing matter. Her opponent had a fully synchronized Kamui and seemed to have complete control over it despite it covering most of his body. Snapping her fingers as she came to a decision, Satsuki stood passively as Gamagori and Sanageyama appeared in front of her, preventing Ichigo from attacking her.

"Shall we deal with this delinquent, Lady Satsuki?" Gamagori growled authoritatively.

"That will not be necessary, Gamagori," Satsuki gently informed them. Staring past the collective surprised expressions on her Elite Four, Satsuki stepped forth and said, "Ichigo Kurosaki's purpose in coming here has already been fulfilled. He has no intention of challenging me. Isn't that correct, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Ichigo clenched a fist as he scowled at Satsuki, "I only came to make sure that insane Boxing Club captain didn't kill Ryuko."

"Tch," Sanageyama drew the shinai from his back and waved it at Ichigo, "You think we're just going to let you walk away after insulting Lady Satsuki like that? I don't care if Lady Ragyo is allowing you to attend Honnouji Academy, you aren't going to get away with this, Ichigo Kurosaki."

There was something about the bravado Sanageyama and Gamagori were emitting that gave Ichigo pause for concern. While the power afforded to him by Mugetsu was great, there was no telling what kind of abilities a Three-Star Goku Uniform afforded the Elite Four. The only way they would dare to face a Kamui was if their own uniforms granted them a special kind of power that would give them an edge in combat.

" One minute. It's almost time Ichigo..."

Ichigo nodded but didn't say anything to his Kamui. Spreading his legs and raising a clenched fist into the air, he looked at his gathering opponents and said, "Sorry but I don't have time to stick around."

Sanageyama's eyes widened in realization as he rushed forward with his hand reached towards his lapel, "Damn it! You're not going to get away from us, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Ichigo ignored Sanageyama's warning and, with a shout, the exhaust vent on his back began blasting out energy and heat as he slammed his fist into the ground, kicking up a cloud of smoke that put the one that formed when he intercepted Takaharu's attack earlier to shame.

"Damn it!" Sanageyama cursed and kicked the ground in frustration when he saw that Ichigo had disappeared. Looking around, he managed to spot Ichigo fleeing into the distance before leaping into the air and disappearing behind a building. Pointing to several One-Star students, he shouted, "Spread out and find Ichigo Kurosaki! I want his dorm room under guard and every room searched! He has to be around here somewhere!"

"Calm down, Sanageyama," Satsuki breathed out and relaxed her mind. Ichigo Kurosaki had a Kamui, which validated her theory, but the question remained of what his purpose was, "Chasing after Ichigo Kurosaki would no doubt be a fruitless effort. Let him be for the moment. I shall have him dealt with when the time is right."

"That was a Kamui, huh? My, Strawberry looked quite good in it," Nonon Jakuzure muttered in awe. She had felt the power emanating from Ichigo Kurosaki and Mugetsu and knew that he hadn't truly shown them his true power. What caused a hint of nervousness to creep into her mind was how Ichigo stared down Lady Satsuki without so much as a flinch.

Satsuki turned to leave, her fists tightening in anger. Blocking Ichigo Kurosaki's punch had been more difficult than she expected. If Bakuzan was anything weaker, it would have been shattered from the force behind the blow. She couldn't understand how Ichigo seemed to be in full control of his Kamui. There was no struggle for dominance between his will and the Kamui's will nor was there any sign of exhaustion due to excessive blood loss, "Inumuta."

The blue-haired Elite Four turned towards the student council president, "Yes, Lady Satsuki?"

"Were you able to gather any useful information on Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui?"

"I'm afraid not," Inumuta adjusted his glasses as he continued speaking, "His appearance along with the apparent ease in which he dealt with the Boxing Club captain briefly threw off my sensors and detectors. I shall immediately get started on upgrading their sensitivity and durability. There is one thing I was able to find that you might find useful. Right before escaping, Ichigo Kurosaki referred to his Kamui as Mugetsu, or Moonless Sky if you're being poetic."

"I see," Satsuki stared towards where Ichigo had vanished before closing her eyes. Mugetsu was quite the poetic name for a Kamui although it would never ring as purely and truly as Junketsu. Turning around while giving Inumuta a final glance, she added, "Takaharu's failure to capture the transfer student and acquire the Scissor Blade cannot be forgotten. Since the Boxing Club is part of the Athletic Clubs, I shall allow Sanageyama to devise the method and severity of punishment."

"As you wish, Lady Satsuki," Inumuta typed something on his PDA before asking, "Is there anything else you require? I would really like to examine the data I've acquired about Ichigo Kurosaki."

"Yes," Satsuki paused and stared up into the sky, "Aside from Ichigo Kurosaki, find out everything you can about the transfer student. Someone like her should not possess a weapon like the Scissor Blade. There is something missing and I don't want to be surprised a second time."

Satsuki ignored the slight bow of respect from Inumuta as she walked back into Honnouji Academy with Gamagori and Jakuzure flanking her on either side, "That was not the true strength of a Kamui. While Ichigo Kurosaki's display undoubtedly impressed the masses and the Elite Four, I could easily tell he was holding back. The question is whether that was out of fear or necessity."

Ichigo Kurosaki's possession of a Kamui threw off Satsuki's plans. She had only just began adapting her plans and strategies on the off chance that Ichigo was a spy, willing or not, for her mother. Ichigo's wearing of a Kamui, let alone possessing full control over its immense power, was something she had not expected. If he were to rise up against her, she would need something of equal or greater power to counteract. She would wait a few more days in order to determine what Ichigo's motivations and drives were. Only then, after figuring out the inner workings of his mind would she choose her course of action.

If Ichigo truly was conspiring against her, Satsuki knew she would need to unseal Junketsu sooner than she would have liked. The power of Junketsu, the first Kamui she'd ever lain her eyes upon, was said to be truly exceptional but required the wear to possess a will of steel. Even so, Satsuki could not help but allow a small smirk to adorn her face. She could not wait to see how Ichigo's Mugetsu would compare to the might of Junketsu when the time came.

---

...

---

So Mugetsu's released form is basically Ichigo's Fullbring Armor. I'll admit that Ichigo looked pretty badass in that armor in both the anime and manga and I couldn't help but think that nothing else would work for him. Like I said in the author's note for Chapter 5, it will be a cold day in hell before I allowed Ichigo's Kamui to be as revealing as Senketsu or Junketsu.

Just My Imagination

Here is the new and revised Chapter 7. I uploaded the revised Chapter 6 a few days ago and the PM's I got back were all positive about the changes. One of the key issues I had with my earlier chapters is that they were all made before Episodes 21-24 were released, which is where a lot of the plot/story/etc was finally explained. If you read through the chapter once more, you will find that the overall cohesion and grammar is much better. Enjoy!

---

...

---

Chapter 7 - Just My Imagination

"God damn it, this place is screwed up."

Ichigo peered out from the alley he was hiding in and let out a relieved sigh when he didn't see anyone following him. After he so easily managed to get away from Satsuki Kiryuin and her cronies Ichigo decided to flee as far away from Honnouji Academy as possible. He didn't know what Satsuki would do but he had the strangest feeling Sanageyama wouldn't just take his insults lying down. Letting his eyes scan the area one final time just to make sure no one was trying to sneak up on him, Ichigo ducked back into the alley and leaned his head against the cracked brick wall.

"What the hell is wrong with this school?" Ichigo mumbled as he ran a hand down his face. Satsuki Kiryuin was nothing like he expected her to be. Of course that brief conversation with her in his home at the start of this mess indicated more than anything that she was not someone to mess with, but from her seat of power Ichigo was beginning to realize that Honnouji Academy was more of a fortress or castle than a school.

" That is a good question, Ichigo" Mugetsu said, once again in the form of a normal school uniform. Her eyes blinked once before looking up at him, "But what are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" Ichigo repeated. That thought had crossed his mind more than once, but every time he tried to come up with how he would go about it or even if it could work, he drew a blank. Pursing his lips and looking to the side, he sighed and said, "I don't think there is anything I can do about it."

Mugetsu looked surprised at Ichigo's answer, but was cut off from saying anything as he continued, "Things like this are always more complicated than they first appear. You may be right about my power being greater than Satsuki's, for the moment at least, but let's assume I do manage to take her down. She has this entire city in the palm of her hand. If I remove her from power, I will have everyone who follows her gunning for me."

Mugetsu mulled that explanation over for a moment, "As long as you are safe, I don't care what happens to anyone else."

Ichigo listened to his Kamui before something important crossed his mind, "Hey Mugetsu."

" What is it?"

"You said I only had four minutes to save Ryuko. Why was that?"

" I confess that the four minute time limit was something I came up with," Mugetsu confessed sadly, "I was afraid that if you and I remained merged for any longer, I would lose any self-control I had and devour you."

"Wait," Ichigo's mind tried to process what he just heard, "Devour me?"

" Kamui such as myself rely on the blood of our wielder to function," Mugetsu reminded him, "While I normally receive a small amount of blood from you throughout the day, when I transformed into my true form, the amount of blood I received from you was so great that I was tempted to suck you dry. Ichigo, your blood is exquisitely delicious. It is the best thing I have ever tasted."

"That's great to know," Ichigo growled, not bothering to point out that his blood is the only thing Mugetsu has every tasted. Leaning his head back against the wall of the building behind him, he thought for a moment before asking, "Does this mean you have a four minute limit on your transformation?"

" For the moment I do, but I am certain given enough time I will be able to control my urges."

Ichigo scowled as he considered how much could go wrong until Mugetsu could control herself, "How much time are you talking about?"

Mugetsu's multihued eyes closed as she thought about the answer, "It shouldn't take any longer than two days for the little blood I can draw from your body to no longer tempt me."

"Let me know as soon as possible. Someone like Gamagori is probably just itching for a chance to get back at me," Ichigo commented with annoyance in his voice. He wasn't annoyed at Mugetsu or anything that she did. Rather, he was annoyed because he just knew something was going to happen in the next two days that would undoubtedly require him to activate Mugetsu.

As Ichigo walked out of the alley his thoughts drifted to Ryuko and the state she was in when he saved her. While he had saved her from whatever Satsuki was planning to do to her, he didn't know how she was doing. The wounds he'd seen on her body were quite severe so she would probably need to go to a doctor to make sure she didn't have any internal bleeding or broken bones. The only problem was he had no clue where she was staying or even if she had a place to live. Mako did say Ryuko had only transferred in today. If things at Honnouji Academy were as screwed up as he thought, Ryuko probably didn't even have a home.

" I wonder if Mako knows where she's staying."

So enraptured was Ichigo in his thoughts that as he turned a corner he walked straight into another student sprinting through the streets in the opposite direction. While months of shinigami experience allowed Ichigo to barely keep himself from falling down, the same could not be said for the other unfortunate student. The force of the impact against Ichigo caused the student to bounce back with enough force that he was laying on the ground with a dazed and confused look on his face.

"Hey," Ichigo leaned over the dazed student with a concerned look on his face, "Are you alright?"

"Did someone get the name of that truck?" The student mumbled incoherently before noticing who was standing over him. Leaping to his feet with a level of dexterity and speed that Ichigo hadn't thought him capable of, the student tapped his hand against his chest and looked up at Ichigo, "I recognize that brightly colored natural hair! You're the new transfer student from Karakura Town - Ichigo Kurosaki!"

The fact that the teen knew who he was by the color of his hair didn't startle Ichigo. In his brief time at Honnouji Academy Ichigo hadn't found anyone else with the same orange hair as him. What bothered him was the level of happiness in the teen's voice upon seeing him. It was almost enough to cause Ichigo to shudder in revulsion, "Who are you and what do you want?"

"Please forgive me, Ichigo Kurosaki! Due to the circumstances of our meeting I have forgotten to introduce myself!" The teen stepped back and began bowing dramatically to Ichigo before striking a pose, "I am the number one student reporter of the Newspaper Club - Shinjiro Nagita!"

At the mentioning of a school club Ichigo backed a few steps away and asked, "You're not going to attack me for what I did to Satsuki are you?"

Shinjiro looked offended at Ichigo's question. Adjusting the rim of his glasses dramatically, he exclaimed, "Of course not! While the Student Council and Lady Satsuki may have sanctioned the Newspaper Club's actions I have my own will and drive! Most of my fellow reporters and editors might be willing to commit acts of slander to protect and cover for the Student Council but I hold myself to a higher standard! As a journalist, it is my sacred duty to spread freedom of speech however I can."

"Something doesn't sit well me with, Ichigo. It was too much of a coincidence that he ran into you here," Mugetsu didn't point out in her suspicions that something about Shinjiro just felt wrong with her. The Kamui wracked her mind trying to understand what she was feeling but no matter how hard she looked at Shinjiro there just wasn't anything obviously suspicious about him. His uniform didn't even have any Life Fibers in it, "Find out what he was looking for you."

"That's all well and good," Ichigo said before scowling, "But what does all that have to do with me? I'm already in enough trouble with Satsuki. I don't need to get involved in whatever mess you're trying to create."

"You're the only person in Honnouji Academy's history that not only stood up to Lady Satsuki's regime but actually overpowered her!" Shinjiro explained passionately with a wave of his arm. Clenching his fist tightly in front of his face, he sternly continued, "For three years Lady Satsuki and her close associates of the Elite Four have not only destroyed the freedoms of No-Star students such as myself but also prevented any of us from leaving! Anyone that tries to complain or protest are beaten into submission and quietly silenced by the weight of the system she's created. I may have only caught a glimpse of your battle earlier but it was enough for me to see that you are the destined hope that Honnouji Academy's been waiting for!"

"What are you going to do?" Mugetsu felt Ichigo's pulse elevating and knew her wearer was worried about what he should do,
"Shinjiro brings up a valid point. If Satsuki Kiryuin is doing everything he claims than many people are suffering because of it."

Ichigo mulled over Shinjiro's words. If Shinjiro was telling the truth and wasn't simply a spy for Satsuki designed to play on his sympathies Ichigo couldn't just sit back and do nothing. While attacking and humiliating Satsuki earlier was probably a really bad choice on his part, it was the best thing Ichigo could think of doing at the time. Still, he couldn't get rid of the notion that Satsuki wasn't about to let a slight against her honor simply vanish. If his actions earlier caused innocent people to get hurt he would have no one to blame but himself.

"Give me some time to think about this," Ichigo said as he began to walk past Shinjiro, "It's been a really busy day and I need to figure out a way to get back to my dorm without getting caught."

"No!" Shinjiro dove at Ichigo and wrapped his arms around his leg, "Don't go!"

"Hey! What the hell are you doing? Get the hell off!" Ichigo tried to shake Shinjiro off his leg but found the teen's grip to be supernaturally strong.

With his arms still tightly gripping Ichigo's leg Shinjiro looked out and shouted, "I need your protection! I already tried to expose Lady Satsuki using the school newspaper so many times that I'm on her 'list of dissenters!' If I try to say anything bad about her one more time she'll either permanently suspend me from school grounds or send the Disciplinary Committee after me! I can't stop writing the truth Ichigo! Lying just isn't in me! If the Disciplinary Committee finds me, they'll beat the stuffing out of me!"

"There he is, boys!"

Ichigo turned around and saw three massive One-Star students rushing towards them. One of them pointed at Shinjiro and shouted, "Shinjiro Nagita! Your slander and libel against Lady Satsuki ends today. Prepare to be disciplined!"

"Ah! Don't let them get me Ichigo!"

Ichigo stepped in front of the cowering Shinjiro and stared at the Disciplinary Committee members, "If you want to get Shinjiro, you're going to have to go through me first."

One of the students took a step forward to do just that but was stopped when another held his arm out, "Don't be a fool. That's Ichigo Kurosaki, the new transfer student with the Kamui. As long as he's with Shinjiro Nagita, we'll be unable to discipline him. We need to go report back to Gamagori about this turn of events."

As the three students reluctantly turned to leave, the one that just spoke turned around and pointed at Shinjiro, "Consider yourself lucky you are in presence of someone many times your superior! But know that eventually your luck will run out. Ichigo Kurosaki's protection cannot last forever and eventually you will pay for your crimes against Lady Satsuki!"

Ichigo waited until the Disciplinary Committee was out of sight before turning to Shinjiro, "I have a feeling those guys aren't going to give up so easily but it looks like as long as I'm around they'll leave you alone."

"You need not worry about constantly protecting me, Ichigo!" Shinjiro stood up and clenched his fist, "As long as you lead the way I will follow you to hell and back. The power you possess mixed with ability to disseminate information amongst the No-Star students shall start a revolution. Together we can finally remove Lady Satsuki's tyranny from Honnouji Academy!"

"Are you planning to just waltz right into Honnouji Academy and take down someone like Satsuki Kiryuin with a few words?" Ichigo asked sarcastically, "She's not someone that will care what you write."

"What?" Shinjiro seemed surprised by Ichigo's lack of commitment, "I thought you were going to help me?"

Ichigo shook his head and glanced in the direction the One-Star students had left, "No, I said I would protect you from those assholes. If you want to keep putting your life in danger, than be my guest. Just don't drag me into it."

"Oh..." Shinjiro was crestfallen at Ichigo's refusal to help him, but his normal exuberant attitude quickly reasserted itself, "That's alright by me! As long as I am able to use the powers of the press to spread the word of Lady Satsuki's evil deeds I do not care what happens to me!"

Ichigo was about to retort, but was stopped when the sounds of static and wires crackling filled the air.

"What's going on?"

"It's the Honnou City P.A. system," Shinjiro explained, "It is only used by Lady Satsuki and the Student Council when they are announcing something of grave importance."

" Transfer students, can you hear me?" A familiar voice spoke through the speakers, "In one hour, your best friend, Mako Mankanshoku, will be executed due to her shared responsibility for committing treason against Honnouji Academy and Lady Satsuki! If either of you want to stop it, quit hiding like cowards and show yourselves!"

"That guy just doesn't know when to quit," Ichigo growled angrily. Every single one of his senses was shouting at him that going back to Honnouji Academy was a trap but he couldn't let Mako get executed. Ichigo may not have known why the Boxing Club captain wanted to kill Mako but it would be a cold day in hell if he just sat back and let that happen.

"I know I'm going to regret this," Ichigo muttered before looking at Shinjiro, "I need to go save Mako, Shinjiro, so you should find someplace to hide until it's all over."

"You can't be thinking of simply walking in Honnouji Academy's front door!" Shinjiro exclaimed in shock. Making several intricate motions in the air with his hands, he exclaimed, "While your uniform may allow you to easily overpower a Two-Star Goku Uniform and take Lady Satsuki by surprise, such trickery won't work more than once! If you step into Honnouji Academy, there is no doubt that you'll have to take on the Elite Four if you wish to rescue Mako Mankanshoku."

"I'm not going to let Mako die for something I did," Ichigo answered, moving around Shinjiro and towards Honnouji Academy, "Of course I know going back is probably a trap and if it is, I plan on beating the crap out of as many people as it takes to save Mako. As much as I know the odds are against me, I can't fail. I was almost too late to save Ryuko earlier and if I can save Mako then that's what I'm going to do."

Mugetsu listened to Ichigo's speech before she added in her own thoughts, "Ichigo, while your passion and desire to do the right thing is inspiring, you won't be able to fight back against the Goku Uniforms. If you try to release my true form once more, you will die."

Ichigo thought about what his Kamui said and realized, when it came down to it, that if he had to risk his life for someone like Mako, who wasn't even involved in what happened, then he would gladly do so without a moment's hesitation, "That's a risk I'm going to have to take, Mugetsu."

Mugetsu, shocked at Ichigo's dedication and willingness to throw his life away to save someone else, could only mutter, "Ichigo..."

"That's enough standing around doing nothing," Ichigo stated and began running up the road to Honnouji Academy. It would take longer to get back without taking the trolleys but Ichigo didn't trust the operators to not fight him. Turning around back to Shinjiro, Ichigo asked, "You should come as well. Those guys are probably waiting around the corner for me to leave or something."

"O-Of course!" Shinjiro stammered and quickly followed after Ichigo.

---

...

---

The rain, which had drawn ever closer to Honnou City as the day wore on, finally arrived in a cataclysmic burst of thunder just as Ryuko arrived at her destination. Leaning over the handles of the stolen moped, her breath ragged from exhaustion and pain, she took a single step onto the muddy ground and quickly fell down to her hands and knees.

"Damn it," she coughed weakly as she used whatever strength she had remaining to push her body off the ground. Gritting her teeth angrily as she was forced to use her Scissor Blade as a makeshift crutch, Ryuko managed to force herself to stand back on her feet only after more than a minute of trying.

Leaning heavily on her weapon for support, Ryuko cursed her situation, "I was so close to finding out."

Taking a step forward and swaggering on her feet for just a moment, Ryuko managed to keep her balance as she stumbled her way into the ruined remains of her childhood home. It had been six months since she had last been here, and that was the last time there had been any sense of normality in her life. As she made her way through the fire-swept hallways, she eventually came across the same room that she had discovered her father's dying body. Planting her Scissor Blade into the floor, Ryuko stared at the ground in front of her in sadness.

"I couldn't do it dad," she muttered as tears threatened to well up from her eyes, "Just when I thought I knew who killed you, I failed. If only I had more power! I could have used it to save you from that woman!"

Ryuko collapsed onto her knees and knelt there in the rain for what seemed like hours. Coming back to this place was hard enough, but realizing that everything she accomplished had been for nothing had taken a toll on her mind. After going over what happened in her mind, she staggered back to her feet and wiped a tear from her eye.

"I'm sorry my power wasn't great enough to avenge you," she confessed sadly before the barest traces of a smile appeared on her face, "But there is someone who might be able to help. Mako says he's alright and he did save me. His name is -"

Before she could finish whatever it was she was about to say, a trapdoor opened up beneath Ryuko's feet, causing her to drop screaming into the dark abyss below.

"WHAT THE HELL!"

Several meters away, hidden behind a partially destroyed wall, Aikuro Mikisugi stared at where Ryuko had just been with concealed amusement. Sweeping his hand across his face, removing his glasses in the process, he said, "I leave the rest up to you, Ryuko Matoi."

As Ryuko's screams slowly died away, Aikuro turned around to head back to Honnouji Academy, but not before looking at the remote in his hand with disdain, "Four year battery life, huh?"

While Aikuro was contemplating getting a refund on his trapdoor remote control, Ryuko found herself bouncing erratically between the walls of the tunnel she was falling through. Nothing she did to slow her descent seemed to work. She tried bracing her feet and back only to find the walls too slick for friction to slow her down. When that failed, she attempted to use her Scissor Blade only to crash through the roof of a large room and land in a pile of clothing.

"Damn that hurt," she grumbled as she pulled herself free from the pile of old and discarded clothing. As she looked around and realized where she was, she whistled and said, "How the hell did dad manage to build something like this under the house?"

Moving to get to her feet, Ryuko winced as a lance of pain shot down her left arm. Pulling up the sleeve of her blazer, she noticed that one of the many cuts she had obtained during her short fight against Takaharu had reopened upon landing and was now dripping blood down her arm and into the pile of clothing beneath her.

"I guess I reopened the wound from earlier," she muttered, clenching her fist to block out the pain. Something like this wasn't as painful as it would have been to someone else. Ryuko couldn't explain it, but she had always had an extremely high tolerance for pain, "I better look for a way out of here before I bleed to death."

Picking up her Scissor Blade, Ryuko slid down the pile of clothing until she managed to reach the floor. Stumbling for a moment, she looked around for any sort of exit. Whatever this place had been, something had happened to destroy most of it. It was strange that the explosion that destroyed the house didn't reach all the way down here. Pushing that thought out of her mind for the time being, Ryuko picked a random direction and began walking, "There has to be a way out of here."

As she looked around for a way to climb upwards towards one of the holes in the ceiling high above her head, something caught Ryuko's eye. Laying on its side, half crushed and half destroyed by the forces of nature, was an old wooden desk. From the various instruments and tools lying strewn around, it must have belonged to her dad.

"Dad..."

Ryuko walked to the desk and knelt down before sifting through the shattered remains. There wasn't much that hadn't been destroyed or damaged, but one thing remained that caused her to take a closer look. Carefully cleaning off pieces of shattered glass and dirt, Ryuko picked up an old picture. Pulling it out of its damaged frame, careful to not rip or damage it further, Ryuko's eyes widened in surprise when she saw who was in it. In the picture, her dad appeared to be standing on what looked like a pier or bridge and in his arms, with an innocent smile on her face, was a younger version of Ryuko. As she stared at the picture, Ryuko couldn't remember when this picture was taken or even where they were. Her eyes drifted away from her dad and towards the other occupants of the picture, causing her to frown.

"Who are they?"

Standing to the right of her father were two people, and by the looks on their faces they must have either been engaged or married. The man had a goofy smile on his face and was giving the camera the sign for 'victory' with one hand while the other was wrapped around the woman's shoulders. He wore a gaudy Hawaiian shirt with a red flower pattern over a blue background and had the beginning of stubble on his face. The woman had curly brown hair and seemed to be trying to play with the younger version of Ryuko.

Ryuko stared at the picture before tossing it in her pocket, "If they knew my dad, then they might know why that woman with the Scissor Blade killed him. Now I just need to find a way out of this place."

" Wait... " a muffled voice called out, stopping Ryuko in her tracks, "More. Give me more."

"Who the hell's there? Show yourself!" Ryuko shouted through the abandoned chamber, her hands tightly gripping her Scissor Blade as she listened to her voice echo back and forth into obscurity. Muscles tensing up in preparation for an attack from the unknown intruder, Ryuko stood still for more than a minute as she waited for something to happen. When she heard nothing but silence despite her best efforts to locate the source of the voice Ryuko began to relax. Perhaps the voice had come from her head and in her current state she believed it came from somewhere in the room.

"I'm losing it," Ryuko rubbed her eyes and yawned. She must have lost more blood from her battle against Takaharu than she originally thought.

" More..." the voice repeated, echoing through the large chamber and making it impossible for Ryuko to pinpoint where it was coming from, "... I need more..."

Ryuko turned around as her eyes focused on the pile of discarded fabrics she had fallen down on. Squinting as she caught the barest traces of movement from within the pile, Ryuko quickly swung her Scissor Blade through the air as something shot out of the pile. After noticing that her blade easily and cleanly slicing through the old shirt, Ryuko noticed a change in the lighting and looked upwards just as something descended through the air towards her.

"What's that light?" Ryuko squinted in confusion as she raised her hand in front of her face, "What the hell... is that a sailor uniform?"

" Give me more!"

Ryuko attempted to move out of the way of the falling uniform but winced as her wounds from her fight against Takaharu caught up with her and her left leg gave out. Before she had a chance to push past the pain and move out of the way, Ryuko found her body launching forward and tumbling along the ground before slamming into the wall as the uniform wrapped itself around her body.

"What the hell are you doing?" Ryuko shouted half-hysterically and half-deliriously as she felt the uniform beginning to grope her. With a luminescent blush adorning her face as the uniform pushed past all normal boundaries, Ryuko tried to break free of the living uniform's perverted touch but found to her shock that it was supernaturally strong. Breaking out in a cold sweat as the uniform's eye seemed to dilute maniacally, Ryuko yelled, "Get the hell off me!"

" Don't leave me!" the uniform shouted as it wrapped its sleeves around her arms and pressed itself against her chest, "What are you waiting for? Take off your clothes already so you can put me on!"

Ryuko gasped in embarrassment at the closeness of the living uniform and doubled her efforts to free herself from the nightmarish thing attacking her. She had no idea what it was but there was no way in hell that she was going to let it continue to grope her body. As she struggled against the flexible bonds holding her, the Kamui saw that she was being uncooperative and decided to take matters into its own nonexistent hands. Using its sleeves as makeshift hands it systematically began tearing her clothes off without care, leaving Ryuko clad in nothing but her bra and panties, "What the hell are you doing you fucking pervert?"

The Kamui purposely ignored Ryuko's protests of indignation as it finished stripping her. Staring at her body with a crazed look in its one eye, it shouted, "Wear me and give me lots of your blood! I don't want to go back to sleep!"

Let it be known that Ryuko had seen many crazy things as she transferred from academy to academy across Japan. After witnessing the beef tank at Kami-Kobe High School, which was right before she was chased off by someone called Kyuji Obayashi with a beef cannon, Ryuko thought nothing could faze her. But now, after having her body assaulted by a living sailor uniform with an unhealthy desire to be worn, Ryuko found her mind unable to wrap itself around what was happening, "The sailor uniform is talking?"

For a just brief moment the Kamui seemed to take notice of something other than Ryuko's body. Swiveling its eye upwards until it was staring at her nervous face, the opening that Ryuko assumed was its mouth smiled, "Why are you scared? You should wear me instead of being frightened. I will make all your worries go away!"

"Like hell I will!" Ryuko shouted back in fear as she began trying to bite the Kamui's sleeves, "There's no way I'm going to wear a talking uniform!"

" Hmm... time for a more hands-on approach!" The Kamui's form twisted and distorted before it threw itself on top of Ryuko, its fabric instantly molding to the shape and contours of her body.

"What did I just say?" Ryuko growled as she struggled to pull the Kamui off her body but found that she was quickly losing the battle. Whatever it was made of was making it impossible for her to resist and Ryuko could not help but feel a stab of fear course through her body at what will happen when she finally loses, "Uniforms aren't supposed to talk. Not get the hell off me you stupid piece of clothing before I find a pair of scissors!"

" Enough of your whining," The Kamui shouted as it began shining with a faint red light, "That's it! I'm going to make you wear me whether you like it or not!"

"No means no!"

" Too late!" The Kamui shouted in triumph, "Look! I'm a perfect fit!"

As the Kamui finally forced itself completely on Ryuko's body and began the process of acclimating to her blood, pulse, shape and thoughts, Ryuko stumbled to her feet as red energy crackled around her form. She felt a strange feeling coursing through her body and it was making her sweat nervously. As the feeling inside her body built to a crescendo, Ryuko let out a loud shout as a large column of red energy shot up into the sky.

---

...

---

"So you came back after all," Sanageyama grinned with his hands in the pockets of his coat as he watched Ichigo walk through the entrance of Honnouji Academy. Raising a hand and silently ordering the members of the Boxing Club to stand down, Sanageyama stepped forward and said, "I have to admit that after your little performance earlier I thought you would be smart enough to not fall for such an obvious trap."

"Why wouldn't I come back if someone's life was on the line?" Ichigo countered as he noticed students were beginning to surround him. Glancing past Sanageyama, Ichigo scowled when he saw Mako being held upside-down over a vat of boiling oil, "Let her go. She had nothing to do with what happened."

"I don't like doing things like this but the rules have to be followed," Sanageyama gave a sigh as he jumped out of the boxing ring. He would never admit it but Lady Satsuki's plans did not involve Mako Mankanshoku dying. She was merely bait to draw in the more important prey, namely Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi. As much as Takaharu wished to regain his honor, Sanageyama would never let him torture an innocent person to death, "It doesn't have to go down like this. Everything you see is simply a means to enact the proper punishment."

Ichigo didn't say anything as he looked up and saw Satsuki Kiryuin staring down at him. From the deepening frown on her face, he could tell she wasn't too happy about their earlier encounter, "If this is the punishment for someone who did nothing wrong, I'd hate to see how you treat those that are actually guilty."

Sanageyama's expression fell as Ichigo refused to follow the plan. Tapping his shinai against his shoulder to calm down before he said anything rash, Sanageyama held his hand out to Ichigo and said, "Ichigo, there is a way out of this that will allow Mankanshoku to walk away scot free. If you simply surrender yourself to the mercy of Lady Satsuki, the execution order against Mako Mankanshoku will be rescinded and she can go home to her family."

"What!" Takaharu angrily gripped the ropes surrounding the boxing ring as a vein bulged on his temple.

"Shut up," Sanageyama ordered without bothering to turn to face the Boxing Club captain. When Takaharu gnashed his teeth together but refrained from saying anything, Sanageyama turned his attention back to Ichigo, "You have two choices, Ichigo. You can take Lady Satsuki's mercy and Mankanshoku will be sent home completely unharmed or you can try to fight us, which will not be easy. You may have gotten the jump on her last time but don't think you will be able to do it again so easily."

As much as he wanted to wipe the smug look off Sanageyama's face and show Satsuki just how much respect he had for her, Ichigo knew he didn't have a choice in the matter. Sanageyama wasn't the type of person to lie to his face and if giving up would spare Mako from being boiled alive, then his path forward was rather clear. Taking a step forward and raising his hands into the air, Ichigo quickly found his way blocked by Shinjiro.

"You can't give up, Ichigo!" Shinjiro had a pleading look in his eye as he stood in Ichigo's way, "Sanageyama is one of Lady Satsuki's Elite Four. He'll say anything to make sure no one defies her authority. He probably plans to kill Mankanshoku as soon as you're in custody."

Sanageyama's face distorted into a scowl as his ears picked up Shinjiro's scathing and insulting comment. Pointing his shinai at the smaller student, Sanageyama growled and said, "I don't know who you think you are to say something like that but I'm a man of my word. If I say something, you can damn well be sure that I would never go back on it."

Shinjiro shrunk back from Sanageyama's intense glare, "But -"

"Don't worry about it, Shinjiro. I'll be fine," Ichigo cut off his new friend and started walking towards Sanageyama. Rubbing his wrists as a slight smile spread across his face, Ichigo added, "I don't think Satsuki will be able to capture me even if she wanted to."

"What the hell are you talking about?" Sanageyama demanded as he noticed Ichigo's distinct lack of fear, "Tell me right -"

Sanageyama was cut off as what sounded like an explosion went off near the boxing ring, causing a cloud of smoke and dust to erupt into the air. Covering his eyes to protect them from the dust, Sanageyama tried to see what was going on, "What the hell was that?"

There was a thick silence as the gathered students and civilians tried to see what was happening. As their eyes tried to pierce the thick smoke, a figure darted out of it and flew towards the captured Mako. The members of the Boxing Club tried to stop them, but were easily and brutally forced out of the way as the figure kicked and punched them all in the face and neck. When the figure stood on top of the scaffolding holding Mako, a familiar red blade in their hand, the suspended girl shouted.

"You've come back to save me Ryuko!"

Ryuko pulled the Scissor Blade from beneath the tattered brown cloak covering her body and looked around. Confident that no one had yet managed to see her newest uniform, she spun the blade around her wrist before stabbing it into the scaffolding, "Hold on tight, Mako. I'm going to get you out of there."

As she tore apart the ropes holding Mako above the vat of boiling oil, Ryuko noticed several of the less injured members of the Boxing Club rushing up the scaffolding in an attempt to stop her. Scoffing at their futile attempt, Ryuko spun her body around and let loose a flurry of kicks and punches that forces the club members back and into the boiling oil. Tearing off the last of the bindings holding up her friend, Ryuko grabbed Mako before she could fall and leapt into the air. Landing in the middle of the boxing ring, Takaharu glaring at her with a mixture of interest and anger, Ryuko put Mako down, her body as stiff as a piece of wood, and returned the diminutive captain's glare.

"So you've come at last, transfer student," Takaharu gloated into the microphone while raising his right fist, "Truth be told, I'm glad you interrupted Ichigo Kurosaki's surrender. It would be boring for this to go down without a real fight."

"Using a hostage is just dirty," Ryuko countered. Giving Mako a small push to the side so she would leave the ring before things started to get ugly, Ryuko held the cloak covering her body with one hand as she said, "I thought you boxers were all about honor and rules. If you are really a boxer, let's settle this one on one!"

Takaharu grinned as the rematch he was looking for, and his only chance to regain his honor as a member of the Student Council, began, "You were never recruited into my club, but if you are looking for a one on one fight, who am I to argue. It'll just make my victory all the sweeter when I pound your body into dust."

Throwing away the microphone without care, hitting the head of a student in the crowd in the process, Takaharu rushed at Ryuko with his left arm pulled back for a powerful jab, "I'm going to haze you like a punk!"

Letting loose a shout as he punched forward, Takaharu smiled as his boxing glove seemed to multiply over and over again until there were hundreds of blurry boxing gloves circling throughout the boxing ring. Adjusting their direction with but a simple thought, Takaharu began hitting Ryuko's covered body with everything he had.

"Is this too much for you?" Takaharu shouted victoriously as he watched every one of his blows hit Ryuko head on, "This sacred ring is overflowing with the myriad of left jabs that my toned body has produced!"

Outside the ring, Shinjiro watched Takaharu hit Ryuko again and again without her doing anything, "What is she doing? She's going to die if she doesn't fight back!"

Ichigo wasn't so sure that was the case. As he carefully watched the multitude of blows land on Ryuko's body, bursts of concussive force blasting past her into the crowd of gathered students, Ichigo saw that Ryuko had yet to take a step back or even flinch away in pain. Despite the number of punches, jabs and crosses raining down on her body courtesy of her opponent, Ryuko appeared to be completely unaffected by the attacks.

Takaharu's heart raced in excitement as he delivered blow after blow upon Ryuko. He was so enthralled in the fight that Takaharu failed to notice Ryuko standing still without even a grunt of pain. Sliding back across the ring, Takaharu grinned maliciously as he rotated his shoulder and shouted, "And the champion switches his footwork before moving into a right straight! But what's this? It's really a corkscrew punch! Ten! Ken! Fun! Sai!"

As the Two-Star's boxing glove began spinning like a drill as it inched ever closer to her body, Ryuko continued to simply stand still with her eyes firmly locked on the incoming attack. While Takaharu's technique certainly looked impressive enough to have potentially killed her if he had bothered to bring it out in their first fight, Ryuko knew that no matter how strong he was, it was not even close to the power she currently possessed. As the attack finally connected and shredded the cloak she had wrapped around her body, Ryuko didn't bother to move as Takaharu's glove stopped cold against her Kamui.

"W-What?" Takaharu stammered, "What sort of outfit could you possibly be wearing?"

A blush broke out along Ryuko's face as she covered her chest with one arm, "Quit your staring!"

"Well now..." Sanageyama scratched his nose and stared at Ryuko with a satisfied grin on his face, "That's something you don't see everyday."

While Sanageyama was staring at Ryuko with a grin and Shinjiro had pulled out a notepad and began hastily scribbling something down, Ichigo's reaction was much more drastic.

" What the hell is that?" he thought in both shock and embarrassment. He was shocked that someone besides him had a Kamui. Aikuro had mentioned that he could count the number of Kamui in the world on his hands. The fact that another Kamui had appeared in Honnouji Academy, on the same day that he exposed his own Mugetsu to the school, meant that the teacher had something to do with it. His embarrassment, on the other hand, came from the rather revealing form that Ryuko's Kamui had decided to take.

Instead of being practical armor like his Mugetsu, that covered everything below his neck in rigid and dense armor that felt nearly impervious to attacks, Ryuko's looked... different to say the least. It took the form of thigh-high black boots and leggings, with red heels and lines going up to the very top, where they extended into straps that connected to the short black skirt that barely covered anything. The skirt was connected to the top of the outfit by a pair of suspenders that barely managed to cover her breasts. The suspenders then connected into the only thing that could be considered armor on the Kamui. Her arms and everything above her breasts up to the top of her chin was covered in black armor. At the front of her Kamui, much like Mugetsu, were two familiar looking eyes, one of which was permanently closed by a prominent scar across it.

"That can't be a Kamui..." he muttered. It looked nothing like his Mugetsu.

" It is," Mugetsu answered Ichigo's rhetorical question, "But what you fail to understand, Ichigo, is that a Kamui does not need to cover up every part of the body to function as armor. As long as it is worn and sufficient blood is given, every part of the wearer's body, even exposed skin, will be as hard as steel."

"I get that," he said slowly, "Just don't ever transform into something even close to that."

While Ichigo was arguing with Mugetsu over the proper definition of armor, back in the boxing ring Takaharu was trying, and failing, to deliver a blow that could hurt Ryuko. How the hell could she have gotten so strong in only a few hours? The last time they fought he had wiped the floor with her but now she was shrugging off his attacks like he was a fly. Letting loose a punch to Ryuko's face, Takaharu grimaced when he saw she hadn't so much as turned her head away, "You're cheating! You're trying to distract me from the match with your overwhelming sexiness!"

"Get real! I'm not wearing this thing because I want to!" Ryuko argued, the blush on her face increasing in intensity along with her embarrassment. She didn't understand why Senketsu had to take the form of something so revealing. It made her practically naked!

"No excuses!" Takaharu yelled, his voice breaking slightly, "You're mocking boxing with that scandalous outfit. No, all sports have been degraded by that thing!"

"I am not!"

Seeming to realize something of great importance, Takaharu grinned and stepped back, "All right, then. If you are going to fight completely undressed, I guess I'll take the liberty of undressing as well to make it even."

"Hey!" Ryuko, along with Ichigo and about half the audience, covered their eyes as Takaharu's hands reached for his belt, "You're the one mocking me, you damn pervert!"

"What are you talking about?" Takaharu looked perplexed at Ryuko before a glowing red chain on his belt snapped. As his right boxing glove transformed, to Ryuko's gaping shock, he explained, "Keep your mind out of the gutter. I'm just taking off the soft gloves I've been wearing for the away bouts. Behold! These are the true and genuine Honnouji Academy Athleticism-Augmenting Two-Star Boxing Gloves!"

"Oh boy," Sanageyama whistled, "This is going to be interesting to watch. I haven't seen Takaharu this focused on a fight since that bout against the American high school champion."

"Boxing Club captain Takaharu removed the safety limiters on his gloves in order to counter the increasing threat of the new transfer student Ryuko Matoi..." Shinjiro mumbled as he hastily wrote in his notepad. This was a golden story! He had thought Ichigo Kurosaki was the only one with the power to go up against the Student Council and Lady Satsuki, but to find another student willing to actually do so, it was a godsend. He just needed to talk to her in person, "Hey Ichigo, you called that outfit she was wearing a Kamui. What does that term mean?"

Ichigo hand waved his question away, "I'll tell you another time."

Ryuko stared at the giant spiked glove held in the air with a look of bewilderment on her face, "What the hell is up with your glove?"

"Are you talking about this old thing?" Takaharu looked at his boxing glove with pride and affection, "If I didn't wrap my gloves during my away bouts, other schools would be too afraid to face me in the ring. Wrapping my gloves is the only way I can get a decent fight anymore! Being able to release them after such a long time fills my heart with strength and conviction! This is the true power of a Goku Uniform!"

"I don't know that much about boxing," Ryuko said with a confused look on her face that quickly became a smug grin, "But even I know that what you're doing is illegal. But if you're really that eager to fight me, then bring it on!"

"I'm going to wipe that grin off your face, transfer student!" Takaharu shouted. Leaping into the air, his spiked glove drawn back for a jab, he rushed towards Ryuko, "Now that you're half-naked, I'm going to tear apart what little shreds of clothing and dignity you have left and send you flying to the moon!"

As Takaharu sprinted towards her, Ryuko continued to stand still while glaring at the diminutive Two-Star, "Good luck with that."

Ryuko's gloating was not unfounded. As Takaharu's glove easily connected with Ryuko's bare and exposed stomach, causing a pressure wave to explode out behind her and knock several students into the air, the Boxing Club captain noticed something odd with the whole situation. He had put all his power into that one attack, enough power to cause even the Elite Four to flinch back at least a little, and yet Ryuko was looked at him with that blasted smirk on her face.

"What are you smiling about?"

Takaharu's eyes widened as Ryuko answered, "Take a look at your glove."

Turning his shaking eyes to his fully unleashed boxing glove, Takaharu's mouth opened in shock and awe as the hairline fractures that it sustained from Ichigo Kurosaki's interference earlier grew before the glove shattered completely.

"W-What?" Takaharu gasped at seeing his precious boxing glove destroyed, "My precious glove!"

"Your glove isn't the only thing that can transform," Ryuko informed him, "So does my outfit!"

As Takaharu's mind filled with rage at the loss of his precious glove he let go of any restraints he had left and began hitting Ryuko with a multitude of punches and kicks. Even if Ryuko appeared to be unfazed by his attack combo, Takaharu was intent on making her pay no matter the cost.

"Amazing," Shinjiro muttered, momentarily forgetting to write down notes, "She's not even flinching from Takaharu's attacks. Is it because she is wearing what you call a Kamui, Ichigo?"

"Ichigo, what are you going to do about her?" Mugetsu questioned. He couldn't blame her interest in Ryuko. Neither of them could have guessed that they would run into someone with another Kamui.

That was a question that Ichigo didn't have an answer to. While talking to Ryuko about where she got her Kamui would answer a lot of questions, it might also bring up several questions. After thinking about it for a moment, Ichigo decided that the benefits outweighed the costs, "Shinjiro, stay here."

Near the ring and completely safe from harm, Mako Mankanshoku began playfully boxing as she watched Ryuko take Takaharu's punches without flinching, "Wow, Ryuko, I didn't know you knew how to box!"

"I don't think she does," her younger brother, Mataro, deadpanned from right next to her. Rolling his eyes at his sister's lack of intelligence, he turned his attention back to the sexy sight of Ryuko only to find someone standing in front of him, "Hey jackass, you're blocking the angelic view!"

"Shut it," Ichigo ordered Mataro, who folded his arms and grumbled back at him. Recognizing his voice, Mako turned to Ichigo, sparkles emanating from her eyes.

"Ichigo!" Mako exclaimed before latching onto his waist, causing the teen to pry her off his body, "I knew you'd be ok!"

"Yeah, well, my rescue plan didn't turn out the way I hoped," Ichigo admitted.

Back in the ring, Ryuko was starting to get sick and tired of Takaharu's futile attacks, Gritting her teeth while her anger built up, she shouted, "So now it's my turn, right?"

As steam began blasting out from the various folds of her Kamui, Ryuko sprinted towards Takaharu, avoiding the many attacks he was throwing at her. Grabbing her Scissor Blade and spinning it around in her hand, she slammed the hilt into the captain's face before slashing him across his back, "Left jab and then a right hook!"

When her Scissor Blade propelled Takaharu into the air, nearly unconscious from the intense force behind the blows, Ryuko began spinning her weapon around her wrist, "And to finish it, a right straight! Seni-Soshitsu!"

Her Scissor Blade easily carved through Takaharu's Goku Uniform before it was suddenly and violently ripped to shreds, leaving the captain naked as the day he was born.

"That's impossible!" Sanageyama shouted in disbelief. How could the transfer student not only defeat a Two-Star Goku Uniform, but also destroy it? It made no sense.

Up near Satsuki Kiryuin, Inumuta adjusted his glasses, "So that's the power of the Scissor Blade. It is a truly remarkable weapon."

"Wait a second," Ichigo's eyes narrowed as he tried to get a closer look at something floating towards Ryuko. It was hard to spot it, due to the setting sun being directly behind it, but there was a glowing thread forming out of the shredded remains of Takaharu's Goku Uniform. The thread floated through the air towards Ryuko, where it was absorbed into her Kamui, causing it to emit a faint pink light.

"Now to finish you off!" Ryuko shouted, ignorant of what just happened, as Takaharu's body began falling towards her. Holding her Scissor Blade in a reverse grip, she swung it like a bat, causing the captain's body to propel through the air towards Satsuki.

As Takaharu's body flew towards her, Satsuki calmly and lazily leaned to the side, allowing the club captain to fly past her and into the tall spire of Honnouji Academy behind her.

"How dare you!" Sanageyama shouted at Ryuko as he began climbing into the ring to fight her, but was stopped when Satsuki's voice rung out.

"That's enough, Sanageyama," Satsuki calmly told him. Stepping forward and past the remaining three members of the Elite Four, she stopped on the edge of the roof, her heel clicking as she did, "That was very impressive. Who are you and where did you get your hands on that outfit?"

Without looking up at Satsuki, her face covered in shadows, Ryuko answered, "It is a gift from my dad. And the one that killed him left behind this Scissor Blade! Now, you're going to tell me who owns the other half of this Scissor Blade, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

Satsuki stared at Ryuko, uncaring to the fact that the Scissor Blade had been the work of her father and not the other way around. With her face an expressionless mask, she asked, "You're Isshin Matoi's daughter?"

Ryuko was about to answer when she felt a strange feeling of weakness course through her body. As she broke out in a cold sweat and her arms shook from the effort of holding her Scissor Blade, Ryuko collapsed onto her knees as her strength left her.

" Ryuko, you've lost too much blood," Senketsu told her.

"I thought you needed blood," she answered.

" That is true," Senketsu responded, "But at the current rate, you will lose consciousness in less than a minute."

"Don't sound so calm about it!" Ryuko growled.

"How interesting," Satsuki's voice cut through Ryuko's argument, "I did not expect for you to remain here, Ichigo Kurosaki."

Ryuko turned and saw Ichigo climbing into the boxing ring besides her. She was about to ask what he was doing when her eyes happened to glance at the familiar eyes on the collar of his uniform.

As she realized what exactly Ichigo's uniform was, all Ryuko could do was utter his name in disbelief, "I-Ichigo?"

"I'll talk to you later," he said without taking his gaze off Satsuki.

Satsuki, to her credit, smirked at Ichigo's appearance, "So I see you are not a coward after all. You must know that you are outnumbered and overpowered, with or without the Kamui you are wearing. You are either fearless or stupid, Ichigo Kurosaki."

Ichigo opened his mouth to answer but found Ryuko's hand gripping his arm. She was visibly sweating and her breath was coming out in labored gasps, "Move Ichigo... I... just... need to..."

Before Ryuko could finish saying her desire she felt the world darkening around her and collapsed as the black embrace of unconsciousness claimed her. As Senketsu transformed back to his normal state of a sailor uniform accompanied by a brief explosion of stars and light, Ichigo quickly reached out and managed to grab Ryuko before she hit the ground.

"So what are you going to do, Ichigo Kurosaki?" Satsuki asked as members of the Boxing Club as well as Sanageyama closed in around him, "There is nowhere to run or hide without leaving Ryuko Matoi behind. So your choices are as follows - be brave and surrender with honor or flee like a coward but live to fight another day. I leave the choice of your future to you."

Ichigo's eyes narrowed before an idea hit him, "Hey Mugetsu. How long do you think it will take for me to escape Honnouji Academy while transformed?"

" About thirty seconds," Mugetsu answered, unaware of Senketsu's single eye widening upon hearing her voice, "But surely you don't - "

Ichigo adjusted Ryuko over his shoulder, allowing him to free his other arm up, "Think you can hold off for thirty seconds or so?"

Mugetsu could see what he was planning to do and gave the Kamui equivalent of a nod, "Yes, but it will be extremely difficult. I would try to get out as quickly as possible."

"Got it," Ichigo slammed his hand down on his spaulder and felt the twin needles hidden within bury themselves in his shoulder, "Life Fiber Initial Release!"

Sanageyama was not standing around doing nothing while Ichigo was conversing with Mugetsu. As soon as he saw Ichigo shift Ryuko's body and reach over to his spaulder, Sanageyama was already rushing into the boxing ring with his shinai held aloft in the air. He could not let Ichigo get away no matter the cost but before he could tackle Ichigo Sanageyama was blinded by a bright light as his opponent emerged in Mugetsu's white and black armor.

"Sorry about this," Ichigo apologized as he easily dodged around Sanageyama's shinai before disappearing past him, "But I don't have time to talk."

As easily as it would have been to simply jump over the entire crowd of gathered students, even while holding Ryuko's unconscious body, there was something else Ichigo needed to do first. Landing just outside the ring where Mako was staring at him with stars in her eyes, Ichigo quickly grabbed her before pushing back into the air with enough force that the pressure wave knocked back those standing next to Mako.

"This is amazing!" Mako shouted happily from under Ichigo's right arm, "I'm queen of the world! Super speed a go go!"

"Mako, is there anywhere we can go that Satsuki couldn't find us?"

"Hmm..." Mako pondered the question, her face the epitome of concentration, before exclaiming happily, "Let's go to my place! My dad runs a back alley clinic. We have lots of stolen blood and medicine he can use to help Ryuko!"

"Just tell me where I need to go," Ichigo answered, ignoring the illegal acts Mako had just confessed to. Jumping over the edge of an artificial cliff, Ichigo began skidding down the concrete wall separating the condos and apartments owned by the One-Star students and the shacks and shanties occupied by the families of No-Star students. As his boots created sparks behind him, Ichigo heard a deep male voice speak.

" Why did you overdo it, Ryuko? "

"It's not a big deal," Ichigo comforted Senketsu, who seemed to be in a depressed slump after Ryuko fainted from overusing his power for the first time. As the Kamui turned his one good eye up at him, Ichigo added. "Mugetsu is the same way."

" Hey! "

Senketsu's single eye widened in surprise as he realized Ichigo could understand him. Before he could so much as ask Ichigo how he could hear his voice, Senketsu found the metaphorical air knocked out of his lungs as Ichigo pushed off a wall and began hopping across the rooftops towards Mako's house.

Tired of Being Alone

Well, here is Chapter 8 of To My Death I Fight . This chapter covers the first part of Episode 2, but do not assume I am just following the story (the last chapter should have cemented that already). Several events happen in this chapter that never occurred in the anime. I must admit that the enduring popularity of this story has amazed me. This story not only has the most words of any Kill la Kill crossover, but also the most reviews with 186 at the time of this posting! Thanks all of you for your continued support!

As a side note, I highly recommend checking out The Moiderah of Writing 's story Transfer Student: Satsuki Matoi . It is an AU in which Ryuko and Satsuki switch places and it is both hilariously funny and awesome to read. Check it out here on FFN or on spacebattles whenever you get a chance.

---

...

---

Chapter 8 - Tired of Being Alone

As Ryuko Matoi slowly regained consciousness, the colors of the world around her coming together into a blurry focus, the first thing she heard was Ichigo Kurosaki talking to Senketsu as well as someone else.

" I don't know how to thank you enough for what you did, Ichigo... and Mugetsu," Senketsu, in his normal form as a navy colored sailor uniform, said. Raising a sleeve in embarrassment as faint blush appeared on the cloth beneath his eyes, he continued, "I don't know what would have happened if you hadn't been their when Ryuko fainted..."

"Like I said the first six times, it's not a big deal," Ichigo replied, "Besides, I couldn't have saved Ryuko or Mako without Mugetsu's power."

" You flatter me," Mugetsu said, before she sarcastically added, "But don't ever do something this stupid again. You were a few seconds away from being drained dry by me when you reached Mako's house."

"I know, damn it, but I had no choice."

"I-Ichigo?" Ryuko groaned as she pushed herself off the cot she was laying on. Wincing slightly as she accidentally aggravated her wounds, she looked down and noticed that half of her body was covered in layers of bandages, "Did you fix me up?"

"Actually, it was Mako's dad," Ichigo turned his head to reply. He was surprised that Ryuko was up so soon. With her wounds, she should have been out for at least a few more hours. She must be made of tougher stuff than he thought, "The guy's a competent doctor, but once he finished treating your wounds he tried to stare at your half naked body while I was still in the room. I kicked his ass and threw him out of the room and warned him not to come back until you woke up."

"Lucky bastard," Ryuko grunted as she sat on the edge of the cot, "He got off easy. If I had woken up, I would have punched his ass into the ceiling for staring at my body like a damn pervert."

Rubbing her face and yawning, Ryuko remembered what she had seen just before passing out, "So you have one of these things as well?"

" I am not a thing," Mugetsu said passionately, one of her sleeves swinging out and hitting Senketsu in the process, "I am a Kamui. Don't forget that."

Grumbling at the look she was getting from Mugetsu, Ryuko gave in, "Fine. So you have a Kamui too, Ichigo?"

Ichigo frowned at Mugetsu's behavior but nodded, "Yeah."

That made sense to Ryuko, "And can it transform into a more powerful form by drinking your blood?"

"Yes."

"And it's not embarrassing or half-naked?"

Ichigo stared at Ryuko with an annoyed expression on his face, "What do you think?"

"Damn it!" she cursed and glared at Senketsu's one eye, "Why the hell are you the only Kamui that transforms into something nearly naked? Why can't you be more practical like Ichigo's Kamui?"

" Like I told you earlier," Senketsu chided, his single eye rolling in irritation, "Your father created me just for you. Perhaps he thought this was an appropriate look for me."

"Like hell. My dad was no pervert," Ryuko muttered under her breath, "So Ichigo, does your Kamui have a name?"

"Her name is Mugetsu," Ichigo answered, pointing a thumb at Mugetsu. Said Kamui was sitting on the ground nearby in a pose reminiscent of Ichigo. Much like Senketsu, she had partially transformed in order to become mobile. Mugetsu locked gazes with Ryuko for barely a second before she huffed and turned away, her sleeves folded in an apparent pout.

"What's the deal with your Kamui?"

"I don't know," Ichigo answered. Ever since dropping Ryuko off and speaking with Senketsu, Mugetsu had become moody, "I think she's upset that I'm talking to another Kamui."

Mugetsu's eyes swung around, "I am not upset. I am worried that Senketsu might not be who he says he is. That's all."

Ryuko stared at Ichigo before glancing to Mugetsu. All was silent before she broke out into laughter, "Ha! Your clothes are jealous!"

"Oh sure, laugh it up," Ichigo muttered, "At least Mugetsu doesn't transform into something that should get me arrested for public indecency."

"Shut up!" Ryuko tried kicking Ichigo only for him to move out of the way, causing her to fall undignified on the ground, "It's not like I was given a choice in the matter! I want to switch Kamui, you bastard!"

"No way!" Ichigo crossed his forearms in front of his chest and stepped away from Ryuko, "There's no way in hell I would be caught alive, or even dead, in Senketsu!"

"Damn you," Ryuko grumbled and sat down on the edge of the cot, "So how did I get here anyway?"

"After you fainted, I used Mugetsu to escape from Honnouji Academy, but not before grabbing you and Mako. Mako mentioned that her dad is a doctor and would be able to treat your wounds and blood loss."

"Ryuko!"

The door to the bedroom slid open and Mako Mankanshoku came flying in, her arms extended forward to hug her new best friend. Ryuko, a calm and bored expression on her face, simply leaned back, allowing Mako to go flying past her and out the nearby window.

A moment later Mako appeared at the window, her hair covered in pieces of garbage, "You're awake Ryuko!"

"Yeah," Ryuko clenched a fist and found that she could feel no pain, "Did you dad do this?"

"Yup!" Mako climbed back into the bedroom, "Dad's a Back Alley Doctor! He used all his stolen medicine and tools to heal you right up! Let's go out into the family room! Everyone's waiting to see you guys!"

Ryuko and Ichigo exchanged a look before deciding to follow Mako out of the bedroom. She was still trying to get her mind to wrap around the fact that her dad was able to create something as remarkable and powerful as Senketsu. Granted, its appearance could use some work. She didn't want to be seen as some kind of perverted stripper no matter how much power Senketsu granted her, but if he helped her track down the woman who killed her dad, she was willing to put up with the embarrassment and loss of blood for the time being.

"You must be the girl my Mako was so infatuated with," A large and heavyset man commented. His nose was plugged up with tissue paper to stop it from bleeding and his left eye was blackened, "Your friend Ichigo has a wicked right arm! The name's Barazo Mankanshoku!"

"You were such a badass to swing that Scissor Blade around while half-naked," The annoying voice of Mataro Mankanshoku piped up from the side, "Nobody sane would fight dressed like that!"

Growling, Ryuko reached out and grabbed Mataro by the scruff of his collar before comically punching him in the face, "Go to hell! It's complicated!"

"Damn it, that hurt!" Mataro pretended to cry as he held his wounded body, "I would have carried you here if Ichigo hadn't been so stubborn about it! I wanted to hold your sexy body, damn it!"

"Hey punk," Ichigo glared down at Mataro, "What did I tell you the first time you said that?"

"Oh my," A soft voice came from the kitchen. As the door opened, revealing a Sukuyo Mankanshoku wearing an apron and carrying a tray, she said, "If hitting my husband or admonishing my son makes you feel better, go right ahead."

"So you're the one that healed me," Ryuko looked at her wounds in awe.

"Like I said, dad's a Back Alley Doctor. If you count the number of people he's killed versus the number he's save, he's killed way more!"

"That's not a good thing," Ichigo deadpanned.

"No need to worry," Barazo waved his hand dismissively, "The dead ones don't sue."

Popping out from underneath the table in between Ichigo and Ryuko, Shinjiro added, "Mr. Mankanshoku is correct. In all the years the Mankanshoku Family Clinic has been open, there hasn't been a single lawsuit from a dead patient."

Nearly falling over from the shock of Shinjiro's sudden appearance, Ryuko pointed a finger at him, "Who the hell are you?"

"Oh?" Shinjiro looked at Ryuko before bowing apologetically, "My apologies! It appears that in my haste I have forgotten to introduce myself. I am Shinjiro Nagita, member of the Newspaper Club, and I am pleased to make your acquaintance."

"Shinjiro?" Ichigo looked at the shorter student with suspicion and confusion, "Where the hell did you come from?"

Shinjiro chuckled embarrassingly, "Evading the Disciplinary Committee has enabled me to hide myself quite well. When I saw you escape from Honnouji Academy, I quickly made my own escape and followed your trail to here. As a reporter, I take pride in being able to follow a story wherever it may be!"

Ryuko glared at him, "Do you make it a habit to randomly break into people's homes?"

"It's not a problem, Ryuko!" Mako announced, wrapping one arm around Shinjiro's shoulders while clenching her other fist dramatically, "If Shinjiro is in trouble with the Disciplinary Committee and Gamagori, then it is my sacred duty as a member of the Mankanshoku family to keep him safe and sound. It would be a stain on my honor if he were to meet with a terrible fate!"

"Well now," a mature female voice said from the nearby open window, "That was some convoluted logic, but I think he gets the point."

Every turned and saw a dark-skinned woman with long purple hair tied up in a ponytail and amber eyes sitting lazily on the windowsill. Ichigo's eyes widened as he recognized who she was, "Yoruichi?"

"Yoruichi?" Yoruichi repeated playfully, "Is that all you can say after all we've been through Ichigo? I'm hurt."

Ryuko turned to Ichigo, "You know this woman?"

"Not really."

"That hurts Ichigo," Yoruichi mocked as she hopped into the Mankanshoku household, her figure gaining the immediate attention of both Barazo and Mataro. Making it a point to ignore the two drooling men, Yoruichi sat down across from Ichigo, "You could say that Ichigo wouldn't be half the man he is today without my training. I worked his lazy ass for days to get him into shape. The name's Yoruichi Shihoin."

"We don't need to hear your damn introduction," Ichigo grumbled and folded his arms while looking away from Yoruichi, "And that wasn't training. It was torture."

"Training and torture are just two sides of the same coin, Ichigo. You can't have one without the other," Yoruichi grinned like a cat before pulling out a tape, "But I'm afraid I'm not hear to mock you, at least this time. Where's the T.V.?"

Mataro stood up and ran to his room, "I think I stole one a few days ago!"

"That's my boy," Barazo laughed loudly, "Always thinking ahead, just like a true Mankanshoku."

Yoruichi looked at Ichigo, who simply shook his head, as if to warn her not to ask too many questions in fear of losing her sanity. After less than a minute had passed, Mataro came walking out of the hallway, a large television in his arms.

"I snagged this baby without any problems," Mataro placed the television on the table and plugged it into the wall, "The stupid clerk didn't even see me carrying it out of the store."

As Yoruichi placed the tape in the television, Ichigo asked, "What's on the tape?"

"It's a message from Kisuke."

There was a crackle of static before Kisuke Urahara's visage appeared on the television, a familiar goofy smile on his face, "Hey Ichigo! If you're seeing this tape, that means Yoruichi managed to track your ass down no matter where you hid. Yoruichi, if you're still there, good job. I would give you a treat, but as this tape implies, I am either dead, missing, lost or too busy working on some unholy monstrosity to announce that I am still alive. If said monstrosity is the cause of my death, please be sure to use the flamethrowers conveniently provided at the far ends of my store to kill it."

Kisuke moved away from the camera and began carrying it through the air before stopping on a bundle of glowing red fibers, "Back on topic. These, Ichigo, are what are known as Life Fibers. They are remarkable things that have so many different applications, but I will not say anything since I hate basing ideas off of untested conjectures. All you, and everyone else sitting with you, need to know is that the Kamui I created for you is made purely of Life Fibers and let me tell you, it wasn't an easy thing to do. In fact, it may have been the single most difficult thing I created since... well... you know."

As Kisuke panned the camera away, everyone could see something that looked like Mugetsu being woven together from a large spool of Life Fibers, "Anyway, I'm rambling. As I worked with the Life Fibers, I decided that it was in my best interest to create something capable of destroying them. After my first two attempts at creating a Kamui ended with them trying to eat me, I thought it was prudent to err on the side of caution and avoid any further bodily harm. Who knew something made of clothing could have such sharp teeth? Hence the weapon I have created for you. That's all and don't worry Ichigo, if things don't turn out the way I hope, I could always send Tessai or Ururu to check up on you. It's quite strange; ever since I started working with Life Fibers she has been feeling antsy. Perhaps she is finally growing up? Ta ta~!"

The video cut out, leaving the Mankanshoku household in complete silence until Mako blurted out, "Let's watch that again!"

Grabbing her friend by the back of her shirt before Mako could go through on her promise, Ryuko looked at Yoruichi and asked, "So what is this weapon that guy talked about?"

With a solid clunk, Yoruichi dropped a long thin package on the table, "Here you go, Ichigo. I don't think I need to tell you to be careful with it."

Carefully unwrapping one end of the package, Ichigo gracefully caught the scabbard of a long blade as it fell out of the box. Drawing the blade out of the scabbard, he was stunned when he pulled out a katana that shone with a deep blue color. Turning it over in hands a couple of times, marveling at the craftsmanship and integrity of the blade, he looked at Yoruichi, "Why did Kisuke want me to have this katana?"

Yoruichi shrugged, "Beats me, but if Kisuke thought you needed it, then you probably do. Kisuke was never someone to exaggerate threats. If he thinks these Life Fibers are as dangerous as he says they are, then you should be careful."

As he looked over the blade, Ichigo noticed something inscribed on the hilt, "Tournesol? What the hell kind of name is that?"

"That makes two of us," Yoruichi dramatically sighed and sat down, "You know Kisuke, he always has to be one to give large and grandiose names to everything he creates. That blade you're holding is no different. Usually I just call his inventions whatever the hell I want, but Kisuke thought ahead and actually carved the name of the blade onto it. Clever bastard. When I find him..."

"Hey Yoruichi," Ichigo paused as he tried to think of the exact question he wanted to ask, "Have you heard anything from Kisuke? Is he alive or not?"

Much to everyone's shock, Yoruichi took a bite out of one of the disgusting croquettes Sukuyo had conjured up. Swallowing the lump of mysterious food before speaking, she replied to him, "Ever since Kisuke vanished, I've spent days looking around Karakura Town for signs of him. There were a few times that I thought I was close to discovering who killed him, but they were all just dead ends."

Propping her chin into the cup of her hand, Yoruichi grinned and looked around the room, "So I see you've made quite the circle of friends, Ichigo. You've not been here a week and you already made quite the commotion. I heard about what happened up at Honnouji Academy. If Isshin was here, he would kill you."

"I'd like to see the old goat try," Ichigo grumbled.

Yoruichi grinned, "Perhaps. So, who might you all be?"

"Ryuko Matoi," Ryuko answered calmly.

Shinjiro bowed respectfully, "Shinjiro Nagita, member of the Newspaper Club."

"Mako Mankanshoku," Mako answered as excited as ever. Pumping a fist into the air she added, "And this is my family! My dad Barazo, my mom Sukuyo, my brother Mataro and our dog Guts! It's a pleasure to meet you Lady Yoruichi!"

"Aren't you cute," Yoruichi chuckled at Mako's antics before her mood became serious, "Before I go, Ichigo, I have one last piece of news. It concerns the person that attacked Kisuke."

Yoruichi reached into her shirt and pulled out a photograph, "Kisuke had set up dozens of cameras throughout Karakura Town to warn him of any incoming danger. Before you think that is an invasion of privacy, they have been quite helpful in the past. Anyway, on the day he disappeared, one of Kisuke's cameras caught something. It was only on a single frame of the video, which is remarkable because Kisuke's cameras operate at over two hundred frames a second."

Yoruichi tossed the picture onto the table. As everyone crowded around the picture, Ichigo asked, "What am I looking at here?"

"A purple Scissor Blade," Yoruichi announced. While the room grew silent upon the announcement, with even the constantly joyful Mako Mankanshoku lost deep in thought, Ryuko stared at the picture with building anger.

"A Scissor Blade?" Ichigo took a closer look at the picture but still couldn't connect the dots, "Where did you come up with that? I don't see it."

"It was Isshin that told me what it was once I showed him the picture," Yoruichi took back the picture from Shinjiro, who had gripped it so tightly that it took Yoruichi a brief amount of effort to reclaim it, "Aside from that, I know nothing more about Kisuke's assailant."

"I might know a little more about this person," Ichigo cast his gaze downwards as he recollected what Kisuke had told him over the phone, "On the day he disappeared, Kiuske called me. He said someone who had nearly killed him in his shop was chasing him across Karakura Town. The strangest thing he said was that the woman wasn't quite human. Damn, I still don't know what that means."

By this point Ryuko had reached her tipping point. Standing up and angrily slamming her hands on the table, she shouted, "Tell me everything you know about this woman! Is her name Satsuki Kiryuin?"

Yoruichi looked at Ryuko completely unperturbed by the teen's outburst, "I'm guessing that Kisuke isn't the first person this woman's attacked."

"Damn right!" Ryuko shouted and pointed her red Scissor Blade across the table at Yoruichi, "She killed my dad with the other half of this scissor blade!"

"I see..." Yoruichi took a deep breath before adding, "Let me just say this, Ryuko. If Kisuke, a man who could be considered one of the most clever men in the world, is afraid of what this woman could do to him if she finds him, what makes you think fighting her would end in your benefit? You could be strong or fast, but the fact of the matter remains the same. Kisuke could think twenty moves ahead in a battle. He could enact contingency after contingency in case he couldn't outright win a battle. If he couldn't win, you sure as hell can't."

While Ryuko remained stunned at Yoruichi's outright refusal to help her, a fist clenching in anger, the captain turned to Ichigo, "I'm going to head back to Karakura Town now. Isshin's doing some remodeling to your house, which means Karin and Yuzu are staying at the shop.

Last I heard Yuzu managed to convince Tessai to let her braid his beard."

With that said, Yoruichi stood up and left through the same window that she first appeared from.

"Wait a second!" Ryuko jumped up and ran at the window. Pressing her body against the frame of the window, she coughed as a motorcycle engine revved to life and Yoruichi disappeared into the distance atop a bright blue motorcycle.

"Damn, she's gone," Ryuko grumbled as she plopped back down on the floor, "So, who was this Kisuke guy Ichigo?"

Threatening to kill Yoruichi for dropping this on top of his lap, Ichigo explained, "He's an old family friend, or I think he is."

"I still find the concept of Kamui fascinating," Shinjiro stood up and took a dramatic pose, "With the power of your Kamui, you two can help me take down Lady Satsuki's tyrannical regime."

Ryuko looked at the grandstanding Shinjiro before she flatly said, "Wait. What?"

"Just ignore it, he's always like this," Ichigo muttered. Now that he thought about it, Shinjiro's behavior was eerily similar to Mako's, except that his was more along the lines of extreme enthusiasm and determination instead of insanity and craziness, "He's in the Newspaper Club. Apparently what he's written pissed off the Disciplinary Committee and I'm the only one standing in their way."

"I see," Ryuko muttered.

"Don't be upset, Ryuko!" Mako exclaimed, sliding into view right next to Shinjiro, "Shinjiro is just trying his very best to do what he was made to do. Who are we to judge what is right and wrong? On the honor of my family I, Mako Mankanshoku, will make sure that nothing happens to you!"

"I knew I could trust you Mako," Shinjiro's single eye shone with tears as he grabbed her hands, "Will you help me destroy the tyranny imposed by Lady Satsuki?"

"Oh dear god..." Ichigo stared in horror as Shinjiro and Mako began talking, "What have I done?"

"Mako," Ryuko tried to intercede before it was too late, "Aren't you getting a little ahead of yourself?"

Mako's eyes widened before she shouted in a panic, "You're right! I'm sorry Shinjiro, but I can't help you in your righteous quest to bring down the establishment. Perhaps in another time, another place we could have been partners in your crusade but alas, it was not to be!"

"I fully understand your conviction Mako!" Shinjiro's glasses shone with a holy light, "But even with this setback, I will not stop in my mission!"

" He is quite... vocal about his beliefs," Mugetsu muttered.

" I quite agree," Senketsu added, "Although I do wonder why his hair is covering his left eye."

Deciding to leave before he was dragged further into the insanity, Ichigo stood up and headed to the door, "It's been fun, but I'm going to leave before I lose what remains of my sanity."

"You're going back to your fancy dorm room Ichigo?" Mako announced in a mix of shock and confusion, "But Lady Satsuki is surely looking for you! Stay here with my family. Ryuko is!"

"No thanks Mako," Ichigo put Tournesol back in its scabbard and headed for the door, "If I don't get back soon, that Gamagori bastard will find some reason to expel me."

"Then I should get going too," Shinjiro announced enthusiastically
"Since Ichigo is my bodyguard against the Disciplinary Committee, it makes sense that I stick close to him. It's been a pleasure meeting you Mako Mankanshoku and Ryuko Matoi. Pray we meet again!"

Out in the crisp night air of Honnou City, Ichigo took in the glow from the various homes and buildings around him and started walking in the direction of the dorms when he heard someone running towards him.

"Hey wait up Ichigo!" Shinjiro sprinted towards him before skidding to a stop, a note pad in his hand, "I have to ask you something. If this Kisuke person was attacked by the same person that murdered Ryuko Matoi's father, aren't you worried about Yoruichi Shihoin's safety?"

"Not really."

Shinjiro hadn't been expecting that answer, "Why?"

"She might not look like it, but Yoruichi is one of the fastest people in the world."

"That's good to know," Shinjiro replied and turned to walk away. Waving goodbye to Ichigo, he said, "Well, I should be heading home now. We all can't live in the Honnouji Academy dorms like you. If I move quickly, I should be able to get back home before the Disciplinary Committee manages to track me down. It's almost like they know where I am at all times. I'll see you tomorrow at school. Perhaps you will have changed your mind about helping me tear down this tyrannical establishment we call Honnouji Academy!"

As Shinjiro disappeared into the distance, Ichigo watched him go before asking Mugetsu, "Mugetsu, did you notice anything off about Shinjiro?"

Mugetsu's eyes swiveled up to look at him, "What do you mean, Ichigo?"

"I've known fast people before," Ichigo began as he turned to walk towards the academy, "But one thing that bugs me about Shinjiro is how he was able to track me down. Even with his sources, he shouldn't have been able to find where I was for at least a day. And I can't forget about how he just appeared out of nowhere in the middle of Mako's home."

" That is concerning. What do you plan on doing about him?"

"For now, I'll just watch him. For all I know, he could actually be that good of a reporter. In any case, I have bigger issues to worry about. Satsuki and her goons aren't going to just let me go to school in peace anymore. I have to watch my back and with you out of the picture for a few days, I need to be even more careful. Hopefully this sword will help keep away some of the more troublesome idiots."

---

...

---

"The masses are fools... every single one of them are nothing but swine dressed in human clothing, completely domesticated by the established order."

Satsuki Kiryuin's heel clicked on the ground as she continued, "They have lost the right and will to govern themselves, that is why they must be governed by Honnouji Academy. We shall create humanity's future through the use of the Goku Uniforms. Iori, I have chosen your Sewing Club as the chosen elite of our Human Conquest and Liberation Project."

"Thank you Lady Satsuki," Iori bowed respectfully.

Satsuki looked over the lines of One-Star Goku Uniforms passing by her with smug satisfaction. The latest iteration of the Goku Uniforms was almost eight percent more powerful than the previous design. She had to give credit to Iori for both his dedication and ability to work under strict conditions. While Satsuki could have easily hired someone from Revocs to design and produce the Goku Uniforms, with increased power and resilience no less, she didn't trust anyone but Iori for the task at hand.

"Iori, have you had a chance to look over the data Inumuta sent you on Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui?"

"Yes I have," Iori handed Satsuki a clipboard, "I must thank you for allowing me access to the information and data concerning the Kamui, Junketsu. Without it, attempting to determine the power and capabilities of Ichigo Kurosaki's Mugetsu would have ended in failure."

"What have you found?"

Iori adjusted his glasses before beginning, "After comparing your Life Fiber Resistance with Ichigo Kurosaki's, as well as what abilities his Mugetsu has revealed, I have determined that your Junketsu should be theoretically stronger."

"Theoretically?" Satsuki arched an eyebrow in mild annoyance, "I do not deal in theories or assumptions. I need cold, hard facts."

Iori swallowed nervously, "Please forgive me, but unless we can somehow force Ichigo Kurosaki into using Mugetsu's full power, everything will be based only on conjecture. From the limited data Inumuta was able to collect, it is obvious that Mugetsu's speed and power exceeds that of a standard Two-Star uniform."

"What about a Three-Star Goku Uniform?" Satsuki questioned, "Will Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui be able to stand up to their power?"

"I am not sure. I would need more data to make an accurate guess."

"... Very well, Iori. Keep me informed of any further developments."

Iori bowed once again, "As you wish."

The level at which Ichigo Kurosaki bothered Satsuki was increasing rapidly. It wasn't the fact that he was attending Honnouji Academy at the behest of her mother, Satsuki could easily deal with that, nor was it that he possessed a Kamui. Power was one thing that she was easily able to counter. Her natural skill and talent made her leagues above that of a Two-Star club captain. What irritated her was the ease in which he used Mugetsu's power. From the tests she had secretly run on Junketsu, away from the eyes of her mother and Revocs, the Kamui was incredibly vicious and insatiable. It would take someone with an iron will to tame Junketsu's urges and great power.

"How did you tame Mugetsu, Ichigo Kurosaki?" Satsuki thought in frustration, "Is your will really that great that you can temper a being of such power as a Kamui?"

Satsuki was still staring ahead when a female voice respectfully spoke up from behind, "Tennis Club Captain Omiko Hakodate reporting as ordered, Lady Satsuki."

"Hakodate," Satsuki didn't take her gaze off the monitors in front of her, but she could tell the Tennis Club Captain was kneeling behind her, "How are the preparations for the Hokkaido interleague match coming along? I'm assuming there have been no problems."

"Of course not, Milady," Hakodate answered neutrally, "Every single club member has been devoting every waking moment of their time to training. Our opponents will soon learn to fear the might of Honnouji Academy and Lady Satsuki."

There was a loud hissing of escaping air as a container descended from above, opening as it went. Walking towards the still kneeling Hakodate, Iori said, "This is a Tennis-Spec, Athleticism-Augmenting Two-Star Goku Uniform. Consider it a gift from Lady Satsuki for your complete devotion and loyalty."

Hakodate's one visible eye widened in greed as she stared at the Goku Uniform, "At long last I have a Two-Star Goku Uniform of my own! Thank you, Milady!"

"Carry out your mission without fail," Satsuki ordered, silently disturbed by the look on Hakodate's face, as she headed to a nearby elevator, "Sanageyama, come with me. I have further need of your services."

"Of course," Sanageyama nodded his head while surprised by what Satsuki could want with him. The elevator she had entered led directly her own personal room overlooking the rest of Honnouji Academy as well as most of Honnou City. In all three years he had been at Honnouji Academy, Sanageyama could count the number of times he had been there on both hands.

As soon as he stepped into the elevator and the doors closed, Satsuki asked, "You were standing next to Ichigo Kurosaki earlier this evening when Ryuko Matoi defeated Takaharu, correct?"

Sanageyama could not see where Satsuki was going with this. She knew all this already. Nevertheless he answered the question, "Yeah. I was right next to him up until Ryuko Matoi unveiled her Kamui to Honnouji Academy."

"I see..." Satsuki's eyes stared out over the darkened courtyard of her academy, only broken by the lights of the elevator. Reaching into the pocket of her uniform, she extended two fingers and handed Sanageyama a small picture, "The Photography Club managed to procure this photograph of Ichigo Kurosaki's acquaintance. I asked Jakuzure and Gamagori about his identity, but they said that this student had never been in trouble with the Disciplinary Committee or a member of the Non-Athletic Clubs. Inumuta was unable to find anything in the database about this student apart from his name, student number, and age. Have you seen him before?"

Sanageyama stared at the picture of the No-Star student that had been next to Ichigo Kurosaki during the match between Ryuko and Takaharu earlier. He looked carefully at the picture for several long moments before shaking his head, "I'm sorry, but this student isn't a part of any of the Athletic Clubs."

Satsuki seemed to find that news disturbing, if the slight narrowing of her eyes meant anything to Sanageyama, "Did you notice anything off about him?"

"Off?" Sanageyama scratched his chin, "Now that you mention it, there was something strange about him."

"How so?"

"Well, he seemed to have a strange fascination with Ryuko Matoi. As soon as Ichigo Kurosaki left to go help her, I glanced over and noticed the kid's eye focused almost entirely on her. The way he was looking at her really freaked me out. Do you want me to bring him in for questioning? He might be a spy from one of the other schools."

"No," Satsuki barely managed to hide the nervousness in her voice, "You are to inform Gamagori as well as the rest of the Student Council to leave this particular student alone. You are not to speak to him, confront him, or meet with him alone. Am I understood?"

"Y-Yes," Sanageyama was taken aback by the order. He didn't know what had gotten Satsuki so worked up, "But why is it important that we leave him alone? He's only a lowly No-Star student."

"Because," Satsuki crumpled the picture in her hands and bit her lip, " He is not a student at all. If you, or any of the Elite Four, were to try and fight him, he would destroy you in less than a second. Ichigo Kurosaki is in great danger."

---

...

---

Ichigo suppressed a yawn as he finally walked back through the weird entrance to Honnouji Academy. Walking uphill was a lot more difficult that simply jumping down while wearing a Kamui. With the trolleys and lifts out of the service due to the time, he had to walk the entire way back uphill without rest. He was really looking forward to his bed. That was if Gamagori wasn't staking out his room for what he did earlier today. That man was probably watching him right now.

"Oh man," he grumbled as he rubbed his eyes and sighed, "I really want to get some sleep."

"~Hello Ichigo~!"

Ichigo turned around in surprise at the completely unexpected voice. Standing behind him in the dead of night with a fancy umbrella leaning against her shoulder was a girl with long blonde hair and wearing a pink dress. A purple eye patch covered the girl's left eye and she had a large and seemingly friendly smile plastered on her face. When Ichigo remained silent after her apparent introduction, Nui Harime sighed wistfully and leaned her head onto her hand, her elbow propped up in midair.

"It's rude to not introduce yourself, you know? Aren't you going to say anything Ichigo?"

" Ichigo..." Mugetsu was nervous about the girl in front of them. She couldn't quite place it, but there was something wrong with her, "Be careful. There is something not right about her."

"I know," he muttered to Mugetsu. Call it intuition or instinct, but there was something extremely disturbing about the girl standing not ten feet away from him. What bothered Ichigo the most was how she appeared behind him without alerting him to her presence. Until she spoke to him he had felt or sensed nothing. For all he knew, she could have been following him the entire time and he wouldn't have known about it, "Who are you and how do you know me?"

"Oh my..." Nui playfully pouted as she leaned on her umbrella and was impossibly floating in the air, "... That's such a silly question coming from someone like you."

"Someone like me?" Ichigo tensed his muscles. The girl might have been playing around with him, but he could tell she was dangerous. There was something in her eyes that he had only seen during the war against Aizen and it wasn't good, "I don't even know you."

"Really?" Faster than Ichigo could blink, Nui was gone from her perch several feet in the air and was now standing at his side, her finger poking Mugetsu curiously, "Is this a Kamui? It's quite fashionable. It suits you Ichigo!"

Ichigo stood there, mouth agape, as his mind tried to process how Nui appeared there, but in less than a second reflexes honed by months of fighting and combat kicked in. Jumping away from Nui, Ichigo pressed a hand to his side and noticed that Mugetsu was shivering, "Mugetsu?"

" Her hand was as cold as ice," Mugetsu's voice was shivering, "She was reaching for something with her finger Ichigo. Don't let her touch me again!"

"Isn't that sweet, you talk to your Kamui!" Nui clapped her hands together and tilted her head to the side, her pigtails bouncing all the way, "But I'm insulted that you don't know who I am Ichigo. After all, you and I are a lot closer than you think."

"Is that so?" Ichigo could tell he was in immense danger just by being in proximity to this girl. There was no way in hell any human was this peppy and cheerful normally, but the fact that it was two in the morning drove the point home. She was not here to chat. Deciding to play along for the moment, he asked, "You haven't even told me your name yet."

"You want to know my name?" Nui pursed her lips cutely before sticking her tongue out at Ichigo, "Nope! Not going to tell you! You're going to have to figure that out all on your own Ichigo."

Feeling more uncomfortable by the second being in the presence of this girl, Ichigo turned around only to find her standing inches from him, her face leaning in until she was inches from his own face, "I must say, Ichigo, it is quite the pleasure finally meeting you after all these years. You don't look anything like I expected."

Staring at Nui, Ichigo hid his trepidation and asked, "What do you want with me?"

"What do I want with you?" Nui looked into the distance, her face seeming to ponder the question intensely, before she turned back to Ichigo, "I just wanted to see how my cousin was doing, that's all there is to it."

"Cousin?" Ichigo was confused by what Nui was suggesting. He had no family outside of his sisters and dad. He knew his dad was a shinigami, which explained why he had never seen his side of the family, but it was strange that no one from his mother's side of the family ever visited. The girl could be telling the truth about it, but the odds that she was lying to force him off balance were great, "You're lying. I don't have any cousins."

"Oh..." Nui seemed dismayed by Ichigo's dismissal of her claims, "I goofed up! You thought I was talking about something as silly as blood. Nope! What I was referring to is much closer...."

Ichigo blinked and suddenly found Nui pressing the palm of her hand against his chest, "Right about here is where we're related, Ichigo! Can you figure out what I mean or do you need a better hint?"

Reaching his limit, Ichigo grabbed Tournesol and swung the blue blade through the air towards Nui. Some might consider his response toward what at first glance appeared to be a simple invasion of personal space an overreaction, but Ichigo knew better. Nui, smile still on her face, effortlessly dodged his first attack as well as the next dozen with visible ease.

"Wow! You're really good!" Nui complimented Ichigo as she dodged around his strikes, her arms folded behind her back, "You almost hit me this time! You must really have been practicing with a sword to get this good!"

Ducking under Tournesol, Nui leaned up until her face was right against Ichigo's before flicking him in the chest with her index finger. As soon as her finger made contact with his chest, Ichigo felt as if a truck had hit him.

"Guh!"

His body flew backwards through the air, bouncing twice against the ground before he managed to regain his balance. Skidding to a stop, his breath ragged from the ease in which he was being toyed with, he reached towards the spaulder before remembering that he still couldn't release Mugetsu for at least another day or two.

"Impressive!" Nui's voice drifted from behind Ichigo. Clapping her hands together happily, she smiled and continued, "You're actually able to remain conscious after all that? You really are as good as you look! As much fun as this has been, I didn't come here to play with you, Ichigo."

"Why should I believe a word you say?" he argued, taking a step back. While the action was redundant due to Nui's ability to seemingly teleport, it helped to make him feel just a little better.

"But it's the truth," Nui pouted and folded her arms. Suddenly perking back up again, she seemed to realize something and said, "Well, I've had a lot of fun tonight, Ichigo! Let's play again some time."

Nui took a few steps away from Ichigo before she turned around, a smile still on her face, and said, "Oh! I almost forgot. If you tell anyone about our little play date, I'll kill everyone you know and love! See ya~!"

With that, Nui Harime simply vanished into the darkness of the night, leaving a shocked Ichigo behind in the courtyard of Honnouji Academy. After several minutes had passed, and Nui hadn't made reappeared, he let out a nervous breath.

"Damn it," Ichigo ran a hand through his hair, "Who the hell was she? What was she?"

"Ichigo, I don't think she was human. Her hand was as cold as ice and her movements were too stiff to be natural."

"I noticed," Ichigo glanced once more in the direction Nui had disappeared before walking towards the student dorms, "Mugetsu, do you think she was the one that attacked Kisuke?"

Mugetsu's eyes closed for a moment before she answered, "Her abilities and description match with what you know. Surely you aren't thinking of going after her?"

"No. If I were to fight her, even with your aid, I would lose. I need some time to think about who she was and what she wanted with me."

"Whatever your decision is, I will be with you the entire way Ichigo," Mugetsu stated as her eyes closed and she fell asleep. Nearly at the dorms, his eyes already threatening to close on him, Ichigo frowned. Why was everything and everyone at Honnouji Academy so damn insane?

Bohemian Rhapsody

**So I present to you Chapter 9 of To My Death I Fight . Before I say anything, I would like to announce that this story has several entries now up on Tvtropes! I discovered the links by complete accident, but when I read them, I couldn't help but realize that my story is awesome!*

**I've been asked a few times what Tournesol means. Yes, it means Sunflower in French, but that is not why I chose it. It is a reference to the most powerful Greatsword in Final Fantasy XII. Of course, that is in name only. Ichigo's Tournesol is merely a blue-colored katana similar in nature to the Scissor Blades. You can chalk the choice of the name to Kisuke, who might just be a big fan of RPGs.*

\ If anyone wants to draw a picture of Ichigo wearing Mugetsu, that would be fantastic.*

**I have some ideas for character themes. These are just out of the blue. Think of them as Omake if you want to.*

1) Ragyo + Junketsu Combined Battle Theme: Lightning Returns: SUPREME GOD BHUNIVELZE (The first 2 minutes or so at least)

*2) Nui Harime Explanation / Flashback Theme: Team Fortress 2: Right Behind You

---

...

---

Chapter 9 - Bohemian Rhapsody

It was his lunch break and Aikuro Mikisugi was busy reading one of his favorite novels. He really had nothing better to do at the moment. Ryuko Matoi was still getting acquainted with her Kamui, Senketsu was its name if he recalled corrected. He wouldn't be able to speak with her face to face until she realized Senketsu couldn't be activated with a small blood donation. Ichigo Kurosaki, on the other hand, Aikuro didn't know what to make of him. The boy had a Kamui, which was interesting to say the least since he hadn't expected it, but his utter lack of knowledge regarding anything going on at Honnouji Academy intrigued him.

"Perhaps I'll talk to Ichigo again soon," Aikuro muttered as he turned the page in his book, "But then again, I'm worried about my personal health if I do end up talking to him. This is a worrying conundrum..."

Several minutes passed in peaceful silence before his cell phone began ringing.

Normally that wouldn't be a problem. Every teacher at Honnouji Academy had a cell phone, courtesy of Satsuki Kiryuin, so that they could be contacted on short notice. What bothered him was that it was his personal Nudist Beach cell phone that was ringing. There were only a few people in Japan that knew his number and all of them knew not to bother him while he was undercover at Honnouji Academy. The chance of being discovered as a spy was too great of a risk. Deciding that whoever was calling him had a good reason, Aikuro flipped it open and yawned, "You've reached the wonderful man known as Aikuro Mikisugi. How may I be of service?"

"Hello to you as well, you naked bastard."

Aikuro nearly fell out of his chair upon hearing the familiar voice.

"Hold on just one second!" He stammered into the phone before quickly walking around his office and making sure he was completely alone. After locking his door, drawing his shades and making sure the bugs planted by Inumuta were recording junk and irrelevant data, he let out a chuckling sigh, "Isshin Shiba, or is it still Kurosaki? My, it's been quite a long time since you decided not to speak to me."

At the other end of the line, Isshin Kurosaki was busy looking over several new and, at first glance, superfluous additions to his home,

"Yeah, it's great to speak to you as well, you naked bastard, but something's come up that I think you should know about."

Sitting back down, Aikuro leaned backwards and propped his feet up on his desk, "Important enough to speak to me after over a decade of silence?"

"You know why I didn't call or speak to you," Isshin responded.

"Yeah," Aikuro's eyes fell, "After I heard what happened, I couldn't help but realize I would have done the same thing if I were to be in your situation."

Isshin sighed and closed his eyes, "What's done is done. Besides, we have a much bigger problem on our hands than some small personal vendetta."

Aikuro's eyes widened in realization, "You don't mean - "

Isshin grit his teeth as he answered, "Ragyo's started making her move."

That was the worst thing that Aikuro wanted to hear. After taking a moment to catch his breath, he asked, "Are you certain?"

"I'm keeping things close to the chest on this one, Aikuro," Isshin admitted, "But I advise you to be extremely careful in the near future. I don't know if Ragyo will start making her move in a few weeks, a few months or even next year, but the fact remains that it will be soon. If what I saw at Revocs was any indication of her mindset, she is extremely confident about something. A confident Ragyo is something that scares me. She all but admitted that there was nothing I could do to stop her, and that's not to mention that Nui Harime was hiding nearby the entire time I was there. As much as she likes to imagine herself as being superior to everyone she meets, Nui cannot fool me."

Aikuro knew very little about Isshin's relation to Ragyo, but what he did know implied that the two of them had once been very close friends, "If you know so much about Ragyo Kiryuin, why do you refuse to help us? You must know that your knowledge and experience would be invaluable in taking her down before things can get out of hand."

"If only it were that simple," Isshin bolted a panel into place and took a step back, "Ragyo is too smart of a woman to not realize something like that. She's most likely already aware of my relation with your group and what I might have told you. I wouldn't put it past her to have spies watching my every move. So even if I were to come to Osaka, the odds that Ragyo's already planned for that is quite high. She may be a crazy and sociopathic bitch with no regard for anyone but herself, but she's anything but stupid."

"If what you say is true," Aikuro's voice was full of concern, "Then what was the purpose of calling me?"

"It's about Ichigo," Isshin stated immediately, "By now, he's probably discovered that his uniform is actually a Kamui. You've probably already spoken to him as well. I don't know what Kisuke was thinking when he decided to make a Kamui, but I need you to, as a favor to me, watch over him. Ichigo may be smart and strong, but he's always been stubborn as a mule. He won't back down from a fight if it comes to that. Make sure he survives his time at Honnouji Academy, especially since several people are going to start taking an interest in him."

"Hmm... you're worried about Satsuki Kiryuin's plans for him?"

"It's not Ragyo's daughter I'm concerned about," Isshin ran a hand down his face, "If you knew half the things I do... you just need to trust me on this."

Isshin heard Aikuro sigh across the line, "Fine. I guess I owe you one. I'll make sure Ichigo doesn't do anything stupid. I'll contact you if anything new comes up, Isshin. Be careful."

With that final warning, Aikuro hung up, leaving Isshin Kurosaki alone with his thoughts. After nearly a minute had passed, he lowered his cell phone away from his ear and decided to go back to work.

"You aren't the only one with a trick or two of their sleeve, Ragyo," Isshin muttered to himself as he continued working on making his house completely safe.

It was something that he started years ago with Masaki. Sort of a pet project, if one could call it that. After rescuing Ichigo from Ragyo's clutches, they both realized what her plans were but could do nothing to stop it. To the rest of the world Ragyo was known as the strict CEO of Revocs who helped make her company one of the most powerful on the planet. If either Isshin or Masaki had accused Ragyo of the heinous acts she was truly guilty of, not only would they be laughed at, but Ragyo would come after them with the full force of Revocs and COVERS behind her, the consequences for both sides be damned.

So instead of actively working against Ragyo, and incurring her undivided attention, Isshin decided to go on the defensive. The first thing Isshin did was make Kisuke place memory modifiers throughout Karakura Town that would work to prevent Revocs from gaining a foothold in the town. It wouldn't stop someone like Ragyo from knowing the town existed, but it would stop her from setting up a subsidiary within the town. The second thing he did was something he hid from everyone, and Isshin meant everyone. No one knew what he had done, and Isshin hoped no one would ever find out. Even Masaki, bless her heart, didn't know about what he had absconded from Revocs with after rescuing Ichigo. It had been nothing but a spur of the moment decision, but in the end it might be one of the key events to stop Ragyo's plans.

"If only I could believe that," Isshin thought gloomily as he finished installing a panel of his Anti-Life Fiber security system. It had taken a pretty penny, courtesy of an oblivious Nudist Beach, but when he was done, the Kurosaki household would be impervious to anything containing active Life Fibers, apart from those he expressively allows within its boundaries of course. Letting out a breath of exhaustion from nearly three hours of working outdoors, Isshin was about to go back to work when a soft-spoken voice suddenly appeared right next to him.

"You look a little tired, Mr. Kurosaki. Would you like some lemonade?"

Isshin put on a goofy smile, "Why yes I would! Thanks a bunch for helping me out with this little renovation project of mine, Ururu. I know it must be a bother to help out and all, but I really appreciate it."

Ururu Tsumugiya's blush momentarily intensified before she tapped her arm proudly, "I-It's not a problem, Mr. Kurosaki. I'm stronger than I look, you know."

"That you are!" Isshin guffawed as he ruffled her hair, "But please call me Isshin! Mr. Kurosaki makes me sound like an old man!"

"O-Okay," Ururu turned around and, without so much as a grunt, lifted lumber and metal weighing nearly half a ton over her head, "Where do you want me to put these?"

Taking a sip from his lemonade, Isshin said, "Just put them in the back. Since Karin and Yuzu are staying with Yoruichi and Tessai, they won't be bothered by the noise."

He wanted to see Nui Harime just try and get inside his house again. If she so much as stepped one foot inside the barrier, she'll be burned alive. Isshin sighed in depression as he realized that would never happen. As psychotic as she may be, Nui wasn't an idiot, no matter how she acted.

"Damn, a man can dream..."

---

...

---

"The gap between the rich and poor is pretty large."

Ryuko's observation broke Mako out of her sleep, causing her to jolt back to consciousness with nearly perfect fluidity, "It makes perfect sense, since Honnou City is ruled by Lady Satsuki. The top-tier students are given homes in the really expensive residential areas while No-Star students like us have to live in the slums."

"Your position at school determines where you live?" Ryuko grumbled into the palm of her hand as she gazed out of the trolley. They had just entered the living quarters for the One-Star students and already she could see quite the difference. Instead of homes constructed out of anything available and multiple families living in the same building, there were rows upon rows of middle-class housing and apartments that were leagues above the Mankanshoku's home.

"Yep! Pretty straightforward, huh?"

"I guess," Ryuko blinked before she remembered something, "Hey, didn't you say that Ichigo lives in the student dorms?"

"I did?" Mako brought a finger up to her chin, "Oh, I did! Yep! Honnouji Academy has student dorms. They are where exchange students with lots of money stay. Usually the dorms are empty, since most of the exchange students prefer the One and Two-Star housing, but the dorms are really nice, even if they are super expensive to stay in."

"They're that expensive?" Ryuko asked amazed, "Then how does Ichigo afford it? He didn't seem like the kind of person to have a lot of money."

"I don't know!" Mako replied with the exuberance of someone talking about winning the lottery, "But Ichigo's super smart! He's, like, a genius or something."

"Ichigo's that smart?" The trolley jolted to a stop as it finally arrived in front of Honnouji Academy. As Ryuko stepped off, while Mako did a front flip out of the window, she saw a familiar figure shambling towards them.

"Good morning, Ichigo!" Mako waved towards the tired Ichigo.

"Hey Mako," Ichigo waved back with a tired yawn. He was still trying to come to grips with what happened last night. When he returned to his dorm, he had spent a few hours going over what happened instead of going to bed. He just couldn't get what the girl had said to him out of his mind. Ichigo knew without a doubt that she could have wiped the floor with him within the first few seconds if she really wanted to. The fact that she instead talked to him, albeit in a very creepy and disturbing way, implied that she had an ulterior motive. If push came to shove and he was forced to fight her, Ichigo wasn't certain that even with Mugetsu's full power he could fight her to a standstill, let alone actually win.

"You look like something Mako's dog dragged in," Ryuko pointed out with concern upon seeing his exhausted state, "Didn't get much sleep last night, huh?"

"You could say that," Ichigo answered while rubbing his eyes in an attempt to remove some of the tiredness plaguing him, "After everything that happened yesterday, I needed time to come to terms with what's going on at this school. I've been here for less than a week and yet some of the things I've seen just doesn't make much sense to me."

Ryuko propped the silver case containing her Scissor Blade onto the ground and sat on it like a makeshift chair, "I know what you mean. Before I came here, I was known as the Kanto Vagabond or, as those idiots in Kobe called me, the Guitar Case Drifter. I've seen a lot of weird things, but Honnouji Academy takes the cake. Two words, Ichigo - Beef Tank."

Ichigo quirked an eyebrow, "Beef Tank?"

"Don't ask," Ryuko said with annoyance, "So Ichigo, you never told me where you came from."

"I'm from Karakura Town," Ichigo thought about how different Karakura Town was from Honnou City. The sheer number of differences between the two towns was something that his mind couldn't completely grasp. It was almost as if they existed in different worlds, "Sure there are some strange things in Karakura, but nothing quite like this. We didn't have clothes that could transform into suits of armor, turn your skin as hard as steel or give normal people superpowers. Hell, the most exciting thing that happened was a ghost sighting or two."

"Sounds like a boring place," Ryuko smirked. Noticing that Mako had wandered off to watch a flock of birds fly by, she added, "I don't think Mako's quite all there."

"I know someone like her," Ichigo remembered Orihime's daydreams and imagination. While her experiences in Hueco Mundo tempered her once legendary imagination and exuberance, she sometimes fell back into her old routines, much to all of Ichigo's friends collective annoyance, "The best thing to do is to just let her do her thing. Eventually she'll come back to reality."

"And if she doesn't?"

"Then we call a doctor," Ichigo deadpanned. Noticing what time it was, he began heading into Honnouji Academy, "We should head to class before Gamagori shows up."

"That's right!" Mako's shocked voice rang out from where she had stopped following the birds, "Only ten minutes until school starts! If I'm late just one more time, I'll be expelled!"

Quickly catching up to Ryuko and Ichigo, she turned to her best friend and said, "Oh! That reminds me! Ryuko, my mom said that if you need someplace to - "

While Mako was talking, Ichigo had been walking in front of her. So it was quite odd when he felt something fly by over his right shoulder and hit Mako in the face.

"Mom said that!" Another volley, this time over his left shoulder, smashed into Mako's face, "If you don't have a place to stay!" A third volley hit Mako's face, causing Ichigo duck out of the way as a fourth volley screamed through the spot where his head had just been, "You can stay! With us! She's already filed the paperwork!"

Ryuko stared in shock and awe at the bruised and smoking face of Mako, "Are you ok, Mako? Ichigo?"

"I'm fine," Ichigo pulled himself off the ground and dusted Mugetsu off, "But the person who just tried to hit me isn't going to be."

"You must be the transfer students that were rude to Lady Satsuki," a haughty voice announced, drawing ever closer as she spoke, "For the moment, I have no interest in anything concerning you. I'm the Girls Tennis Club captain, Omiko Hakodate, and I'm here on official club business."

"How is trying to kill us club business?" Ichigo stared at Omiko Hakodate as if she had grown another head, which, by the attire she was wearing, she might as well have. The club captain wore an exaggerated version of the standard female tennis uniform with two glowing red stars stitched across the front as well as on her visor. The underside of her dress was filled to the brim with tennis balls, giving it a strange appearance. Held in one hand across her shoulders was a black and red tennis racket that glowed with the number of Life Fibers stitched within it.

Hakodate smirked at Ichigo, exposing her razor sharp teeth, "You must be Ichigo Kurosaki. Your attitude and lack of survival skills are everything Lady Satsuki warned us about, but you need to shut up and stay out of this. Club member Mako Mankanshoku failed to fulfill her daily club obligations. She is to be purged as a result, which is all standard procedure as stated in the Honnouji Academy Athletic Club Guidelines. Now let the punishment commence."

With a snap of her fingers, all of the One-Star students lined up behind Hakodate tossed a tennis ball into the air and aimed not at Mako, but at Ichigo and Ryuko. While Ryuko used her silver case as a makeshift shield, blocking the tennis balls from hitting her body, Ichigo was more proactive and used his sheathed Tournesol, which he had decided to carry at all times after what happened yesterday, to block and deflect those aimed at him.

"What's wrong with you, you crazy bitch?" Ryuko shouted from behind her shield, "What did Mako do wrong in the first place?"

Hakodate slammed the end of her racket into the ground, "You're knowledge of Honnouji is severely lacking, transfer student. Mako Mankanshoku skipped yesterday's club practice. Anyone who fails to come to practice without a legitimate excuse is required to suffer the 110 Million Cannonball Serves. Unless you wish to partake in Mankanshoku's punishment, you will stay out of the way. An outside like you or Ichigo Kurosaki has no right to complain about club policies!"

"Yesterday?" Ichigo stepped in front of Mako. With Tournesol still sheathed but held in front of his body, he said, "Mako was held hostage yesterday and nearly killed for doing nothing and you're trying to punish her for that?"

"Tch," Hakodate spit at Ichigo before grinning. Raising her tennis racket into the air with one hand, she pointed it at Ryuko and said, "I don't care if she was almost killed or not! The issue I have is that she was taken hostage without permission. If she had simply had Sanageyama sign the standard Kidnapping Exemption Form then there wouldn't be a problem."

Ryuko angrily slammed her silver case on the ground, "That makes no sense at all!"

Hakodate ignored her and shouted, "Begin!"

On queue, the line of One-Star tennis players lobbed another volley of tennis balls into the air, but this time aimed at Mako. As Mako gasped and comically covered her eyes, Ichigo and Ryuko stepped in front of her and used their respective weapons to block or deflect all the incoming projectiles.

"Cut that out, damn it!" Ryuko grunted from behind her case, feeling the impact of each and every tennis ball making contact. She could see a few dents already forming in her case. Just how hard were these tennis balls being hit anyway?

"These people just don't quit," Ichigo responded. His ability to deflect the tennis balls with Tournesol wasn't as high as he would have liked it to be. For every five tennis balls he stopped, another two managed to get through his guard and hit him. It was lucky that he was made of tough stuff or it would hurt, "We need to do something, Ryuko."

"I know," Ryuko replied while readjusting her hold on the silver case. Turning towards Mako, she said, "Get out of here, Mako! You'll be expelled if you're late one more time, right?"

"I almost forgot!" Mako shouted and darted around the line of tennis players; "I'll see you guys later!"

"Clever little girl," Hakodate admitted angrily before turning her attention back to Ichigo and Ryuko, "So by that little comment, I'm guessing you two are going to take us all on? Well now, this has gotten rather interesting. And here I thought today wasn't going to be any fun at all."

"I do owe her for a meal and a place to stay," Ryuko answered with a smirk.

"I don't need a reason to help people," Ichigo answered, as Hakodate's attention shifted to him, "Just wiping that smirk off your face is all the motivation and reason I need to stop you."

"How very funny of you two," Hakodate grinned, "But don't get too full of yourself. Just because you defeated Fukuroda, transfer student, that doesn't mean you can stand up against me. Boxing is nothing like tennis!"

Confident in her abilities, Ryuko pointed at Hakodate and shouted, "I'm going to make quick work of you! You ready Ichigo?"

"If you're asking if I can transform, the answer is no," Ichigo whispered to Ryuko, "Mugetsu still needs another day or so to adjust herself to my blood. If I tried to activate her now, I'll be risking my life."

Ryuko's eyes drifted to Ichigo, "What are you talking about? Your Kamui is powerful enough to take them all out in less than a minute!"

"I'm not going to risk it," Ichigo repeated, "Besides, we don't have the time to fight her. There's only a few minutes until the first bell and I don't want to have to deal with Gamagori again."

"Tch," Ryuko grit her teeth as she realized Ichigo was right. Still, she couldn't just back down from a fight. In all the fights she had been in, not once had she run away or backed out when challenged. It was who she was and nothing was going to change that, "You're right, Ichigo, but I can't stop now. If Satsuki Kiryuin is the one who killed my dad, I need to find out why she did it! If you don't want to fight, can you at least make sure Mako remains safe? I have a feeling these guys aren't going to let her go so easily. Now, let's do this, Senketsu!"

There was complete and utter silence as Ryuko attempted to transform only for nothing to happen. Beating her hand against Senketsu's single eye, she growled, "Hey! What's the matter with you, Senketsu? I said let's get to it!"

"She's talking to her clothes... is she freaking insane? How disappointing," Hakodate looked crestfallen at Ryuko's apparent insanity. Turning to Ichigo, who was staring at Ryuko with what could only be described as a mixture of embarrassment and disappointment, she grinned, "Well now, isn't this a turnabout. Since your friend seems to have lost her mind, you must take her place, Ichigo Kurosaki! Now die!"

Hakodate's Goku Uniform glowed briefly before hundreds of tennis balls shot out from under her dress and began hovering in the air. With a fluidity afforded to her from years of practice, Hakodate grabbed her tennis racket with both hands before slamming the mass of tennis balls forward towards Ichigo and Ryuko.

Ichigo managed to see the volley coming and leapt back and out of the way, the tennis balls missing him by only a couple of inches. Ryuko, on the other hand, had turned away from Hakodate to admonish Senketsu for sleeping on the job. It was only when she realizing something was coming towards her and turned around that the tennis balls slammed into her body and knocked her over the edge and into the water below.

"A love game?" Hakodate cursed, "That was no fun at all. And here I thought she would be some sort of a challenge. So, Ichigo Kurosaki, it's just you and me now. Let's see how you stand up to my Goku Uniform!"

"NOT SO FAST!"

Hakodate and Ichigo looked upwards as a large shadow grew ever larger. Before either of them could react, Ira Gamagori crashed to the ground accompanied by a sonic boom.

"Omiko Hakodate!" Gamagori bellowed, "Punishment upon students does not fall onto your shoulders! I shall overlook your punishing of Ryuko Matoi due to her challenging you to a fight, but if you attempt to attack Ichigo Kurosaki, there shall be hell to pay! Am I understood?"

"Yes, Gamagori!" Hakodate and her fellow tennis club students bowed respectfully, "I shall follow your orders. And what of Mankanshoku?"

Gamagori folded his arms across his massive chest, "Since Mankanshoku is part of the Girls Tennis Club, deciding her punishment for failing in her duties falls to you. Now where do you think you're going, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Throughout Gamagori's exchange with Hakodate, Ichigo had wisely decided to try and get out of there. He had barely made it halfway before Gamagori's full attention was focused on him, "I don't want to be late to class. Since you're the head of the Disciplinary Committee, I'm sure you understand and all."

"Trying to use the same rules I enforce against me, how clever of you Ichigo Kurosaki!" Gamagori acknowledged as he stepped towards Ichigo, "But it is a useless gesture. I know the Honnouji Academy Rulebook inside and out. There is nothing you can say or do to stop what is coming!"

Ichigo took a step back, "Are you here to fight me?"

"Fight you?" Gamagori looked insulted at the sheer notion, "Of course not! It is against Honnouji Academy regulations to fight without the express permission of Lady Satsuki or a member of the Elite Four except when dealing with internal club affairs."

"Then why are you here?" Ichigo tensed up, "I still have several minutes before the bell rings."

"That is true," Gamagori acknowledged with a nod of his head, "I am here to personally escort you to Lady Satsuki. She feels it is time to have a serious conversation concerning your placement in Honnouji Academy."

"Oh great," Ichigo kicked the ground in front of him. He knew this would happen eventually. Even Satsuki, with her remarkable patience, would get tired of him snubbing her every attempt to talk with him, "Can't you just torture me or break my arm instead?"

"You dare speak about Lady Satsuki in such a manner?" Gamagori seemed to triple in size as he towered over Ichigo, his body enveloped in shadows and his eyes glowing points of yellow lights, "Take back what you said right now!"

For several seconds Ichigo stared up at Gamagori. As the tension between the two teens increased to the point where Hakodate was even beginning to back off out of fear, Ichigo intensified his glare and, in one swift motion, spun around and began running away as fast as he could.

"H-Hey!" Gamagori was shocked by Ichigo's abrupt cowardice, "Get back here, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"Hell no!" Ichigo shouted back as he sprinted across the Honnouji Academy courtyard as fast he could, "There's no way in hell I'm going to speak to Satsuki again. You can just tell her you killed me for all I care!"

"No excuses will be accepted!" Gamagori shouted in return as he chased after Ichigo, nearly barreling over Hakodate in the process. Summoning a whip using his Goku Uniform, he tried to capture Ichigo only for him to jump over the whip before it could wrap around his ankle, "Lady Satsuki has demanded your presence. You will comply with her request, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"What the hell's your problem anyway?" Ichigo shouted as he continued to dodge and jump over Gamagori's attempts to restrain him, "Don't you have anything better to do than chase me down? I'm sure there's someone vandalizing school property somewhere!"

"I was given an order by Lady Satsuki to bring you to her," Gamagori jumped into the air and began falling towards Ichigo, "And nothing will stop me, for I am the Disciplinary Committee Chair! The rules of Honnouji Academy flow through my blood and give me purpose!"

Ichigo stared at Gamagori's falling body with abject terror as he tried to push his body to go faster, "Can't you do anything, Mugetsu, like turn my feet into jet boots or something?"

"I'm afraid not," Mugetsu admitted in a resigned tone, "It looks like this is the end for us. For what it's worth, it was fun fighting alongside you, Ichigo."

"AHAHAHA!" Gamagori laughed in triumph as he finally caught Ichigo, albeit not the method he would have preferred. Pinning the orange-haired teen's body beneath his own massive one, Gamagori announced, "Now, if you are done running, I am to escort you to see Lady Satsuki. So I hope there will be no more funny business, Ichigo Kurosaki, or I might have to get serious. Do you understand?"

"Damn..." Ichigo muttered from his pinned position, "You can... go to... hell... you bastard..."

---

...

---

"I see that you received my summons, Ichigo Kurosaki."

There was a rumble as Gamagori turned around and walked back into the elevator leading down from the roof of Honnouji Academy, his head hitting the ceiling and denting it along the way. Now completely alone with Satsuki Kiryuin, Ichigo said, "It's not like I had a choice in the matter."

Satsuki's gaze was locked firmly on the horizon in front of her. As a stiff wind blew through the area, causing her air to sway in the breeze, she said, "I do believe the first order of business is an apology."

"An apology?" Ichigo didn't know why he was dragged up here, and frankly he didn't care, but if Satsuki Kiryuin was apologizing to him, everything he knew about the world was wrong.

"Yes," Satsuki took a deep breath but still did not turn to face him, "My previous conversations with you may have been a bit heavy handed. For that I apologize."

"You're kidding me," Ichigo didn't know whether Satsuki was mocking him or sincerely believed that was all she had to be sorry for. While every attempt at talking to him since his arrival at Honnouji Academy ended in the form of an impromptu interrogation, he could deal with that, "Do you really think that's what I care about?"

Satsuki turned her head slightly around and, by the look in her eye, Ichigo realized that she had no idea what he found wrong with that, "What are you inferring, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Ichigo folded his hands in Mugetsu's pockets and slouched his shoulders slightly, "You really don't get it. Nothing you say will make me forgive you for allowing Mako to nearly die yesterday for something she had no part in."

Satsuki turned to fully face Ichigo, her icy blue eyes staring daggers at him, "You are naïve about how the world works, Ichigo Kurosaki. Honnouji Academy is a place of law and order, a place where those with the power or the will to achieve their desires thrive while those weak and lazy fall. If I had allowed Mako Mankanshoku to walk free after assisting Ryuko Matoi in her foolish attempt to attack me, the system would have fallen apart. That, Ichigo Kurosaki, is how this world works."

"How the world works?" Ichigo repeated in disgust. He had heard those words once before, from Kisuke as he sealed Aizen away, but the context between the two instances were entirely different. Kisuke had muttered them in an attempt to show Aizen that what he was doing would have destroyed everything, but Satsuki was using them as an excuse to enforce her own brand of Social Darwinism on those around her, "Just what is going on in that head of yours that you think killing people is the right thing to do?"

"I did not invite you here to speak with me only to hear your criticism, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki unsheathed Bakuzan and pointed it at Ichigo. With her face a mask of indifference, she calmly continued, "I have several question for you, and this time you will not be able to avoid them."

"Tch," Ichigo knew this would eventually happen. Ever since his first arrival at Honnouji and after that stupid test, Satsuki had been trying to speak with him about one thing or another. It was almost impressive that she could find him with ease. Reaching over his shoulder and grasping Tournesol's hilt, he said, "That's funny. The way I see it, you're threatening to kill me if I don't answer your questions."

"You need not worry, Ichigo Kurosaki. I do not attack without provocation or reason," Satsuki admonished and, just to prove her point, swiped Bakuzan once through the air before sheathing it in its scabbard once again, "Now, if you are no longer feeling threatened, perhaps we can converse like civilized people."

"It's not like I have a choice in the matter," he mumbled as he removed his hand from Tournesol.

"Very well," Satsuki took a step forward, her heel clicking on the ground, "Let us begin. Have you ever met my mother, Ragyo Kiryuin, or spoken with her?"

"Your mother?" Ichigo thought long and hard about that question. It wasn't what he had been expecting, "I can't say that I have, although my dad seems to know quite a lot about her."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed at the implication but her tone remained steady, "How well does he know her?"

"I don't really know," Ichigo looked away and scratched the back of his neck, "I don't try to pry into my old man's business. If he wants to tell me something about his past, I'm not going to force him to say anything until he's ready."

If Satsuki had been expecting another answer, she was sorely disappointed. Isshin Kurosaki was a walking enigma. From what little Inumuta had been able to dig up on the man, he had been in contact with her mother as long as twenty years ago. She wasn't naïve enough to believe that Isshin Kurosaki saved her mother's life like the newspapers stated. Her mother was not that weak or grateful enough to give someone a reward for helping her. If anything, she would have killed Isshin Kurosaki just to keep up her appearance as the indomitable CEO of Revocs. It was only when she had Inumuta dig a little further that the puzzle revolving around Ichigo's father deepened.

There was almost nothing about Isshin Kurosaki in the Revocs servers. From the few bugs that Inumuta had been able to plant within Revocs that survived her mother's thorough surveillance sweeping, Isshin Kurosaki showed up some time during Student Evaluation Day and proceeded to head directly to her mother's office, but no matter how much she dug, further information on the man was scarce. There was absolutely nothing on the man's relationship with her mother or even what they talked about. It was almost as if someone had purposely deleted everything about him. That led Satsuki to her original assumption that Isshin Kurosaki was a lot like her mother. It wasn't until she spoke to the man on the phone that she realized she was mistaken. What was the connection between her mother and Isshin? How could someone with a disposition like Ichigo Kurosaki's father be acquainted with a woman like Ragyo Kiryuin?

"Your blade," Satsuki stated while switching topics. The likelihood that Ichigo Kurosaki knew anything about her mother, or was even aware of what she was capable of, was exceedingly small, "I can recall but one weapon with the same composition as your blade, and that weapon is currently in the possession of Ryuko Matoi. I also know for a fact that only one Scissor Blade exists in the world so tell me, Ichigo Kurosaki, how is it you came into possessing a similar weapon?"

Ichigo could sense a strange feeling emanating from Satsuki, "Why should I tell you anything?"

The constant wind blowing through the area suddenly picked up and, without warning, Satsuki raced towards Ichigo with Bakuzan drawn once more. Leaping back and drawing Tournesol in retaliation, Ichigo quickly blocked Satsuki's overhead strike while sparks shot out from between the clashing weapons.

"Damn it, what's your problem?" he asked from behind grit teeth. Satsuki was strong, but she was nothing compared to that girl from last night. With his feet firmly in place on the ground, Ichigo gave a shout and pushed Satsuki back with all the strength he could muster.

"It is indeed as strong a blade as I expected," Satsuki calmly stated as she landed back on the ground, Bakuzan held firmly within her right hand, "To be able to stand up to the strength of my Bakuzan, which can damage a Kamui, is no easy feat, but that is not taking into account your own skill, Ichigo Kurosaki. Ryuko Matoi might possess the Scissor Blade, but she wields it much like a child does a toy sword or stick. She does not use techniques or styles. She simply attempts to overpower her opponents through brute force. I find the prospect of such an exquisite weapon remaining in her possession inexcusable!"

"You sure like to hear yourself talk... you know that, right?" Ichigo muttered with Tournesol held diagonally in front of his body, "Did you force me to come up here just so you can see if I'm planning something against you? Because if you did, I can tell you right now that I have no interest in getting caught up in anything you or your underlings are planning."

"I find your lack of respect both highly insulting and strangely relieving," Satsuki stated with a huff as she sheathed Bakuzan for the second time in less than five minutes, "But you shall address me properly from now on, lest you face the consequences for such impudence."

"I'll respect you when I find you worthy of it," Ichigo replied with equal coldness, "But quite frankly, I don't think you'll ever earn it. From what I've seen and heard during my short time here, it's clear to me that Ryuko has more honor than you'll ever possess."

"More honor you say?" Satsuki tensed up at the mention of the word. Stepping towards the edge of the roof, but never getting close enough to slip off, she asked, "You say I don't have honor, but can the same not be said about you, Ichigo Kurosaki? I wield Bakuzan for the purpose of seeing my dreams come to fruition! What reason do you have to wield your blade?"

"Reason?" Ichigo had been asked that very question many times during his first few weeks as a shinigami when Uryu started that stupid Hollow contest. At the time he thought his answer was correct, since it managed to make Uryu shut up, but as time passed and things changed, he realized what he told Uryu was no longer good enough, "I'm not looking for power or glory. I won't say that I can stop anyone who gets in my way, nor will I be satisfied with just protecting those close to me. I want to protect as many people as I can from those that would step over them in some misguided attempt to increase their own power."

Satsuki went to reply but was cut off as Ichigo continued. His brown eyes seemed to pierce into her blue ones with a familiar intensity as he held up Tournesol, "This blade was created by Kisuke Urahara, a man who was targeted for something he didn't know anything about. I will use the gifts he gave me to find out more about the woman with the purple Scissor Blade that attacked him and as well as why she attacked him."

"Nui Harime?" Satsuki thought with shock, although her facial expression remained schooled and stoic, "How is she involved with Ichigo Kurosaki? For what reason would she go out of her way to attack someone not even associated with or against Revocs and my mother? That's random, even for someone like her. There has to be something I'm missing."

"So your goal is vengeance then," Satsuki stated with dissatisfaction, "It is a pointless goal. The man you called Kisuke Urahara is already dead. Nothing you can do can change that. It is better to move on with your life and forget about reaping your vengeance against someone that you cannot defeat. Even with your Kamui, Mugetsu, you would not stand a chance against that woman."

Ichigo Kurosaki caught the familiar way in which Satsuki spoke of this woman. She knew her, but he still could not figure out just how Satsuki knew her. Turning around to leave, he decided to go with one final comment, "Perhaps you are right about that. Perhaps I cannot beat her. She might even kill me, but until I try how can I actually say I lost?"

The determination behind Ichigo's words momentarily stunned Satsuki. After she watched him take several steps, she decided to impart one final piece of advice, "If I were you, Ichigo Kurosaki, I would be cautious about trusting your Kamui."

Ichigo stopped walking, "What are you talking about?"

Satsuki stared at the courtyard below. Hakodate had caught Mako Mankanshoku and would start punishing her soon enough, which meant Ryuko Matoi would be returning soon as well. Ryuko Matoi might be a variable, but she was predictable. She would never let a friend be put in danger. Perhaps fighting Hakodate would be all the motivation needed to display all of her Kamui's power, "Kamui are made to look the way they are for a reason. Take away from that what you will."

"I suppose I will," There was a pregnant silence after Ichigo spoke that lasted for several seconds, but eventually he asked, "Let me ask you something, Satsuki, why are you so concerned about my personal life? There are hundreds of students here at Honnouji, but you've been focusing your attention on me."

"Because my mother has taken an interest in you," Satsuki answered bluntly before adding, "I do believe that is all I require from you, Ichigo Kurosaki. You know the way down."

Turning his back on Satsuki, Ichigo calmly and collectively walked to the elevator and found to his surprise that it was already waiting for him. Stepping inside, he waited for the doors to close before dragging a hand down his face.

"God, that sucked."

" I know," Mugetsu added. During his time talking to Satsuki, she had wisely decided to not say anything and see how things played out, "What do you plan on doing now, Ichigo?"

"Huh?" Ichigo leaned against the wall of the elevator and frowned, "I don't really know to be honest. At first I came here solely because my dad registered me without asking me first. But now... now I think he had a reason all along. The man may act like a child, but everything he does seems to have a reason behind it. After what happened last winter I can't take anything he does at face value anymore. I just need to figure out what he's planned."

" Last winter?" Mugetsu's eyes blinked and gazed up at Ichigo.

Ichigo shook his head, "Don't worry about. It was just something personal that forced me to see my dad in an entire new light."

" If you don't want to tell me about it, I understand," despite what she said, Ichigo could tell that Mugetsu was hurt that he didn't trust her enough to tell her about the Winter War, "But what are you going to do about Satsuki? You and I both know she will not let this go so easily. Her interest in you is not just a passing fancy."

"What the hell do you mean passing fancy?"

" I do not remember how, but Kisuke Urahara imprinted onto me several pieces of information, one of which was how the female mind works. He must have assumed you would be oblivious. It seems that he was correct."

Ichigo glared as an imaginary Kisuke Urahara appeared in his mind while laughing behind that stupid paper fan of his, "If that woman with the Scissor Blade didn't finish him off, I'm going to kill him myself. That bastard can go to hell for all I care. As for Satsuki... I have a feeling that she will make her next move quite soon. Knowing my luck, she has a Kamui of her own just waiting to be brought out for a special occasion."

Living for the City

**So here is Chapter 10 of To My Death I Fight . You might notice that this chapter is a bit longer than usual. I wanted to write it as best as possible and cutting it down would have been a bad thing to do. Anyway, I hope you enjoy this next installment of the story. It has a lot of action, drama, comedy and whatever else makes up Kill la Kill and Bleach.*

**Did anyone else enjoy Episode 22? I know I did.*

---

...

---

Chapter 10 - Living for the City

Ryuko Matoi was annoyed.

After she made relatively short work of the Tennis Club Captain, Omiko Hakodate, after using her Scissor Blade as a makeshift tennis racket, she had been forced to flee from Honnouji Academy for the second time in two days. While she wanted to stay and get answers from Satsuki Kiryuin, since Senketsu informed her that she had several minutes of consciousness remaining, Ryuko had quickly changed her mind when Satsuki attacked her with Bakuzan and easily cut through Senketsu's armor without much effort.

Ryuko was so upset and angry that no amount of Sukuyo Mankanshoku's mystery croquettes or Mako's pick-me-up speeches could make her feel better. There had to be a secret to using Senketsu that she just wasn't able to see. Turning towards Ichigo, who was laying on the roof next to her, she asked, "How do you do it, Ichigo?"

"Do what?" Ichigo turned his head as he thought about the question. He had run into Ryuko some time after leaving Honnouji Academy. As much as he would have liked to stick around and watch Ryuko's fight against Hakodate, he knew that she wasn't someone that appreciated anyone, even a friend, coming to her rescue in the middle of a battle. He was the same way after all.

As he had taken the trolley down from the academy to the slums in order to tell Mako's family that their daughter was kidnapped yet again but that she'll most likely be fine, there was a loud crash on the roof. Sticking his head out the side of the trolley, Ichigo saw a still transformed Ryuko kneeling the roof with her back to him. Covering his eyes in embarrassment at what he saw, he told Ryuko to get inside the trolley before anyone else saw her.

Upon seeing Ichigo, Ryuko had promptly pulled herself inside the trolley and transformed back to normal. While she was still greatly exhausted from Senketsu drinking a lot of her blood, she still had enough energy to grab Ichigo and demand to know why he didn't help save Mako. After he explained to Ryuko what Satsuki had told him, she had calmed down, but not before declaring that she still didn't like it.

"What are you talking about?"

"About how to use Senketsu!" Ryuko growled and, to emphasize her point, pulled at Senketsu's lapel, eliciting a small growl of annoyance from the Kamui due to the harsh treatment, "How is it that you managed to get Mugetsu to transform into something that's not half-naked and completely embarrassing?"

"What makes you think I know anything about how Mugetsu transforms?" He answered equally as annoyed, "Mugetsu isn't exactly the most forthcoming with answers."

" As if I would willingly change into something so scandalous," Mugetsu added in, her feminine voice adding to the conflict, "You should be ashamed of yourself, Senketsu."

" Give it a rest," Senketsu countered, his single eye rolling around in frustration, "It shouldn't matter what I turn into as long as I work correctly."

Ryuko and Ichigo listened to their respective Kamui's argue before Ryuko groaned and slammed her fist against the roof, "This is crap! If what that Yoruichi woman said is true, then how the hell am I going to beat the woman with the Scissor Blade if I'm not as strong as you?"

There was silence as Ichigo thought about what Satsuki had told him earlier in the day, "Have you considered training?"

When Ryuko looked at him with a mixture of confusion and interest, he continued, "Well, I've noticed that you really don't have much training in using your Scissor Blade."

"Training?" Ryuko scoffed and turned her head away from him, "What's the point in training if I can beat these Two-Star club captains without much of a problem?"

"You might be able to beat the Two-Stars, but I don't think the Three-Stars will be as much as a pushover. If they help Satsuki run Honnouji Academy, then odds are they have some kind of trick up their sleeves. Training with your Scissor Blade would also help you fight Satsuki. When I talked with her earlier today, she tried to attack me. In our brief fight, I could tell she was very experienced in combat and tactics, which is something she will use against you when you eventually fight her."

Ryuko didn't say anything for a couple of minutes as she processed what Ichigo said. Eventually she sighed loudly and asked, "You really think I need to do some training with my Scissor Blade?"

Ichigo nodded, "Yeah."

"I guess you got a point," Ryuko huffed, "So that just leaves dealing with Satsuki Kiryuin. If what you said about her is true, do I have a shot at beating her?"

"It depends on how you go about it," Ichigo thought back to his earlier conversation with the student council president. Satsuki was not someone to let anyone challenge her, even if they were doing so for a good reason. If he had a good grasp of Satsuki's mindset, she would soon focus on how to eliminate both him and Ryuko as potential threats to her power.

"How do you know all this, Ichigo?" Ryuko asked wistfully, "It's almost like you've done this before."

Ichigo panicked for a moment before calmly saying, "Let's just say you're not the only one with issues and leave it at that."

Ryuko was about to press the issue when she felt Senketsu shudder and let out a small growl at something.

"Huh? What's wrong Senketsu?"

"It's nothing," her Kamui assured it, "There's just something in the air that unnerves me."

"You're not the only one," Mugetsu added, her eyes focused on the same place as Senketsu's, "There is an ill omen in the air. I can feel it. Something is going to happen soon."

"What do you mean, Senketsu?" Ryuko asked worriedly, but when she got no response from Senketsu she sighed and turned to Ichigo, "Any ideas on how to make Senketsu as strong and powerful as Mugetsu?"

"What are you asking me for?" Ichigo grumbled, "Why don't you just ask him if you're so interested?"

"I did!" Ryuko growled back to him, "But all he's said is that I need to accept being naked! Like I'm going to fight half naked and not be the least bit embarrassed. Senketsu doesn't know what he's talking about."

" I heard that Ryuko," Senketsu's voice piped in, "And I'll have you know that I was serious about what I said earlier. I only drink so much blood because you're embarrassed to wear me."

" Ichigo and I don't have that problem," Mugetsu added, clearly enjoying being superior to Senketsu.

Ryuko and Ichigo let out a collective groan of annoyance as their Kamui began arguing once again. It was going to be a long night.

"Hey Ichigo, I almost forgot something," Ryuko covered her mouth as she yawned, "I didn't see Shinjiro today."

"That's right..." Ichigo frowned and sat up on the roof. It was rather strange that he didn't see Shinjiro all day. The kid was practically on him like a leech the day he ran into Ichigo. To suddenly disappear like this was concerning, "I don't know where he is, but I hope he hasn't gotten into any trouble."

---

...

---

The Previous Night

Yoruichi smirked as she twisted down the throttle on the motorcycle she had borrowed from Kisuke's shop. The man might be a former shinigami captain, but no one could say that he didn't have good taste. As she revved the engine, forcing the motorcycle to go even faster, Yoruichi wondered just how much Kisuke paid for it. Perhaps, like most things in his shop, he borrowed it without permission and just forgot to give it back.

As she reached the halfway point between Honnou City and Karakura Town, Yoruichi's ears picked up a sharp ringing sound right before a rocket propelled grenade slammed into her motorcycle. The vehicle was catapulted into the air alongside a burst of flames before it came crashing back down to the ground and skid to a stop against the edge of the highway, the wreckage still emitting flames and smoke.

" Ha," Takiji Kuroido grinned in well-deserved satisfaction as he shouldered the rocket launcher. Holding onto the edge of the helicopter with his free hand, he gazed over the wreckage and smugly said, "I got her with my first shot."

" Don't get too cocky~!" Nui Harime joked, appearing out of nowhere at Kuroido's side. Forgoing her usual parasol for the purple Scissor Blade held aloft on her shoulder, she laughed girlishly and added, "When you underestimate your opponent you lose. Don't you know about that rule already? After you screwed up the first time, I would think you would have grown some brains or something."

" I assure you, Grand Couturier, that I hit her dead on," Kuroido argued but, knowing Nui Harime's disposition, ordered the pilot to circle around the wreckage a few times just to make sure Yoruichi was dead.

Gazing down at the flaming wreckage, the wind kicked up by the helicopter causing his suit to flap around, he asked, " I'm curious about something, Grand Couturier. How did you know she was going to be here?"

" That's silly," Nui beamed childishly, "I ran into her in Honnou City. She had some very bad information that I felt shouldn't be given out. Besides, I thought you love this part of your job?"

Kuroido scoffed but nodded. It was pointless to argue with the Grand Couturier whenever she had her mind set on something. His position might prevent her from killing him, but Nui could do other things to him that would make murdering him seem like a blessing.

" Oh~!" Nui held her hand over her eyes and stared down at the wreckage, "I spy with my one eye something that shouldn't belong!"

" What?" Kuroido barked and stuck his head out the helicopter to look at the wreckage. It took him a moment to spot her, but sure enough through an apparently enormous amount of luck, he had missed injuring Yoruichi at all . With her body illuminated by the rising flames behind her, Yoruichi stood on the divide separating the two sides of the highway and stared up at the helicopter hovering overhead. As Kuroido watched, Yoruichi twisted her upper body back before throwing a piece of debris from her destroyed motorcycle at the helicopter. Kuroido barely had time to duck before the piece of steel shot through the air and out the other side of the helicopter without slowing down.

" That's impossible!" Kuroido screeched in disbelief as he stared at the hole in the helicopter right behind his head . Turning towards the pilot, he ordered, " Bring us around again. I'll make sure to get her this time!"

" Nope! Not gonna happen!" Nui exclaimed happily as she grabbed the rocket launcher out of Kuroido's grasp and, in one fluid and quick motion, disassembled it before placing the pieces on the floor in a nice neat pile. Smacking her hands together to clear off the imaginary dust, she grabbed her purple Scissor Blade and grabbed the edge of the open helicopter, "Just leave this to me~!"

Kuroido grumbled but wisely decided to step back for his own safety , "As you wish, Grand Couturier."

Jumping out of the hovering helicopter, Nui Harime freefell towards the highway below, laughing the entire way. Spinning around several times before landing softly just a few meters away from Yoruichi, she looked at the former captain and pressed a finger to her lips, "Huh... you look familiar. Have we met before?"

Yoruichi stared at Nui Harime with a cold and calculating look in her eyes. There was no doubt in her mind that the girl in front of her was the one that had attacked Kisuke in Karakura Town. The purple Scissor Blade held lazily in Nui's right hand was proof enough of that, "That's odd. I don't remember ever meeting you before."

" You haven't?" Nui cocked her head to the right, her smile falling off temporarily before reasserting itself, "Oh well! I guess I was wrong about that. Silly me!"

There was something incredibly unsettling about the way Nui was acting, and it caused all sorts of bells to go off in Yoruichi's head. Despite Nui's girlish and airy exterior, Yoruichi could sense that she was hiding much of her true strength just below the surface. If she needed to fight her, and Yoruichi knew that was very likely at this point, then it would be suicidal to go in without more information. Nui liked to talk? Then Yoruichi would let her talk.

" So by that blade in her hand you must be the one that attacked Kisuke?" Yoruichi hopped off the highway divide and landed on the asphalt with nary a sound, "To be honest I expected someone different."

" Different?" Nui paused and blinked owlshly. By her expression, it was clear she was actually interested in what Yoruichi had to say, "How so?"

" Well..." Yoruichi chuckled to herself, "I expected you to be older. Kisuke must be really embarrassed to have been defeated by someone your age, but then again, that's not as strange at it sounds. Kids these days seem to be getting stronger all the time."

" Shucks..." Nui turned away, seemingly embarrassed by Yoruichi's apparent compliment, "That's so nice of you, but it's not going to make a difference in the next few minutes. Back to business! Do you happen to know what Kisuke Urahara did with the Life Fibers he stole from Revocs? It would be ever so nice of you to tell me. It might even make your death in the next minute or two that much less painful and agonizing!"

That settled it. There was something inherently wrong with the girl in front of her. Deciding to play her trump card, for what it might be worth, Yoruichi hid her nervousness behind a Cheshire grin, "You're a really clever girl. You think I didn't recognize you from that little disguise back in Honnou City? I admit it was very good. In fact, it was perhaps the best disguise I have ever seen. If I hadn't sensed something off about you, I wouldn't have noticed at all. I think that when I'm done teaching you some manners I'm going to head back. Ichigo and Ryuko might just be interested in what I have to tell them."

It was very subtle, but Yoruichi hadn't gotten where she was in life by going into battles half-blind and full of pride. When she caught the slight shifting of Nui's left foot, which was barely half an inch, she instantly recognized it as the precursor to an attack. Sure enough, just a few seconds after noticing it, Nui came racing towards her, the purple Scissor Blade transforming into a deadly double-edged scythe along the way.

Yoruichi leapt back as Nui hit the ground, the Scissor Blade carving through the concrete and asphalt as if they were nothing but butter. She couldn't believe Nui's speed. She had to be nearly as fast as Sui-Feng. Jumping back several times, Yoruichi quickly twisted to the side as Nui exploded out from the ground, her blade just missing bisecting the former captain at her waist. Flipping back several times after being forced to deflect another strike with the sole of her boot, Yoruichi vanished in a burst of Shunpo and reappeared several dozen meters away on a streetlight.

"Huh?" Nui looked at her purple scythe, seemingly disappointed that there was no blood on it, "This just won't do. You're supposed to be dead by now. I do have things to do outside of work, you know."

"Work, huh?" Yoruichi crouched down on the light, her eyes focused on every single detail surrounding Nui, "You're not human, are you?"

"Human is such an arbitrary word," Nui playfully teased before she abruptly vanished. Yoruichi's eyes widened in shock as she looked around for the Grand Couturier, only to be stunned when Nui's voice came from directly behind her, "You're not focused~!"

Ducking under the floating Nui's surprise attack, Yoruichi countered by grabbed her wrist. Pulling Nui forward with more strength than the Grand Couturier expected, Yoruichi slammed her knee into Nui's stomach before elbowing her in the face, propelling her back to the ground. Holding the Scissor Blade that she had taken from Nui's grasp during her attack, Yoruichi looked it over in the brief respite in the battle. Just by holding it and feeling the metal composing it, she could tell it was the same material that made up Ichigo's Tournesol. That meant this Scissor Blade had to have been designed to sever and kill Life Fibers but, if Yoruichi were thinking about this correctly, it wouldn't work fully unless it was used in conjunction with Ryuko's blade.

" That was quite rude of you," Nui's voice echoed from the dust surrounding where she landed. Trotting out with nary a wound on her body, she looked up at Yoruichi and pouted, "It's not nice to take what doesn't belong to you. I'm going to have to make your death extra painful now!"

" I'm pretty sure this didn't belong to you in the first place," Yoruichi countered.

" So say you!" Nui said and pulled her right pinkie finger back. Immediately Yoruichi noticed a thin red wire appear in the air, connecting the Scissor Blade in her hands with the tip of Nui's finger. With a seemingly minimal amount of effort, Nui ripped the Scissor Blade out of Yoruichi's hands.

" That's better!" Nui said proudly as she caught the spinning weapon with ease, "Everything is as it should be!"

Yoruichi decided she couldn't hold back anymore if she wanted to get out of this fight in one piece. She couldn't afford to go easy on Nui, despite her reservations about hitting a child, for Nui was clearly anything but a normal person. Crouching back down on the streetlight, Yoruichi pushed off and rocketed towards Nui.

" Like that's going to work!" Nui beamed with a smile as she prepared for Yoruichi's attack, "Full frontal assaults are so cliché! It's almost - "

Nui's comment was cut off in midsentence as Yoruichi disappeared from in front of her using Shunpo before reappearing behind the Grand Couturier with her left leg arcing downwards towards the base of her neck. Leaning backwards and allowing Yoruichi's leg to sail harmlessly over her head, Nui countered the captain's attack by spinning the Scissor Blade around her wrist before forcing the tip towards Yoruichi's face.

" Not this time!"

Leaning her head to the side, Yoruichi waited for the Scissor Blade to stop moving forward before she twisted her shoulder and caught Nui's arm in-between her chest and arm. Jumping into the air, Yoruichi forced Nui's body to follow her trajectory before she spun around, grabbed Nui's head, and slammed the Grand Couturier face-first into the pavement hard enough to crack it. Grabbing the Scissor Blade once more, Yoruichi widened the gap between Nui and herself while making sure there weren't any more Life Fibers connected to the Scissor Blade.

Gazing at Nui's body comically sticking out of the ground, Yoruichi sensed the Grand Couturier was nowhere near defeated. True enough, just a couple of seconds later Nui's hands pressed their palms on the ground and pushed her smiling face out of the ground.

" That wasn't very nice!" Nui quipped, as she stiffly righted herself without a trace of dust on her pink dress, "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice and you will suffer greatly before you die!"

Crossing her hands in front of her body, a sadistic smile on her face, Nui summoned dozens of Life Fibers that immediately began whipping their way towards Yoruichi. The captain jumped backwards and into the air while using the stolen Scissor Blade to cut the threads down before they could reach her. Spinning around twice, while making sure she hadn't missed a single Life Fiber, Yoruichi touched down on the ground and instantly noticed Nui was nowhere to be seen.

" Where did she go?" Yoruichi asked herself, turning around when she didn't see the Grand Couturier in front of her only to find the highway completely deserted, "What's she up to?"

Yoruichi's well-honed senses picked up something in the air and she quickly leaned to the side. It wasn't fast enough to fully avoid the attack though. Wincing in pain as the razor sharp measuring tape cut into her side with uncanny ease, Yoruichi began using the Scissor Blade to deflect and stop Nui's impromptu spiked whip.

" Are you having fun yet?" Nui asked, a sadistic smile adorning her face, "Because I sure am! After all, a woman never leaves the house without a backup plan!"

Subtly changing the course of her measuring tape in midflight, Nui wrapped it around the purple Scissor Blade before, with a quick yank, pulled it out of Yoruichi's hands and back in her own where it belonged.

" There now... I just gotta do one thing before we continue," Nui spun the Scissor Blade around once before tucking it into her dress, the blade disappearing into the smaller dress mysteriously, "Now you can't take it anymore! Sorry to disappoint you."

Without a weapon, at least for the moment, Yoruichi was forced to actively dodge Nui's weapon. After suffering several more minor wounds on her arms, Yoruichi saw an opportunity to counterattack. Sticking her arm out and allowing the measuring tape to wrap around it, she attempted to pull Nui towards her only for the Grand Couturier to smile and grab it as well.

" Sorry! Not going to fall for that old trick a second time!"

" Who says I'm going to do what you think I am?" Yoruichi smiled as she readjusted her stance. As she grabbed the measuring tape with her other hand, Nui, seeing what the former captain was trying to do, quickly tried to stop her. Before the Grand Couturier could so much as sever one of Yoruichi's limbs, the dark skinned woman buckled the measuring tape with enough force that Nui's body was comically and dramatically thrown against the roadway before she bounced into the air, spinning the entire way. As Nui's body arced through the air, Yoruichi pushed off the ground and met her in midflight.

" Take this! Meteor Barrage!"

Yoruichi began by kneeing Nui in the stomach hard enough that balls of cotton seemed to escape the Grand Couturier's mouth. Not letting up on her assault even as the two of them began falling back to the ground, Yoruichi followed up her attack by slamming her elbow into the back of Nui's neck, dislocated the Grand Couturier's right shoulder and head butted her until blood was spurting out of Nui's nose almost like it was a faucet. Just before reaching the ground, Yoruichi spun around and slammed Nui's head back into the ground, causing the highway to splinter and crack before exploding as the captain continued to push Nui further downwards.

As an explosion of energy shot out from the point of impact, Yoruichi reappeared down the highway, using Shunpo to increase her speed. She needed to get back to Karakura Town and warn Isshin that she ran into the woman that attacked Kisuke and, what was worse, who was hanging around Ichigo under a disguise. Already more than a kilometer away from the site of the battle, Yoruichi could sense Nui was completely fine. She was glad she hadn't skimped out on her training after the Winter War. With what she had pushed herself through, she should be able to make it back to Karakura Town with endurance to spare.

Back at the crater that formed from Yoruichi's attack, a perfectly fine Nui Harime sat on her Scissor Blade as she looked around for

Yoruichi, "Oh... she ran away. No one's ever managed to escape me before. I must be losing my touch~!"

Noticing Kuroido bringing the helicopter around to pick her up, Nui smiled despite failing in her objective. It was always fun to fight an opponent that didn't die in the first few seconds. The next time she fought Yoruichi, she would make sure the woman didn't run away again. Cutting off her legs will make sure of that!

" It's too bad I need to report back to the Director. I sure do wonder how Ichigo's doing without me. I'm sure he's having lots of fun!"

---

...

---

Deep beneath Kiryuin Manor, in a complex hidden from all eyes apart from a chosen few, Satsuki Kiryuin finished descending down the only stairwell leading towards her goal only to find several men blocking her path forward.

"Please turn back, Milady!" One of the men said, a bead of sweat dripping down his nervous face. Swallowing the bile in his throat, he continued, "I'm not allowed to let anyone past this point, not even you! I'm sorry!"

Without even bothering to look the man in the eye, Satsuki responded with a flat, "Stand aside."

"You know we can't do that, Milady," The same man argued, "Our orders are - "

Before the man could finish speaking, Satsuki removed the sheathed Bakuzan from her hip and thrust it into both men's abdomens with enough force to make their bodies instantly crumple to the ground. Stepping over the fallen men, Satsuki continued walking towards her goal, only bothering to say to them, "I don't have any time to waste on speaking to fools like you. Stay out of my way."

Just beyond the area where her mother's men had tried to stop her was a pair of blast doors designed to prevent anything less than an atomic explosion from passing through. Pressing her thumb against a hidden panel at her side, Satsuki typed in a thirty five digit password on the keypad that appeared and stepped back as a loud hiss resounded through the area while the blast doors slowly opened.

Squinting her eyes as a bright white light shone out, Satsuki's vision quickly reasserted its dominance and she walked through the doorway into the secret chamber. The large chamber was lit by several dozen floodlights that extended up the walls and onto the ceiling, all of which focused on the single object standing in the middle of the chamber.

"Milady," Soroi's calm and elderly voice spoke up as Satsuki ascending the stairs leading towards her objective, "Perhaps this is an unwise move."

Satsuki's hand hovered over the hand scanner, "You think I am making the wrong choice, Soroi?"

Her faithful butler took a deep breath, "I did not say that, Milady. I am simply voicing my opinion that perhaps you are being a tad hasty in your determination. Ever since you discovered that Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki both have Kamui, I have noticed a hint of envy in your voice when we speak."

"You say that I am jealous?" Satsuki's voice held a hint of malice, but it was not directed at Soroi, "It is inconceivable that Ryuko Matoi managed to wear a Kamui before me, but what bothers me the most is Ichigo Kurosaki's disposition in regards to his Kamui. His Mugetsu grants him enough power that he could have defeated me with ease if he chose to. He is able to fully wield his Kamui's power and yet he doesn't make a move. If I am to counter whatever it is he is planning, I need the power Junketsu offers. Soroi... if you do not think this is the correct decision, I will not stop you from leaving."

Soroi was silent for a moment before he said, "If you truly wish to go through with this, I will stand by your side the entire way."

"I am glad that you don't see a problem," Satsuki softly replied as she finally continued with what she was doing. Pressing her hand on the scanner and getting an affirmative beep from the computer, Satsuki stared in determination as the front of the pillar opened. Hanging inside the pillar, wrapping in plastic and with several biohazard warnings stapled to the front, was Junketsu.

"I've come for you at last, Junketsu," Satsuki spoke to the Kamui, even though she knew it could not talk back to her. As she reached towards the Kamui, already thinking of the power it could offer her, Satsuki's ears picked up the subtle sound of someone's feet pounding on the ground.

"Soroi!" Takiji Kuroido shouted at the butler, all while trying to capture his breath. When the steward of the Kiryuin family heard that Satsuki had returned to the manor and had immediately headed towards the basement, he knew right away what she was trying to do. Barreling his way out of his personal office, and over several maids and butlers in the process, he considered himself fortunate that he managed to make it to the basement in time to stop Satsuki from accomplishing what she was trying to do.

"Kuroido..." Satsuki stared at the steward with disinterest, "I did not expect you to find out so quickly."

Kuroido ignored Satsuki's subtle remark and focused his ire entirely on Soroi, "How could you let her do this? Why are you standing there allowing this to happen?"

Soroi calmly turned to the steward, "Good evening, Master Kuroido."

Infuriated at Soroi's witticism, Kuroido took a moment to reign in his anger before turning to Satsuki, "Lady Satsuki, your mother has forbidden the removal of that outfit from its seal. You know the consequences of such disrespect! Return it at once and I will not report this to Lady Ragyo!"

"I'm afraid I can't do that," Satsuki answered calmly, completely ignoring the subtle threat from Kuroido. She knew, without a doubt, that he was going to inform her mother on her actions no matter the choice she made. It was better for her to have to speak to her mother with Junketsu's power at her side, "I have need of Junketsu's power. You will not stop me."

Kuroido took a threatening step forward, "This is unacceptable! As the steward of the Kiryuin family, it is my duty to care for this manor in your mother's absence! That means that you must listen to everything I say without comment, Lady Satsuki! I cannot allow such behavior!"

Satsuki paused in her movements for several seconds, and for a brief moment in time Kuroido thought he had managed to convince her to back away from Junketsu. That all changed when Satsuki spoke, "You say that you cannot allow it? If you really think that way, then what is preventing you from coming up here and making me back away by force? Who is it do you think you're talking to? I am not one of my mother's servants, who listen to your every word like it is the gospel!"

"Lady Satsuki! I - "

Shrugging off her uniform, exposing her body to everyone in sight without regret, she interrupted the steward, "It is time that I changed. Get out of my sight, you shameless fool."

Both Kuroido and Soroi averted their gazes from Satsuki's nude body, but while Soroi turned his head completely around Kuroido continued to face forward, albeit with his eyes closed, "Surely you don't intend to try and put on Junketsu? You know the risks of attempting such a feat! Why do you think it was sealed away by your mother?"

"Try you say?" Now completely nude, Satsuki stepped forward and away from the pile of her discard clothing, "I do not intend to, as you so eloquently put it, 'try.' Everything that I do, every step I make and every word I speak is just one more step closer to fulfilling my ambition!"

"But if you put on that Kamui, you'll most likely die!" Even with his eyes closed, Kuroido tried to move to stop Satsuki only to find Soroi's hand gripping his shoulder with strength the elderly butler should not have been able to possess.

"Do not speak out of fear, Kuroido!" Satsuki announced, one hand holding an unsheathed Bakuzan and the other Junketsu, "There is no danger. Clothing exists simply to be worn! It is scandalous to think that my life shall be threatened by a mere piece of clothing, even if it happens to be a Kamui! If someone of Ichigo Kurosaki's caliber and willpower can master Mugetsu, it is inconceivable that I shall not be able to do the same with Junketsu, for my willpower and determination far outclasses his!"

Satsuki dragged her finger gently along Bakuzan's edge, a thin trail of blood dripping down her finger as she raised her hand over Junketsu, "Junketsu, take this blood offering as the beginning of an eternal vow between you and I. This shall be the red thread of our combined fate!"

There was a pregnant silence as several large globs of blood dripped off her finger and onto Junketsu, the life-giving liquid absorbed into the white fabric almost as soon as it made contact. After several seconds, Junketsu's eyes shot open and the Kamui threw itself at Satsuki. Satsuki's body bent backwards as the Kamui attempted to consume her blood, her body contorting in pain as she fought off the berserk clothing.

"Lady Satsuki!" Soroi and Kuroido shouted in unison.

"Hold your tongues and watch!" Satsuki growled, her hair covering her face as she was forced to bend forward from Junketsu's attempt to latch onto her body, "Ask not the sparrow how the eagle soars! No one on this planet can do something before Satsuki Kiryuin! Not Ryuko Matoi and especially not Ichigo Kurosaki! I will not let people without ambition of their own gain access to power such as this! If I have to dive into the pits of Hades to accomplish my ambitions than so be it! Even Junketsu is but a mere garment and I will make it acknowledge me as its master!"

Blue energy crackled around Satsuki's hunched over form as she continued to try and force Junketsu into submission through sheer force of will and determination. For several tense seconds both Soroi and Kuroido could do nothing except listen to Satsuki's screams as she stove off Junketsu's continued attempts to devour her body and mind. When the screaming stopped and nothing immediately happened, they thought the worst had happened, but were blown back when Satsuki, wearing a completely transformed Junketsu, staggered to her feet before screaming into the heavens above. A pillar of blue light signifying what she had accomplished accompanying her the entire time.

---

...

---

Ichigo was enjoying one of his rare peaceful dreams when he was forcibly returned to consciousness by a sound very similar to someone knocking on his door. Opening one eye, and noticing that the clock on his nightstand said it was only four in the morning, he turned over and grumbled.

"It's four in the morning," he mumbled in annoyance, unconsciousness already overtaking him, "Whoever they are, I'm sure they can wait until the sun is up to talk to me."

When the knocking stopped and Ichigo began to think he would be able to go back to sleep in peace, he was quite violently thrown into the waking world on both feet as the door to his dorm was literally blasted off its hinges and sailed through the air before hitting the far wall.

"Ichigo Kurosaki!" Ira Gamagori ducked down and squeezed his way through the smaller doorframe, "Why are you still asleep?"

Sitting up in his bed and still groggy, Ichigo yawned, "Why you ask? Because it's four in the fucking morning, that's why. Classes don't start for several more hours so why are you here bothering me at this ungodly hour?"

"You are correct that it is four in the morning!" Gamagori nodded in agreement, "I see your sense of time is still intact, but I am afraid that you have missed out on something that is vital to every student attending Honnouji Academy!"

Sitting on the edge of his bed, Ichigo yawned and asked, "And what may that be?"

Gamagori smirked and held up a packet of papers, "Your transcript finally came through, Ichigo Kurosaki, and it seems that you have missed a few of your vaccinations. Until you get your shots, you are forbidden from attending classes. Luckily Honnouji Academy is well prepared for such an issue. Get dressed and meet me out on the hallway in five minutes. I am to escort you to the Honnouji Academy Regional Nurses Office by six sharp for your vaccinations!"

Any traces of exhaustion and sleepiness that still clung to him vanished as soon as Gamagori mentioned that he needed to get shots. Ever since he was a kid, Ichigo had always hated shots. Whenever he had to get blood drawn, his dad would always complain about how Yuzu and Karin never whined or moaned like a little baby at the needle. Up until just a short while ago, Ichigo could stand needles so long as he didn't look directly at it, but that all changed due to that bastard of a scientist, Mayuri Kurotsuchi.

During the Muramasa fiasco in the Soul Society, Kurotsuchi had tried to inject him with several needles full of mysterious chemicals. The captain had claimed them to be antidotes or medicines, but Ichigo wasn't stupid. As soon as he saw the liquid start burning through rocks on the ground, Ichigo knew the captain was lying right to his face.

Quickly getting out of bed, Ichigo hurried over to Mugetsu and pulled her off the hanger she was sleeping on.

" Huh?" Mugetsu's eyes blinked tiredly before she gave a big yawn, a surprising feat for something that didn't need to breathe, "What's going on Ichigo?"

"Trouble," He answered and quickly put on Mugetsu. Feeling the subtle sensation of his Kamui drawing a small amount of blood, he quietly made his way towards the sole window in his bedroom. It was nearly one hundred feet to the ground below, but Ichigo was sure he could survive it, "Mugetsu... will there be any issues with my blood?"

" Hmm..." Mugetsu closed her eyes and Ichigo could feel, despite that not making much sense, the Kamui tasting his blood. After several second she said, "No. The taste of your blood will no longer drive me to devour you. May I ask why you wish to transform so early in the morning?"

"Yeah," Ichigo quipped as Gamagori literally head butted the bedroom door, the large teen's head sticking through the small hole it had created, "That's why."

"You think you can escape the grasp of Ira Gamagori?" Gamagori asked rhetorically before busting through the remains of the door through sheer physical strength, "The doctor will see you now."

"Like hell," Ichigo answered and leapt out of the window and into the pre-dawn air. Shivering slightly from the cold, he glanced upwards and groaned in annoyance when he saw Gamagori following him, a look of sheer determination on the Elite Four's face.

"Can't you take a hint?" Ichigo shouted over the wind.

"No hint shall stop me!" Gamagori shouted back as he was miraculously closing the distance between the two of them, "I have a job to do and I shall do it to my fullest capacity!"

"To hell with this!" Ichigo reached for his spaulder and pressed down on the two buttons, "Let's go Mugetsu! Life Fiber Synchronization! Kamui Mugetsu!"

Gamagori was forced to cover his eyes as a blast of light shone out from Ichigo's body as he transformed into Mugetsu's true form. Reaching to activate his Three-Star Goku Uniform in response, he stopped when he realized he wouldn't be able to do anything. His uniform was built to take damage and then reflect it after all. Deciding to take care of Ichigo Kurosaki with his own hands, Gamagori shouted, "Activating your Kamui will not save you from - "

He was cut off as Ichigo landed on the ground, forming a small crater in the process, before he took off into the distance. With Mugetsu augmenting his speed, Gamagori had no chance of catching Ichigo before he escaped from Honnouji Academy. Grumbling at his failure, Gamagori pressed a finger against his ear and activated the headset hidden within.

"It's Gamagori. Ichigo Kurosaki has escaped from Honnouji Academy," For a few moments Gamagori listened to the other side of the line, a twitch of annoyance in his eyebrow, before he interrupted them, "It's not my fault he activated his Kamui in midair! Besides, I thought the purpose of Lady Satsuki's plan was to keep Ichigo Kurosaki away from Honnouji Academy for as long as possible? I will not stand for sass, Jakuzure!"

There was faint mumbling from the headset before Gamagori asked, "Is Sanageyama in place? Good. Tell him Ichigo Kurosaki should be within range in the next few minutes. He needs to keep Ichigo Kurosaki occupied until Lady Satsuki is finished dealing with Ryuko Matoi."

---

...

---

Ryuko yawned loudly as she approached Honnouji Academy.

Usually she slept fairly well, but all last night she couldn't help but feel as if something serious was going to happen today. She would have attributed it to her nerves, taking down the establishment usually does that to someone, but seeing No-Star and One-Star students go out of their way to avoid her and Mako meant her intuition was right.

"You look tired, Ryuko?" Mako asked, pointing out the obvious, "Didn't you get enough sleep last night? Mom did have us go to bed early after all."

Groggily rubbing at her eye, Ryuko responded tiredly, "I couldn't sleep at all last night because I had the strangest feeling that something bad was going to happen at any moment."

"That's silly!" Mako waved off Ryuko's suspicions the only way she knew how, "Nothing bad happened at all last night, except for the normal random murders in the streets. If you get up really early, you can see the clean up crews from Honnouji Academy moving the dead bodies away!"

Ryuko looked at Mako in shock, "I don't think that - "

"Get him! Don't let him escape this time!"

Ryuko and Mako watched as a large explosion blasted out of the side of Honnouji Academy before a black and white figure came soaring out of the smoke. Landing nearby, still in Mugetsu's transformed state, Ichigo cursed when he sensed the One-Star students chasing him begin to find a way down, "Damn. These guys just don't when to quit."

A snap-like sound reverberated through the air but, with dexterous ease, Ichigo caught the rifle-shaped needle in his right hand. Spinning around and extending his arm, he threw it back towards where it came from, a satisfied smirk on his face when he heard the muffled sounds of someone yelping in pain.

"Ichigo? Is that you?" Ryuko blinked in astonishment at Ichigo. This was the first time she was seeing Mugetsu's activated state. After her battle against Takaharu she had been half-conscious from Senketsu drinking too much of her blood. She had only been able to glimpse a foggy mix of white and black in the brief instance of consciousness as Ichigo carried her and Mako to safety.

Ichigo half-turned at the familiar voice. Tilting his head over Mugetsu's left eye, he looked just as surprised to see them, "Ryuko? Mako? What are you two doing here?"

"What do you mean 'what are we doing here?' We're right outside the entrance to Honnouji Academy."

"What?" Ichigo looked around and noticed that Ryuko was right. During the multi-hour long chase, he had somehow stumbled back to Honnouji Academy. Groaning in frustration, he glared at Mugetsu's right eye, "Oi! I thought you knew where we were going?"

"I did," his Kamui chastised, "But all the running, jumping and spinning made me nauseous. By the time I could open my eyes again, you were lost."

"How do you even get nauseous anyway?" Ichigo seethed at his Kamui.

"I hate to break up your conversation," Ryuko looked up and noticed several people rappelling down a wall, "But what the hell is going on? I'm seriously confused."

Ichigo glanced at the approaching One-Star students before answering, "Apparently my old man was too stubborn to get me all my shots, so now that bastard Gamagori is hounding me with guns that fire needles. I've been outrunning them since about four this morning and it's starting to really piss me off."

Ryuko was stunned at how long Ichigo had been wearing Mugetsu, "How have you been wearing Mugetsu for several hours? Shouldn't she have drained you of all your blood already?"

" Unlike you and Senketsu, Ichigo and I are fully synchronized," Mugetsu explained to Ryuko, whose face fell upon remembering the gap of trust between her and Senketsu. Noticing that Ryuko was listening to her, Mugetsu continued, "Ichigo accepts me for what I am and doesn't try to make me something I'm not. In fact, I... incoming at two o'clock Ichigo."

Ichigo ducked under the barrage of needles and glared at the students who had fired them, "Don't you guys ever quit? I've already beaten the crap out of dozens of you this morning!"

"We will never quit, Ichigo Kurosaki, until you have taken your medicine!" Sanageyama walked forward from behind the line of One-Star students. He had his bamboo sword held lazily over his right shoulder while one of the needle-firing guns was held firmly in his left hand. Smirking cockily at Ichigo, he looked at him before turning to Ryuko and Mako, "Well, it's been a swell chase, but we've finally managed to corner you. To be honest, I thought you managed to outfox us at Park Place but thankfully Inumuta was able to relocate you with his satellites."

"You have satellites?" Ichigo asked, thoroughly confused about what was going on. Looking at Ryuko, who was just as confused as he was, he turned back to Sanageyama and said, "I'm not going to think too hard about that. I would just like to point out that we're literally next to the edge of the road. I'm pretty sure I could just jump off and escape."

"And risk getting yourself expelled for being late?" Sanageyama seemed to take pleasure in pointing out the apparent loophole in Ichigo's plan.

"That Gamagori bastard said I cannot attend classes until I get my shots. I take that to also mean he can't expel me for being late to class."

Sanageyama opened his mouth to respond when he realized Ichigo was correct. As long as he hadn't gotten his shots, he technically couldn't be expelled for being late to school. Gritting his teeth in anger, he pointed his bamboo sword at Ichigo and shouted, "Do not think I will allow you to escape me a tenth time, Ichigo! You will be getting your shots today! I will not forgive you for the mockery you put me through at the Water Works!"

"Water Works?" Ryuko narrowed her eyes as she realized something odd about that, "Hey Ichigo, isn't that - "

"Just stop there. Let's just say this city is a lot weirder than we first thought," Ichigo answered, cutting Ryuko off in mid-question. He had to give Sanageyama. It takes someone with a lot of determination to track him throughout Honnou City while he was wearing Mugetsu without giving up. There was a point about an hour ago that Sanageyama had activated his Three-Star Goku Uniform in an almost successful attempt to capture him. If Ichigo hadn't assumed Sanageyama's Blade Regalia was more than it appeared, he would have been caught off guard by its immense speed.

"I'll meet up with you guys later," Ichigo subtly shifted his body closer towards the nearby ledge, "I just have to get rid of these idiots first."

Due to being a member of the Elite Four, Sanageyama easily noticed Ichigo's body beginning to shift and shouted, "Fire! Don't let him escape!"

Ichigo took off the same time the barrage of needles flew through the air towards him at nearly half the speed of sound. Ducking and weaving around any needles that managed to get too close to him, Ichigo leapt over the edge and began skidding down the nearly horizontal wall leading to the One-Star Residential Area, but not before turning around and giving a thoroughly-embarrassed Sanageyama the finger.

Sanageyama's shoulders slumped as he stared at the retreating Ichigo, "He can't be real."

Rubbing his forehead to alleviate the headache he was feeling, Sanageyama ordered the One-Star's to continue following Ichigo. As the horde of students leapt off the edge and deployed parachutes, Sanageyama looked at the flabbergasted Ryuko and Mako and let out a flat, "What?"

"Long day?" Mako asked, completely unperturbed about what she had just witnessed.

"Ugh," Sanageyama groaned. Rubbing his eyes in an attempt to relieve the stress he was feeling, he kicked the ground and said, "Ichigo Kurosaki is harder to catch than the freaking roadrunner. There's no way his Kamui could augment his natural speed and reflexes this much. Now get to Honnouji before you're tardy."

"What?" Ryuko asked suspiciously, "Aren't you going to try and fight me?"

Sanageyama opened his mouth to answer but was cut off as an explosion sounded in the distance. Noticing a miniature mushroom cloud expanding over the One-Star Residential Area, courtesy of Ichigo avoiding another well-planned and expensive trap, he silently groaned, "I'm a little busy now trying to keep my pride and composure intact. Why don't you come back and ask me in a few days when I finally manage to corner the orange haired bastard."

Ryuko looked at Mako, who seemed to be thinking something entirely unrelated to the situation, before shrugging and walked passed the depressed Sanageyama, who was listening to his men fail to capture Ichigo.

"Poor Sanageyama," Mako said sadly, her hands clenched over her heart, "To fail so thoroughly at his job must really be a burden."

"Are you feeling ok?" Ryuko was shocked at what Mako just said. It actually made perfect and logical sense, "Did you eat breakfast this morning?"

"But of course!" Mako exclaimed, apparently back to her normal self, "I ate enough to bankrupt the family several times over!"

Shaking her head at Mako's illogical answer, Ryuko walked through the entrance of Honnouji Academy only to find herself surrounded by One-Star students on either side with giant white banners expressing the academy's symbol interspaced throughout.

"What's going on?" Ryuko asked before her focus was drawn to a shining light coming from the top of the academy, which meant Satsuki Kiryuin was either going to give a speech or confront her.

" It seems like Satsuki is making her move," Senketsu pointed out nonchalantly, "Are you ready for this, Ryuko?"

"Who do you think I am?" Ryuko smirked at her Kamui, "Of course I'm ready for this!"

Ryuko and Mako were forced to jump back as an enormous staircase smashed into the ground in front of them.

"I see you've made it, Ryuko Matoi," Satsuki announced from the top of the academy. With her sword planted firmly in front of her, she suppressed the wince of pain that came from Junketsu attempting to overcome her will and added, "Just on time."

Unable to see what Satsuki was wearing due to her backlight, Ryuko pompously asked, "So what's with this grand welcome? Here you are waiting for me. What's the special occasion?"

Satsuki clicked her heel as she began walking down the steps, "Wasn't it you who said that when we next met, the matter between us would be settled once and for all?"

"That's very noble of you," Ryuko responded before whispering to Mako, "Get back, Mako, I don't want you to get hurt."

Stopping mere feet from Ryuko, Satsuki planted Bakuzan on the ground and cockily smiled at her, "You should rejoice, Ryuko Matoi. You will be the first one that I shall offer to Junketsu."

"Junketsu?" Ryuko repeated with a smirk of her own adorning her face. She had noticed something odd about Satsuki Kiryuin's new uniform. If she hadn't seen the same pair of eyes on Ichigo's Mugetsu, she might have actually been stunned to see another Kamui, "So you have a Kamui as well, Satsuki Kiryuin? That's hilarious. Is there anything about you that's actually pure?"

Satsuki's eyes narrowed slightly, "You do not seem surprised to see Junketsu. Why is that?"

"Heh," Ryuko placed her hands on her hips and chuckled. First there was Senketsu, then Mugetsu and now Junketsu. Someone had a weird sense of humor in naming Kamui, "You may have a Kamui of your own, but there's no way you're stronger than me or Ichigo. In fact, I think you're scared of our power. That's why you're confronting me here and now when Ichigo's preoccupied, isn't it? You don't want to get your ass kicked by the two of us."

Satsuki looked at Ryuko with suppressed anger. Reaching for the three blue bands on her left arm she said, "Allow me to show you the true power of Junketsu, and perhaps teach you a lesson about speaking to your betters."

Flicking her finger across the three bands on her arm, Satsuki allowed Junketsu access to enough of her blood to initiate its transformation. As the blood was drawn out of her body, Junketsu became dyed in a familiar red color before it virtually exploded off of her body accompanied by a sparkling blue light.

" Where is all this power coming from?" Ryuko had been forced to cover her eyes with her forearm as soon as Satsuki began transforming. The sheer amount of power being emanated by the student council president dwarfed Senketsu's power.

When Ryuko heard respectful clapping coming from the One-Star students surrounding her, she risked looking at Satsuki and couldn't help but widen her eyes in shock.

"Life Fiber Override, Kamui Junketsu!"

If Ryuko thought wearing Senketsu made her look like an exhibitionist, Junketsu made it seem like she was downright modest in comparison to Satsuki. Unlike Senketsu's black with red highlights color scheme, Junketsu was mostly white with blue highlights. Satsuki wore hip-high boots with vertical blue stripes that ended in frills just below the thong that was all the modesty she wore.

Satsuki's upper body was armored similar to how Ryuko's was when she activated Senketsu, apart from the fact that instead of coming down low enough to just cover her breasts, Junketsu came down and wrapped around them, leaving just the center of her bosom exposed. Junketsu's two eyes, instead of jutting out to the side like Senketsu, stuck straight up into the air like Ichigo's Mugetsu.

"So that's Junketsu?" Ryuko asked with false bravado to hide the nervousness she was feeling at Satsuki's power, "I'm not impressed."

"Then come, Ryuko Matoi!" Satsuki spread her arms wide as twin blasts of steam shot out from the grills just beneath Junketsu's eyes, "Throw all of Senketsu's power against me and I will demonstrate the difference between you and I!"

Riders on the Storm

I present to you, my faithful readers, Chapter 11 of To My Death I Fight . As some of you might have noticed, before I took it down, a few days ago I received two or three reviews that consisted basically of nothing besides vulgar remarks. Thankfully I was able to remove them, but unfortunately I have been forced to turn on Anonymous Review Moderation. While 99.9% of all anon reviews will be let through, even ones critical of my story, please don't blame me if your review does not show up for several hours. Thank you for your understanding.

So Chapter 11 and a big fight scene. I must admit that I have never written a mostly continuous fight that was more than 4000 words. This chapter is where the first big divergence from canon takes place. Sure, the major events remain the same, but there are enough subtle differences that the fight won't play out the same way it did in the anime.

Edit: 5/5/2015 - So I went back and rewrote... well... nearly all of this chapter. I've gotten better as a writer this past year in terms of writing dialogue, scripts and fights and I wished to bring this whole chapter, which is one of the most pivotal in all of Kill la Kill, up to my current standards. There is more than 1,000 new words in this chapter and I'd like to think that 80-85% of it was rewritten. Now I did not change anything - the fights proceed the same way as the original draft. I just tightened up the dialogue (listening to Dub Ryuko helped a lot) and got rid of extraneous words that people wouldn't actually say in the middle of a fight. Also some grammar... I fixed A LOT of grammar... Enjoy!

---

...

---

Chapter 11 - Riders on the Storm

Surrounded by a crowd of students, blue eyes narrowing at the smug look on her opponent's face, Ryuko Matoi scowled as she removed her Seki Tekko's pin. A brief burst of red stars and light enveloped her body as Senketsu immediately shifted into his battle configuration, steam shooting out of his vents, before Ryuko reappeared with a luminescent blush adorning her cheeks. As she swallowed the nervousness welling up in her stomach and walked towards Satsuki Kiryuin she glanced into her Kamui's eye and asked "Hey, is that thing she's wearing the reason you and Mugetsu were so nervous last night?"

" Ryuko," Senketsu's voice was full of concern as he spoke, "I feel I should warn you. Satsuki Kiryuin's current power far exceeds your own."

"Thanks for the motivational speech," Ryuko deadpanned as she stomped to a halt several meters from Satsuki. As she locked eyes with her opponent, the clashing of their willpowers causing a large explosion to detonate outwards, she smirked and ignored the small cut on her cheek, "So I see your outfit's not all show, Satsuki Kiryuin, but if you can't keep up mentally you won't stand a chance against Senketsu!"

"Is that so?" Satsuki stoically replied, the barest of grins spreading across her face when Ryuko charged forward. Slowly raising her arm, Bakuzan's midnight black blade gleaming darkly in the early morning sunlight, her grin rapidly twisted into a frown as she added, "But the same could be said for you, Matoi."

With but a single swing of her arm, Junketsu's form glowing slightly, Satsuki fired off a crescent of energy at Ryuko. Her eyes widening at the surprise attack Ryuko braced her legs before holding the Scissor Blade directly in front of her body, causing the ranged attack to split in two and explode in the surrounding crowd. Panting heavily as sweat dripped down her body, cuts and scrapes now adorning her face, Ryuko gritted her teeth and glowered, "Damn it... how the hell is she this strong?"

"Impressive... but that's just the beginning," Satsuki announced before proceeding to lazily slash Bakuzan several times through the air.

Ryuko desperately swung her Scissor Blade with superhuman speed and reflexes as she deflected and parried each crescent of pressurized air. But despite her best efforts, blasts of steam jettisoning out of Senketsu's vent with every swing, it wasn't enough. Although her power was enough to prevent Satsuki from getting in a clean hit the force behind each attack was enough to physically create small cuts all over her body.

" Ryuko, you need to be more careful. All this blood loss is accelerating the rate at which you'll lose consciousness."

"Why are you telling me something I already know?" Ryuko shouted angrily back at Senketsu. Blocking a strike from Satsuki, she ducked under the following attack and rolled to a stop behind the student council president. Swinging her Scissor Blade toward the apparently defenseless Satsuki's back, Ryuko wasn't surprised when Bakuzan appeared directly in the path of her blade, but instead of being stunned or irritated that her attack failed, Ryuko grinned.

"That's perfect."

After Ichigo told her last night that she needed to work on using her Scissor Blade more effectively, Ryuko spent a couple of hours practicing how to use it and found, to her surprise, that she could collapse it down to a more manageable form simply with a flick of her wrist. So as her Scissor Blade rushed towards clashing with Satsuki's Bakuzan, Ryuko shifted her wrist slightly and her red blade almost instantly shrunk down to the size of a normal pair of scissors.

Satsuki's eyes widened noticeably at the display, "It can change sizes?"

Spinning underneath Bakuzan, apprehensive blue eyes tracking the black blade passing over her face, Ryuko flicked her wrist as the Scissor Blade transformed back to its normal size. Her heels digging trenches in the dirt as she stepped inside Satsuki's guard, a look of mild surprise in the Student Council President's eyes, Ryuko swung the her blade upwards as a blast of steam shot out of Senketsu's armor, "This is the end, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

"I think not."

With an almost detached expression on her face, the previous worry in her eyes gone, Satsuki reached out and caught the sharpened edge of the Scissor Blade in the palm of her hand. As Ryuko froze in shock, the notion that her attack could have been stopped so completely causing her mind to temporarily freeze, Satsuki's lips curled into a satisfied grin as she looked at her Kamui with devote fascination, "This power is simply marvelous!"

Stomping her heel against the ground before Ryuko had the opportunity to regain her bearings, the girl gasping in surprise when she found herself tossed in the air, Satsuki quickly spin around and slammed Bakuzan's hilt against Senketsu's eye. Her long black hair shifting in the wind as Ryuko was sent crashing into Honnouji Academy by the pressure wave, her screams echoing throughout the courtyard, Satsuki took a moment to examine her hand, "The power of a Kamui is leagues above anything I could have dreamt!"

As she disappeared in a blur towards Ryuko, a cloud of smoke rising from the hole her body created in Honnouji Academy, Satsuki could not help but marvel at her newly acquired power. This was the same strength Ichigo Kurosaki had demonstrated when he easily stopped Takaharu's attack with nothing but the palm of his hand. It was ludicrous to think that he could wield this power and yet not act. She would show not only him, but Ryuko Matoi as well, just how a Kamui should be used, "You have all this power and yet you can do nothing but run away, Matoi? You are unworthy of wearing a Kamui!"

"The hell did you just say?" Ryuko shouted angrily, the pile of desks and chairs exploding into splinters of wood as she rushed toward Satsuki. A blast of steam bursting from Senketsu's vents as she countered the Student Council President's initial strike, the Scissor Blade barely managing to parry Bakuzan to the left, she was unprepared for the following horizontal slash that sent her crashing through the wall and into the adjoining corridor.

As she bounced down the hallway, her back colliding violently with the floor several times, Ryuko cursed profusely when she noticed Satsuki rapidly approaching. Dragging her hand against the nearby wall she managed to swing around and pull herself into a stairwell seconds before Bakuzan could pierce her body. A hiss of pain escaping her lips when the pressure wave from Satsuki's attack catapulted her into the far wall, the exhaustion plaguing her body only helping to aggravate her injuries, Ryuko panted heavily as she fell to the ground. Beads of sweat dripping down her face as trembling fingers gripped the Scissor Blade's hilt she barely managed to jump out of the way when the Student Council President leapt downwards through the air.

"You're nothing but a human who managed to squeeze herself into a Kamui!" Satsuki exclaimed passionately as she rained blow after blow against the Scissor Blade. Vanishing in a blur when Ryuko attempted to counterattack, the crimson blade passing harmlessly through the air, the Student Council President reappeared seconds later with her right hand already clasped around her opponent's neck in a vice grip. As the sound of Senketsu's fabric audibly crackling filled the stairwell Satsuki scowled before spinning around and driving her heel deep into Ryuko's stomach, "But I've already mastered wearing my Kamui! Senketsu's power is fully my own!"

Thrown clear across Honnouji Academy by Satsuki's attack, her body landing in what used to be a biology classroom, Ryuko gasped for breath as she leaned against a piece of rebar. Brushing her fingers against her face when she felt something wet ooze down her cheek, blood coating Senketsu's armor before the Kamui readily absorbed it, her blue eyes narrowed as she tried to think of a plan. Satsuki's power was too great for her to fight and running away was out of the question since there was no way in hell she could get away from Satsuki as long as the bitch was wearing Junketsu.

" This isn't good," Senketsu cautiously warned, *"At this rate you only have ten minutes before passing out from blood loss."

"Is that all you can think about? Stop drinking my damn blood then!" Ryuko seethed before perking up when the soft sound of heels clicking against concrete reached her ears.

Sweating when she noticed out of the corner of her eyes Satsuki slowly stalking towards her, the Student Council President's gaze focused directly on her hiding spot, Ryuko swallowed the nervous lump in her throat and whispered, "Why can't you be like Ichigo's Mugetsu? He can wear her for hours without any damn problem!"

" I cannot be worn without drinking your blood. That is when my power manifests itself. The problem is that I have yet to be put on by you."

"What the hell are you talking about? I'm wearing you right now or are you blind too?" she argued and emphasized it by pulling on one of her suspenders and releasing it with a loud snap, "While you're enjoying my blood, I'm fighting for my life while dying of embarrassment. How is that fair?"

" You shouldn't get so worked up, Ryuko," A blast of steam shot out of Senketsu as she spoke, *"Every time you get like this, your blood pressure rises and the amount of time you can remain in this form drops. That small outburst cost you ten seconds."

As Ryuko opened her mouth to argue with her Kamui she caught of glimpse of Satsuki raising Bakuzan in one of the many pieces of jagged glass surrounding them. Cursing as she rolled forward, the black blade cutting through the rebar with nightmarish ease, Ryuko screamed as the pressure wave from the attack slammed her against a wall. Her chest rising and falling with every panting breath as she shakily gripped the Scissor Blade and turned around, her legs feeling like jelly, she could only watch as Satsuki took a moment to examine Bakuzan's edge.

"Your reflexes are as sharp as ever, Matoi," Satsuki backhandedly complimented as she beheld her thoroughly exhausted opponent. It pleased the Student Council President that despite the vast gap between their powers Ryuko hadn't given up or ran away. Both choices would have been valid solutions if the roles were reversed but knowing that her fellow Kamui wearer remained to fight until the bitter end was heartening to say the least, "However to strike you down when you're defenseless would be cowardly. Take a moment to catch your breath so that I can defeat you when you're at your very best."

"Now you're being noble?" Ryuko sneered from between clenched teeth as she struggled to raise the Scissor Blade, "Where the hell was this nobility when you killed my father, you smug bitch?"

"Such impudence..."

Satsuki's grip upon Bakuzan tightened at the blatantly disrespectful tone before her body blurred as she charged forward. Deftly evading her opponent's pitifully slow counterattack with laughable ease she responded to the grievous insult by slamming her knee into Ryuko's stomach. As the teenager gasped in pain with spittle flying freely from her mouth Satsuki ended her assault by jabbing Bakuzan harshly against Senketsu's armor, causing her to fly screaming out of the building.

By the time Satsuki gracefully landed in a crouch on the ground she noticed that Ryuko Matoi's Kamui had already transformed back to the form of a normal school uniform. Strutting forward and grabbing Ryuko by her hair, a painful wince escaping the nearly unconscious girl's lips, she huffed dissatisfiedly and asked, "Was this the full extent of your powers, Ryuko Matoi? How pathetic... to think your Kamui willingly transformed to save you from passing out. You might as well be naked for all the good a dormant Kamui can do for you now."

Despite everything, including nearly passing out from exhaustion and blood dripping off her body, Ryuko still had the courage to spit at Satsuki, "Don't make me fucking laugh. I don't need your damn pity, especially when you're wearing that ridiculous stripper outfit. What the hell are you even -"

Throwing Ryuko callously to the ground before she could finish her insult, the teenager's body rolling several feet before skidding to a stop, Satsuki's presence seemed to double as she held her arms outwards and shouted, "Do not dare to insult me with such vulgarities! It is only in this form that a Kamui's true power can be unleashed and tempered! The fact that you base your self-esteem on the opinion of others only proves how unworthy you are of wearing a Kamui! If adorning this garment allows me to fulfill all my ambitions than I, Satsuki Kiryuin, shall not show any shame or hesitation in doing so! My actions are completely pure in nature!"

"Pure?" Ryuko coughed as she spit out a wad of blood, "Then how the hell do you explain Mugetsu? Ichigo's Kamui doesn't like anything like yours."

"I don't know why Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui covers his body as fully as it does," Satsuki admitted with a slight shake of her head, unable to expression the disappointment she felt for Ryuko Matoi. Despite forcing herself into a Kamui her strength couldn't even begin to compare to the overwhelming might of Junketsu. Pressing her heel against the small of Ryuko's back as she raised Bakuzan into the air, sunlight glittering off the dark blade, Satsuki's face twisted into a scowl as she exclaimed, "But in the end he was your superior in every way, shape and form! This is where your worthless ambitions end, Matoi!"

The defiant glare in her eyes vanishing as Satsuki swung Bakuzan towards her neck Ryuko couldn't help but notice Mako desperately running towards her, a look of utmost determination on her best friend's face. Closing her eyes upon realizing her friend would never make it in time, lips pulling into the faintest of smiles, Ryuko sighed and braced herself for death, "Sorry Mako. I guess I wasn't strong enough to beat her..."

A loud metallic clang reverberated throughout the courtyard moments before Bakuzan could cut into her neck, the resulting concussive shockwave exploding outwards and knocking most of the student body off their collective feet. Wincing as she opened her eyes and gazed upwards, the pain permeating her body momentarily abating, Ryuko found herself staring at the one person she hadn't expected to see, "I-Ichigo?"

"Sorry I'm late, Ryuko," Ichigo apologized as Tournesol clashed against Bakuzan, his arms trembling slightly from the amount of force Satsuki was exerting. Mugetsu's boots digging into the ground as the Student Council President increased her power, blue and red sparks dancing through the air, Ichigo gritted his teeth and leaned forward until his face was almost touching hers, "I got a little lost on the way to school."

"So you've managed to arrive, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki announced in a smug tone, her lips curling into a pleased smirk, "I was certain Sanageyama have stalled you for at least another fifteen minutes. Tell me, what gave it away?"

"The first time he transformed out of his Blade Regalia." A blast of energy exploded outwards as Ichigo took a single step forward, the ground cracking beneath his feet. As beads of sweat trickled down his face, Mugetsu's power slowly but surely overwhelming Satsuki, he grunted before continuing, "The power of his Three-Star Goku Uniform is impressive, which made it rather strange to see him constantly stop using it. Once I realized he wasn't actually trying to catch me I rushed back to Honnouji Academy as quickly as possible."

"I see..."

The pleased smirk on Satsuki's face widened at Ichigo's answer. Unlike Ryuko Matoi, who was too caught up in her embarrassment to properly wear Senketsu, Ichigo was easily able to wear Mugetsu over most of his body without being overwhelmed by the Kamui. He was an opponent truly worthy of sacrificing to Junketsu. A blast of blue steam shooting out of Junketsu's pauldrons as her own strength increased Satsuki stared directly into Ichigo's eyes and declared, "If you are so confident in your abilities than come at me, Ichigo Kurosaki! Show me the power that is worthy to fight Junketsu! Earn my adoration!"

There was an explosion of multicolored light as Satsuki twisted her wrists before leaping away from Ichigo. Blue heels skidding backwards along the ground while she kept her eyes firmly locked on her opponent, long black hair dancing in the wind, Satsuki flexed her fingers before swinging Bakuzan several times in rapid succession. His brown eyes narrowing as he easily spotted the nearly invisible attacks Ichigo managed to sidestep the first one before using Tournesol to deflect the rest into the crowd of surrounding One-Stars, the students sent flying dramatically into the air from the resulting impacts.

"Most impressive..." Satsuki complimented after a brief moment, Bakuzan held firmly in her right hand as she stared at Ichigo, "Only one who has truly tamed their Kamui could have deflected that attack. I can feel Junketsu shivering at the prospect of defeating Mugetsu."

"Shut the hell up," Ichigo growled before turning around to Ryuko and noticing her injured state, "Hey, are you alright?"

Coughing violently as she spat out a mixture of saliva and blood, her blue eyes full of defiance and anger once more, Ryuko shakily pushed herself off the ground, "Y-Yeah, I'll be fine. Satsuki's just a hell of a lot tougher than she looks."

"Got it," Ichigo nodded before turning his attention back to Satsuki, "Get Ryuko out of here, Mako."

"Of course!" Mako saluted from Ryuko's side, utterly confused as to how Mako managed to sneak up on her, "I'll make sure she's safe and sound. You can count on me!"

"Thanks," Ichigo gave Mako a brief smirk before turning his attention back to Satsuki. Holding Tournesol firmly in his grip as he walked towards the Student Council President, brown eyes cautiously watching her every movement, he scowled and asked, "Why didn't you attack me just now?"

"I consider myself an honorable person, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki replied while lowering Bakuzan towards the ground, "I wish nothing more than to defeat you at your best. Claiming victory through deceit and subterfuge would mean nothing in the grand scheme of things. How would I know if I was truly your better if I resorted to such cowardly tactics?"

"That's good to know," Ichigo stared at Satsuki before his gaze unconsciously drifted toward her Kamui's multicolored eyes. While he was confident in both his own abilities as well as Mugetsu's strength he had no basis for how strong Satsuki and Junketsu were. He couldn't afford to hold anything back, not after seeing Ryuko's brutally beaten body. Hopefully his swordsmanship hadn't dulled too much since stopping Aizen from destroying the world.

For several seconds, nearly an eternity for the captivated crowd of students surrounding them, Ichigo locked gazes with Satsuki before slightly bending his knees and blasting forward in an impressive burst of speed. His body a white and black blur as he raced across the courtyard towards the Student Council President, his immense speed kicking up a sonic boom and causing the students to involuntarily flinch away, Ichigo managed to close the distance in the blink of an eye. Tournesol gripped tightly in his hands as he slid to a stop, twin trails of dust rising into the air, Ichigo scowled before swinging the blue katana directly at Satsuki's neck.

While Ichigo's speed was both impressive and faster than anything displayed by Ryuko Matoi it was nothing Satsuki couldn't handle.

Calmly watching as the blue blade arced through the air towards her body, sunlight glittering off the eternally polished surface, she waited until the last moment before leaning backwards and allowing Tournesol to pass harmlessly inches from the tip of her nose.

" His attacks are not those of an amateur's," she mentally noted while taking several steps back. Quickly regaining her poise she attempted to lash out with her foot only for Ichigo to block the impromptu attack with his forearm.

"Your power is admirable," Satsuki commented as she slowly lowered her leg, "It has become abundantly clear that you are leagues above Matoi. Therefore I have a proposition for you."

"A proposition?" Ichigo lowered his guard. Satsuki didn't seem like she was going to attack and he was pretty sure he could react in time if she tried anything, "What are you talking about?"

Satsuki smirked as Ichigo decided to listen to her. Planting Bakuzan into the ground, the black blade piercing easily through the concrete and stone, she raised her left arm and was immediately surrounded by a bright backlight. While most students would be forced to cover their eyes at the display, Ichigo simply narrowed his eyes as she began speaking "I wish for you to become the Student Council Vice President, Ichigo Kurosaki. Instead of using your Kamui for such trivial pursuits as helping Matoi, you should instead put it towards a more proactive goal."

"You can take your offer and shove it," Ichigo answered too quickly to have given the proposition any real thought.

To his surprise and suspicion Satsuki didn't seem to be the least bit perturbed by his aggressive response, "If you choose to accept my terms I will immediately approve Two-Star accommodations for Mankanshoku's family. I will also answer any questions Matoi has about the murder of her Isshin Matoi."

As much as Ichigo wanted to refuse Satsuki he had to admit that her terms were rather beneficial. He was already well acquainted with the squalor and decay Mako and her family was surrounded with every minute of their lives. Nobody should have to live in a place like the No-Star slums. And all that was required to help Mako and Ryuko was for him to throw away everything that defined Ichigo Kurosaki.

"Thanks, but I'm going to have to pass," Ichigo took a small bit of pleasure from the barely stunned look on Satsuki's face. It was clear to him that she hadn't been expecting him to flat out deny her, especially after everything she had offered him, "You see... I have problems with someone trying to sway me to their side. It really pisses me the hell off."

Satsuki's expression quickly hardened as she grabbed Bakuzan and yanked it out of the ground with enough force to shatter the concrete around it, "Bite your tongue, Ichigo Kurosaki. Do not speak as if you know me."

Holding Bakuzan vertically to the ground with both of her hands, Satsuki sprinted towards Ichigo and swung down just as a blast of steam shot out from Junketsu's pauldrons. Quickly bringing Tournesol up to block the strike, Ichigo was shocked when his knees nearly buckled from Satsuki's attack. As the ground beneath his feet began cracking and splintering, Ichigo was forced to brace his left hand under Tournesol's blade.

When Ichigo saw that despite his best efforts, Satsuki was slowly but surely overpowering him, he decided to improvise. Waiting a few seconds until the time was right, he reared his head back and head butted Satsuki. As the student council president staggered back holding her forehead, Ichigo raced forward and punched her in the check hard enough to send her flying through several walls.

" Ichigo..."

"Yeah, I know."

Even though he couldn't see anything aside from dust and debris that had been kicked up from when he threw Satsuki, he knew that hadn't been enough to put her down. Raising Tournesol up to guard himself from any surprise attacks, he found his caution to be valid when Satsuki came running out of the hole in the wall her body created, a slight cut on her cheek oozing a trail of blood.

Managing to avoid the initial attack with a quick and precise parry with Tournesol, a shower of sparks raining over his body, Ichigo's eyes widened upon realizing he had fallen headfirst into a cleverly disguised feint. Unable to react in time when Satsuki pirouetted and slammed her knee into his stomach, the force behind the blow causing a crater to appear in the wall, Ichigo gasped in pain as he was propelled several meters into the air. Grunting as he quickly recovered from the blow, a small trail of blood leaking from the corner of his mouth, Ichigo spun around in midair and blocked Satsuki's third strike with Tournesol.

"Your instincts are most formidable," Satsuki complimented, "But it is still not enough to defeat me!"

Just as Ichigo was descending back towards the ground Satsuki spun around before lashing out with Bakuzan, the black blade thrumming with power. Although he was able to react quickly enough to block Bakuzan, his arms shaking from the effort, the force behind the blow launched Ichigo through the air and across Honnouji Academy until he crashed heavily into the outer walls.

As the gathered students fled to avoid getting hit by the falling debris Ichigo grumbled as he pulled himself out of the newly formed crater. Noticing something wet falling down his face, he reached up and realized he had received a cut along his forehead from Satsuki's attack, "Damn it, she's tougher than I thought."

" Are you alright, Ichigo? "

"I'm fine," Ichigo reassured Mugetsu. He didn't know why, but his Kamui seemed to be very concerned about him. Noticing that Satsuki was not immediately coming after him, he shouldered Tournesol and asked, "You got a plan for beating her?"

"What makes you think I could think of anything you can't?"
Mugetsu asked sarcastically, "I cannot offer anything that you cannot think up on your own. Besides, I believe there is a bigger issue we have to deal with. You felt it, didn't you?"

"Yeah. I thought it was odd that I didn't hear her Kamui talking during the fight."

Mugetsu's eyes gave the equivalent of a nod, "I don't know whether she is unable or unwilling to, but whatever the case may be, Junketsu is withholding a lot of its power from Satsuki Kiryuin."

Jumping out of the wall and landing back on the ground, Ichigo dusted off Mugetsu and asked, "Just how much power are we talking about?"

"I cannot say, but I think it is somewhere around fifty percent."

"Fifty percent?" Ichigo grumbled and looked around. Satsuki's attack had sent him clear across Honnouji Academy towards an area that was by now mostly vacant of bystanders. That meant he could afford to go all out without worrying about hurting innocent people. Now all he had to do was wait for Satsuki to eventually show up. The only question is how she would go about it. Would she simply strut towards him, talking about how Junketsu is superior to Mugetsu or would she try and preemptively attack him?

A slight tingling on the back of his neck alerted Ichigo to Satsuki's presence. Quickly turning around, he saw the student council president running along the wall of Honnouji Academy towards him. Satsuki took his noticing of her to crouch horizontally against the wall before pushing off and lunging towards him, a large crater in the wall appearing from the force she was emitting. As he watched Satsuki falling towards him with Bakuzan positioned to pierce his skull, Ichigo jumped straight up into the air with his legs pulled up to his chest. Waiting for Satsuki to get below him, he kicked down with all the strength he could muster and drove her into the ground hard enough to buckle the concrete around them.

As a blast of energy was emitted from the impact, Ichigo decided that waiting for Satsuki to attack him again was foolish. Reaching down and grabbing her by her ankle, he spun her around several times before aiming at the central building in Honnouji Academy and let go. Watching her body sail through the air before crashing loudly back where the fight had all started, Ichigo sighed when he realized he would have to go all the way back to continue fighting her.

"Damn," he grumbled as he began running towards Satsuki, "I hope Mako managed to get Ryuko out of here."

---

...

---

"Come on Ryuko, we gotta get out of here!"

With strength that was physically impossible given her stature and muscles, Mako Mankanshoku picked up Ryuko and began sprinting through Honnouji Academy towards the exit, all the while carrying her friend on her back. Dodging nonchalantly around a piece of debris that had just been blown away from the fight between Ichigo and Satsuki, she let out a gasp of astonishment.

"Oh wow!" Mako's eyes had stars in them as she beheld the fight in the distance, "Who knew Ichigo was so strong!"

"Strong..." Ryuko muttered dejectedly as she vividly remembered her fight, or rather defeat, against Satsuki. Even with Senketsu's power she had been unable to do anything more than dodge and put up a miserable defense that Satsuki easily blew through time and time again. Despite her best efforts to think up plans on the fly and take Satsuki by surprise, Ryuko was no more a threat to her than a fly was to a whale.

" Was the difference between our powers, our Kamui, really that large?"

Ryuko's gaze fell downward as she remembered Satsuki's declaration about wearing Junketsu. Was not feeling shamed and embarrassed really the key to unlocking Senketsu's true power? She didn't know and in her Kamui's current state Ryuko really couldn't ask Senketsu for the answer. Deciding that she had nothing to lose she turned towards Mako and whispered, "Hey Mako..."

"Ah, you're awake, Ryuko!" Mako turned to look at her conscious friend, while miraculously dodging around a piece of debris in front of her without even looking.

"Yeah," Ryuko mumbled, "Hey Mako, I have a question for you..."

"Let me guess," Mako frowned, apparently deep in thought, before asking, "It has to do with Senketsu, doesn't it?"

Ryuko had the decency to look shocked at her friend's deduction, "But... how did you know?"

"Everyone in my family knows!" Mako exclaimed cheerfully to Ryuko. Hopping gracefully over several unconscious students, pirouetting as she went, she continued with exuberance, "I can say without a doubt in my mind that you are in no way, shape or form inferior to Lady Satsuki!"

"Uh..." Ryuko tried to come up with something to say, but all that came out of her mouth was a confused groan. Either unperturbed by Ryuko's response or simply oblivious to it, Mako continued her troll explanation.

"And that's not the best part! Your boobs are way bigger than Lady Satsuki's! I saw them myself when you were taking a shower this morning. As I stared at them, I couldn't help but think. 'Ryuko has such a great rack!' My whole family agrees on this point! So there is no reason to be embarrassed about it, Ryuko! You are not inferior to Lady Satsuki, so get naked and show everyone your splendid body!"

Ryuko was stunned by Mako's logic because while it was convoluted and full of holes, it made a lot of sense now that she had her eyes to the world thrown up. Casting her gaze downwards, she began remembering what she had been told about Senketsu over the past few days:

" Unlike you and Senketsu, Ichigo and I are fully synchronized. Ichigo accepts me for what I am and doesn't try to make me something I'm not."

" Ryuko... I only drink so much blood because you're embarrassed to wear me."

" If wearing this allows me to fulfill all my ambitions than I, Satsuki Kiryuin, will not degrade myself by showing shame or hesitation in doing so!"

" Could they be right?" Ryuko looked down at Senketsu, the Kamui only just beginning to awaken from his temporary slumber. Locking gazes with her Kamui, his multicolored eye staring right back at her, Ryuko sighed and turned to Mako, "Mako... put me down. I need to go back."

"Go back?" Mako looked mortified at the prospect, "But if you go back, Lady Satsuki will super murder you! Her strength is above that of peons like us. It's amazing enough that Ichigo can fight her evenly, but you'll die if you try and fight her again!"

"I'm sorry Mako, but it's something I need to do," Ryuko muttered before pushing herself off Mako's back. Barely managed to stand on her feet as her best friend comically crashed to the ground from the sudden imbalance, the world seeming to spin around her, Ryuko apologized to Mako before slowly walking back towards Satsuki.

"What are you doing Ryuko?" Senketsu asked in worry. None of her actions were making any sense. She couldn't possibly defeat Satsuki Kiryuin, let alone stand up to her, "You will die if you go back to her in your current state."

"You don't need to worry about me, Senketsu," Ryuko tiredly grinned at him, "Because I finally understand what you have been telling all this time."

Senketsu's single eye widened in amazement, "Ryuko..."

Stumbling as she stopped in her tracks, fingers gripping the Seki Tekko, Ryuko took a deep breath and exclaimed, "I think it's time I finally wore you, Senketsu!"

---

...

---

Satsuki wiped away the small trail of blood oozing from her lip as she stared at her opponent.

"It appears we are evenly matched," she declared to her equally winded opponent. For the last five minutes they had exchanged blow after blow, hitting each other only to receive a counter attack right afterwards. If there was anyone Satsuki truly considered a worthy adversary, it was Ichigo Kurosaki, "But I will still win this battle."

"That's funny," Ichigo said in response. His face had several new cuts and bruises on it, but overall he looked to be in better shape than Satsuki, "From where I'm standing I have the upper hand."

"It may be true you possess greater physical strength than myself," Satsuki admitted in a reluctant tone. While she had trained for years to hone her body and swordsmanship, hours upon hours spent improving her form and abilities, Ichigo possessed a distinct musculature and size advantage. However unlike Gamagori, whose size and weight afforded him great physical strength and endurance, Ichigo wasn't excessively muscular or bulky, which meant he could move and attack at speeds comparable to her own.

"But there is one thing you lack that I contain in abundance..." A bright backdrop of light appeared behind Satsuki as she shouted, "And that, Ichigo Kurosaki, is ambition and drive!"

Mentally commanding Junketsu to unleash more of its power, Satsuki rocketed towards Ichigo and planted her fist in his stomach. Following it up with a punch to his face, she tried to continue her assault only for Ichigo to move out of the way of Bakuzan and counter by driving Tournesol threw her arm, the blade easily piercing Junketsu and causing Satsuki to grip her arm to stem the flow of blood.

"I don't know anything about ambition and drive," Ichigo argued, his gaze falling anywhere but Satsuki's exposed form, "But I'm not about to let you hurt Ryuko. Even if you're faster or stronger than me I refuse to lose to someone like you."

"You have the audacity to say such nonsense," Satsuki growled as Junketsu eagerly absorbed the blood oozing from the cut on her arm, "But you dare refuse to look at me while doing so?"

"That's not true," Ichigo muttered in annoyance while scratching his cheek. To her surprise Satsuki saw a faint blush appear on his face, "It's just that I can't stand looking at your Kamui. It leaves virtually nothing to the imagination!"

Satsuki took a moment to rein in her surprise as Ichigo's modesty, "Than your battle prowess is even more remarkable. To fight me without using your eyes suggests your instincts must be rather honed and refined."

"That's not true," Ichigo shook his head, "When we're fighting I'm focused on your attacks instead of staring at your body."

"You are quite the charmer, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki smirked as she held Bakuzan with one hand, "Then I will not delay this fight any further on such trivial matters! Prepare yourself!"

Jumping backwards to avoid Satsuki's lunging strike, Bakuzan cleaving through the air only inches from his chest, Ichigo leaned to the side before vanishing in a burst of speed. As a series of afterimages surrounded Satsuki, her blue eyes darting back and forth in surprise, Ichigo couldn't help but mentally appreciate his Kamui's power once more. Although unable to move nowhere as fast as when he had bankai Mugetsu was more than strong enough to mimic parts of his former shinigami powers. The fact Sanageyama's Blade Regalia could create afterimages only helped to speed along the process.

" He's gotten faster," Satsuki grimaced as she stared at the circle of afterimages surrounding her, "What he is trying to do?"

"What's the matter?" Ichigo's echoing voice came from one of the afterimages before immediately switching to another, "Am I going too slow for the great Satsuki Kiryuin? I thought you said we were evenly matched? Perhaps I should go a little faster. That might put me on your level."

"Don't get cocky!" Satsuki twisted her body around and tucked Bakuzan in close to her chest. Waiting until the right moment, she quickly struck out with Bakuzan towards where she knew Ichigo was going to be.

"Damn it," Ichigo leapt over the pressure wave released from Satsuki's blade before noticing a few locks of orange hair drifting to the ground, "She was able to see me?"

"Just because my eyes cannot track your movements does not mean my body is unable to react!" Satsuki announced passionately as she attempted to slam her knee into Ichigo's stomach, "You are not the first to try and beat me with raw speed, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Quickly leaning to the side as Satsuki's leg arced through the air, the pressure wave kicked up causing his orange hair to blow backwards, Ichigo didn't hesitate to flow into motion as he pivoted around and swung Tournesol through the air. Multicolored sparks dancing when Satsuki managed to adjust her grip on Bakuzan and block the attack, her forearm braced against the side of her blade for support, a burst of steam exploded from Junketsu's vents as the Student Council President forced the Kamui to give her more power. A loud metallic ringing echoing in the air as Tournesol was forced to the side Ichigo quickly found himself back on the defensive when Satsuki brutally renewed her assault.

"Where is the strength you displayed earlier?" Satsuki shouted, her every word tinged with disappointment, while her blade clashed against Ichigo's, "How are you going to avenge Mato's defeat with such pitiful attacks? You are weak, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

"Shut the hell up!" Ichigo shouted back at Satsuki. Spinning around and dodging Satsuki's blade, he leaned forward and drove his elbow deep into her exposed stomach, eliciting a gasp of pain from the Student Council President. As Satsuki took a single step backwards, Ichigo followed through with an uppercut to her jaw that had spittle flying out of her mouth. Pushing himself off the ground until he was level with the hovering Satsuki, Ichigo grabbed her ankle and threw her back down with enough power to send her crashing through the floors below until she reached the ground accompanied by a loud crash.

Landing in a crouch next to the newly formed hole, his breath coming out in heavy pants, Ichigo winced and rubbed his neck. It seemed wearing Mugetsu for several hours in a row was finally beginning to catch up to him. Even the small amount of blood Mugetsu required to remain in her battle configuration became lethally dangerous after such a long time. Grunting as he pushed himself back onto his feet, the hairs on the back of his neck sticking up when a wave of power coursed through the air, Ichigo turned around and cursed, "God damn it. She just won't stay down."

Brown eyes widening when the floor began shaking Ichigo barely managed to jump away before a pillar of light blasted out of the hole and into the sky, the roar of energy drowning out all other sounds. When Satsuki appeared in front of him a moment later, streams of blood oozing from her forehead and lip, an expression of anger was clearly visible on her face. His muscles tensing in preparation as she took a single step forward, the ground cracking beneath her heel, Ichigo was taken completely off guard when Satsuki rocketed towards him with Bakuzan already screaming through the air.

"Damn it!" Ichigo's face was pulled into a grimace as he was forced to use Mugetsu's full power to block Satsuki's increasing fast and powerful attacks, "Where the hell is all this power coming from?"

" She is pushing her Kamui to grant her increasingly more power. While it theoretically could make her more powerful than us, it is also quite dangerous. Ichigo, if you can simply outlast her, you will most likely win this battle."

"I got it," Ichigo answered before ducking to the left to avoid Bakuzan piercing his head. As Satsuki's blow became more and more vicious and powerful, Ichigo realized Mugetsu was right. Despite his mastery of Mugetsu's power as well as the fact that they were working together in relative harmony, he was beginning to get pushed back by Satsuki's newfound strength. It was even reaching the point where blocking her strikes still gave him a small cut or bruise, the power behind the attack too strong for even Tournesol to block fully. Eventually after continually blocking her strikes, he was hit with a slash so powerful that his guard was blown right open, exposing his chest to Satsuki's next attack.

"This is the end for you, Ichigo Kurosaki!" Satsuki declared victorious as she moved in for the finishing blow. Raising Bakuzan above her head in the same manner in which she had prepared to finish off Ryuko Matoi, she shouted, "You are the closest person to my equal as anyone on Earth has the right to be! Perish content with the knowledge that you gained my utmost respect!"

" I'm not going to be able to stop it in time!" Ichigo tried to throw his body backwards to limit the potential damage but it appeared as if such actions were unnecessary. Moments before Satsuki could follow through on her threat Junketsu's eyes grew bloodshot while its armor convulsed and shifted around her body. And to Ichigo's ears alone a faint menacing growling could be heard.

" What you are observing is a lack of harmony," Mugetsu explained stoically when she noticed her wearer's confusion, "Satsuki Kiryuin, instead of bonding with Junketsu like you did with me, used her willpower to subjugate it and its power for her own use. While she would normally be able to keep Junketsu under her thumb, your battle pushed her to the breaking point. It won't be long now until Junketsu devours her body."

"You need to stop," Ichigo warned Satsuki, who had fallen to one knee and was gripped her shoulder, "If you don't Junketsu is going to kill you!"

Satsuki's gaze hardened as she glared at Ichigo, "I don't need or want your pity, Ichigo Kurosaki! Junketsu is simply a Kamui that has been granted the honor of being worn by me. To fall victim to clothing is heresy!"

Biting her lip nearly hard enough to draw blood Satsuki managed to bring Junketsu back under her control through sheer willpower and determination. Her breath coming out in quick pants as she stood back on her feet, sweat dripping down her clearly exhausted face, Satsuki raised Bakuzan only to notice Ichigo sitting down on a nearby piece of rubble with Tournesol lazily propped against his shoulder.

"Pick up your sword. This fight is not yet over."

Ichigo stared blankly at Satsuki's determination to fight before sighing and rubbing the bridge of his nose, "Your newfound control over Junketsu is only temporary. If you try to keep fighting you're going to die. That's not something I want to happen even if I don't really like you. A victory like that wouldn't be a victory at all."

Satsuki watched in complete silence as Ichigo stood up and walked away before closing her eyes. No matter how much she wished to deny his words he had been right. Her control over Junketsu's bloodthirsty and berserk nature was temporary for the time being. Even if she were to continue fighting she had at most five minutes before even her ironclad willpower failed to keep her Kamui in check. As she pondered her defeat, which she would never admit to anyone as such, Satsuki's lips curled into a faint amused smile. Sitting down on a piece of debris, an exhausted grunt inadvertently escaping her lips, Satsuki planted Bakuzan firmly in the ground before leaning her forehead against it.

"To think I would be defeated by you, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki knew that her defeat was not so much as being beaten in a contest of strength or power but rather simply running out of time. The irony that her defeat was how she beat Ryuko Matoi was not lost on her. Willing Junketsu back to its normal militaristic white and blue sailor uniform, albeit one covered in smudges and tears, she smirked and added, "I look forward to our true contest in the future, Ichigo. Perhaps then we could determine who is stronger without such trivialities getting in the way."

"Satsuki Kiryuin!"

Satsuki pulled her forehead off Bakuzan as Ryuko Matoi, clad once more in Senketsu, crashed into the ground in front of her. It was immediately apparent to the Student Council President that in the last few minutes Ryuko had somehow managed to overcome her ridiculous embarrassment at wearing Senketsu.

"I see you finally overcame your pathetic social embarrassment, Matoi," Satsuki remarked casually, unbothered by the power Ryuko was emitting. She could tell with but a single glance that Ryuko Matoi's power had jumped up to about her level. Actually, that was a mistake. While she was below both herself and Ichigo, Ryuko's power was enough to make determining the victor of any fight impossible. Such a battle would be determined not by power, but by strategy, determination and the will to win. What was it that her mother called it? Ah, yes, ' der Wille zur Macht ' or 'the Will to Power'.

"What the hell was that?" Ryuko growled as she took a step towards Satsuki, her full acceptance of Senketsu greatly altering her appearance and making his armor much more intricate and durable. The spaulders containing his eyes, both good and bad, now extended upwards much like Junketsu's and Mugetsu's while the red highlights in her hair, which Satsuki could not help but compare to her mother's rainbow undertone, were much more vibrant and feathery. Glaring at Satsuki, Ryuko pointed her Scissor Blade at her and demanded, "What's wrong? Transform so I can kick your ass!"

A haughty chuckle left Satsuki's lips as she leaned her head back, "I'm afraid you're too late for that, Matoi."

Ryuko blinked owlishly before noticing Satsuki's disheveled state of attire and smirking, "Heh... I see Ichigo managed to kick your smug ass."

"A crude statement from an equally crude person," Satsuki stated in her usual noble tone of voice. Even in her current state, she would never show weakness in front of anyone, "But then again, I wouldn't expect anything more from someone like you, Matoi. What are you going to do now that I am at the mercy of your Kamui? Will you kill me to sate your need for vengeance?"

"You're the one who killed my dad!" Ryuko clenched her hand into a fist as she stalked towards the weakened Student Council President, the glow from her hair brightening, "And now that you can't fight back I'm going to get some answers..."

"Do not take one more step, Matoi!"

Crashing to the ground hard enough to rattle the entire academy, his body barely fitting in the room, Ira Gamagori stood in front of the other members of the Elite Four and shouted, "If you continue with your current course of action I will have no choice but to enact corporal punishment!"

"You may have a Kamui, Transfer Student," Nonon Jakuzure quipped playfully in a saccharine tone, "But even you're not stupid enough to take on all of us at the same time."

"Tch," Ryuko spat on the ground. Hefting her Scissor Blade onto her shoulder, she pointed at Satsuki and said, "Don't think this is over. I will get my answers from you, Satsuki Kiryuin! You cannot hide from me forever!"

"Humph," Satsuki stood up and calmly smoothed out a crease on Junketsu, her ragged appearance not indicative of how she truly felt, "Is vengeance for your father the only thing you can think about, Matoi?"

Senketsu's form shone with a red light, the lines covering his body growing brighter, as Ryuko shifted her gaze from Satsuki to the Elite Four before scoffing, "I don't what the hell you're trying to pull, Satsuki Kiryuin, but I'm going to take all your ambitions and aspirations and crush them one by one! You can count on that!"

Gamagori stiffened at the sheer disrespect Ryuko was showing Satsuki but before he could begin chastising her slander, his body already seeming to increase in size, slow and deliberate clapping echoed through the ruined classroom. To the surprise of everyone, Ryuko included, Satsuki has a smug smirk on her face while slowly clapping her hands, "Is that so, Matoi? You say you are going to crush my ambitions... destroy my aspirations... but you forgot one thing. Honnouji Academy is my kingdom!"

Her heel clicking loudly against the ground as she stepped forward, a backdrop of white light immediately bursting into brilliance behind her, Satsuki raised Bakuzan into the air before slowly and deliberately sheathing it at her waist. Forced to cover her eyes, the bright light causing spots to appear in her vision, Ryuko raised the Scissor Blade and shouted, "What the hell?"

"If you are bold enough to declare war against me when I am exhausted from fighting an opponent many times your superior than I shall assume you are speaking the truth," Satsuki answered calmly as she turned around and began walking away. As the Elite Four stepped into line behind her, their individual bodies outlines in colored auras, Satsuki paused and added, "Consider your challenge accepted, Matoi. In two days I shall announce that a prize awaits anyone who can defeat you in combat. Do you still have what it takes to win when there is nobody you can trust?"

"You bet I do!" Ryuko declared boldly as she pointed the Scissor Blade at Satsuki's retreated figure, "I don't care how many goons you send at me! I'm going to pay you back tenfold, Satsuki Kiryuin! And when I finally beat your smug ass I'm going to get some answers from you!"

"Very well," Satsuki looked over her shoulder just before vanishing into the darkness, "Defeat each and every student that rises to challenge you. If you can manage to get that far without stumbling than you shall be graced with the honor of fighting Junketsu once more. Perhaps by that point you will finally be worthy of my full power..."

Ryuko growled as she watched Satsuki and her Elite Four disappear into Honnouji Academy before spinning around and kicking a large piece of rubble with enough power to shatter it. Senketsu, noticing the shift in his wearer's attitude, blinked and looked upwards, "What's wrong, Ryuko?"

"I'm just a little pissed off," she answered angrily, "Just when I finally managed to overcome my embarrassment and wear you, I find that Ichigo already defeated Satsuki!"

" This could be an advantage," Senketsu pointed out, "Despite what may have happened, you are well aware of what Satsuki Kiryuin is capable of. She, however, has no idea of my true power. If you play your cards right, you could surprise her when you finally confront her."

"I suppose you have a point, Senketsu," Ryuko admitted as realization dawned on her - Ichigo's interference meant Satsuki didn't have a clue about Senketsu's full power. While she didn't like being saved by Ichigo, her face cringing slightly at remembering how much Satsuki kicked her ass, if it meant returning the favor the next time they fought Ryuko was willing to let it slide, "Something's bothering me. Satsuki seemed fine and dandy yet she admitted Ichigo beat her."

" There are many ways to lose, Ryuko," Senketsu explained sagely, "Perhaps Ichigo simply found another way to defeat her."

"I guess," Ryuko huffed before turning around and walking away. Propping the Scissor Blade against her shoulder as she leapt out of the ruined classroom, her heels easily finding purchase on various pieces of debris, Ryuko's face twisted into a scowl as several thoughts raced through her mind, "Great, now I need to track Ichigo down and find out how the hell he managed to beat Satsuki. I need to know everything about Junketsu if I'm going to have any shot at kicking her ass."

---

...

---

Satsuki pushed back against Junketsu's attempts to drain her blood as she walked through the halls of Honnouji Academy, her face covered in cuts and blemishes. She could not understand her Kamui's behavior in the aftermath of her defeat against Ichigo Kurosaki. Even though she had only been wearing Junketsu for less than a day, the events of the previous night still fresh in her mind, the rapid shift in Junketsu's behavior was enough for even Satsuki to notice.

Putting such trivial questions on the backburner for the time being Satsuki turned her attention to Houka Inumuta, who was walking just behind her, and asked, "I take it you were able to procure data on Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui?"

"Partially," Inumuta answered, the collar of his Goku Uniform automatically unzipping as he replied. Pulling out a state of the art PDA and hooking it up to his sleeve, information streaming across the screen within seconds, the Information and Strategy Committee Chair's green eyes frowned in thought before explaining, "Unfortunately your battle against Ryuko Matoi destroyed or rendered inoperable nearly ninety percent of my cameras and bugs. Thus for the time being all available data on Ichigo Kurosaki and his Kamui consists of visible observations."

"I see..." Satsuki replied as she entered the specially secured elevator that would take her directly to the Sewing Club, "Keep me informed about any new information you discover about Ichigo Kurosaki. Our battle has opened my eyes to the realization that he is anything but a simple threat. He is to be carefully monitored and watched, his interactions with Matoi studied and used. You are forbidden to provoke him unintentionally until I am ready."

"As you wish," Inumuta bowed.

As the elevator doors closed, Satsuki placed her hand against the door and looked Inumuta square in the eyes, "Has the matter I discussed with you earlier been taken care of?"

Inumuta smirked as he subtly adjusted his glasses with a single finger, "The task is being completed as we speak. Gamagori managed to acquire an expert to finish the job..."

---

...

---

Atop the large tower adorning Honnouji Academy, Ira Gamagori peered out across the city using his customized Disciplinary Committee Mark-III Binoculars. Modified for someone of his stature, the binoculars features up to 100x zoom, temperature and wind speed statistics as well as night vision capabilities. Everything someone looking to enforce the rules of Honnouji Academy would need.

As his Goku Uniform rustled in the breeze, he lowered the binoculars and pressed a finger against his ear. Waiting for the static from activating the connection to die down, he said, "Are you able to accomplish the task of which you were assigned?"

"But of course," a figure, a woman from her voice, replied from over fifty feet below, "What do you take me for?"

"Just making sure," Gamagori answered gruffly and looked back through the binoculars. The target had yet to move, which made things simpler, "As for your payment, half of it has already been sent to the location you specified. The other half shall be sent as soon as you complete the task. Are there any questions on what you need to do?"

The woman raised her eye away from the scope attached to her modified M-98 Widow Vaccination Model Type-8 and smirked, "A student who fails to receive their proper vaccinations is putting everyone, not just themselves, at risk of serious health complications. If there is anything my husband taught me, it is that medicine is what separates us from the savages. It would be the noble thing to make sure Ichigo Kurosaki receives every single vaccine he is missing. To do otherwise would be tantamount to misconduct."

"I'm glad we are in agreement," Gamagori nodded, "But Lady Satsuki's involvement in this affair must never be known. If anyone were to find out, I will be forced to disavow anything you say and pursue you as the sole perpetrator. You know the stakes that are riding on making the shot."

"Don't be silly!" Sukuyo Mankanshoku smiled as she adopted her normal housewife persona. Blushing as he held a hand to her cheek, she said, "It doesn't take much effort to fire a hypodermic needle filled with a temperature sensitive concoction from a M-98 Widow at nearly Mach 0.9 at a distance of 1.5 kilometers."

"Err... yes of course," Gamagori simply could not believe what Mako Mankanshoku's mother was capable of. He, of course, knew about her skills but he had no idea who she was until she waltzed into Honnouji Academy claiming she was here for the specified job. Gamagori was about to politely escort her off campus when she began describing in very intricate detail how she would go about doing the job. What disturbed him the most was the sheer lack of menace or professionalism about her. Someone Sukuyo Mankanshoku could make discussing firearms and the various attachments needed in different climates sound like something a family talks about at the dinner table.

Peering through her scope, Sukuyo let out a happy gasp, "Oh! I found Ichigo Kurosaki. He's lined up perfectly in my sights!"

"I see him as well," Gamagori said before adding, "Wind Speed is currently 3.4 knots south by southwest. Temperature is steady at 73 degrees Fahrenheit. Fire when you have a clean shot."

"Don't worry Ichigo. You'll feel better when I have Mako invite you over for dinner tonight," Sukuyo mumbled happily as she lined up the crosshairs directly in the small of his back. It was lucky that Mako managed to intercept him before Ichigo could leave Honnouji Academy. That would have made her shot a lot more difficult, but not impossible, "Taking the shot."

With a soft bang that did not give away just how much power was behind the shot, Sukuyo was forced back several inches from the recoil. Noticing a bright flash of light from across the academy, Sukuyo detached her scope and located Ichigo once again. The youth was currently lying on the ground rubbing his back while Mako and Ryuko looked down at him in confusion.

"A job well done," Sukuyo sighed happily as she began disassembling her M-98 Widow. This successful mission made sure her record remained perfect.

Gamagori watched Ichigo through his binoculars, a smug grin adorning his face, "No one escapes the Disciplinary Committee, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Wish You Were Here

I have for you all an extra long Chapter 12. I hadn't planned on letting it get this long, but I just kept writing and writing until I was satisfied with where I managed to leave off. So Episode 24 and the ending of Kill la Kill... I cannot say that I expected anything different from Trigger, but I would have been greatly satisfied with an ending that didn't end in that kind of cliché. I don't know if I will follow the ending of the anime EXACTLY, but most likely I will divert away from it. The story would be quite boring if you already knew how it ended, wouldn't it?

I thank each and every person who left a review or favorite'd my story. I finally got a story link on tvtropes, which goes to show that people really like my story. Well, that's enough for an author note. Let's get on with what you all came to read.

Oh! New story picture by the way.

---

...

---

Chapter 12 - Wish You Were Here

Humming a familiar tune, Nui Harime strolled down the road leading to Honnou City. While quite happy and content with herself, Nui was also feeling a tad bit depressed. Her failure to kill Yoruichi had caused Ragyo to 'punish' her and while Nui certainly didn't mind being punished by Ragyo, she couldn't ignore the fact that she still failed.

"The next time I see that Yoruichi lady," Nui reminded herself, getting pumped up in the process, "I'm going to cut off her legs so she can't run away!"

When Nui reported to Ragyo that she had chosen to not pursue Yoruichi, the Director had been beside herself with anger until Nui pointed out that Yoruichi had fled to Karakura Town. As soon as she had said that, Ragyo's expression immediately switched from anger to mild bemusement.

" So, it has begun," Ragyo smiled as she sensuously stroked Nui's cheek, "Isshin has made the first move, forcing me to react. That is just like the man I know. Perhaps I will let him have this battle, but the war shall be mine."

Ragyo might have been amused with the notion that Isshin Kurosaki was moving against her, but Nui was far more interested in that Yoruichi lady. It wasn't every day that Nui ran into an opponent that was not only as fast as her, but could actually damage her body. While her wounds didn't cause Nui any pain or inconvenience, nothing really did, it was still refreshing to not curb stomp an opponent in the first five seconds.

"Hmm..." Nui stopped walking and allowed a perplexed look to briefly adorn her face, "... Perhaps I won't cut off her legs. It isn't every day that I meet someone able to actually stand against me. Maybe I'll just sever one of her arms or something!"

As for Isshin, Nui could say anything she wanted about the man, but she couldn't deny that he was crazy prepared. Just a few hours ago she tried to take a single step inside Karakura Town and had her foot immediately blown off. While that would have killed a normal human, to a being like Nui it was only a mild inconvenience to regenerate her missing extremity.

She supposed it came from being a Life Fiber hybrid. Nui let out a girlish giggle as a faint purple light briefly appeared in her chest. Her body could be so fickle sometimes!

Finally entering Honnou City, Nui looked up at the pitch-black sky. It was still dark out, which meant that Satsuki wouldn't be able to spot her entering the city until it was too late. Nui knew of course that Satsuki would eventually figure out she was here. Satsuki was anything but stupid, but Nui counted on Satsuki not making a move. She was the Grand Couturier after all, so even with Junketsu Satsuki wouldn't stand a chance against her.

Ah, but enough about that wet blanket, Nui was far more interested in Ichigo.

It wasn't everyday that Nui was able to meet another Life Fiber Hybrid. While Ragyo might be one as well, it just wasn't the same. Ragyo was a woman but Ichigo was a man, which both made all the difference and changed nothing to Nui. Perhaps it was because he was new that Nui found herself highly interested in Ichigo's strength and power, but Nui never ran on assumptions. She was better than that. Ichigo's inclusion into her tight-knit family was bound to add some spice to her dulling life.

"I wonder what he is doing right now." Nui looked upwards at Honnouji Academy looming overhead, "It's such a shame that I missed out on his big fight against Satsuki, but I do have priorities."

She may not have been there in person, but Nui was still able to catch the entire battle. Satsuki wasn't the only one with bugs and cameras throughout Honnouji Academy after all. As she watched Ichigo fight and overpower Satsuki, Nui couldn't help but wonder how powerful he truly was. It was clear to her that he had full control over his Kamui. What was it's name again?

"I really should remember something important like that," Nui stuck her tongue out childishly, "After all, Ichigo and I are far closer than Satsuki will ever be!"

When Nui informed Ragyo of the fight's outcome, the Director had been most pleased with her. In fact, Nui was certain that it was enough to wipe away the tarnish her failure to kill Yoruichi left on her record. As Ragyo watched Ichigo run circles around Satsuki while continuously holding back, she had praised Nui for bringing this to her attention.

"The apple doesn't fall far from the tree," Ragyo smiled wickedly as, on the video, Satsuki began losing control of Junketsu, "I cannot wait to see Ichigo with my own eyes and witness the fruits of my labor."

"Oh~!" Nui stopped walking and peered straight up into the sky, "That reminds me! How shall I deal with Ryuko Matoi?"

Various scenarios appeared in her head, but Nui shot them down one after the other. While it would be quite easy to kill the girl, that wouldn't be any fun and Nui was all about fun. If she was going to get revenge on the fake Isshin, she needed to do it in style and with finesse. Killing, on the other hand, was boring and simple. Nui had a few ideas, but she was going to wait a while to see what happens. Murdering Ryuko could be done at any time, but watching Ichigo was a lot more fun!

"It's decided!" Nui clapped her hands and gently pushed off the ground before leaping over a hundred feet into the air. Landing softly on the wall of Honnouji Academy, she raised a hand to her forehead as the sun appeared on the horizon, "I'm going to have to finally introduce myself to Ichigo. I do hope we can get along. After all, it's not like he knows I was the one to kill Mr. Urahara."

---

...

---

As the first bus of the day approached Honnou City, a staple of transportation for the city over the last three years, there was a loud grinding of metal and rubber as the left side of the bus fell into a series of potholes before chaotically bouncing back out.

"Stupid potholes," the bus driver mumbled as he expertly regained control of the bus before he lost control and crashed. He had been driving this route ever since it was first created and while there were dangers most bus drivers never faced, he had yet to crash even once, "More and more potholes seem to form every week. Are people actually fighting in the middle of the road now? It's a menace to bus drivers everywhere."

Usually the bus was empty on the way to Honnou City. Most passengers on the first run of the day were people coming from Honnou City who worked the night shift but didn't actually live in the city. Today, however, was different. Looking in the rearview mirror at his sole passenger sitting in the farthest seat from the front, the driver adjusted his hat.

"You appear to be a little nervous, miss," the driver said reassuringly. Call him an old softy, but he couldn't stand to see anyone, especially a girl that looked to be no older than fifteen, sitting all alone and without company, "This your first time going to Honnou City?"

The girl, who had been staring out the window at the pre-dawn landscape the entire time, blinked and looked towards the driver. Hesitating but a moment, she eventually answered in a slightly meek tone, "Yes. Today is my first day attending Honnouji Academy."

"I see..." The bus driver grimaced and adjusted his hat again, a nervous habit that he somehow obtained. He had seen people like this before. They get accepted to Honnouji Academy through various scholarships or something only to run into the harsh truth about the academy and city. It was best that she find out the truth from someone like him, who wasn't going to take advantage of her, rather than some punk on the street with a knife.

"I don't mean to frighten you or anything, but Honnou City is not a nice place to be. Satsuki Kiryuin, of the Kiryuin Conglomerate, runs the school and the city with an iron fist. Nothing happens in that city without her knowing about it. It's not someplace someone like you should be going."

The perpetual blush on the girl's cheeks darkened momentarily as she withdrew into herself, "I'll be fine, really."

"You don't say," the bus driver wasn't going to push his luck. If she didn't want to heed his advice, there was nothing he could do about it, "Suit yourself. I was just trying to give you some friendly advice."

As the bus descended back into comfortable silence, Ururu Tsumugiya stared out the window. She was nervous, not because of what she might expect to find at Honnouji Academy, but because she was going there. She was grateful Mr. Kurosaki managed to get her enrolled after the school year started. From his explanation, it was a rather hard thing to do. When she asked him why he had done something like this for her, Mr. Kurosaki had simply grinned clownishly and told her that it was a 'super secret' and to just leave it at that.

Ururu really liked hanging out with Mr. Kurosaki. After Kisuke disappeared, and Yoruichi went to look for him, Ururu had fallen into a depression as she began blaming herself for what happened to him. She only began feeling better about herself when Mr. Kurosaki invited her over to his house to play with Yuzu and Karin as well as help around the house.

" I wonder how Mr. Kurosaki is doing?" she thought to herself. When she had left earlier in the morning, he had been busy holding a bunch of red threads while dressed fully in HAZMAT gear. She had looked at him curiously until he told her that everything was fine and to go off and have fun at Honnouji Academy.

Ururu didn't know how much time had passed, but she was brought back to reality when the bus came to a screeching stop. Looking out the window, she noticed that she had finally arrived at Honnou City.

"Well, here we are," the bus driver grimly said. Before opening the door and letting in the crowd of people waiting to go home, he turned around in his seat and looked directly at Ururu, "I'm going to give you two choices, little miss. The first choice is that you can step off this bus and go on your merry way to Honnouji Academy and whatever happens will be up to you to deal with. The second choice is to go back to Karakura Town. Free of charge, of course."

"Thanks, but no thanks," Ururu politely declined the bus driver's generous offer and stood up. Straightening a crease in her No-Star uniform, Ururu was glad that Miss Yoruichi wasn't around when Mr. Kurosaki allowed her to customize her uniform. Yoruichi had been so angry when Ururu wanted to wear something new. Even though Kisuke had been fine with it, Yoruichi had forbidden her from wearing such clothing because, as the former captain put it, 'it looked ridiculous.' Mr. Kurosaki really was nice to let Ururu choose what she wanted to wear.

Ururu held her purple backpack, which she chose herself, firmly in her arms and stepped off the bus onto the dusty streets of Honnou City. Ignoring the throng of people attempting to push past her, Ururu looked around and quickly realized she had no idea where to go. Placing a hand on her cheek and tilting her head to the side, she looked back and forth across the street, "Where was it that Mr. Kurosaki said to go?"

Ururu gazed upwards at the spiraling peak in the center of Honnou City. That had to be Honnouji Academy, but she had no idea how to get up there. Usually she would just jump from rooftop to rooftop and make it there in no time at all, but she was afraid some of the normal people might see her, even at this early hour. Kisuke and Yoruichi had drilled into her head that she is to avoid showing her abilities and powers in front of normal people. The problem, they told her early on, was that people tended to ask questions they weren't prepared to know the answers to.

"Remember one thing, Ururu," Kisuke Urahara told a younger Ururu in the Secret Training Room below his shop, "One person may be intelligent, but a group of people are what scientists call morons. If you think you might attract the attention of someone, avoid showing off how powerful or special you are at all costs."

"That's right," Ururu said encouragingly, "I can't let Mr. Urahara down!" Taking off her backpack and rummaging through it, Ururu pulled out a map, crudely drawn on by Isshin, "I think I have to go that way to get to the academy. It's really far away, so I better get started. I don't want to be late on my first day here after all."

As she began the long trek to Honnouji Academy, Ururu was unaware that she was being followed. After nearly half an hour of walking, interposed with getting lost several times and being chased by an overly friendly dog, Ururu finally reached the trolley station. Double-checking the map to make sure she was in the right place, Ururu was relieved to find that she wasn't lost. This was where she had to go, but there was something wrong. Looking around and noticing nobody around, she worriedly asked, "Where is everyone? Huh, what's this?"

Leaning forward over the railing separating her from the trolley, Ururu read the sign hung haphazardly on it, "Umm... 'Trolley begins at 6 AM. If you're reading this sign, you're up too early in the morning.' That's not a very nice thing to say."

"Well, boys, what do we have here?"

Ururu turned around in confusion at the taunting voice. Standing behind her on the platform, holding various blunt instruments and with sneers on their faces, were several teenage boys. Their worn and torn No-Star uniforms, a signal of their former social status in Honnouji Academy, implied that they were either thrown out or expelled from the academy for various misdeeds and crimes. Noticing that Ururu hadn't done anything except turn to face them, the lead thug grinned and stepped forward, "What's the matter, girl, cat got your tongue?"

"Cat got my tongue?" Ururu tilted her head and blinked owlishly in confusion as she tried to grasp what the thug had just said, "How could a cat have my tongue if it's still in my mouth?"

"Are you making fun of me?" The lead thug threatened as he emphasized his point by smacking his baseball bat a couple of times against the ground in order to intimidate her. Seeing that Ururu wasn't even shaking from nervousness, he said, "Here's what's going to happen. We're the Honnou City Welcoming Party and this is your orientation. Everyone that arrives here has to pay a toll. Your toll, little girl, will be everything in that pretty little backpack of yours. Now hand it over!"

"You want my stuff?" Ururu looked at the ground, "But if you take it, then I won't have anything."

The thugs began to laugh, "That's the point. Now give it here and we'll be on our way."

When Ururu made no move to listen and hand over her stuff, the lead thug decided to take the initiative. Strutting forward confidently to take Ururu's backpack, his hand had just about reached it when he gasped in pain as a strong vice-like grip closed around his wrist. Looking down, he saw that Ururu had gripped her hand around his wrist and was refusing to let go.

"What's the big deal? Let go of me!" The thug leader tried to pull his hand out of Ururu's grasp, but found to his astonishment and fear that she was just too damn strong to escape from. Getting annoyed, and a little scared, he reared back his free hand and went to punch her in the face, "I said let go of my hand, you bitch!"

For just a moment the thug thought he had hit her. It was only when his hand continued uninterrupted through the space previously occupied by Ururu's head that he realized something was wrong. Fearfully looking down, he saw Ururu had bent over nearly in half without so much as budging her arm.

"That wasn't very nice."

Seven months ago, Ururu would have lost her sense of morality and right and wrong when faced with a potential fight. Jinta had called it her 'Extermination Mode' and that it was really freaky. Kiskeya had noticed how upset Ururu was about that and offered to help her train to control her powers better. It would be rather bad to get into a fight against a much weaker opponent only to kill them because she couldn't control herself.

Sweeping her leg across the ground and knocking the thug into the air, Ururu grabbed the teen's shirt and spun around before throwing him into a nearby wall with very little effort.

"B-Boss!" One of the thugs stuttered as the gang stared at the smoking body of their leader implanted in a steel wall.

"It looks like I put too much strength in my toss," Ururu said gently, but her words terrified the thugs. Looking at the remaining thugs, she politely asked, "Will that be all?"

"Y-Yeah! We're sorry for the trouble!" One scared thug screamed in fear as he backpedaled before turning around and began fleeing, running right past the unconscious body of his leader. Luckily for the fallen thug, two of his associates were kind enough to stop and pick him up before disappearing into the darkened streets of the slums.

Ururu watched the thugs flee in a mixture of wonder and disappointment. She hadn't meant to toss him so hard into the wall. Even limiting her strength as much as she did, she still managed to really hurt him. The strange thing was that he didn't seem to be that injured. Could it be that Mr. Kurosaki was right, and that the people in Honnou City were tougher than in Karakura Town?

"That's good to know," Ururu said, "That means I won't accidentally kill someone."

As strong as she was, Ururu really didn't like hurting and killing people. Fighting an arrancar to protect her friends and family was one thing, but fighting for the sake of hurting someone else greatly troubled Ururu. What was even more worrying to the perpetual depressed girl was that her strength and power, which had been relatively constant throughout her life, had begun increasing more and more in the past few months. It had gotten to the point that she was able to fight Miss Yoruichi and Kisuke on relatively even terms, which scared her. When she expressed her concerns to Kisuke, the shopkeeper had smiled and said she was just going through puberty like all normal girls do. When she said she had questions, Kisuke told her that he's not really an expert on puberty and to go ask Isshin Kurosaki if she had any questions. With two girls of his own around Ururu's age, Isshin was bound to know the answers to her questions.

Sitting on one of the benches near the trolley station, Ururu began kicking her feet in the air. The nearby clock that hung over the station said it was almost 6 AM, so she wouldn't need to wait much longer to get to Honnouji Academy. Ururu was really looking forward to meeting Ichigo. He was, after all, the only person she knew here and Ururu didn't like meeting new people.

---

...

---

"Okay class," Aikuro Mikisugi drawled as he began writing on the blackboard, "Let's get started with today's lesson. The Berlin Wall, which highlighted the divide between the Eastern and Western powers, first began construction on August 13, when the border with West Berlin was closed..."

As Ichigo scribbled down some notes on Aikuro's lecture, his mind refused to focus on what was going on. Despite his best efforts to put fight with Satsuki behind him, he couldn't help but continue to think about it. It wasn't his fault really. He didn't expect her to be so powerful and he certainly didn't think he would need to step in and save Ryuko from being killed by Satsuki. He couldn't believe Satsuki had it in her to kill someone, but he had readily recognized the look on her face in the instant before he saved Ryuko and realized what she was about to do.

Glancing left at Ryuko, who was gazing out the window with her chin resting on the palm of her hand, Ichigo didn't know what to say to her. Her fight with Satsuki had been one about honor, which was something he fully understood. If Satsuki knew the identity of the person that attacked Kisuke and killed Ryuko's father, who was he to stop Ryuko from getting the answers she sought?

Deciding to think about such problems later on, Ichigo rolled his eyes at Mako, who was sound asleep behind an upright book, and went back to listening to Aikuro ramble on about the Cold War. Ichigo didn't know why, but he was slowly finding his attention being chipped away by Aikuro's droning voice. Just before he lost focus entirely and began doodling in his notebook, he heard a phone beginning to ring.

"Hmm?" Aikuro glanced briefly at his pocket before finally deciding to answer it. Only a handful of people know his phone number and none of them were people he wanted to get on the bad side of. Fishing into his pocket, stabbing his finger on his keys in the process, Aikuro grabbed his phone and tossed it in the air once before answering it, "Aikuro Mikisugi speaking."

What followed next was Aikuro either saying 'uh huh' or 'I understand' for more than a minute. After one last confirmation about something, Aikuro snapped shut his phone and turned to his staring class, "Well, it looks like we have a new student enrolling in our class. I have to go down to the front office and get her, but there shouldn't be a problem finding her a free seat. While I'm gone, please try and keep the chaos down to at least a misdemeanor level. I don't want a repeat of what happened the last time I stepped out of the room."

Most students remembered the last time Aikuro left early to go do something. While no one knows exactly what happened during those five minutes he was gone, everyone remembered Gamagori walking into the classroom and only half of the class walking out.

As soon as the door closed behind Aikuro, the room descended into a form of organized anarchy. No one was willing to test the limits of the Disciplinary Committee's patience and tolerance. Snapping out of her slumber at the first sign of Aikuro's disappearance, Mako quickly looked around before she reached under her desk and pulled out a bento box that could not have physically been down there. Licking her lips and clapping her hands together, Mako proudly announced, "There's no better way to start the day than with a healthy lunch."

Ichigo watched with mild disgust as Mako dove into her lunch. Turning away from the nauseating scene before he lost his appetite for the rest of the day, he found himself inches away from a scowling Ryuko.

"Are you going to tell me about what happened yesterday or not?"

Ichigo propped his head on his hand and asked, "What's there to talk about?"

Frankly, he was getting sick and a little annoyed with the amount of rumors surrounding him. Ever since his technical defeat of Satsuki yesterday, rumors had begun spreading through Honnouji Academy about how he walked away from the fight still in clad in Mugetsu while Satsuki left tired and beaten. While Ichigo wasn't someone to let rumors get the better of him, since he knew what exactly happened, he was going to kill whoever it was that started the particular rumor about Satsuki and him having a love affair. That was perhaps the only thing he and Gamagori could agree on. Whoever found that particular person would make sure the other was informed before being the crap out of them.

Ryuko spun her chair around and sat back down, an annoyed scowl on her face, "Tell me how you managed to beat Satsuki Kiryuin."

"I didn't really beat her," Ichigo grumbled, "It was more like I wore her down."

Ryuko knew full well what Ichigo was talking about. She had gone into battle against Satsuki aware that she could only wear Senketsu for a set time before the amount of blood he consumed would render her unconscious. She had assumed Satsuki would face the same problem and was mortally surprised when Satsuki not only didn't have that problem, but also was also far stronger than her. While Ryuko was getting her ass kicked, she couldn't help but notice that Satsuki didn't seem to be exhausted at all. Her full acceptance of Junketsu's appearance allowed Satsuki to tap into its full power with a minimal amount of blood and effort.

"So the great Satsuki has a weakness after all," Ryuko quietly pondered. Usually that would be great and fantastic news, but she had other, more important, things on her mind. One of which was how Ichigo managed to beat her, "So how did you wear her down?"

"I'm not sure," Ichigo said hesitantly. He found it strange that Junketsu had made no attempt to communicate with Satsuki. Even if she couldn't hear her Kamui speaking, he should have been able to. If what Mugetsu said was the truth, Junketsu was actively fighting against Satsuki's mental control over it. Ichigo didn't want to think about fighting Satsuki if she could wield Junketsu's full and complete power.

"I have a theory though," Ichigo sat back and folded his arms, a frown on his face, "You know how you and Senketsu work together? I don't think Satsuki has that kind of relationship with her Kamui. Mugetsu told me that she forced Junketsu into submission in order to access its power. I'm pretty sure that pissed her Kamui off. Since our powers were pretty much even, I just had to keep fighting her until she became too tired to hold back Junketsu anymore."

So Satsuki wasn't so powerful after all! That piece of news actually brought a smile to Ryuko's face. Now that she accepted Senketsu's true appearance and was working together as colleagues and partners, she could fight Satsuki on even terms, "You just made my day, Ichigo. With Senketsu's full power at my fingertips, all I have to do is fight her until she can't control her Kamui anymore!"

"I hate to say it, but that's probably not going to work" Ichigo hated to burst Ryuko's bubble, but the cold hard truth was preferable to a lie, especially a lie that could get Ryuko killed, "You know Satsuki about as well as I do. Do you honestly think she is just going to sit back and allow you to fight her knowing she has a weakness?"

"So I'm back to square one," Ryuko slammed her head down on her desk and mumbled dejectedly, "I just can't catch a break."

"Instead of sulking, why don't you train?" When Ryuko turned her head towards him, Ichigo explained further, "I mean, Senketsu and Mugetsu give us a lot of power and speed, but training would help to boost that further. I have no intention of getting into a fight with Satsuki again unless I have no choice, but if you're so intent on getting answers from her, you should train your body and work on your swordsmanship."

"I know that," Ryuko grumbled into the palm of her hand, "After you left that night, I took your advice to heart and spent a few hours seeing how my Scissor Blade really works. It's funny. I've had it for over six months, but it wasn't until last night that I figured out I could change its size with a simple flick of my wrist. You should have seen the look on Satsuki's face when I surprised her with that. If I had been truly wearing Senketsu at the time, it would have ended the fight right then and there."

With a rusty creak, the bulkhead that functioned as the classroom door swung open and Aikuro shambled back into the classroom, but he was not alone. Several steps behind him stood Ira Gamagori, who had to duck in order to fit inside the door. While Aikuro leaned against the chalkboard with his hands in his pockets and a bored expression on his face, Gamagori stepped in the exact center of the class, folded his arms across his massive chest and addressed the seated students.

"Listen up!" Gamagori shouted loud enough to dislodge dust from the fluorescent lighting and have the teacher next door quickly duck his head inside the room to find out where all the noise was coming from, "I am only going to say this once so there will be absolutely no talking until I have finished speaking!"

"Uh..." One student in the back of the class raised his head, "Can I go to the bathroom?"

Even before the student had finished speaking, a whip shot out of Gamagori's sleeve and wrapped around the surprised student. As the student was dragged kicking and screaming to the front of the class, Gamagori grabbed him with a single hand and threw him out the room, "No speaking until I'm done!"

Gamagori waited until the noise from the student crashing through the wall died down before continuing, "If there will be no further interruptions, I would like to introduce a new student. She has just recently transferred from Karakura High School and will be starting Honnouji Academy today!"

"Ichigo," Ryuko whispered, ignorant of the slight twitch from Gamagori's ear, "Isn't that where...?"

"Yeah," Ichigo slammed his head down on his desk and groaned, "It is. Just please don't let it be Orihime or Tatsuki..."

Ichigo didn't have anything against Orihime or Tatsuki. In fact, it would have been a nice change of pace to have someone from Karakura Town here. At least he would be able to speak normally to someone without having to hold back the majority of what he knew. The reason he didn't want them here was simple - he knew some serious shit was going to go down soon. Call it instinct or intuition, but Ichigo could sense that his fight against Satsuki was only the start. Pretty soon something major was going to happen and he did not want anyone he cared about to get caught in the crosshairs. His friends were strong, but Satsuki and her Elite Four were stronger.

Gamagori's right eye began twitching as Ichigo and Ryuko blatantly ignored his rule and continued talking. Clenching his fist to stop himself from administrating their well-deserved punishment, Gamagori kept reminding himself that there would be time for punishment later. Right now he had a job to do and he would do it to the best of his abilities, "Please give a full Honnouji Academy welcome to your new fellow student."

When he saw everyone staring incredulously at him, Gamagori double in size and barked, "I said be enthusiastic and clap!"

After a short period of fearful clapping, Gamagori calmed down and turned towards the door, "Please come in and introduce yourself to your new colleagues."

There was a few seconds after Gamagori's urging that nothing happened, but eventually a girl walked into the classroom. With her head hung downwards and a faint blush spread across her cheeks, she looked the epitome of shy and meek.

"Oh, goddamn it," Ichigo threw his head back and gave up on thinking logically. There was no reason whatsoever that she should be here. He wanted to blame Kisuke for pulling a stunt like this on him, but he was dead, or soon will be once Ichigo found him. Yoruichi wouldn't have the political or bureaucratic knowledge to enroll a student and Tessai was much more interested in looking for Kisuke. There was only one man on Earth who would pull a stunt like this and expect Ichigo to fall right in it...

"Hello," Ururu bowed respectfully to the class, her twin pigtails moving chaotically as she did so. For a few months after Aizen's defeat she had foregone her characteristic short pigtails for a more natural straight hair look. Without Jinta around to pull on them and annoy her, Ururu could go back to the hairstyle that she preferred, "My name is Ururu Tsumugiya. I'm looking forward to spending the school year with all of you."

Ururu looked around the classroom and, noticing Ichigo's orange hair, smiled softly and waved, "Hello Ichigo."

"Please," Ichigo all but begged as he dragged his hands across his face, causing Ryuko, Aikuro and even Gamagori to turn to him, "Somebody just kill me."

---

...

---

Clad in a simple white robe, Satsuki stared at the struggling Kamui pinned to the wall in front of her behind a sheet of thick glass in irritation.

"What could have caused such an event?"

Iori Shiro stopped reading over the data printout and turned to Satsuki, "You'll have to be more specific Lady Satsuki."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed as Junketsu stared at her with bloodshot eyes and tried to pull itself free from its confinement, "Junketsu should have been under my thumb without any difficulty. After subduing its animalistic nature, there should have been no chance that it could have overcome my will."

As much as he wanted to tell Satsuki that there was nothing to worry about, Iori was not someone who would cover the truth to save his own ass. If he had to deliver bad news that could potentially bring him harm, Iori would do so without a single regret. Sighing wistfully, he began explaining what he found, "This was bound to happen sooner or later. While your willpower is greater than the majority of humanity's, Junketsu has a mind of its own."

"I am well aware of that," Satsuki sat down, her eyes never leaving Junketsu, "What I want to know is what exactly happened to cause Junketsu to escape my control."

"It was never under your control," Iori bluntly informed her, the perpetual frown on his face deepening as Satsuki turned to glare at him. Knowing that she wanted him to explain his reasoning to her, he continued, "You said that you had to force Junketsu to obey you through sheer willpower, correct? If that is the case then it is safe to presume that it was never truly under your control. During your fight against Ryuko Matoi and then Ichigo Kurosaki, your willpower was enough to keep Junketsu in line. However..."

Iori trailed off and brought up the sole clip of her fight against Ichigo Kurosaki. As Satsuki watched him match her blow for blow, she couldn't help but admire his strength and conviction. To not only step in to stop her from finishing Matoi, but also fight against her with his life on the line required dedication few besides her had. Iori noticed Satsuki watching the clip and coughed gently to get her attention, "As you can plainly see, Ichigo Kurosaki pushed you beyond what you expected to face. Your battle against Ryuko Matoi required so little of your power that you didn't need to focus on the fight, allowing you to keep Junketsu in check. Once Ichigo Kurosaki stepped in and began matching you move for move, you began accessing more and more of Junketsu's power in order to keep up. Eventually... well, you know what happened."

"So what you're suggesting is that Ichigo Kurosaki pushed me beyond my limits?" Satsuki rhetorically asked. Leaning back in the chair and closing her eyes, Satsuki realized that made perfect sense. Nothing else could explain why Junketsu went berserk, "Is there anything you can do about it?"

"Not at the moment," Iori regretfully informed Satsuki, "My skills might be enough to create Goku Uniforms, but modifying a Kamui is far beyond my reach. If you are truly set on doing this, there is one person you could - "

"Don't finish that sentence," Satsuki warned Iori, a hint of venom evident in her voice. No matter what the case may be, she was never going to call her in for help. As she pondered what to do, Satsuki's eyes widened as an idea hit her.

"Iori, is there any indication that Ichigo Kurosaki's Mugetsu was commissioned by Revocs or anyone associated with my mother?"

"I had Inumuta look into that as soon as it was discovered he had a Kamui. As far as we can tell, Revocs is just as determined to find the creator of Mugetsu as you are."

"I see..." Satsuki saw two paths in front of her, both of which involved choices she did not want to make. On one hand she could simply force Junketsu into submission using more and more of her willpower and mental tenacity. While that would be her nominal choice, the downside was that she would be forced to battle on two fronts, one against Junketsu and the other against her opponent. The other option would be to ask Ichigo Kurosaki for help, but that was completely out of the question. Without a shred of doubt in her mind, Satsuki knew the likelihood of Ichigo helping her was about the same as Nui Harime willingly giving her purple Scissor Blade to Matoi and allowing her to kill her.

"Unfortunately, our options on how to deal with this problem are limited at the moment," Satsuki folded her fingers in front of her face as she stared at Junketsu, "Continue working on improving the Goku Uniforms, Iori, and iron out any flaws or weaknesses you may find. I can control Junketsu for the immediate future without any problem."

"What about Ichigo Kurosaki?" Iori asked. As a loud ripping sound tore through the air, Iori and Satsuki saw that Junketsu had managed to pull a sleeve free and was in the process of escaping. Without even hesitating, he flicked his wrist and pinned the Kamui down with several large sewing pins.

"Ichigo Kurosaki will not do anything," Satsuki smirked, "As much as he cultivates the image of a punk or delinquent, he is much more complex than he appears. As long as I do not move against Ryuko Matoi or any of his friends, he will not lift a finger to fight me."

Satsuki had closed her eyes to think when a beeping noise disrupted the peace and quiet she was attempting to cultivate. Without opening her eyes, she reached for the cell phone in the breast pocket of her robe, "What is it Inumuta?"

Iori did not know what Satsuki was told, but it couldn't have been good news. He watched as the expression on her face shifted from annoyance to confusion before finally switching to anger.

"Are you sure about this?" She asked, her tone demanding an answer. Iori couldn't hear what the answer she received was, but it must have not been the one she wanted, "Very well then. Assemble the others."

Snapping the phone shut, Satsuki stared at the device in silence, causing Iori to ask, "Is there a problem, Lady Satsuki?"

"A new student showed up this morning," Satsuki answered as she walked towards the trapped Junketsu, "Inumuta was able to determine that she registered only two days ago, which is impossible without my express consent."

"You think she's a spy?"

"Or worse," Satsuki said bluntly as she prepared to release Junketsu and force it under her will once more.

---

...

---

Ichigo was trying to enjoy his lunch and perhaps have a peaceful moment at Honnouji Academy, but it appeared the fates were conspiring against him. Stalking up to him, visibly ticked off, was Ryuko. Stomping to a stop just in front of him, the scowl on her face matching his own, she scoffed at his attempt to avoid eye contact.

"What's the big idea about this girl?" Ryuko demanded an answer from Ichigo. For the past hour, he had been avoiding the question like it was the plague. Despite the evidence that he knew her, Ururu even waved to him, Ichigo refused to say a word on the subject. As soon as class had let out, Ichigo bolted through the door so fast that Mako, who had been in his way, had been left behind dizzily spinning in circles.

"It's nothing," Ichigo 'tsked' and looked away, "Just drop the subject already."

"No!" Ryuko argued and folded her arms. She was going to get answers if it killed Ichigo, "Not until you explain how you know Ururu!"

"If you're so curious, then why don't you just ask her?" Ichigo argued. Trying to stand up, he harshly discovered Ryuko blocking his path.

"You don't think I've tried," Ryuko rolled her eyes and motioned with her head to the right. Sitting on one of the decorative chains wrapping around part of Honnouji Academy was Ururu merrily eating her lunch, "I've tried talking to her, but every time I do she just gives me a one or two word answer and then ignores me complicated."

Ichigo sighed and looked up at the sky, "It's complicated."

"Ichigo?"

Ryuko nearly jumped straight into the air as Ururu, who until a moment ago was sitting down and eating her lunch more than one hundred feet away, tapped her on the shoulder. Turning around, thoroughly shocked at what just happened, Ryuko noticed Ururu was avoiding making eye contact with her.

"How the hell did you do that?"

" Ryuko..." Senketsu's eye was trembling for some reason, "Her hand was freezing cold. Unless you want to wear a frozen Kamui, don't let her touch you again."

"Calm the hell down," Ichigo scolded Senketsu, but couldn't help but wonder on the Kamui's specific choice of words. Mugetsu had said nearly those exact words that night when that creepy girl had touched him. Ichigo was willing to assume it was just a coincidence, but he wasn't going to ignore it. Turning to Ururu, who had been patiently waiting for him to address her, he calmly asked, "What is it Ururu?"

"Umm... hold on a second," Ururu reached into her uniform, causing both Ichigo and Ryuko to cover their eyes. When it became clear that Ururu was simply reaching for something and not trying to undress, they hesitantly removed their hands to find Ururu holding a letter in her hand. Taking the letter from her, Ichigo looked it over in confusion.

"What is this?"

"Your dad said to give this to you," Ururu softly answered, "He also said not to take no for an answer."

"That old goat sent me a letter?" Ichigo was interested in what his dad could have possibly had the time to write, but he was mostly annoyed. Leave it to Isshin to get involved in his school life. Tearing open the letter, Ichigo began reading it, not noticing Ryuko subtly reading it over his shoulder.

Ichigo, if you're reading this letter then you no doubt already know that I had Ururu enrolled at Honnouji Academy. Before you get annoyed or pissed off, know that it is just for your safety and protection. I mean, getting into a fight within the first week of school? That's embarrassing not just to you, but also to every Kurosaki! Your rampant disregard for social norms and rules will be death of me, so therefore I decided to have Ururu come to Honnouji. She really wasn't fitting well in Karakura High School so I thought it would be nice to her to be able to get a new start at a school where she might meet people more like her. Keep an eye on her, Ichigo, and don't forget that I am always watching you. Don't do anything stupid.

"That bastard!" Ichigo seethed. Just before he crumpled up the letter, he noticed something written on the back, "What the hell is this, a P.S.?"

P.S. - Don't forget to watch your back, Ichigo. An old associate of mine has no doubt taken an interest in you and, knowing them, it is not a good thing. So instead of giving you advice on what to do and not to do, I'm just going to place my faith in you. Don't screw up. After all, it's not like the fate of the world is riding on your shoulders or anything. Oh! And don't forget to find a girlfriend. I don't want to continue making excuses about your sexual orientation like I do with Uryu.

~ Isshin Kurosaki, #1 Dad

"Even when giving good advice he still manages to sound like a complete moron," Ichigo groaned and turned to Ururu, "So did my dad tell you anything?"

"Yes," Ururu gazed off to the side for a moment before continuing, "He said that while I should have a fun time and enjoy the school year, I should also protect you. Don't be mad Ichigo, but your dad said you were a 'no-good hooligan who could use some help in straightening his life out.'"

"Damn that bastard," Ichigo cursed and, noticing Ururu looking upset, sighed and said, "I'm not mad at you Ururu. That old goat is always dragging people into his business."

"Ryuko! Ichigo! New Girl!"

Ichigo and Ryuko turned to find Mako Mankanshoku running towards them with a wide smile on her face. She would have been frantically waving at them if it weren't for the fact that Shinjiro Nagita was riding on her shoulders and laughing his ass off.

"Salutations Ichigo and Ryuko!" Shinjiro waved at them, "Are you enjoying this fine autumn day?"

"Shinjiro and Mako together..." Ryuko deadpanned and looked at Ichigo, who was sporting a similar expression, "How is it that he is your friend again?"

"I don't know," Ichigo shook his head in frustration, "I'm more curious about where he was yesterday. One moment he's on me like glue and the next he's just gone. It's highly annoying."

"Don't be mean to Shinjiro!" Mako slid on her knees between Ryuko and Ichigo, "He's just doing the best job that he can given his limitations!" Making a motion of typing and sporting a clear visor, Mako continued ranting, "Reporting isn't easy! It takes time and dedication! Both of which normal people do not have in abundance! That makes Shinjiro a superhero!"

As Mako struck a familiar pose, Ryuko tried to stop her before her rant reached critical mass, "Mako, I don't think you understand what we're talking about."

"She doesn't, but I certainly do!" To Ichigo and Ryuko's collective horror, Shinjiro had joined in on Mako's soliloquy. Holding out his pad and pencil, a bright purple light shining behind him, he continued, "A reporter's task in life is to go where the story is, not where it's safe! While you may have thought I was ditching you during your epic battle against Satsuki Kiryuin, I was actually knee-deep in a story!" Shinjiro made a motion of hiding under a cardboard box that randomly appeared, "There I was, hiding from the Disciplinary Committee as they tried to silence me when I stumbled upon a bewildering sight! Walking passed me was a woman carrying a strangely shaped purple weapon."

"What!" Ryuko grabbed him and began shaking him frantically, "What did you see?"

Pulling free from Ryuko's grasp, Shinjiro coughed and continued, taking a moment to remember where he left off, "So there I was, hiding beneath a cardboard box like some sort of spy, when a woman with a purple sword walked by. While I was unable to see her face, I noticed that she was wearing an entirely white outfit boots that went up to her thighs.

"Satsuki Kiryuin!" Ryuko growled and slammed her fist into the table, "I knew it was her who killed my dad!"

" This is awfully convenient Ichigo," Mugetsu warned.

"Yeah, I know." It was suspicious as hell that Shinjiro would just so happen to run into someone with a purple Scissor Blade, but also pin the blame on someone that could only be Satsuki. Still, despite all that Ichigo couldn't see what his angle was. Could Shinjiro be a spy for Satsuki and was simply trying to lead Ryuko astray or perhaps he actually did see the woman. Ichigo was leaning towards the former.

"Oh!" Mako gasped as she finally noticed Ururu. Grabbing the girl's hands and holding them to her chest, Mako gazed at Ichigo with wonder, "Ichigo, I didn't know you knew the new student! Would you like to be my friend Ururu?"

"Friend?" Ururu let Mako's question sink in deeply before nodding, "Yes. I would."

"Yay!" Mako leapt into the air in joy, "Mako Mankanshoku has made her fourth friend in two weeks. A new personal best!"

"Ichigo," Ururu let go of Mako's hands and turned towards him, "You dad told me that it would be nice if I were to spar with you. When do you want to get started?"

If Ryuko were to guess what Ichigo's reaction would be to Ururu's perfectly innocuous question, she would have guessed something along the lines of politely declining Ururu's offer. She, nor anyone else, expected Ichigo to back up in fear.

"Nope! No way!" Ichigo shouted as backed away from Ururu, "There's no way in hell I'm going to fight you again!"

"Really?" Ururu looked dejected, "But I brought my safety gear with me."

"That means nothing!" Ichigo pointed a finger accusingly at Ururu. Ryuko, who was confused about what was happening, noticed that Ururu didn't seem to be overly upset about Ichigo's rampant denial, "I haven't forgotten what you did to me last time Ururu, or shall I call you Little Miss Muffet? You nearly killed me with your freakish strength!"

"Nearly killed you?" Ryuko was now serious confused. There was no way that Ururu, who looked delicate enough to blow away in a strong breeze, was powerful enough to beat up Ichigo. Scratching her cheek and gazing suspiciously at Ururu, she asked, "Are you sure you're not making this up. Ururu doesn't look like she could hurt anyone."

"I'm stronger than I look," Ururu informed Ryuko before giving a small punch accompanied by a cute grunt.

"Nuh uh!" Mako crossed her arms in front of her body before reaching forward and hugging Ururu, "There is no way Ururu is a monstrous killing machine! Ichigo is just scared of fighting a girl! Isn't that right Shinjiro? Shinjiro?"

Ever since he noticed her, Shinjiro had been staring at Ururu, looking as if he was trying to recognize her from somewhere. When he noticed Mako calling out to him, he blinked and shifted his focus, "Oh, sorry Mako. I was just so entranced by Ururu that I lost track of time!"

"It's ok!" Mako nodded and pumped her fist, "Ururu entranced me as well!"

Ichigo looked back and forth before saying to Mako, "I bet you don't even know what entranced means."

"I do too," Mako defended vehemently, "It means not being conned into a crime by a policeman!"

"That's entrapment, Mako," Ryuko corrected. She couldn't understand how Mako could confuse those two words, "Anyway, I don't think - "

"We meet again, Ichigo Kurosaki, and far sooner than I anticipated."

"Satsuki Kiryuin..." Ryuko seethed as Satsuki, followed closely behind by her Elite Four, strolled towards them. Ignoring the throngs of students running away, bowing respectively or even doing both at the same time, Ryuko stood her ground defiantly, "Couldn't wait for our rematch, could you?"

Pointedly ignoring Ryuko, a small smirk appearing on her face when Ryuko became even angrier, Satsuki turned to address Ichigo more casually, "I must thank you for your help yesterday."

"Thank me?" Ichigo never would have guessed those words would grace Satsuki's lips, "For what?"

"If you hadn't fought me so valiantly yesterday, I would never have been able to discover where my current limitation is. It is due to your actions that I now know how far I can push myself and what I must do to improve. Do not assume our next fight will end with the same result."

"What makes you even think I'm going to fight you again?" Ichigo countered, catching a bit of surprise in Satsuki's expression, "I have no intention of ever fighting you again. Yesterday was just a one-time thing! Besides, I don't think someone like you would come all the way down here just to offer me a simple thank you. If you really wanted to do that, you could have just sent one of your henchmen with the message."

"Who are you calling henchmen?" Nonon Jakuzure squeaked, stamping her foot down several times in anger, "We are the Elite Four of Honnouji Academy! Who the hell do you think you are to demean us as such? I'm going to kick your ass, Strawberry!"

"Strawberry?" Ichigo sneered at Jakuzure, "Look who's calling the kettle black."

"What did you say?" Jakuzure shouted, "That's it! I'm going to kick your - "

"Do not fret, Jakuzure," Satsuki raised her hand calmly and while Nonon stopped what she was saying, she was still visibly angry with Ichigo, "Ichigo Kurosaki does have a point, after all. My purpose for coming here was not to engage in ideal chatter." Turning to Ururu, who had been talking with Mako for the last few minutes, she narrowed her eyes and asked, "And who are you supposed to be?"

"Ururu Tsumugiya," Ururu bowed respectfully to Satsuki.

"Indeed..." Satsuki's eyes narrowed before she snapped her fingers, "Sanageyama."

"Right, right," Uzu Sanageyama scratched the back of his neck as he stepped forward. Reaching for the bamboo sword strapped to the back of his Goku Uniform, he went over the plan Satsuki had told him just minutes before. He was to confront Ururu and determine who she really was. Satsuki did not like the fact that Ururu enrolled without her knowledge. Ichigo Kurosaki was something she could prepare for, given that she had three weeks before the year started to enact plans and preparations. She had nothing on Ururu and needed more information. That was where he came in.

"Look," Sanageyama sighed. He had problems fighting little girls, apart from Jakuzure of course. Say about him what you will, but Sanageyama was no bully. Investigating Ururu with his keen eyes, looking for any sign of a weapon or something, Sanageyama couldn't figure out what it was about Ururu that interested Satsuki so much. Still, he couldn't refuse a direct order, "I really don't want to fight you, so why don't you just do us all a favor and tell us who you really are?"

"Who I really am?" Ururu's eyes rolled upwards as she pondered the question. She knew who she was, and even told them, so why were they asking again? She couldn't understand the question, so she answered as truthfully as possible, "My name is Ururu."

Sanageyama let out a deep breath and glanced back at Satsuki. When he saw her subtly nod, he groaned and pulled out his bamboo sword, "I guess we have to do this the hard way."

"Picking on a new student just because she knows Ichigo? That's low, even for you, Satsuki Kiryuin!" Ryuko growled angrily and reached towards the pin on her Seki Tekko. Even if she had just met Ururu, Ryuko was not about to just sit back and allow her to get hurt.

" Such naïveté," Satsuki didn't know if Ryuko was simply ignorant of the world outside of her revenge or just ignorant in general. As much as Ryuko paints her as a heartless and ruthless leader who would gladly sacrifice her followers to win, in reality she had no intention of Sanageyama attacking Ururu. Satsuki had her suspicions about who Ururu truly was, but after the debacle involving Ichigo and his Kamui, which she had no knowledge of until he exposed Mugetsu to her, she was not about to make assumptions.

Before Ryuko could pull out the pin and activate Senketsu, she found a firm grip around her wrist stopping her. Following the arm and noticing that it was Ichigo, she was about to argue when she noticed a familiar look in his eyes. She had seen the look before, and it could only mean that Ichigo knew something about Ururu that she didn't.

"Don't," he warned, "Just watch. You'll understand just how strong Ururu is in a few moments."

"Get ready to taste my bamboo sword!" Sanageyama shouted as he ran towards Ururu. Despite his bluster and seemingly crazy attitude, Sanageyama had no intention of harming Ururu besides a few light taps on her body. He had practiced long enough with his Blade Regalia to stop his bamboo swords within an inch of a target. This meant he could swing his blade so quickly that the untrained eye couldn't follow it only to give his target a light tap on the head.

Sanageyama expected a few things to happen, ranging from Ururu attempting to dodge his blade all the way to taking a full hit without reacting. He never in his wildest dreams anticipated her simply reaching up and grabbing his bamboo blade out of the air in the palm of her hand.

Ururu looked down at the bamboo sword in her hand that Sanageyama was struggling to remove from her grip, "Why did you attack me?"

The calm way that Ururu asked him greatly disturbed Sanageyama. At that moment he knew that he had gotten in over his head against an opponent far stronger than himself. Before he could think of a plan to free his bamboo sword, Ururu gently squeezed her hand and shattered it into splinters of wood. As Sanageyama tried to rationalize what just happened, Ururu raised her hand and gently flicked him on the forehead, causing him to go tumbling backwards along the ground.

"Holy crap!" Ryuko shouted in shock. She was not the only one that was stunned at Ururu's superhuman strength. Satsuki and her Elite Four were of similar mind, which Gamagori's mouth hanging wide open and Inumuta frantically typing on his PDA in an attempt to find a logical source of Ururu's strength.

"That's Ururu for you," Ichigo sighed and rubbed his temple. Leave it to Ururu to complicate his life without even meaning to. He just hoped she had matured enough to not go into what he dubbed her 'killer mode' and pulverize Sanageyama into dust.

"How could a girl like that be so strong?" Ryuko, who was no lightweight herself when it came to fighting, paled in comparison to Ururu. Ignoring Mako, who was still entranced by Ururu, and Shinjiro, who was watching the fight almost religiously, she noticed Ichigo wasn't even shocked. In fact, he looked like he had seen this all before.

"I told you she was strong," he repeated in a half-bored tone, "You didn't believe me. Now if you don't mind, I have to stop Ururu before she kills Sanageyama."

Across the courtyard, picking himself off the ground, Sanageyama was beginning to think attacking Ururu was a mistake. How could someone that small and introverted have such phenomenal strength? He couldn't figure out where she was getting her power and to top it all off, Ururu had shattered his bamboo sword. Pushing himself back onto his feet, Sanageyama reached towards the collar of his Goku Uniform. Satsuki may have ordered him not to use his Blade Regalia, but if he didn't do something, there was a high chance that Ururu was going to kill him.

"I didn't want to have to use this," he muttered, "But you left me no - "

Sanageyama found himself brutally and painfully cut off as Ururu basically teleported over one hundred feet and grabbed him by his neck before lifting him off the ground with a single hand.

"I'm sorry, but you are a threat," Ururu informed Sanageyama sadly as her hand squeezed down tighter on his throat. As Sanageyama struggled to both breath and free himself from her grasp, Ururu pulled her left arm back and clenched her hand into a fist. She didn't want to have to end the fight like this, but Sanageyama had attacked her without provocation. Letting him leave would be dangerous in the long run, "Goodbye."

"That's enough, Ururu! Let him go!"

Ururu tilted her head to look at Ichigo, who was walking towards her. Lowering her fist slightly, but continuing to hold Sanageyama aloft in the air, she said, "But Ichigo..."

"I know he attacked you," Ichigo said as he approached her, "But you know he couldn't have hurt you even if he tried. Put Sanageyama down."

"Ok..." Ururu stared at the ground sadly. She hadn't even been at Honnouji Academy a day and she's already messed everything up. She wanted to leave what happened at Karakura High School behind her, but it seemed that no matter where she went, she always let those around her down. Releasing her grip on Sanageyama's neck, allowing him to collapse onto the ground in a breathless heap, tears began welling up in her eyes. She was just about to cry when Ururu felt a hand patting the top of her head.

"There's no reason to cry," Ichigo consoled her gently, "Granted, you kicked Sanageyama's ass pretty badly, but I don't think you did anything wrong."

Ichigo had experience dealing with this sort of thing. Karin may bottle up her emotions and act like the only adult in the family, but Yuzu always wore her emotions on her sleeves. Even though Ururu might have freakish strength and be able to kick his ass, she was still just a fifteen-year-old girl.

Feeling slightly better now that she knew Ichigo wasn't angry with her, Ururu noticed Sanageyama on the ground and began apologizing profusely, "I'm really sorry about what I did to you."

"Err... I... uh..." Sanageyama didn't know what to say to be honest. One moment he was getting his ass kicked by a girl and the next she was apologizing for kicking his ass. Sanageyama was confused as hell, so he said the only thing that came to mind, "... It's not a problem."

Ichigo would have turned and left with Ururu at that point if he didn't find his way blocked by Satsuki, who was staring alternatively between Ururu and himself.

"That was impressive, Ichigo Kurosaki," Satsuki didn't know how he managed to make Ururu stop, but somehow he had control over her. For a time Satsuki was convinced that she would have to intervene to stop Ururu from killing Sanageyama, but to her surprise, and interest, Ichigo was not only able to make Ururu stop but also apologize for her actions. Satsuki was getting more and more interested in Ichigo Kurosaki, "I suppose saving Sanageyama's life puts me in your debt?"

"No, it doesn't," Ichigo looked to the side and noticed Ryuko making her way towards him followed closely by Mako and Shinjiro. He had a feeling that he was going to have to explain what just happened in far more detail than he would have liked, "Saving someone's life shouldn't require being paid. I stepped in and stopped Ururu before she could seriously hurt Sanageyama because it was the right thing to do. There is no more to it."

As he began walking away with Ururu, he asked, "Did my old man say anything else to you?"

"Uh huh," Ururu nodded as she followed closely behind him, "But he said not to tell you anything since it would ruin his big plan."

Ichigo's shoulders slumped, "Of course that bastard would say something like that..."

Satsuki watched Ichigo leave with a puzzled look on her face. Just when she thought she was beginning to understand how Ichigo Kurosaki thought, he comes and proves her wrong. Sheathing Bakuzan back in its scabbard, she glanced down at Sanageyama, who was sitting on the ground recovering his strength.

"Did you learn anything from your defeat, Sanageyama?"

"Yeah," Sanageyama nodded and laid on his back, "Don't go picking fights with little girls unless I want to get my ass kicked. Did you get everything that who needed?"

"Yes. Your assistance was invaluable in collecting data about Ururu Tsumugiya, although I must apologize. I had not expected her to possess such strength or speed. If I had known, I would have given you permission to use your Blade Regalia from the very beginning."

"I have a question, Lady Satsuki," Still on his back, Sanageyama turned his head towards where Ichigo was arguing with Ryuko Matoi about something. Watching Ryuko throw her hands up into the air in defeat, he asked, "That girl, Ururu, is she the one that you warned me about?"

She shook her head, "She is not, but that only makes her more dangerous. Ururu Tsumugiya is a very dangerous variable, even more so than Ichigo Kurosaki or Matoi. Fortunately for us, she seems to have no inclination to stand against us."

"She looks up to Ichigo though," Sanageyama remembered how easily Ichigo had saved his life, "Couldn't he, you know, order her to attack you?"

"If there is one thing about Ichigo," Satsuki smiled softly and Sanageyama failed to notice that she had dropped Ichigo's last name, "It is that he is honorable. His saving of your life shows that he is someone that does not throw away lives callously. If he was, he would have simply stood back and allowed Ururu to finish you off."

"Yeah," Sanageyama popped off the ground with a groan and felt several of his bones creak, "So what's the plan now?"

"For now we do nothing," Satsuki turned and began walking back towards the academy, "Tomorrow is No-Late Day. I need you to help Gamagori set up the athletic obstacles. With the inclusion of Ichigo and Matoi, I think we'll need to up the difficulty of the course this year to weed out the weak from the strong."

Disco Inferno

**Well, here is Chapter 13. You might notice this chapter is slightly longer than the last one, which is a good thing. I've reached over 60,000 views! That is the most any of my stories have reached and now I'm hoping to make 100,000.*

**To be honest, I found writing the No-Late parts of this chapter to be incredibly boring, which is why I condensed all of Episode 4 into this chapter. Of course everything ends quite a bit differently than in canon, which is a good thing!*

**At the end of this chapter you will find the first of my omake segments titled "Kamui Tales." Expect nothing that is told in them to be canon. They are here just to be funny or to break the fourth wall. That is all.*

**Also, check out Kill el Kitsune by The Swordslinger . It is probably one of the only good Naruto / Kill la Kill crossovers on the site and I highly recommend that you read it. You won't be disappointed.*

---

...

---

Chapter 13 - Disco Inferno

Ichigo opened his eyes and immediately felt as if he had gone ten rounds with Zaraki Kenpachi.

Pulling himself out of bed, he yawned and looked out the window as he remembered what was so special that he had to get up before the crack of dawn. When Satsuki Kiryuin gathered all the students yesterday afternoon and announced that today was No-Late Day, Ichigo had immediately thought she was joking. That line of thought had quickly ended when Gamagori stepped forth and proceeded to bellow out directions on where to go and when to be there by.

"What the hell is wrong with this place?" Ichigo groaned and stood up. Whoever thought it was a great idea to have No-Stars, which he technically was one of, race through an obstacle course for a chance at a One-Star Goku Uniform was insane.

Glancing at his clock and seeing that it was nearly three in the morning, Ichigo grumbled and cursed Gamagori one more time before shuffled past a slumbering Mugetsu, a snot bubble expanding and contracting every few seconds from just below her collar, and into his kitchen.

Flicking on the lights, Ichigo's eyes took a moment to adjust to the abrupt change in brightness. Once he was able to see, he went to grab a bowl, passing by a smiling Nui Harime, who was watching him with a single blue eye full of mirth. In his tired state of mind it took Ichigo a moment, but after a few seconds he put together what he just saw. Quickly turning around towards where he had seen Nui, he frowned when he found the spot where he had been sure she was standing completely empty.

"It's too early in the morning for this crap," Ichigo muttered. He must be more tired than he thought if he was seeing things that weren't there. Shrugging it off, he opened his refrigerator and pulled out the carton of milk. As he turned around and kicked the door shut, Ichigo caught out of the corner of his eye Nui Harime lying on top of his fridge, her legs kicking aimlessly in the air and her chin propped on her hand.

Ichigo managed to take several steps before he quickly spun around and once again noticed nothing out of the ordinary.

"I'm losing it," Ichigo looked around his room, his eyes focusing intently on the various shadows in search of something, anything, that might explain what he was seeing. After more than a minute of fruitlessly searching for Nui, he gave up and sat down to hopefully enjoy his breakfast before leaving to go take part in the stupid No-Late Day.

"Do you really need to participate in No-Late Day?" Nui Harime asked from right next to Ichigo, "After all, it's not as if Satsuki can do anything to you."

"Ryuko and Mako are there, so I might as well go," Ichigo answered before his mind could inform his mouth that there shouldn't be anyone talking to him, "I don't trust... Satsuki... to..."

With his spoon held frozen in midair, Ichigo slowly turned his head and saw a smiling Nui inches from his face, " Bonjour Ichigo!"

"Gah!" Ichigo fell out of his chair. From on the ground, he pointed at Nui, who was watching him in amusement, and shouted, "How did you get in here?"

"Gosh you're silly!" Nui bobbed her head back and forth as she briefly pondered Ichigo's obvious question, "I can go wherever I want, and no one can stop me!"

"That's nice," Ichigo growled as he regained his composure. What was with people breaking into his room to talk to him? It started with Rukia right after he obtained her shinigami powers, then the rest of the shinigami and now he had this blonde haired girl smiling at him. How long had she been in his room waiting for him to awaken? Both his door and windows were locked, which meant she had gotten in without taking the obvious ways. Standing back on his feet, "But get the hell out of my room before I call the Disciplinary Committee... I can't believe I just said that."

"Why should I leave?" Nui stood on toes of her feet and leaned forward to stare more closely at Ichigo, a smug smile on her face, "It's not like I did anything wrong. Besides, those sticks in the mud will never be able to do anything to me. You should know that by now, Ichigo!"

As much as he wanted to think otherwise, the girl had a point. From both her display of strength the other night and her ability to break into his room without getting caught, it was clear she was not someone to screw around with. Deciding to find out what she wanted, he sighed and asked, "So what do you want with me?"

"There's no rush to talk," Nui twirled around and took a few steps away from him, "But if you must know, I decided to come and check up on you. I saw your fight against Satsuki was and was very impressed. Simply incroyable . But enough about that! I came here to tell you that I was not the one that attacked Kisuke Urahara. "

Ichigo narrowed his eyes as Nui basically admitted to knowing Kisuke, "How do you know about him?"

Nui smiled and propped a fist against her cheek, "You ask me such silly questions, Ichigo, but I like that you go directly to the point! Do I look like someone that can take down a fully grown man?"

"Yes."

"La vie est drôle!" Nui slid forward until she was leaning inches from Ichigo's face, "That is so untrue! While I am strong, I couldn't possibly have killed Kisuke Urahara. I was far too busy keeping an eye on you."

Ichigo's blood froze in his veins, "What?"

Nui smiled as she saw the gears in Ichigo's head click into place. He was quite smart, so she knew he would eventually figure out what she meant. That was one of the things she liked about him. Clapping her hands behind her back, she puffed out her cheeks, "I already told you that we're family, so it makes sense that I would check up on you, right? Of course I couldn't get too close, but I made sure to watch you when you were at school, out with your friends, walking your sisters home... I've seen it all."

"But that just makes you even more interesting!" Nui continued, ignoring Ichigo's shocked face. Raising a single finger in front of her lips, she whispered, "So perhaps it is time that I introduced myself. They call me Nui Harime, but let's keep that our little secret. If people find out I'm here, then I'm going to have to start killing them to keep my secret safe. You don't want the deaths of some humans on your hands, do you Ichigo?"

Ichigo went to say something when the door to his dorm, for the second time in less than a week, was blasted off its hinges. Standing in the smoking frame with her fist extended out from her body, was Ururu Tsumugiya.

Ichigo stared at the black haired girl in confusion. How had she known he was in trouble or, better yet, where he lived, "Ururu? What are you doing here?"

Clad in a standard No-Star uniform, Ururu never took her eyes off of Nui as she answered, "I sensed that you were in danger. I came as soon as quickly as I could."

"That super impossible!" Nui smiled menacingly at Ururu, "There's no way that you could have sensed I was here. I made sure of that long before introducing myself to Ichigo."

"You can say whatever you want," Ururu stood protectively in front of Ichigo as she answered, "But I was able to sense something wrong with Ichigo."

"Wait just one second," Ichigo mentally calculated how far away the One-Star Residential District where Ururu was staying was from his dorm. Coming to a conclusion that didn't make much sense, he asked, "How did you manage to get here so fast?"

"Please don't doubt my abilities, Ichigo," Ururu scolded, which was a weird turn of events for Ichigo coming from the usually meek girl.

"It doesn't matter how strong or fast you are!" Nui cheerfully pointed out, bringing a hand up to cover her mouth. Giggling softly with her single eye closed in mirth, she moved forward to touch Ichigo and prove her point, "After all, you're just a naked ape! You cannot even touch - "

There had been exactly eleven times in Nui's life that she had been truthfully shocked at a turn of events and not just trolling with people's emotions. Being tricked by Isshin Matoi into taking his Scissor Blade and losing an eye in the process was one of those times. Another was Kisuke Urahara distracting her long enough for someone to take the Kamui he was working on from his shop. The most shocking turn of events was that time when... actually that was a story for another time! The important thing is that what was currently happening to her raised that total to twelve.

"How odd..." Nui glanced at the hand clasped around her wrist in confusion. Her hand, which was inches from Ichigo's heart, was held firmly within Ururu's grasp. Attempting to pull herself free, quite an easy feat for someone like her, Nui found to her continuing interest that she couldn't do so.

"Please do not touch Ichigo," Ururu said gently, but Ichigo could detect the threat in the shy girl's tone, "If you continue to try and do so, I cannot guarantee your safety."

"That's so cute of you!" Nui beamed as she tried to pull her arm free, this time with more force, only to find Ururu's hand still firmly gripping her arm. How fascinating! Nui didn't know who Ururu was or where she came from, but after the events of the last two days, she really wanted to find out more about her, "You can actually restrain me, if only for a little bit. How strong of a human are you, anyway?"

"Strong enough to stop you," Ururu replied evenly, squeezing down on Nui's wrist with enough pressure to break a normal person's femur. If she was feeling any pain or discomfort from the pressure, the Grand Couturier was skilled at hiding it.

"Stop me you say?" Nui hummed to herself as she thought about what to do. Going with the easy route, she smiled and stuck out her tongue, "Stop me from doing what? I haven't done anything to Ichigo. All I came to do was introduce myself to my cousin! If anyone should be stopped, it should be you. I'm not the one threatening to kill someone."

"You're wrong," Ururu answered calmly. Without giving away any indications, her leg snapped out as she tried to kick Nui. The Grand Couturier's single blue eye widened in surprise as he attack approached her face before she spun cartoonishly over Ururu's leg, freeing herself in the process.

"How fun!" Nui flipped backwards and landed delicately on her feet near the entrance to Ichigo's dorm. With the same cutesy smile plastered on her face as always, she looked directly at Ururu, "I do hope we meet again, I look forward to crushing each and every hope and dream you have for interfering in my conversation with Ichigo! Goodbye Ichigo! I got things to do so don't be a stranger!"

Ichigo watched as Nui strolled out of his room, her giggles quickly fading away as she went. Waiting a moment before deciding to move, he ran to the door and stuck his head out only to find the hallway completely deserted.

"Where the hell did she go?" he asked himself. There was only one way up to his room, and that was the elevator at the far end of the hall. There was no way that Nui Harime, or whoever that girl was, could have made it to the elevator and left in the few seconds between leaving the room and Ichigo sticking his head outside.

"Damn," he cursed and leaned back inside his room. There was something off about the way Nui Harime moved and talked. The way she called Ururu a human implied that Nui was anything but one. Damn, why did he have to come to Honnouji Academy and complicate his life so much? Turning to walk back inside, Ichigo stopped and stared when he saw Ururu sitting at his table eating the bowl of cereal he had prepared for himself. When she saw him staring at her, Ururu mumbled a simple excuse with her mouth still full of food.

"I was hungry."

"Yeah, yeah," Ichigo waved off Ururu's comment and went to make himself another bowl. Sitting down at the table across from Ururu, he asked the question that had been bugging him ever since she showed up, "How did you know Nui was here?"

Ururu lowered the spoon in her hand before answering, "I don't know. I just remember waking up and feeling that you were in trouble."

"There's something off about Nui," Ichigo concurred, "Usually I can get a sense of a person's motives or feelings, but I got nothing from Nui. It's almost as if she doesn't have a reason for doing anything."

"I don't like her Ichigo," Ururu mumbled, "Stay away from her."

"You don't have to tell me twice," Ichigo sat back in his chair and sighed. Someone he just knew he was going to fight Nui someday, and at his current level he wasn't sure he could beat her even with Mugetsu's help. He needed to figure out a way to get stronger, but without his spiritual powers he had no idea on how to proceed. As an idea sprang to mind, Ichigo paused momentarily before asking, "If it came down to it, could you defeat Nui?"

"I... don't know," Ururu's gaze was cast downwards as she answered, "I was unable to tell much from her movements, but she was holding back a lot of her strength."

"That's what I figured," Ichigo would have said more, but he was distracted when sirens began going off in the distance. Freezing up as he realized what was happening, he looked at the clock and saw that it was almost ten minutes to four. Cursing as he leapt to his feet, Ichigo frantically began running around the dorm.

"Damn it! I'm going to be late!"

"Ichigo..."

"Oh man, I still haven't brushed my teeth or taken a shower or..."

"Um... Ichigo?"

"Huh?" Ichigo turned to Ururu, who had been calling his name,
"What is it Ururu?"

"Um..." Ururu pressed two of her fingers together nervously, "I can get you down to the starting line in less than five minutes."

"You can? That's great!" Ichigo, still clad in a pair of pajamas and a white t-shirt, began heading to his bedroom to retrieve Mugetsu,
"Just let me get - "

He was cut off as Ururu grabbed him and proceeded to leap out of his window into the early morning Honnou City air, but not before spinning around and kicking his door back into place. For the rest of the day, the various One and Two-Star students, still asleep in their own beds, would say that they had the same dream of someone screaming in fear.

---

...

---

Sitting on the guitar case holding her red Scissor Blade, Ryuko looked at Mako in confusion as she explained the concept of No-Late Day, "No-Late Day? What the hell is that?"

Mako took a deep breath and opened her mouth to answer, but was stopped as a spiked ship exploded out from behind some nearby houses. Ryuko and Mako watched in awe as it sailed directly over their heads before crashing to the ground on the other side of the street. Standing with his arms crossed in front of his massive chest and laughing manically the entire time, Ira Gamagori was completely unperturbed as he literally crushed dozens of people underfoot.

"I notice that you are confused by what is happening, Ryuko Matoi! Shall I give you a hint?"

"Oh it's you, that Elite Four jerk..." Ryuko stared daggers as Gamagori smirked down at her, "Gamagori bastard, right?"

"Hold your tongue, Ryuko Matoi!" Gamagori shouted angrily as Ryuko referred to him by Ichigo Kurosaki's insulting nickname, "I am Ira Gamagori, Disciplinary Committee Chair and a member of Honnouji Academy's Elite Four! You will do well to remember that!"

"Great, I know your name now," Ryuko yawned into her hand. No one should be forced to get up at four in the morning, "So why don't you just skip the introductions and explain No-Late Day already."

"Humph, very well then," Gamagori snapped his fingers and immediately one of the One-Star students lined up behind him handed Gamagori a megaphone. Turning it on and facing Ryuko, he began shouting so loudly that Ryuko and Mako's hair was being blown back, "No-Late Day is an event that occurs once a semester here at Honnouji Academy! In order to combat the rising tide of slackiness amongst you No-Star students, the Disciplinary Committee springs various surprises and obstacles to whip you into shape!"

"Slackiness?" Ryuko scoffed and placed her hands on her hips, "That's not even a real word."

"Yes it is!" Gamagori shouted indignantly and held out a small brown booklet, "If it is printed in the Honnouji Academy Disciplinary Guidebook, it must be the truth!"

"You wrote that, didn't you?" Upon receiving a nod of affirmation from Gamagori, Ryuko grinned, "So you're saying you didn't know slackiness wasn't a word when you wrote it?"

"Enough!" Gamagori shouted into the megaphone loudly enough to cause several nearby students to be blown away, "I will not stand for such slander from a slacker like you, Matoi! One more outburst from you and you will be immediately expelled! Am I clear?"

"Whatever," Ryuko sat down and waved dismissively, "Just get on with it already."

Gamagori narrowed his eyes, "At 4 AM, the sirens placed throughout the slums will go off, signaling the start of No-Late Day. All No-Star students are required to evade the various traps that have been built with all the technology available to the Disciplinary Committee and make it to Honnouji Academy before the first period bell rings at 8:30 AM! If they happen to be late, they are immediately expelled. What do you think of - WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU WEARING, RYUKO MATOI?"

Finally noticing Ryuko clad in extremely tight and form-fitting orange pajamas with white bunny head print, Gamagori shouted, "What kind of slacker outfit are you wearing?"

"What?" Ryuko looked down and immediately blushed and futilely attempted to cover herself, "My Kamui's being washed at the moment! It'll be dropped off any minute now!"

"Excuses! Excuses!" Gamagori declared bombastically, "All I hear from your slacker mouth are excuses, Ryuko Matoi! Attempting to go to school in such a slovenly outfit is degrading to woman everywhere, not to mention a mortal insult to Lady Satsuki! MORTAL INSULT!"

"Ah! Is it though?"

Gamagori took a step back in shock as Mako Mankanshoku seemingly vanished from where she was standing next to Ryuko and reappeared in front of him. As he looked around for any sign of how she did that, Mako puffed her cheeks out and began explaining.

"Ryuko can't get blamed for anything because she was asleep until only a couple of minutes ago! It makes perfect sense for someone sleeping to wear pajamas. That shouldn't be something to laugh at! Don't you wear pajamas when you go to sleep, Gamagori?"

Gamagori coughed nervously, "Uh... no, I sleep in the nude."

Mako wagged a finger at an embarrassed Gamagori, "You shouldn't do that! If you sleep in the buff, you'll be sure to catch all kinds of illnesses. If you were to get sick, then how would you be able to work to your full potential in an emergency such as a war, meteor impact or alien invasion? Please be sure to wear pajamas like a normal person when you sleep!"

Gamagori stared down at the much shorter Mako, "Tell me, what is your name?"

"I am Mako Mankanshoku! My favorite pair of pajamas has one Mt. Fuji, two hawks, and three eggplants printed on them!"

"You say you're Mankanshoku? I'll be sure to remember that in the future," Gamagori nodded sagely before turning his ire back to Ryuko, "Matoi! What you're wearing right now doesn't concern me anymore, but do you think you can reach the academy without the help of your Kamui?"

"I don't know." Ryuko grumbled sarcastically, "Do you think you can ask a question without sounding like a complete asshole?"

Gamagori's eyes glowed with a malevolent yellow light, "Such arrogance! As a member of the Disciplinary Committee I will not stand for such slander! Prepare yourself, Ryuko Matoi, for... wait a second, where is Ichigo Kurosaki?"

Even with the variety of different colored hair in the crowd of No-Star students, Gamagori could not find the annoyingly familiar crop of orange. This was not according to plan. Lady Satsuki had expressively said that Ichigo Kurosaki had to participate in No-Late

Day. His absence would jeopardize her, and by proxy his own, plans. Folding his arms menacingly, he glared down at the still oblivious Ryuko and asked, "Why is Ichigo Kurosaki not here?"

"What I am, his keeper?" Ryuko yawned and scratched her cheek, "Why do you care if Ichigo's not here? I thought you were looking for an excuse to expel him?"

"Ichigo Kurosaki will be expelled, have no doubt in your mind about that!" Gamagori hastily came up with an excuse. He found himself feeling quite proud of his imagination as he continued, "But being expelled in such a matter is unbecoming of someone like him. When Ichigo Kurosaki is to be expelled, it shall be a momentous occasion at the hands of Lady Satsuki, with the entirety of Honnouji Academy in attendance! Tell Ichigo Kurosaki to get here pronto!"

"How am I supposed to do that?" Ryuko asked sarcastically while motioning to her pajamas, "I don't have Senketsu and like hell I have a cell phone."

Gamagori was saved from having to come up with another excuse when he caught a glint of something in the sky. His eyes narrowing in confusion, he raised a hand to his forehead, "What in blue blazes..."

His comment was cut short as something flew downwards and crashed into the ground directly in front of the ship he was on, causing Gamagori to wobble as he tried to keep his balance. As the smoke cleared, Ururu calmly walked out and saluted him, "Ururu Tsumugiya, reporting for duty."

"Oh god..." Ichigo held his head as he stumbled out of the crater. With the world spinning around him, all he wanted to do was go back to bed, "Note to self - don't accept Ururu's offer to help ever again."

"Ichigo Kurosaki..." Gamagori stared at the orange haired youth with what could not be confused with anything but satisfaction, "You are just in time for the start of No-Late Day. I was beginning to think you were too scared to show your face. Now then, let us... where is your Kamui?"

Ichigo glanced down at his attire before pointing a thumb at an oblivious Ururu, "You can blame her for this. She dragged me out of my room before I was able to get dressed. For what possible reason would I want to go out looking like this?"

Much like Ryuko had been dragged out of Mako's house while Senketsu was getting cleaned, Ichigo had been forced to attend No-Late Day without the help of Mugetsu, who was probably still asleep in his room. But while Ryuko was clad in a pair of pajamas several sizes too small for her, exposed both the bottoms of her arms and legs as well as her midriff, Ichigo wore a simple sleeveless white shirt and a pair of sweatpants. The annoying thing was that he could feel the various stares of the female students ogling him. Tatsuki had managed to scare off every girl that had eyes on him back in Karakura Town, but Ichigo wasn't sure he could fend off admirers in Honnouji Academy, especially when nearly all of them wore Goku Uniforms that granted them supernatural powers.

Noticing Ryuko's gaze on him, which quickly shifted to the opposite direction, Ichigo asked Gamagori, "Do you mind if I go back to bed? I have much better things to do with my time, like sleeping or getting my teeth pulled."

"That is an interesting suggestion. Let me consider that for a moment." Gamagori adopted a pensive pose and began humming while tapping the detonator switch in his hand against his cheek. After about a minute, he stopped, looked down at Ichigo and pressed down on the button, "NOT A CHANCE!"

With that simple press of a button, there were a series of explosions as spiked ramps and staircases appeared throughout the city, "Beyond the Disciplinary Committee's greatest masterpiece! The Honnou City Mighty Guard!"

"Amazing!" Mako watched in awe as various traps and obstacles appeared in front of her eyes, "It's like the entire city turned into an amusement park! I've never seen something so awesome before! It certainly tops last semester's No-Late Day! Ah!"

Mako checked her watch fearfully, "We don't have much time before our first class starts. We gotta get moving!"

Ryuko blinked once before a smug grin adorned her face, "The people here really like to hear themselves talk. You ready for this Ichigo?"

"Nope."

"Huh?"

"This is completely stupid," Ichigo declared and emphasized his point by waving towards Gamagori, "Who in their right minds would allow someone as insane as this bastard to create a death course?"

"But we have to do this, Ichigo!" Mako cried and pointed to her watch. When Ichigo looked at the watch, his eye began twitching because instead of an actual watch, there was just a miniature Mako with her arms spinning around in circles, "If you don't participate, you'll be expelled and be forced to go back to Karakura Town and your normal life!"

It couldn't be that easy, could it? Ichigo thought it over for a moment, which was longer than he thought it would take, before deciding to stay. While he would have easily taken the choice of getting expelled if it meant going back to Karakura Town and away from all this craziness, he didn't put it past Satsuki Kiryuin to make up some excuse for him to remain at Honnouji Academy. Then there was Nui Harime. Ichigo didn't know what to make of her, but he wasn't willing to take any chances. If that girl could get inside his locked dorm room without being detected, then it was reasonable she could track him to Karakura Town.

"Ah, damn it! Fine." Ichigo scowled and stared up at Gamagori, "I'm ready for this stupid thing whenever you are, Gamagori bastard."

"That's right!" Ryuko shouted in agreement, pointing her red Scissor Blade at Gamagori, "These traps aren't going to slow us down at all!"

"As you wish!" Gamagori shouted and stamped his foot down. One day he was going to get Ichigo Kurosaki to address him with the proper respect, "All students commence commute! Forward, march!"

Ichigo and Ryuko were the first two out of the gate. Ichigo managed to get in the front of the pack by jumping on top of the crowd and stepping from head to head until he reached the front while Ryuko used her Scissor Blade as an impromptu battering ram and simply knocked the students out of the way.

"Ichigo! We can't get separated from Mako and Ururu!"

"I know," Ichigo glanced over his shoulder and saw Ururu and Mako in the front of the pack of No-Star students. While Mako looked like she was running for her life, and was as exhausted as she should be, Ururu appeared to be doing nothing more than a light job, "But Mako's with Ururu, so she'll be safe."

"We should slow down," Ryuko suggested between breathes, "And let them catch up."

Back at the finishing line, Ira Gamagori heard Ryuko's suggestion and grinned viciously as he pushed a special button labeled 'In Case of Protagonist Teamwork', "Not if I have anything to say about it, Matoi!"

Just as Ichigo and Ryuko ran through the first checkpoint, a large gate came crashing down, causing the students at the front of the pack to crash into it comically. When Mako saw the trap being activated, she closed her eyes and prepared for the worst, but was surprised when Ururu grabbed her by the hand and jumped out of the crowd of students onto a side street.

"I'm safe?" Mako felt around her body, making sure everything was in place, before she shouted happily, "I'm safe! Thank you for saving my life!"

"Don't mention it," Ururu said with a small smile on her face, "But we should keep moving. We don't want to be late after all."

"Ah! You're right!" Mako screamed and began running up a large flight of stairs, ducking and weaving around giant saw blades, "Let's get going Ururu! Nothing can stop a Mankanshoku when they have their eyes on the prize!"

---

...

---

"Do be sure to be on your best behavior, Uryu," Ryuken Ishida warned his son as he adjusted his tie for the third time in five minutes. Taking a drag from the cigarette in his hand, he breathed out deeply, "I do not want to have to tell you what will happen if you make a fool of yourself."

"Who do you think I am, Ichigo?" Uryu snorted and looked away from his father and out the elevator. He had honestly thought he would never come back to Revocs. After he managed to steal the Life Fibers and give them to Kisuke Urahara, he was sure that Revocs would send someone after him, but after months passed with nothing happening, he grew complacent. That was when he heard that Kisuke had been attacked and was now missing, "I don't know why you brought me with you to one of your business meetings if all you're going to say is how much I'm going to disappoint you."

"What makes you think I was talking about my reaction to your behavior?" Ryuken glanced at Uryu and, noticing the puzzled look on his son's face, continued, "I was warning you to be on your best behavior because if you don't, Ragyo Kiryuin will most likely kill you."

"What?" Uryu thought his father was joking.

"Ragyo is not a woman to be trifled with," Ryuken said in a tone that someone discussing the weather might use, "She's a highly motivated woman who will do anything in her power to advance her goals. Even I would be hesitant to confront her after getting on her bad side. To put it in perspective, take what you know about the hierarchy of power in the Soul Society and throw that away. The only person on Earth that could possibly stop Ragyo after she sets her eyes on something she wants is your friend Ichigo's father, and even that is a gamble at best."

Uryu didn't know what to say. He had heard from Ichigo that his father was a shinigami able to fight evenly against Aizen Sosuke, but what was so special about him? As the elevator dinged, signaling their arrival at their destination, Uryu went to step out only to find his father's arm blocking his path.

"Follow my lead and do not say a word unless spoken to," Ryuken warned his son, "Despite whatever her appearance may be, Ragyo is not someone to underestimate nor should you underestimate the Grand Couturier if she happens to be at the meeting. You may not believe it, but as your father I do care for your wellbeing. Now come, we have arrived."

The two of them stepped out of the elevator and was immediately confronted by Ragyo's personal secretary and assistant, Rei Hououmaru. The dark skinned woman looked at Ryuken before shifting her gaze to Uryu.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Ishida," Rei greeting Ryuken politely and shoot his hand, "Lady Ragyo has been expecting you, but we did not know you would bring company."

"This is my son," Ryuken answered as stoically as Rei, "I brought him today so that he may gain experience in the field of business. I trust that with the topic of today's discussion there will not be any issues with my decision?"

"Of course not," Rei motioned with her arm for them to follow her, "Your meeting with Lady Ragyo contains nothing proprietary nor confidential. I am sure she will not mind having your son observe the meeting."

"Thank you," Ryuken stubbed out his cigarette on the ashtray near the entrance to Ragyo's office. One thing he had learned over his various interactions with the woman awaiting him was that she did not like anyone smoking in her presence, "Come, Uryu. We should not keep Ragyo waiting any longer."

As Rei opened the door to Ragyo's office, Uryu heard a smooth and silky voice speak and immediately broke out in a cold sweat.

"It is good to see you, Ryuken Ishida," Ragyo Kiryuin addressed the businessman with a tone as close to respect as she would ever give. While to her Ryuken may be a normal human, she had to respect the man's ability to ruthlessly dominate the medical industry with the same efficiency as she did clothing, "And I see you brought your son. What brought on this development?"

"I don't think that is relevant to our meeting," Ryuken answered calmly, "But I suppose you won't be satisfied until you receive an answer. I brought Uryu so that he may experience how I conduct business with my clients. Books are one thing, but actually experiencing the world at large does more for personal evolution."

"Indeed it does," Ragyo turned to Uryu, "Tell me, son of Ryuken, how did you find the experience at Revocs? Was it everything you hoped and dreamed it would be?"

Remembering what his father instructed him to do just minutes ago, Uryu coughed and adjusted his glasses, "I found the experience to be very illuminating. While my father permitted me to work in the local branch of his hospitals, it was completely different working at Revocs. I am gracious that you allowed me to work here for as long as I did."

"How polite," Ragyo sat down in her chair and propped her cheek on her hand, "And so well behaved. If my Satsuki was anything like your son."

Ryuken glanced around Ragyo's office and noticed something missing. It hadn't hit him initially, due to the fickle nature of who he was looking for, but now that he had time to think about it, it was quite obvious. The Grand Couturier was nowhere in sight. While that would have normally been a good thing, Ryuken did not like standing in the same room as the Grand Couturier, her absence greatly alarmed him. She had been at every single one of his meetings with Ragyo, so her absence was not a good sign.

"I do believe that is enough about our personal lives," Ryuken said softly to gain Ragyo's attention without seeming rude, "Shall we get down to business."

Ragyo motioned for Ryuken to take a seat, "But of course. Have you read through my proposal?"

"I did," Ryuken nodded, "Several times in fact."

"And?"

"Before I make my decision, I have a question," Ryuken folded his hands in front of his mouth, "What will be the cost of supplying my hospitals with Revocs-brand clothing?"

"Right down to the crux of the matter as always," Ragyo chuckled, and it was not a sound that Uryu would want to hear a second time, "As head of the Ishida Conglomerate, which controls most hospitals in Asia and Europe, you are poised to influence and benefit the lives of half of humanity. I wish to be a part of that whichever way I can. Therefore I have decided to extend to you a very generous offer. Each doctor, nurse, and staff member at each hospital will receive Revocs uniforms, which will repair small tears on their own and will repel blood and other hazardous liquids and materials. All of this will be completely free of charge."

"Free of charge?" Ryuken might have looked composed, but Uryu knew his father was greatly disturbed by something. It wasn't very apparent; a slight twitch of the man's finger, but it was enough to know something was wrong, "Free is such a broad term. A man such as myself cannot presume to think my definition is the same as yours. Please explain what you mean."

Ragyo leaned back in her chair, "I am referring to cost. What else could I possibly mean?"

"Free to one person may not be to another," Ryuken narrowed his eyes and flicked his wrist, "Shall we discuss what happened during your supposed partnership with Sears-Macys, which controlled the entirety of the American apparel market until they signed a partnership with Revocs? Within a matter of months, a series of lawsuits and whistleblowers brought the company down, leaving your company free to move in and corner the market, as per the agreement you signed."

"Surely you don't mean to imply that I had something to do with the rapid collapse of Sears-Macys?" Ragyo smirked and steeped her fingers in front of her face.

"Of course not," Ryuken shook his head, "Such a notion would imply that you possess abilities that are far beyond that of a human. I am simply expressing concern for the nearly two million people working at my hospitals and clinics that would be affected by such a monumental decision."

"I assure you Ryuken that my offer is nothing but beneficial," Ragyo's eyes glanced over to Uryu, "But I feel as if you made your decision long before you arrived."

"Indeed," Ryuken chuckled dryly, "Your offer is quite generous and I could see the benefits of such an arrangement, but I'm afraid I will have to decline your offer. The current apparel cost of my hospitals is nowhere near the point where a complete change of brand would be necessary, even if it were free. I hope you have a good day. Come, Uryu, we are leaving."

Uryu said nothing as he followed his father. As he left Ragyo's office, he could not help but think that he had turned his back on someone ready and willing to kill him. The look that Rei Hououmaru gave them as they walked towards the elevator did not help. When the elevator doors closed, separating Uryu from the two people he did not want to fight, he turned to ask his father what just happened only for Ryuken to speak first.

"Be on your guard, Uryu," Ryuken's eyes were narrowed, "We will not be able to leave Revocs unharmed."

Uryu could sense something wrong, "What are you talking about?"

"Ragyo is not one to take rejection well," Ryuken reached into his suit and pulled out several sewing needles, each of which was emblazoned with the Quincy symbol, "Do not give me that look. Your Quincy powers will not work on someone like Ragyo or anyone like her. If we are to get out of here alive and with our minds intact, we need to fight at her level. When the doors open, I will provide a distraction while you run to the car. Do not try to assist me. I may not have known Ragyo for as long as Isshin Kurosaki, but I know her well enough to realize she had no intention of allowing me to leave no matter what my answer to her proposal was."

"Are you crazy?" Uryu raised his voice to his father, "I'm almost as strong as a shinigami captain! I can - "

"Do nothing but die needlessly," Ryuken interrupted harshly, "If what awaits us in the lobby is who I think it is, it will take someone the likes of Zarakii Kenpachi's level to at least slow her down. You would not be able to do anything more than draw her attention. Once you have her attention, she will easily and painfully kill you. That is all there is to it."

"What awaits us?" Uryu wanted answers to what the hell was going on. What on Earth could make his father, a man whose picture was in the dictionary right next to the words stoic and unemotional, panic?

When the elevator doors opened, Uryu and Ryuken noticed the lobby, which had been packed to the brim of Revocs employees and managers, was now dead empty. Empty, of course, for one person standing in the middle of the exit and facing them, a large smile on her face.

"It seems I was correct in how Ragyo would confront us," Ryuken removed his glasses and handed them to Uryu, "Watch these for me. I will be coming back for them."

Uryu looked in worry at his father's glasses before turning to the blonde haired girl across the lobby, "Who is she?"

"She, my son..." Uryu did not fail to notice that Ryuken called him 'his son.' That could only mean that Ryuken was serious about what was to come, "... is the Grand Couturier and is someone that should not be trifled with. If I do not go all out against her from the very start, I will die. Now go."

Uryu heard a girlish giggle in response to his father's declaration and barely caught a glimpse of purple before the entire lobby exploded around him.

---

...

---

Ryuko stared daggers at the obstacle blocking her path. The wall stretched upwards over two hundred feet starting at the base of the slums all the way to the One-Star Residential District. If that were all it was, Ryuko wouldn't have a problem with it. The issue was that there were plastic explosives instead of plastic handholds. That meant she had exactly ten seconds to move before she was blasted off the wall. While that had already happened to her twice, she had managed to save herself by stabbing her red Scissor Blade deep into the metal wall and was using it as an impromptu seat.

"The Disciplinary Committee sure went all out on this thing."

"Tell me about it," Ichigo grumbled from next to Ryuko. Suppressing a yawn, he added, "How the hell did Satsuki manage to build this death course overnight?"

"Beats me," Ryuko shrugged, "But it just makes me want to kick her ass even more."

It was amazing how much Ryuko learned about her Scissor Blade on the fly. While she knew she could shrink it down to the size of a normal pair of scissors, knowing that she could also expand it to double its length opened up various possibilities. Now all she needed was a name for the technique... Decapitation Mode sounded appropriate. After all, the Scissor Blade expanded into a sword that looked like it could sever Life Fibers with but a flick of her wrist.

"This is crap," Ichigo groaned and leaned back before quickly realizing there was nothing to lean against. After recovering his balance, he said, "What the hell does Satsuki have against me? She knows she can't expel me, but she puts me through No-Late Day? What is she up to?"

"Perhaps the great Satsuki Kiryuin has a crush on you?" Ryuko smiled mischievously at Ichigo, who was about to deny it before seeing the look on her face. Waving off Ichigo's annoyance, Ryuko added, "I'm kidding. You thought I was serious? I don't think Satsuki even knows what love or compassion feels like."

"You're really funny," Ichigo muttered sarcastically.

"So now that we're stuck here for the time being..." Ryuko was temporarily cut off as a massive explosion sounded off nearby. Staring at the section of the death course that the explosion originated from, she could see several No-Stars being ejected into the atmosphere after stepping on booby trapped panels, "Anyway, since we have nothing to do for at least a few minutes, perhaps we should get to know each other a bit better."

"What?" Ichigo stared at Ryuko suspiciously, "Is this really the time for that?"

"Get you're mind out of the gutter!" Ryuko shouted and punched Ichigo hard in the shoulder. Rubbing her sore knuckles, although she did manage to hurt Ichigo in the process, she grumbled, "I wasn't asking about that . I'm curious to know more about you."

Ichigo sighed, "Such as?"

"How you managed to piss off Satsuki Kiryuin so much," Ryuko emphasized her point with an exaggerated waving of her arm, "There's something about you that really annoys her, not to mention that you were able to go toe to toe with her using Mugetsu."

"I'm not that special," Ichigo folded his arms and frowned, "And it's not like I try and find trouble. Trouble always seems to find me. I just wanted to have a normal school year, but as I expected I got drawn into some weird crap. I didn't even know about Life Fibers, Goku Uniforms or Kamui a month again."

"Really?" Ryuko didn't know anyone that wasn't aware, at some level, of what Life Fibers were. When she was travelling around the Kanto region, Ryuko overheard many people talking about what Life Fibers were, with theories ranging from simply a name for a top secret Revocs clothing line to some type of government invention. She didn't know anyone that didn't know what they were.

"Have you ever been to Karakura Town?" When Ryuko shook her head, Ichigo continued, "It's probably the most normal place in Japan. There's none of this Life Fiber crap. Nothing was out of the ordinary and people didn't have clothing that gave them superpowers. The worst we had there was a fake ghost hunter that had a really annoying and stupid laugh."

"Sounds nice," Ryuko sighed wistfully, "Perhaps I'll visit after I find out why my dad was killed. I spent most of my childhood in boarding schools, never fitting in with the other kids and thinking my dad didn't care for me."

"Well, you're not going to get any closer to finding out anything sitting around here," Ichigo argued and pointed to something in the distance, "Look."

Ryuko followed Ichigo's line of sight and saw a series of explosions rocking the One-Star Residential District, "Are those explosions?"

"Yes," Ichigo stood on top of the Scissor Blade and stretched his shoulder. Raising a hand to his forehead and staring at the remaining distance he had to climb, he added, "We should get out of here before Gamagori starts wondering where we are."

"Why should I care what he thinks?" Ryuko countered and propped her chin in the palm of her hand, "He wants to expel me, remember?"

"I remember," Ichigo leapt towards the nearest handhold. After quickly getting his grip, he began climbing up the wall at a rapid pace, but not before adding, "But I really don't want him to wonder what's taking us so long. He might just decide to come and check up on us."

Ichigo had a valid point. As much as she despised No-Late Day, Ryuko didn't want to give Satsuki or any of her minions an excuse to expel her. Crouching on top of her Scissor Blade, she spun around once, removing the blade in the process, and latched onto two handholds. Panicking slightly when her left hand slipped off, Ryuko quickly recovered and followed after Ichigo.

They reached the top of the wall after only a few minutes of intense and nerve-wrecking climbing. After Ichigo climbed over the top of the wall and reached the relative safety of a completely horizontal surface, he turned and offered Ryuko a hand. Both of them, completely exhausted from the climb, lay on their backs and stared at the sky.

"Damn it..." Ryuko huffed tiredly, "I don't ever want to do that again."

"Ugh," Ichigo groaned in response, "Knowing Gamagori, he has another trap waiting around the corner."

"Screw... him..." Ryuko cursed in between breaths.

As the two of them lay on the ground, the sound of a helicopter approaching could be heard. They barely had a moment to consider what was happening before a Revocs helicopter ascended over the lip of the wall and turned to face them.

"I must congratulate you two on completing the Wall of Despair," Sanageyama shouted over the din of the whirring helicopter blades. Hanging out the side of the helicopter, one hand grabbing a handle and the other his bamboo blade, he smirked haughtily at his exhausted targets, "But did you think No-Late Day would be a simple physical challenge? Lady Satsuki wants to test both your physical and mental aptitude. Prepare yourselves! The true Mighty Guard has only just begun! Fire!"

At Sanageyama's signal, the helicopter's pilot fired all eight of the helicopters missiles at Ichigo and Ryuko, trails of winding smoke expanding behind them as they flew towards their targets.

"Shit!" Ichigo curse as he sprung to his feet and ducked under a missile.

"Can you feel the pressure?" Sanageyama laughed as Ichigo and Ryuko attempted to avoid being hit, "Let this be a lesson to you. Do not mess with the Elite Four!"

"Is he trying to kill us?" Ichigo yelled over the din of exploding missiles.

"What the hell do you think?" Ryuko answered sarcastically as she used her Scissor Blade to cut a missile in half lengthwise. As the two sides of the missile exploded on either side behind her, she growled and began running away, "We can ask him later, but for now let's just run away!"

---

...

---

While Ryuko and Ichigo were having extended difficulty reaching Honnouji Academy, courtesy of Sanageyama's contributions to Honnou City's Mighty Guard as well as his revenge against Ichigo for the humiliation he suffered the previous day, Ururu and Mako were have trouble of an entirely different kind.

"Faster! Must go faster!" Maiko Ogure shouted hysterically as she pointed out the window with her good arm at the giant spiked ball chasing after them. It didn't make sense how a ball could be rolling uphill towards them.

"I'm trying!" Mako blubbered as she floored the gas and shifted gears, causing the bus to lurch forward, "But I don't know how to drive stick!"

After they got separated from Ichigo and Ryuko due to Gamagori's interference, Mako and Ururu were forced to follow the course as it sprung hidden traps and obstacles on the two girls. Surprisingly enough, the obstacles and traps they encountered weren't that difficult or dangerous. Mako remembered Ururu stepping on a hidden panel and getting a giant boxing glove to the face. She couldn't stop laughing when Ururu just continued to stand where she was completely uncaring about everything before ripped the boxing glove off its spring and throwing it at a nearby One-Star Observational Stand.

"Then learn!" Maiko screamed as the spiked ball grew closer and closer. Scrambling towards the front of the bus, she pushed Mako aside and took the wheel. Punching her hand through her cast, she declared passionately, "Move over. I'll drive!"

Gripping the wheel and pulling hard to the right, Maiko caused the One-Star armored bus to swerve violently out of the way just as the spiked ball passed through and continued up the road before bouncing off the edge and falling to the slums below. As the bus skidded to a stop, Maiko breathed heavily and gave Mako a thumbs-up, "That's how you drive a bus!"

"Wow..." Mako had stars in her eyes and grabbed Maiko's shoulders, "You have to teach me how to drive like that."

"I'm sorry to interrupt..." Ururu meekly said from in the back of the bus. Throughout the entire ordeal with the spiked ball, she had been sitting in the very back of the bus without a care in the world. Pointing out the window, Ururu continued, "But it appears that we have visitors."

Maiko and Mako looked outside and, true enough, relatives of the One-Star students that lived in the area were beginning to gather around the bus.

"Do you think they're here to help?" Mako asked innocently.

"No! Hang on!" Maiko shouted and floored the gas pedal. As the tires of the bus screeched to life, the One-Star citizens began pulling out different types of weaponry ranging from handguns to RPGs and opened fire on the bus. It was only due to the fact that the One-Star bus was armored to the teeth that the three girls managed to get out of the trap alive and uninjured.

"It should be smooth sailing from here," Maiko turned her head around and grinned, "The armor on this bus should be able to stop all that small caliber fire. All that's left to do is go through the Two-Star Residential District and we're home free."

"That was a close one," Mako wiped sweat off her forehead. Sitting down on a bullet-ridden couch, Mako's face lit up, seeming to remember something important. Reaching into her No-Star uniform, she pulled out a cloth-covered box and turned to Ururu, "Mom said that you should eat more, Ururu, since you're all skinny and thin. Here, have half of my breakfast!"

"Really?" Ururu tilted her head to the side and took what Mako was offering her. Opening the container and seeing the steamed rice, natto and nori stacked neatly inside, Ururu smiled softly, "Thanks Mako, but I already had breakfast."

"So did I!" Mako answered proudly as she dove into her food, "But we're growing women! We need all the calories and nutrients that we can get if we want to grow up tall and beautiful!"

"Ok," Ururu made a show of eating Mako's food. She was not really hungry, but she didn't have it in her to say no. As Mako was busy eating, Ururu stared at Maiko. She couldn't explain why, but she was getting a bad vibe from the crippled girl. Ururu had learned early on to trust her senses and if they were telling her that Maiko was not to be trusted, she was going to believe them, but she couldn't just attack her. Despite whatever her motives may be, Maiko was still just a normal human. If she tried to subdue her, Ururu wasn't certain she wouldn't injure Maiko further.

"I have a question," Mako looked happily at Ururu, her breakfast already fully devoured, "How do you know Ichigo?"

"How do I know Ichigo?" Ururu's mouth was slightly agape as she thought about the question, "I helped train him to become stronger. That's all."

"Train him?" Mako looked perplexed as she continued, "I know you're super strong and fast, but how could you be Ichigo's sensei? You're so young and - "

Mako was cut off as Maiko slammed on the brakes and harshly turned the bus. As Mako flew forward, only saved from crashing into the side of the bus by a timely intervention from Ururu, Maiko shouted back, "Hold on to your hats! It's going to be a bumpy ride. What the... oh, come on already!"

Ururu and Mako looked in the direction Maiko was pointing and saw several turrets on the roofs of nearby buildings, all of which were trained on them.

"Holy moly!" Mako shouted in fear. Waving her arms around dramatically and in a panic, she turned to Ururu, "Save us with your super powers!"

"Super powers?" Ururu had never thought of her abilities like that. Smiling at the comparison, she stood up and nodded, "Ok, but please keep your head down. I don't want you to get hurt in the crossfire."

Mako tilted her head in confusion as Ururu reached down her No-Star uniform and pulled out the impossibly large and repurposed for combat against the living, Senren Bakusatsu Taihou Mark II.

"Wow..." Mako stared at the weapon in Ururu's hands with what could only be described as awe, "What in the seven kingdoms is that?"

Ururu's favored weapon of choice for fighting enemies at a distance was the Senren Bakusatsu Taihou. The problem with the original model was that the missiles and rockets fired from it weren't very effective against anything stronger than an average hollow. If she tried firing it at a shinigami or arrancar, they would easily be able to avoid the missiles and counterattack.

The Mark II was designed by Kisuke to help alleviate some of those issues. While it was the same general shape and size as the original model, it weighed nearly four times as much as the original. To a normal human such a change would make the already heavy weapon impossible to wield, but Ururu found no difficulty from the increased weight. The added weight had a purpose, though Kisuke didn't tell Ururu or anyone about it. During his research involving Life Fibers, Kisuke took the Senren Bakusatsu Taihou and weaved Life Fibers throughout its construction, leading to nearly a ten-fold increase in the amount of power and destruction it was able to cause.

Ururu glanced at her cloth-covered weapon, "This is Senren Bakusatsu Taihou. Please get down. I'm not sure how big the recoil is going to be."

When Mako nodded and ducked down, her hands covering her hair, Ururu reached up and punched a hole clear through the roof of the bus. Sticking her head out of the newly formed hole, Ururu looked around for the nearest turret. Once she spotted it, she raised the Senren Bakusatsu Taihou, closed her right eye, and fired.

Only one missile left the weapon, but the recoil was enough to cause the bus to swerve slightly to the right. The missile flew towards the nearest roof before exploding into a myriad of smaller projectiles that all homed in on the various turrets and took the emplacements out in one enormous and beautiful cacophony of colors and purple stars.

Mako stared at the colors with stars in her eyes, "How pretty..."

From the driver's seat, Maiko's reaction was identical to Mako's, but for an entirely different reason. Her whole plan had been to intercept Ryuko Matoi during No-Late Day and gain her trust before stealing her Kamui for its magnificent power. Not only did she not end up running into target, but she also ran into two of her friends, one of which was apparently a supernaturally strong freak of nature. Her plans were in tatters and she didn't even reach Phase Two yet!

"If you're all done back there, I could use some covering fire on our flanks!" Maiko needed to keep her cover as a poor and injured No-Star student for just a little longer. There were still a few contingences she could play, "Those turrets aren't all Lady Satsuki has planned for us!"

"Right," Ururu nodded and stuck her head back outside. With the wind blowing her pigtails back, she looked up as several unmanned drones, a gift from the Aerial Warfare Club, began heading towards their position. Raising Senren Bakusatsu Taihou back onto her shoulder, she took a deep breath and fired.

---

...

---

Ichigo and Ryuko stumbled into Honnouji Academy with almost half an hour to spare. Their bodies were covered in various burns and scraps, their clothing was torn and they were completely exhausted, but they had made it in time.

"Ichigo Kurosaki... and Ryuko Matoi." Standing to the side with a clipboard in one hand and a pen in the other was Ira Gamagori. Wearing a pair of reading glasses that made him look smarter than he actually was, he checked their names off the list in his hands, "Both of you are on time. I am thoroughly surprised. Nevertheless, congratulations on completing No-Late Day! You two are among the few No-Stars with the grit and determination to complete the challenge on time and relatively uninjured! Kudos to you both!"

"Shut up you frog bastard," Ichigo cursed as he continued to walk past Gamagori without stopping, "I don't care what you say or do to me, but I'm going back to bed."

"Not so fast..." Gamagori warned, "First period begins in half an hour. That gives you enough time to get changed. I will not allow you to go to class dressed like that!"

"Oh shut up," Ichigo retorted and groaned. Why did Honnouji Academy have to be so freaking insane? It wasn't just the fact that everyone seemed to be in the pocket of Satsuki Kiryuin. It was also that everything seemed to be bordering on the cusp of the impossible. Goku Uniforms and Kamui that granted the wearer supernatural strength and durability... if Ichigo hadn't experienced it with his own eyes, he would have thought it was bullshit.

"Hey, did Mako or Ururu make it through yet?" Ryuko tried to look at the clipboard, but Gamagori angrily moved it away.

"Mankanshoku and Tsumugiya..." Gamagori leafed through the pages and pages of students before coming onto the two names he was looking for, "No. Both students have yet to make it to the academy and with only twenty five minutes remaining, their chance of staying enrolled is quite slim."

It was at that moment, tempted by either fate or Gamagori's words, that a loud explosion sounded from just outside the entrance to Honnouji Academy before a One-Star bus, or what was left of one, flew through a hole in the walls surrounding the academy.

Ichigo stared at the flying vehicle, his face the epitome of skepticism, "What the..."

"... hell?" Ryuko finished. Noticing something strange about the bus, she narrowed her eyes and made out a familiar crop of hair, "Wait a second... is that Mako?"

"What did you say? MANKANSHOKU!" Gamagori shoved Ichigo aside and glared at the flying bus. It wasn't that he cared about who was on it so much that it was breaking enough of Honnouji Academy's rules to give him a conniption, "Mankanshoku! Honnouji Academy transportation vehicles are not to ascend more than ten feet above the ground and I know you are not wearing your seatbelt! Don't make me come up there and get you!"

"I'm sorry Gamagori!" Mako's tear-filled voice echoed through the air as she stuck her head out the window, "But I'm not the one driving this crazy thing!"

"That is not a legitimate excuse!" Gamagori began listing off all the other rules Mako was breaking, but was cut off when the bus crashed into the middle of the academy courtyard. After a moment or two of nothing but silence, the door to the bus was blasted off its hinges, courtesy of a kick from Ururu, and Mako leapt out, closely followed by Ururu and another girl who was tied up and unconscious.

"I'm all ok!"

"Glad to see you're alright Mako," Ryuko sighed in relief that Mako wasn't injured. Noticing the third student, she asked, "Who's that?"

"Huh?" Ururu looked at the unconscious Maiko before addressing Ryuko's question, "Oh. She said she's the Head of Trap Development for the Disciplinary Committee. I wasn't really paying attention, but when she tried to attack us I was forced to defend myself."

"Maiko Ogure!" Gamagori's voice was loud enough to wake the unconscious girl. As Maiko sputtered back to the waking world, she looked around and cowered once she saw Gamagori, "What are you doing outside?"

"I... was... um..." Maiko desperately tried to think of an excuse but her mind just couldn't come up with anything.

"NO EXCUSES!" Gamagori appeared to triple in size as he rained down his punishment on the poor girl, "You were supposed to remain within the control room and keep an eye on the various traps and obstacles throughout the course. What reason could you possibly have for leaving your station to participate in No-Late Day? Did you have an ulterior motive?"

"What?" How had Gamagori figured it out? There was no evidence that she had done anything wrong, "How could you think that? I was participating to simply make sure everything was working correctly! As the designer of most of the traps, I knew my way around them and how they should work. I couldn't afford for them to be broken or nonfunctioning! I was just taking the initiative!"

"That makes perfect sense!" Gamagori nodded sagely, "But I am no fool. On the miniature scale model of Honnou City in the control room I found the evidence I need to charge you with treason against Lady Satsuki! Maiko Ogure! You are expelled from Honnouji Academy henceforth!"

As Maiko collapsed to a sobbing heap on the ground, Gamagori strolled past the four remaining students. With his arms folded behind his back, he turned to Ichigo, "I realize that I may have kept you four here due to my position as the Disciplinary Committee Chair. For that I apologize. I will grant the four of you an extension of fifteen minutes to get to class before being expelled. Do not make my leniency unnecessary."

With his honor intact and the rules of Honnouji Academy enforced once more, Ira Gamagori walked towards Honnouji Academy with his mind free of troubles. Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi both managed to get to the academy before time ran out, which meant that he had fully completed his objective. He needed to inform Lady Satsuki that they did so without the use of their Kamui. Satsuki had designed the obstacles Ryuko and Ichigo were to face to require the use of Kamui to survive. The fact that they did so without Kamui implied that the Mighty Guard just wasn't hard enough.

"Ok," Ichigo rubbed his forehead and groaned, "Now that my morning is officially ruined, I'm going to go to my room and take a shower. I'll catch up to you guys later."

"Bye Ichigo!" Mako waved vigorously to Ichigo before turning to Ryuko, "How was No-Late Day Ryuko? Did you enjoy it? Was it fun? Was it? Was it?"

"Calm down, Mako," Ryuko had to press down on Mako's head to stop the girl from bouncing around. Once her friend appeared to relax slightly, Ryuko looked around and asked, "By the way, where's your dad with Senketsu?"

"Oh!" Mako smacked her head as she remembered something important, "Dad dropped off Senketsu a while ago! It was so strange that just as he was about to hand over your uniform, he suddenly swerved to the left and ran smack dab into a telephone pole! You should be happy that Ururu managed to somehow grab Senketsu along the way."

"Ururu has Senketsu?" Ryuko leaned to the side and looked at Ururu, "Are you sure?"

"Ururu!" Mako called out to her new friend, "Can you please give Ryuko her uniform back?"

"Oh," Ururu reached down the front of her No-Star uniform and pulled out a coat hanger with Senketsu hanging off it. Ryuko noticed that the Kamui's eyes were swirling around and it looked like he was about to throw up, "Here you go."

"Where am I? What just happened?" Senketsu blinked and looked around. Once he saw Ryuko, he began struggling to get free. After managing to pull himself off the hanger, he cried tears of joy and leapt into Ryuko's surprised arms, "Ryuko! I'm so happy to see you! You don't know how horrible my day's been!"

"Calm down, Senketsu," Ryuko was embarrassed by her Kamui's display and was just glad that Mako and Ururu apparently couldn't hear his speak, "What are you talking about?"

"It was terrible!" Senketsu blubbered nearly incoherently in her arms, "Mrs. Mankanshoku cleaned me so thoroughly that my Life Fibers are still quaking in fear. Granted, the ironing was pleasant and I wouldn't mind doing that again, but please don't allow her to clean me again! I know I'm hand wash only, but I don't think I'll survive another cleaning by that woman! She cleaned me in places I didn't know existed!"

"Fine," Ryuko rolled her eyes dismissively as Senketsu split in two before sliding on her body. As his suspenders snapped into place, she said, "I'll find out from Ichigo who washed Mugetsu. Will that make you feel better?"

Senketsu sighed contently and tightened himself around Ryuko, "Yes. Yes it will. Mako's mother uses too much detergent for a delicate garment like myself anyway."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales

"Hey Ryuken, I've been wondering something for a while now..."

From his desk, Ryuken Ishida stopped writing his latest report to briefly turn his eyes towards his old friend, "I was unaware that you had the mental capacity for concepts such as thinking. I'm impressed. You must have been practicing all day just to get this far."

"Smart ass," Isshin rolled his eyes and leaned against the nearby wall. He was dressed in a fine black suit, which made him look badass in his own opinion, and huffed indignantly. Why Ryuken treated him like a child completely escaped him, "Anyway, isn't it strange that you and Ragyo have similar hair colors and are the CEO's of world-spanning conglomerates?"

"I would refrain from pursuing such a line of thought," Ryuken warned and glared at Isshin.

"I'm being completely serious here," Isshin continued completely unconcerned about the potential danger he was in, "The readers are sure to pick up on this and begin to ask questions! Everything makes sense if you really think about it. Both of you have silver hair, are really snooty to those beneath you and have children with dark black hair. If I was a reader of this story, I would assume that you two were related."

A barrage of sewing needles and pins, numbering in the hundreds, flew at Isshin, causing the man to duck and weave his way to safety.

"What the hell, Ryuken?" Isshin called back as he fled the room towards the relative safety of the hallway, "It was just a simple question!"

"That was completely uncalled for!" Ryuken responded as he chased after the former shinigami captain, throwing pins and needles along the way, "Comparing me to Ragyo like that. You must pay for your insinuation!"

"Ah!" Isshin grabbed a chair and used it to block the projectiles, "Why are you attacking me anyway? You know I'm essential to this story!"

"You only think you're essential," Ryuken towered over Isshin, a backdrop of light making the Quincy seem even more malevolent, "I'm sure Ichigo can do what he needs to do without your help. Now, as for your punishment, I'm sure someone like you will be perfectly fine in a couple of hours."

"Now hold on..." Isshin tried to persuade his old friend to not kill him, "Let's just think things logically for a moment..."

Psycho Killer

Well, here is chapter 14 and after the annoyance that was Episode 4 and No-Late Day, this was so much easier to write. In fact, I had most of this done two days ago, but I spent a lot of time making sure I did everything up to my usual standards while also introducing several major (and minor) plot points and revelations. So take away from this what you want.

A favorite character of the anime makes his appearance in this chapter, but how will the addition of the Bleach universe change things up? Read and find out!

I appreciate each and every review that comes in for this story. They motivate me to write faster and get the chapters out as soon as I feel they are ready. Enough about that, let's get on with the story!

---

...

---

Chapter 14 - Psycho Killer

"I'm coming!" Isshin Kurosaki shouted tiredly as he shuffled down the steps towards the front door. Whoever it was that was calling better have a good reason for doing so at three in the morning. He was in the middle of a fantastic dream involving his old lieutenant, a box of chocolate and, for some reason, his cousin. Isshin didn't know what to make of the dream, but he was willing and determined to go back to sleep and find out what it meant first hand.

"Alright already," he grumbled irritably as he unlocked the door, "I heard you the first - "

"Sorry for late call, Isshin," A battered and bloody Ryuken Ishida greeted him from across the threshold, "But I could really use your help."

As Ryuken collapsed to the ground, Isshin quickly stepped forward and caught his old friend before he could hit the ground. Wrapping Ryuken's arm around his shoulder, Isshin began carrying him into his house, "What the hell happened to you?"

Ryuken coughed harshly before answering and grimly smirking, "Revocs tried a hostile takeover."

Isshin led Ryuken into one of the two patient rooms in the Kurosaki Clinic and laid the doctor on the examination table. Pulling out a pocket flashlight, Isshin began removing Ryuken's blood-soaked clothing in order to examine his wounds, "Revocs, huh? What, did you lead an all-out assault on Rago herself? Even I could have told you that was a dumb idea."

"Enough with the patronizing, Isshin," Ryuken grunted as Isshin examined a rather large gash on his thigh, "I was at Revocs strictly for business. I had no intention on getting into a life-or-death battle with the Grand Couturier that started in the lobby before spilling out into the nearby street."

"Nui Harime..." Isshin's eyes narrowed as he spotted something deep within one of Ryuken's wounds. It was just like Nui Harime to strike where the most amount of blood could be split but where the chances of dying quickly were minimized. Placing his flashlight in his mouth and biting down on it to keep it in place, he leaned in closer to get a better look at what he thought he was seeing. After just a second Isshin got the conformation that he needed.

" Leave it to Nui to try something like this," Isshin sighed and rolled backwards along the floor in his chair. He really should have expected the Grand Couturier to try something like this. It was, after all, her modus operandi when it came to long-term assignments given to her by Rago.

"Why don't you start at the beginning," Isshin needed to figure out what Ragyo's plan was. Granted, he knew most of it, or at least he thought he did, but it was always helpful to have new information. Life Fibers were a rather dirty business and Ragyo was in so deep that she couldn't see the surface.

"I should have realized something was wrong when Ragyo invited me to Revocs to finalize a business deal," Ryuken bit back a grunt as Isshin started disinfecting and sewing his larger wounds shut. When Isshin gave him a perplexed look, Ryuken rolled his eyes, "I had no intention of actually going through with it. I needed to find out what Ragyo's true motive was. I know the woman almost as much as you do. Anything she touches quickly becomes hers, whether it wants to or not. I know that lesson quite well. I thought with my power and intelligence I would be prepared for anything she tried."

"So I take it you refused her offer as politely and respectfully as possible?"

"Of course," Ryuken nodded and watched as Isshin began wrapping bandages and gauze around the large wound on his torso where Nui had gotten a clean hit with her purple Scissor Blade, "I knew the moment I left her office that Ragyo wasn't going to let me leave Revocs alive. I told Uryu to run to the car while I held off any opposition that might come after us. I did not expect Ragyo to send the Grand Couturier personally."

"Nui really did a number on you. I'm counting at least six major and ten minor wounds. From the looks of it, she was using that Scissor Blade she is so fond of," Isshin chuckled before breaking out into laughter, "After all these years of putting up with your insults about me not being a real doctor, look who is the first person you go to after fighting Nui!"

"I do not miss the irony of the situation," Ryuken argued, "Even with the information you gave me on Nui Harime's combat prowess, I still found myself outmatched in both speed and power. That blade of hers made my Blut as meaningful as paper armor. I do not doubt that without your information I would be dead. However, the most frightening thing about her was her nearly instantaneous regeneration. I cannot count how many times I landed a hit on her only for the blood and wound to disappear a moment later. I only managed to survive by allowing her to hit me before pinning her to a concrete wall several meters off the ground with needles pierced through her hands, feet, stomach, neck and shoulders. It may not have hurt her, but it bought me enough time to get away."

"What about Uryu?" Isshin thought about what he needed to do. If he wasn't careful, it could end quite badly for his friend.

"Uryu is fine," Ryuken had ordered his son to the basement level of the Karakura Hospital as soon as they got back. While he wasn't sure it would keep someone like Nui Harime out forever, it should buy Uryu enough time to escape, "I thought you were exaggerating, but Nui Harime is a complete psychopath."

As Ryuken explained what happened, Isshin was busy unlocking a special cabinet in the back of the room. As he rifled through its contents, he started talking, "That's Nui for you. Take it from me, Ryuken. Whenever you fight Nui, you have to hit her hard and fast and completely ignore anything she says and does. She's not stupid despite her behavior or appearance. She can and will wait for you to let your guard down after you think you injured or killed her before springing back onto her feet, happy as a princess, and stabbing her head through your chest with a smile on her face the entire time. Usually I would be surprised that you managed to escape her, but I don't think that is the case this time..."

"What is that?" Ryuken's gaze was focused upon the red and black instrument in Isshin's grasp. He had been a doctor for over two decades, travelled around the world to improve the standards of living for millions of people, and yet he had never seen a tool such as that.

"Oh, this?" Isshin turned over the tool in his hand a few times before motioning for Ryuken to lie down, "This is going to help remove what Nui Harime put inside of you."

Ryuken tried to sense anything wrong with his body, a hidden kido perhaps, but came up with nothing, "What do you mean? I did not notice the Grand Couturier cast any techniques during our battle."

"That's because it isn't a technique, at least as far as you are concerned," Isshin answered bluntly, "You might be wondering why she failed to kill you. That's not true. Nui let you get away. During your battle, did you notice anything odd about the way she fought?"

"As a matter of fact I did. While she seemed to be fighting to kill me, and I was doing everything in my power to do the same, it seemed as if she was... playing around. From your description of her I expected as much, but not to the extent I witnessed."

"That's because she was playing with you. While she would have killed you given half a chance, her true goal was that you would come to me," Isshin answered seriously, "It's something that Nui does every now and then when she needs to go after a target that she cannot immediately take out on her own. She will find someone close to the target and weave Life Fibers into him or her. Then, when that someone gets close to the target, the Life Fibers will activate and transmit everything they feel, hear and see back to Nui and Ragyo."

"But why take such a risk?"

"To get at me," To emphasize his point, Isshin stabbed the instrument into a wound on Ryuken's leg. A moment of pain later, he slowly removed the tool and, to Ryuken's shock, began pulling out a glowing red fiber that appeared to be swaying in an imaginary wind.

"Your skills obviously caught Nui off-guard," Isshin complemented as he pulled out the meter-long Life Fiber, "I've examined all your wounds and only managed to find a single Life Fiber. Usually Nui would have enough time to weave dozens inside an unsuspecting person. You should consider yourself lucky she only had time to put one in you."

"One is too many," Ryuken said sarcastically as he watched Isshin hold the Life Fiber in his hand before immediately crushing it between his fingers, "But I thank you for the assistance. I thought I would be able to deal with anything Ragyo Kiryuin could throw at me. I did not expect her to actually send the Grand Couturier."

"That's Ragyo for you," Isshin muttered as he washed his hands, "Using dynamite to get rid of a mole hill."

"Are you suggesting something?" Ryuken threatened as he put his jacket back on.

"Don't get your shirt in a twist," Ichigo waved away Ryuken's anger, "I'm just saying that Ragyo could have simply let you leave without any trouble. The fact that she sent Nui to attack you means she's planning something big."

"Perhaps you can clear something up for me, Isshin," Ryuken reached for a cigarette before remembering where he was, "Why hasn't the Soul Society gotten involved? I would think that with everything Ragyo and Revocs are doing, the shinigami would come down in full force to stop them."

Isshin sighed and when he answered, his tone was flat and lacked any mirth, "There is a very good reason why the Soul Society hasn't gotten involved, but I'm afraid I cannot tell you yet. It is still much too dangerous and if I were to tell you, it would put both of our families in danger."

Ryuken scoffed, "What can Ragyo do to us here? Aren't your protections and defenses strong enough to keep someone like her and the Grand Couturier out of Karakura Town?"

"It's not Ragyo or Nui that I'm worried about," Isshin opened the door to the room and began to walk out, but stopped and said, "There is evidence to suggest that Life Fibers have been around for thousands of years, far longer than modern humanity has existed. If that is the case, then why has the Soul Society, an organization thousands of years old as well, failed to move against such a threat? I'm going back to bed, Ryuken. You can either stay here for the night or go back home, but please be sure to lock the door behind you as you leave."

With that said, Isshin left the room and Ryuken alone with his thoughts. As he stood there, pondering what Isshin just told him, Ryuken began to piece together what his friend was suggesting. At first he assumed Isshin was just being himself, but the more he thought about it, the more that everything made sense.

"That's impossible," he shook his head and walked towards the door, "But if it is true, then things are much, much worse than anything I could have possibly imagined."

---

...

---

From his vantage point up on the terraces surrounding Honnouji Academy, Tsumugu Kinagase planned out what he needed to do.

The Nudist Beach member had arrived earlier in Honnou City that morning on his customized armored motorcycle and immediately he had felt the stench of Life Fibers on the city. Years of fighting against the oppression of Revocs and their goal to spread Life Fibers across the globe had gifted Tsumugu with the innate ability to sense large concentrations of the unholy fibers. While he would never be able to accurately pinpoint where Life Fibers were, he was able to track large concentrations and Honnou City was lit up like an old-fashioned Christmas tree.

"Hmm," Detaching the scope from his M-98 Widow Anti-Life Fiber Model Type-3, Tsumugu triple checked each component of his weapon. Unlike most guns, his M-98 Widow fired specialized needles designed to sever the bond between Life Fibers and their hosts. In most cases it would simply render the wearer unable to access the unholy power their clothing gave them, but he wasn't sure how effective it would be on a Kamui. He could always increase the potency of his needles, but he would quickly run into the problem of it being too effective and potentially killing the Kamui's wearer. He needed everything to be perfect in order to kill the Kamui while leaving Ryuko Matoi alive.

After a quick blank firing to make sure it was in working order, Tsumugu reattached his scope and prepared himself for the task at hand. Peering in through each window at the unsuspecting classes, Tsumugu focused on each student and uniform until he found the one he was looking for. On the fourth floor, in the third seat from the front and second from the window, sat his target, Ryuko Matoi. Zooming in and focusing on the colors and texture of her school uniform, it took him less than a second to determine that she was wearing her Kamui. Frowning at the Life Fiber being, Tsumugu began to squeeze down on the trigger to complete the mission when he spotted a familiar crop of orange hair right next to Ryuko Matoi.

"Is that?" Tsumugu zoomed in as much as possible, hoping to be wrong. When the boy turned slightly towards the window, exposing a bored scowl, Tsumugu knew exactly who it was, "Why is Masaki's son here at Honnouji Academy? I thought Isshin was keeping him safe in Karakura Town?"

Ichigo Kurosaki's presence changed nothing. Tsumugu was still going to complete his mission. He just needed to avoid confronting Isshin's son until... wait. There was something odd and strangely familiar about Ichigo's uniform.

"So he has a Kamui as well," Tsumugu scowled and collapsed the scope. Are they giving out Kamui at garage sales now? It didn't matter. He would destroy Ryuko Matoi's Kamui before moving on to deal with Ichigo. The only problem was whether or not he had enough ammunition and supplies to take out two Kamui. He would have to deal with such a matter when the time came.

Sensing someone behind him, Tsumugu grunted and stood up, "What is so important that you've deigned to bother me?"

Standing in front of the many One-Star students dressed in gardening attire stood the diminutive captain of the Terrace Gardening Club, Kusanosuke Yaguruma. Laughing sarcastically, Kusanosuke sneered at Tsumugu, "I've noticed that you've been looking after our flowers for us in our absence. I thought it would be nice to offer you a thank you present for all your hard work!"

Tsumugu glanced to the side and noticed that he had walked through a garden on his way here, trampling the flowers in the process. Perhaps that had been rude and insensitive of him. It was obvious that despite the fact Kusanosuke was wearing Life Fibers, the kid had put a lot of time and effort into the garden. Using a road flare to light his cigarette, Tsumugu took a large drag from it, causing Kusanosuke to shout angrily at him.

"What do you think you're doing?" The diminutive club president slammed his foot against the ground a few times, "This is a nonsmoking area! What do you think might happen if you drop your cigarette in the garden? Months of cultivating and fertilizing would be destroyed!"

"Let me tell you two pieces of information. One. Those that rely on Life Fibers to do jobs they are capable of accomplishing on their own aren't entitled to complain about anything," Tsumugu scolded before adding, "Two. I can smoke wherever I want to."

With a causal flick of his wrist, Tsumugu tossed his still lit cigarette into the garden. As the One-Star students behind him gasped in shock, Kusanosuke shouted, "What the hell did you do that for? You're going to pay for that!"

Tsumugu watched with an annoyed expression as the One-Star students suddenly piled around Kusanosuke and began pouring water into the container on his back. As several large man-eating plants grew out of the container and lunged at him with maws full of sharp teeth, Tsumugu slid to the right, avoiding one plant before springing off the ground and vaulting over a second. As he continued to dodge each predictable assault, Tsumugu heard Kusanosuke gloating at him, which was made more annoying by the club president's nasally voice.

"Taste the power of the Gardening-Spec Two-Star Goku Uniform: Green Thumb Edition!" Kusanosuke gloated haughtily as he thought he was witnessing Tsumugu's death, "How do you like my Piranha Plants? They are going to eat you alive!"

Leaping into the air, Tsumugu stomped down on one of the plants for balance, aiming his sewing machine gun at Kusanosuke and fired several hundred sewing needles.

Kusanosuke was completely unperturbed by his fellow club members collapsing to the ground from the barrage of needles. Either unwilling or uncaring to help, he bravely weathered the assault from Tsumugu, "You're a fool to think that a gun is effective against a Goku Uniform! Who do you think I am anyway?"

"I think you're a fool," Tsumugu answered in mid-air, spinning around an attempt by a plant to eat him before firing dozens of needles in retaliation.

"I told you that won't work!" Kusanosuke gloated, but began to feel something was wrong. Despite weathering the storm of bullets effortlessly, he was beginning to feel his power slipping away. Collapsing to his knees in exhaustion, he mumbled at the impossibility of the situation, "W-What's going on? My power is being drained... but how?"

Walking around the dying plants, Tsumugu approached the fallen Kusanosuke and aimed his sewing machine gun at him, "Let me tell you two further pieces of information that you might find useful. One. Overconfidence in ones abilities is the downfall of many a man. Two. I hate Life Fibers!"

In a classroom across the courtyard, Ryuko Matoi was woken up from her nap by what sounded like a gunshot going off before she quickly decided it wasn't worth thinking about.

---

...

---

"Prepare to die, Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Ichigo rolled his eyes at the declaration as he lazily swung Tournesol through the air, cutting down each and every arrow that the Archery Club President fired at him.

" This is annoying," Mugetsu said irritably.

"You don't need to remind me," Ichigo responded flatly. He didn't know why his opponent hadn't given up by now. The ground around him was littered with dozens upon dozens of arrows and yet not one had managed to penetrate his defenses. Not bothering to give the fallen One-Star members of the club a second glance, Ichigo rested Tournesol on his shoulder and sighed.

"Can't you just, I don't know, go home or something?" Ichigo was beginning to think it was a bad idea to get involved in Ryuko's issues. Satsuki had initially proclaimed that any Two-Star student that defeated Ryuko would receive a Three-Star Goku Uniform, but it was earlier this morning that he found out that she amended her earlier statement. In addition to that, anyone who defeated him would not only receive a Three-Star Goku Uniform, but also become a member of the Elite Four, thereby making it the Elite Five or something as stupid sounding.

"Feeling scared? Surrender your Kamui!" Artemis shouted as she fired an arrow, only for Ichigo to deflect it with Mugetsu's sleeve.

"Just give up already," Ichigo said exasperatedly as he grabbed the two arrows Artemis fired out of the air and threw them onto the ground.

"You think I'm scared of you?" Artemis asked boldly, hiding the fact that she was indeed scared of his prowess. She had seen Ichigo deflect her arrows with Tournesol, but to watch him catch or repel them with his hands caused her to break out in a cold sweat. Steadying her shaking hands, she pulled back on her glowing black and red compound bow, a sign of the Life Fibers composing it, and materialized five glowing arrows before releasing them, "I am the reincarnation of the Greek Goddess of the Hunt! You shall fall to my power!"

Ichigo watched the arrows fly towards in what could only be described as slow motion. Ducking under the one aimed at his head, the bladed tip passing inches from his nose, he quickly spun around and brought Tournesol up to deflect three more. Still in motion, he pivoted on his left foot and used the sole of his right foot to basically destroy the fifth and last arrow.

"What? Impossible!" Artemis stepped back in fear as she watched Ichigo stop her attack without even breaking a sweat. With her hands shaking more noticeably, she tried to bring her bow back up, "I wear a Two-Star Goku Uniform! I will not be defeated by the likes of - "

Artemis was cut off as Ichigo disappeared from in front of her, a small ring of expanding dust signaling where he had just been standing, before he reappeared behind her with Tournesol resting on his shoulder.

"What was it that Ryuko called her move?" Ichigo frowned as he tried to remember what she named it, "Oh right. Seni-Soshitsu."

There was silence as several cuts slowly spread across Artemis's uniform before it suddenly ripped into dozens of pieces, leaving the club president as naked as the day she was born. Quickly averting his gaze from the nude girl, Ichigo noticed something floating haphazardly through the air towards him. Plucking it out of the air before it could reach him, he looked in interest at the glowing red thread held firmly between his fingers.

"Is this a Life Fiber?" Ichigo examined the glowing Life Fiber suspiciously. There was something off about it, but he couldn't put his finger on it. Perhaps he was just being paranoid, but given everything that has happened to him since arriving at Honnouji Academy, he concluded he had a right to be.

" Yes," Mugetsu answered emotionlessly. For some reason she was still upset that Ichigo hadn't taken her on No-Late Day despite him telling her that he wasn't given a choice in the matter, "That is the Banshi. It is what holds the Goku Uniform together and gives it the 'will to be clothing.'"

Letting the Banshi go, Ichigo watched as it was quickly absorbed into Tournesol, causing the blue blade to briefly glow with a purple outline, "What just happened?"

" I don't know. Kisuke Urahara imparted a lot of knowledge into me, but several key things continue to elude me. Perhaps over time I will be able to answer your question."

Ichigo locked gazes with one of Mugetsu's eyes before sighing, "Don't make that face. Look, I'm sorry about yesterday. You know I would have taken you if I was given the choice."

" I'm not upset with that," Mugetsu growled before she added, "As a Kamui I do not have a face to make. Therefore, there is no doubt that your statement is idiotic."

"Why you - "

"Are you talking to yourself Strawberry?" A familiar sweet voice asked from behind him, "And here I thought you were cute, not insane."

Ichigo turned from the unconscious Artemis and towards Nonon Jakuzure standing across the rooftop from him, backed by at least fifteen members of the Marching Band Club. Pointing her baton at Ichigo and with her mouth spread in a cheerful grin, she said, "You've been busy Strawberry, taking out all the club presidents left and right. Lady Satsuki has ordered me to bring you to her for a little chat. So why don't you make it easy on yourself and just surrender?"

He gave Nonon a deadpan look before scratching his cheek, "Oh, it's just you Snake. You can tell Satsuki to take her offer and shove it."

"The name's Nonon Jakuzure!" Nonon stomped her foot angrily and cursed profusely under her breath. She hated that Ichigo wouldn't stop calling her Snake. She was the only one able to call people by cute nicknames! Where did Ichigo get off mocking her name like that? Gritting her teeth and reigning in her anger and annoyance, she asked, "I'm a member of the Elite four, dammit! Why do you continue to address me with such disrespect?"

"You call me Strawberry," Ichigo pointed out dryly with his hands in his pockets, "I'll stop calling you Snake when you stop calling me Strawberry."

Nonon pursed her lips and spit on the ground, "Fine I... Ic... Ich... Ichi... aw, screw it! You're coming with me, but only after I kick your ass! Marching Band: Trumpet Division front and center! Give Strawberry here a test of our jubilant spirit!"

Ichigo had a deadpan look on his face as two rows of One-Star girls, each of them dressed in a marching band uniform, slid in front of Nonon and raised their trumpets, "Wait... what?"

That was when the Marching Band Club started playing and Ichigo found himself being blown back by the sheer volume and power of the music.

"How do you like the William Tell Overture?" Nonon gloated safely from behind the One-Star Students, "Embrace the music, Strawberry!"

" This music is really annoying, Ichigo," Mugetsu shouted over the sound of the music, "Do something about it before I go deaf."

"You can't go deaf if you don't have any ears," Ichigo commented to his Kamui, but he knew Mugetsu had a point. He didn't like getting blasted point-blank by weaponized music anymore than she did. Gritting his teeth, he began pushing against the music and started gaining ground.

"Are you trying to resist?" Nonon quipped at Ichigo. Raising her baton, she smirked and shouted, "I'll just have to introduce you to the beauty of classical music! Flute Division! Show Strawberry here what you're made of!"

Another line of girls stepped into position and Ichigo immediately found his ears under assault by what could only be described as music in the loosest terms. With his ears ringing from the harsh sounds, Ichigo was about to attack when he somehow managed to hear Ryuko scream out Mako's name.

"Ryuko!" Ichigo didn't have any time to waste. Rushing forward, he jumped up and over the Marching Band as they attempted to stop him. Landing on the other side, he raced towards Ryuko, but not before turning around and giving Nonon a mock salute, "I'll be back to deal with you another time, Snake. Tell Satsuki she can go to hell."

"For the last time, the name's Jakuzure!" Nonon shouted back, pissed off that Ichigo managed to get away from her, "I'll wipe that smirk off your face if it's the last thing I do, you orange haired son of a bitch!"

---

...

---

"Mako!"

Ryuko examined her friend's fallen and paralyzed body. Stuck in the same pose she had been in a moment ago, with a large smile on her face, Mako resembled a statue more than a person at the moment. Reaching over to pull out the needles, Ryuko was forced to pull her hand back as a needle embedded right next to it.

"There is no need to be concerned for your friend," a deep voice echoed out from across the courtyard, "I simply got her out of the way for a while. She won't be able to see, hear or sense anything for the next ten minutes, so what is discussed between us will be kept private."

Ryuko turned and saw Tsumugu walking slowly towards her, "What did Mako ever do to you?"

"There is no need to fret, she is unharmed," Tsumugu answered as calmly as ever as he came to a stop some several meters away from Ryuko, "Those needles in her body are quite special. When she awakens, the exhaustion permeating her body will disappear and all her sicknesses cured."

"Oh," Ryuko looked at the fallen Mako before adding, "Thanks for that, but couldn't you have asked first?"

Tsumugu did not answer her as he leveled his Sewing Machine Gun at Ryuko, "On the other hand, your uniform will not receive the same mercy!"

" Run, Ryuko! "

"I'm not going to run away!" Ryuko bit back sourly. She had no idea what this man wanted with her, but like hell was she just going to run away like a coward.

Without saying a word, the man leveled his strange looking weapon at her and pulled the trigger. Ryuko didn't even bother to think about the abnormal ammo he was firing as she flipped backwards and vaulted off the rusty chain she and Mako had been eating their lunches on. As the sound of needles ricocheting reverberated through the air, Ryuko shouted, "Just what the hell's your problem with me anyway?"

"I don't need to answer that," Tsumugu answered flatly as he stood on top of the chain and stared down at her, "Your athleticism is impressive, but it won't be enough to stop me from doing what needs to be done."

"Go to hell!" Ryuko growled and pulled out her Scissor Blade. Deflecting and parrying almost every needle Tsumugu fired at her, she hissed in pain every time one of the abnormal ammo slipped through her guard and stabbed deep in her body. Ignoring the pain to focus on the battle, she jumped up and clashed weapons with Tsumugu. If he was surprised that she was still able to move, Tsumugu didn't show it.

" She is skilled, even without her Kamui," Tsumugu thought calmly as he parried away her Scissor Blade with his Sewing Machine Gun. Pushing her away and firing a dozen rounds into her back, he landed on the ground and stared at Ryuko, "But she is predictable. While she seems to have some skill in wielding that Scissor Blade, she still swings it around like a novice."

During the momentary lull in the fighting, Ryuko took the opportunity to reach over and pull several sewing needles out of her shoulder. She glanced at the blood-tipped ammo for a moment before tossing them to the ground in disgust. She didn't know who this man was or what he wanted, but he had already hurt Mako and was now trying to kill her. It was time to activate Senketsu and take her revenge on the man. As she reached for the pin on her glove, Ryuko suddenly found the world spinning around her. Desperately trying to steady herself on her feet, Ryuko grabbed her head, "What the hell's going on?"

"Your fortitude is remarkable," Tsumugu dashed forward and delivered a kick to Ryuko's sternum that forced her on her back.

Coughing harshly from the strike, she grunted in pain as Tsumugu planted his foot on her stomach and aimed his Sewing Machine Gun at her heart, "But even the most determined person cannot fight off the effects of thirty tranquilizer rounds. You have my respect for forcing me to use my specialized ammunition."

"You bastard!" Ryuko struggled to pull herself free, but Tsumugu's strength was too great in her untransformed state. That, compounded with the fact that her muscles weren't responding to her thoughts, made escape impossible, "What club are you a part of?"

Tsumugu's eyes drifted to the side as he felt someone approaching. He didn't have much time, perhaps a minute at the most, before Ichigo Kurosaki would arrive. He needed to move quickly, "When I remove my foot, you will take off your clothes."

Ryuko had been expecting many things, but that question wasn't one of them, "What kind of question is that? I don't even know you! You're in that stupid Pervert Club, aren't you? I bet you're the president of the Pervert Club!"

Tsumugu made sure to keep his Sewing Machine Gun trained on Ryuko's heart, "Let me tell you two useful pieces of information. One. I am not a pervert. I find the idea of a man stalking and idolizing a woman he has never talked to both morally repugnant and utterly disgusting."

"Say whatever you need to sleep at night," Ryuko spat and tried to pull the pin out of her glove with her teeth only for Tsumugu to fire something out of his wrist and pin her hand to the ground.

"Two. I will not let you transform in front of me. If you are unable to transform, you are no more powerful than a regular human."

Leaning over Ryuko and training his weapon over her throat, Tsumugu growled, "If I were to fire at this range, the likelihood of your death is guaranteed. If you wish to survive to live a full life, take off your clothes. I do not like to take lives unnecessarily."

"Bastard..." Ryuko could feel sweat dripping off her face as she gazed up at the man that had so easily taken her out, "What do you have against Senketsu?"

"So you're refusing to comply?" Tsumugu felt a pang of guilt for what he was about to do, but for the sake of humanity he would bury his emotions and guilt. Destroying a Kamui was a top priority, even if it came at a cost of an innocent life. The repercussions of failing and letting the Kamui get out of control were too severe, "You leave me no choice. I know it may seem hollow to you, but I will derive no pleasure from what I am about to do. I hope you find peace in whatever awaits beyond this world."

As his finger squeezed on the trigger of his weapon, Tsumugu glanced to the side as he felt someone rapidly approaching him. Quickly jumping off Ryuko and hopping backwards a few times, he skid to a stop as Ichigo landed on the ground in front of him, still clad in Mugetsu's released form.

"I did not expect you to arrive so quickly, Ichigo Kurosaki," Tsumugu depressed a button on the bottom of his Sewing Machine Gun, ejecting the five-hundred needle clip before quickly inserting a new one, "Your speed is impressive."

"You know me?" Ichigo asked suspiciously as he swung Tournesol to the side, destroying the needles holding Ryuko to the ground.

Tsumugu ignored the question as his eyes lingered on Mugetsu. It seemed the boy was firmly in control of his Kamui, which wasn't that surprising given his parents. Unlike Matoi, who seemed to be trying to stab him with her eyes, Ichigo was firmly in control of his emotions. He was angry, anyone would be given the situation, but the problem with Matoi was that she wore her emotions on her sleeves. If there ever came a time where she was pushed to the brink, there was no doubt in Tsumugu's mind that her Kamui would immediately try and devour her.

"Why are you here, Ichigo Kurosaki?" Tsumugu circled around Ichigo, who always kept himself between the man and Ryuko, "You are supposed to be in Karakura Town."

"How do you know about me?" Ichigo growled and pointed Tournesol at Tsumugu, "Who are you and what do you want with Ryuko?"

Tsumugu glanced over at Matoi and reassessed the situation. The odds of him being able to successfully destroy her Kamui and get away were slim to none. He didn't even care if he was captured as long as the Kamui was destroyed, but even that was highly unlikely at this point. The best thing to do would be to retreat and reformulate his plan of attack. First, he needed to gather some information about what Ichigo was doing at Honnouji Academy.

"Let me give you two pieces of useful information," Tsumugu lit a cigarette using a device on his wrist and began walking towards Ichigo, "One. Who I am does not concern you."

Sprinting forward, Tsumugu fired several dozen rounds from his Sewing Machine Gun at Ichigo. While Ichigo managed to avoid or block every single one of them, that was Tsumugu's plan the entire time. Leaping into the air as soon as he finished firing, when he tried to drop kick Ichigo in the face, he was surprised to find the youth already spinning around his attack. Landing in a crouch, he quickly brought his gun up to stop Tournesol from hitting him.

"Two," Tsumugu grunted as he was forced closer and closer to the ground from Ichigo's enhanced strength, "I knew your mother, Masaki."

"What?"

Ichigo froze at the mention of his mother's name, but that was all Tsumugu needed. Rolling forward, Tsumugu twisted around and aimed his gun at several spots along Ichigo's Kamui. Before he could pull the trigger, something shot through the air and pierced his hand, paralyzing the muscles and preventing him from moving his finger. Scoffing irritably and looking up at a building, Tsumugu realized he had run out of time. Standing up and turning around, he began walking away, "Do not go anywhere, Matoi. I'll be here tomorrow to strip you of your Kamui. Don't try to run because there will be no place you can hide."

As Tsumugu walked away, disappearing into the shadows, Ryuko stood back on her feet and looked at Ichigo, "Who was that guy and how did he know your mother, Ichigo?"

"I don't know," Ichigo's hand clenched tightly around Tournesol's hilt. Looking at Ryuko, he asked, "What happened to Mako? I heard you screaming her name."

Ryuko slapped herself at the mention of her friend. In all the excitement, she had completely forgotten that not twenty feet away her best friend was lying on the ground covered in dozens of sewing needles. Rushing over to help, she scolded herself, "I can't believe I forgot all about Mako! I'm a terrible friend!"

Ichigo watched Ryuko start pulling out needles by the handful from the paralyzed Mako's body before he knelt down and picked up one of the needles that Tsumugu had fired at him. Turning the strange ammunition over in his fingers, he pondered why someone would use something like a needle as ammo.

" There is something odd about this needle," Mugetsu focused both her eyes on the object in Ichigo's hand before emitting a feminine growl, "I can feel it trying to sever the bond between you and myself. If you were to be hit by enough of these needles, I would be forced to sleep."

"I see..." Ichigo knew that Tsumugu was a dangerous threat. That man had all but decimated Ryuko without even trying. There was no telling what he would do given enough time to prepare. He needed to be on his guard in case Tsumugu decided to spring a surprise on him, "Be on your guard, Mugetsu. That guy seems to have it out for you and Senketsu."

" Bring it on," Mugetsu scoffed at Ichigo's concern, "That man might be strong enough to deal with Senketsu, but you and I are on a different level. There is no way that he can beat us!"

Ichigo rolled his eyes and walked towards Ryuko and a now-conscious Mako, "Don't get too full of yourself. You said the same thing about Satsuki and we barely managed to beat her."

" Shut up, Ichigo."

---

...

---

Aikuro Mikisugi preferred the bars in the slums to those in the One-Star Residential District. Call him a sentimental fool, but he found personal interactions to be much more realistic when one didn't have to worry about social appearances or peer pressure. The fact that the loud noise and rowdy crowd made being overheard extremely unlikely was simply a bonus.

Gazing at his watch and noticing what time it was, Aikuro was about to finish his drink and leave when he noticed a quilt pin floating in his sake. Aikuro smirked at his colleagues introduction, "I see you were able to figure out it was me. Aren't you going to say you hate being interrupted while working or something, Tsumugu?"

Leaning against the bar next to Aikuro with his hands in his pockets stood a stern-faced Tsumugu. He didn't appreciate the fact that Aikuro interfered with his clash against Ryuko and Ichigo. His intolerance for being interrupted was, for the moment, overshadowed by a much more serious question plaguing his mind, "Why didn't you tell me Masaki's son was attending Honnouji Academy?"

"Heh," Aikuro plucked the pin out of his sake before swallowing the alcoholic liquid in one gulp, "Would you have believed me if I had said he was here?"

Tsumugu's silence to the question was all the answer Aikuro needed. Tsumugu was one of Nudist Beach's best operatives and prided himself on researching all the necessary information about a target before going after them. He had singlehandedly taken down several Revocs factories using just his intelligence, so it was clear to Aikuro that Tsumugu's pride as a Nudist had taken quite the blow upon finding Masaki's son attending the same academy as Ryuko Matoi.

"He has a Kamui," Tsumugu pointed out bluntly and without caring who overheard him. He didn't like Kamui in general, and the fact that Masaki's son possessed one was tantamount to spitting on her grave, "Where did he get it?"

"Do you remember Isshin talking about a man by the name of Kisuke Urahara?"

That set off quite a few bells in Tsumugu's head. It had been over a decade since he heard that name, "Yeah, I remember."

Aikuro raised the bottle of sake and refilled his cup, "About two days after Ichigo arrived, Isshin called out of the blue. He said that Kisuke created that Kamui for Ichigo and that I should make sure he survived whatever may come. Needless to say, I haven't had much to do. After all, he was the one to singlehandedly fight Satsuki Kiryuin and her Kamui to a draw."

Tsumugu's frown deepened as he thought back to how Kisuke Urahara managed to save the life of his sister, Kinue Kinagase, all those years ago when she foolishly decided to try on an experimental Kamui. It was also the first time he met the man he would come to know as Isshin Kurosaki.

Flashback - 11 Years Ago

Isshin Matoi, otherwise known as Dr. Matoi to his colleagues and associates, turned to the other two men in the room, "Is everything in place?"

Clad in a brown turtleneck under a white lab coat, Aikuro typed a few keys on a nearby computer, "The Life Fiber inhibitors are in place and are performing at optical efficiency. I've run them through several test runs and no problems have been detected."

" Good, good," Dr. Matoi stroked his knee-length beard and hummed impatiently at the third man pacing nervously across the observation room, "You seem perturbed about something, Tsumugu."

A much younger Tsumugu stopped pacing and looked at Dr. Matoi. While his hair already possessed its familiar deep red streak, Tsumugu had it styled it a much more manageable crew cut.

" I know my sister wants to go through with this, but I think this is a dangerous idea!" Tsumugu knew his argument was pointless. Whenever Kinue focused her mind on doing something, nothing on Earth could stop her. Usually he would simply step out of the way until she was done, but what Kinue was volunteering to do was dangerous and potentially life threatening.

Dr. Matoi huffed and walked towards the observation window overlooking the fitting room. Tsumugu wasn't the only one concerned about the possible consequences of such an early fitting. While he was certain he had ironed out all the possible kinks and flaws in the prototype Kamui, there was always the chance that he missed something. He was human, after all. It would be hubris to assume that the Kamui he created was perfect in every single way.

" You aren't the only one to think that," he told Tsumugu honestly, "I tried to talk Kinue out of volunteering, but she is firm in her belief that humans and clothing can coexist peacefully. If you are truly worried about something going wrong, Aikuro and I have taken much time out of our schedules to implement several safety measures that should stop the fitting if anything should go wrong."

" I still don't like it," Tsumugu countered weakly.

" I will admit that our safety measures will never be perfect," Dr. Matoi did not like confessing his failures. His life was already full of mistakes and guilt. He didn't want to add another to his already long list, "But I brought in someone to help."

" Someone? Who?"

Dr. Matoi turned towards Aikuro, who answered, "He's currently getting the prototype out of storage. He should be entering the fitting room in a few minutes."

That didn't make any sense to Tsumugu. Everyone who touched the prototype Kamui had been violently assaulted by it, with the Life Fiber creature attempting to devour them completely within seconds. Who could touch such a violent creature without fear for their life?

Tsumugu didn't need to wait long to find out. Less than five minutes after Dr. Matoi's announcement, alarms began going off in the observation room, signaling that the negative pressure door on the far side of the fitting room was being accessed.

" It looks like Isshin is ready to come in," Aikuro swiveled around in his chair and faced Dr. Matoi.

Dr. Matoi kept his eyes on the fitting room through the thick, protective glass as he answered, "Let him in."

Tsumugu had heard of Isshin Kurosaki. He was practically one of the reasons Nudist Beach was able to survive without Revocs striking them down. While Isshin wasn't actually a member of the organization, his presence seemed to dissuade Ragyo from moving against them. When the door opened with a hiss of pressurized air leaving the room, Tsumugu expected someone composed and implacable, someone whose innate resistance to Life Fibers was so high that they could touch an animalistic Kamui for a short period of time without being consumed by it. He did not expect, nor could he have ever expected, to meet the real Isshin Kurosaki.

" Down boy... girl... thing! Bad Kamui! Stop that this instant!" Isshin was holding the Kamui at arms length away from his body, but for good reason. The Kamui was trying, and failing for some reason, to wrap around his arms. Every time it tried to put itself on Isshin, it would succeed for a second before something snapped and it lost its grip.

" Hey Matoi!" Isshin shouted towards the three men watching him, "Get the restraining device ready! I don't feel like fighting with a dress any longer than I have to!"

Dr. Matoi pressed a button, bringing the intercom to life, "Of course, Isshin. It's right to your left. Just put the prototype in the chamber and the machine will do the rest."

After kicking the prototype Kamui in order to get it momentarily under control, Isshin wrapped the Life Fiber being into a ball before throwing it into the chamber. While it took the Kamui a few seconds to reorient itself, it wasn't quick enough to escape. The moment Isshin put it in the chamber, the steel door hissed shut and a gaseous mixture of starch and bleach began filling the chamber, freezing the Kamui in place and putting it in a temporary slumber.

" Damn that thing was annoying," Isshin Kurosaki complained as he entered the observation room. Much like Aikuro and Dr. Matoi, he wore a lab coat over a black sweater, but unlike them he had a distinctively 80s-style mullet. Yawning and rubbing the back of his neck, he turned to Aikuro, "So was that thing the reason you called me? Masaki isn't going to be happy that I skipped town and leaving her with the twins."

" Don't worry about Masaki," Aikuro grinned amiably, "You're almost done here. Dr. Matoi just wanted you to help transfer the prototype Kamui."

" It's been a few years Isshin," Dr. Matoi offered his hand to Isshin, only to have the normally jolly man refuse to shake it. Matoi didn't seem to find such a display rude, and therefore continued speaking, "That Kamui is my first complete prototype. I created it to help us fight the tyranny being imposed upon the world by Recovs and Ragyo Kiryuin."

" It's a little late to be doing the right thing," Isshin hinted knowingly, getting strange looks from Tsumugu and Aikuro and a worried expression from Dr. Matoi, "But enough about the past. What makes you think this Kamui will want to go against Ragyo? You saw how it tried to eat me out there. Anyone else would have been dead by now."

Dr. Matoi sighed sadly and sat down, "I will admit that Project T-elos was based off of Ragyo Kiryuin's designs. Do you know how difficult it is to craft a Kamui? Her work saved me over a year of planning. I spent countless hours going off the Life Fibers while looking for any sign of internal tampering or mistakes. I can assure you that Ragyo has as much control over this Kamui as you do."

" In any case," Isshin walked towards the observation window and stared at where the Kamui was being held, "Who did you trick into wearing that thing?"

" I didn't trick anyone," Dr. Matoi defended, "Kinue personally asked to have Project T-elos be fitted to her. She believes that clothes and humans can live together peacefully and is determined to prove that. I've tried to persuade her to wait until I'm sure there is absolutely nothing that can go wrong, but..."

" I know," Isshin sighed. Kinue had always been a rather bold woman, which is probably why Masaki got along so well with her, "I wish I could stay around and make sure nothing goes wrong, but Masaki is having a handful with the twins as well as Ichigo, but I think I may have something that could come in handy in case you screwed something up."

Reaching inside his lab coat, Isshin fished around for something before pulling out a small octagonal medallion. Handing it to Dr. Matoi, he said, "I had an old friend of mine, Kisuke Urahara, whip this up. He has no idea what Life Fibers are or what this is going to be used for, so I added a few modifications of my own. All he knows is that I needed something to protect someone with no questions asked. Give this medallion to Kinue when she goes to wear the Kamui. If anything goes wrong, it should protect her from being devoured."

Dr. Matoi looked at the designed etched on the surface of the medallion. The object itself was pure white, but the design consisted of several black lines interwoven with each other and originating around a red ruby-like gem at the center of the medallion. He stared at the object for what seemed like forever, but when he looked up to thank Isshin, he was already gone. Contemplating what he was going to do, Dr. Matoi hobbled over to Tsumugu and placed the medallion in his hand.

"Give this to Kinue," he ordered, "Make sure she knows what to do with it."

End Flashback

Tsumugu snorted and forced his memories to the back of his mind, "Nearly tens years since he dropped off the grid and now he comes back? If you ask me, it's a little suspicious."

"You know exactly why he left," Aikuro reminded Tsumugu. The death of Masaki had hit Nudist Beach hard, even if Isshin wouldn't say what exactly happened to her besides the fact that she was murdered. Dr. Matoi had volunteered to use Nudist Beach's immense resources to hunt down the killer, but Isshin had been quite clear that he didn't want an investigation. He had a family to care for and searching for Masaki's killer would force him to split his attention.

Seeing no point in leaving, Tsumugu grabbed a nearby stool and sat down next to Aikuro. Grabbing the bottle of sake off the counter, he poured some into a cup before speaking, "Ragyo Kiryuin starts becoming active and now Isshin sends his son to Honnouji Academy, where her daughter is consolidating power? I don't like it."

"That's not the worst part," Aikuro reached into pocket and pulled out a photo. Sliding it across the counter to Tsumugu, he said, "Look who decided to show up in Honnou City a few days ago."

Tsumugu grabbed the picture and stared at the figure on it, "The Grand Couturier. Why would she be here?"

Aikuro shrugged, "I have no idea, but knowing her, it can't be good. She doesn't go anywhere without Ragyo's permission. When I first discovered she was here, I thought she may have been going after Ryuko, but to my surprise the Grand Couturier seems to be fixated on Ichigo."

"Ichigo?" Tsumugu thought long and hard about why someone like the Grand Couturier would be interested in Ichigo Kurosaki, "I cannot begin to comprehend what someone like her thinks, but I suppose it has to do with Isshin. It always seems to come back to that man."

"Possibly," Aikuro smirked before his expression hardened, "By the way, I've been meaning to ask you something for a while now. How is Kinue doing?"

There was the sound of ceramic shattering as Tsumugu clenched his hand hard enough to break the cup it was holding. Staring down at the shards on the counter, he threw down a few bills to cover the damage and stood up, "She's doing fine, considering everything that's happened to her. Thank you for the concern, though."

Kisuke Urahara's invention, which Isshin made sure Kinue was holding when she tried on Project T-elos, had worked perfectly. Despite all the precautions and safety measures Dr. Matoi and Aikuro put in place, as soon as Kinue put on the Kamui it had immediately tried to devour her. As Aikuro grabbed a chair and tried to shatter the safety glass to save Kinue, there was a bright green flash from within the room. After several seconds of painful waiting to see what was going on, the light died down and to everyone's relief Kinue was lying unconscious on the floor of the fitting room, still clad in the Kamui that had been trying to kill her moments before. As he burst into the room through the door, Tsumugu's relief at his sister's state soon turned to horror and shock when he saw exactly what was keeping her alive.

The medallion that Isshin gave them, the same one that was supposed to save Kinue's life if anything went wrong, seemed to have fused with her chest. As he tried to pull the Kamui off her body, which seemed to not be fighting him for some reason, Tsumugu noticed the black arrow pattern burned into her sternum right over her heart. After being pulled away from his sister by Aikuro so that Dr. Matoi could examine her, Tsumugu was given some startling news.

The medallion may have saved Kinue's mind and body from being devoured by the Kamui, but it forever bound her to it. After Dr. Matoi frantically called Isshin to ask what the medallion was supposed to do, Isshin reluctantly confessed that it was supposed to act as a 'bridge' of sorts between the Kamui and Kinue in case the worst came to pass. If all else failed, and the Kamui's inherent violent and animalistic nature overcame their precautions, the medallion would activate and effectively trick the Kamui into thinking Kinue was part of it, thereby stopping it from doing any further damage. The only problem was that Kinue would be forever bound to the Kamui. She would also never be able to take it off or remove the medallion, which was now as much a part of her body as the Kamui was.

"But that's not what you called me down here for, was it?" Tsumugu's sister was still a sore topic for the man, even though she was still the same woman, no matter what she wore, "If it's about Ichigo, you can stop worrying. I haven't forgotten what Isshin tried to do. As long as Ichigo doesn't interfere with my mission, I will leave both him and his Kamui alone."

"You know me too well," Aikuro smirked before frowning, "I need you to also leave Ryuko Matoi alone, at least for now. This is a critical time and with Isshin's recent involvement, I don't know what to expect."

"I got the message," Tsumugu had known Ragyo was going to make her move sooner or later, but Isshin's confirmation sped up Nudist Beach's operations, "To think Revocs is already moving on to the next stage, it's going to be chaos around here soon enough. But, as for Matoi... I'm afraid I won't be able to listen to you."

"Need I remind you of little miss Satsuki Kiryuin's recent expansion?" Aikuro asked Tsumugu sarcastically, "Her national school conquest is nearly complete apart from the Kansai region and, of course, Karakura Town."

The Kansai region was where Nudist Beach's headquarters were. It was the only place left in Japan besides Karakura Town where Revocs did not have a firm hold on the populace. Even with all of the resources at her disposal, Satsuki Kiryuin would need to increase her manpower if she wanted any chance of breaking through Nudist Beach's front lines, but even that would not be able to penetrate Karakura Town. Tsumugu didn't know how or why, but Isshin Kurosaki had something so dangerous on Ragyo Kiryuin that she had forbid her daughter from attempting to conquer Karakura High School.

"Let me give you two pieces of useful information," Tsumugu grabbed the cup of out Aikuro's hand and downed it in a single swallow, "One. I know that you're going to tell me Dr. Matoi's words about using the Kamui to stop the ambitions of the Kiryuins. As much as I would prefer for humans to solve this problem on our own, against someone like the Grand Couturier we are sorely outclassed. Two. I'm well aware I'm going against our organization's current goals. Do not try and lecture me."

Aikuro chuckled, "Am I that obvious of a Nudist?"

Tsumugu didn't appreciate Aikuro's joke. Taking a drag from his cigarette, he said, "You know how dangerous a Kamui is. In the hands of a normal person it is merely dangerous, but Matoi is emotional and easy to anger. There will come a time when she will let her anger get the better of her."

"What if Ryuko turns out to be a powerful ally?" Aikuro ignored the inference of Tsumugu's comment, "Now that Satsuki Kiryuin possesses a Kamui of her own, it makes sense to fight fire with fire. That is not to mention Ichigo's Kamui."

Aikuro tried to pour Tsumugu some sake, but the man stopped him short, "You must know what will happen if Matoi ever loses control of that thing. She will become a threat even greater than the Kiryuins. I've seen Ichigo's power. If such an event were to ever occur, I don't think he would be able to stop Matoi. That's why I need to destroy that thing before things get out of hand. I trust Masaki's son to never lose control, but the same cannot be said about Matoi. It's better she die as a human than live to get consumed by her uniform."

"Is that your final answer?" Aikuro swirled his sake around but didn't drink it, "If the higher ups find out about your mission, they'll strip you of every last bit of equipment."

"Then I'll just be a nude Nudish. I owe you a debt for everything you've done for me, Aikuro, and therefore I would do almost anything you asked of me," Tsumugu began walking away before quickly stopping, "But the debt I owe Isshin and Masaki is even greater. I refuse to stop pursuing Matoi under her Kamui is destroyed, but if it makes you feel any better, I will offer Matoi a single chance to relinquish her Kamui without a fight. That is the most you are going to get from me."

Aikuro watched Tsumugu disappear into the Honnou City night. After a moment he smirked, "You know Ichigo is going to come after you, don't you Tsumugu? In fact, I think you're counting on it. You want to see how the little boy Masaki talked so much about grew up. I think you'll be pleasantly surprised."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #2 - A Kurosaki Day Out

"Dad! Dad!"

Isshin put his book down and saw Yuzu running over to him. With Ichigo at Honnouji Academy doing who knows what, Yuzu and Karin had been sadder than usual. So he decided to take them to a water park in a neighboring town. Sure, it was out of the safety and protection of Karakura Town, but he was there so there should be no problems.

"Yes, Yuzu?" While Isshin was sitting on one of the chairs surrounding the pool, he didn't feel like actually going in.

"I made a new friend!" Yuzu beamed happily, "She's so fun and exciting! Wait right here! I'll go get her for you!"

Isshin pondered what his daughter just said. Yuzu having a new friend wasn't a big deal; she made friends all the time. Even Kon wasn't immune to Yuzu's charms and he wasn't even a person. As he saw Yuzu chatting happily with a very familiar looking girl, whose back was turned to him, Isshin started coughed dramatically. When Yuzu pointed to him and the girl turned around to look, Isshin nearly fell out of his chair.

"Oh, damn it."

"Dad, I'd like you to meet Nui Harime!" Yuzu announced with her arm around Nui's shoulders, "She's super nice and really fun!"

"Hello, Mr. Kurosaki!" Nui said in the same tone as Yuzu, as fake as it was, "It's a pleasure to meet you."

"Yes, well, it's nice to meet you," Isshin reached for his wallet and gave Yuzu twenty dollars, "Why don't you go to the snack bar and get something for us to eat, Yuzu."

As Yuzu happily took the money and left, Isshin turned on Nui, "What are you doing here?"

"You act like my whole life revolves around you," Nui turned her head and puffed out her cheeks, "I do have other things to do besides annoying you. Today is my yearly vacation day. Work has been so hard lately that I needed some time to myself. So why don't we just pretend like we didn't see each other. Is that alright with you, you old goat?"

Isshin narrowed his eyes before he shook hands with Nui over the temporary truce. He would never trust her as far as he could throw her, and he could throw her very far indeed, but for the sake of Yuzu and Karin's fun, he was willing to let it go for now.

Later that night, back in Karakura Town, Isshin nearly pulled his hair out in frustration as Yuzu put a picture of her, Karin and Nui on the mantle in the living room. As much as he wanted to simply throw the picture out, Isshin knew that he wouldn't be able to get away with it. Yuzu had the senses of a hawk when it came to her things disappearing. As he glared at the picture, Isshin couldn't believe how much of a pain in the ass Nui was without even trying.

Won't Get Fooled Again

Before I get into Chapter 15, I would like to point out that I'm still surprised at the popularity of this story. In my browsing of the interweb, I found links to my story across many different sites, which spurs me on to continue writing. So thank you to everyone that reviews and spreads the word of my story.

So onto the actual chapter. This is the second half of Episode 5, which really means it ends at the same time as Episode 5 ends. The events within the chapter are so different from canon that some of you might not even recognize it. Of course Tsumugu will fight Ryuko since it wouldn't be Kill la Kill without that happening, but the details of the fight as well as how it goes down is different. Three words: Plastic Explosive Pincushion.

Note: I am greatly interested in someone making a picture of Ichigo wearing Mugetsu. If anyone wants to do this, please PM me so we can work it out.

---

...

---

Chapter 15 - Won't Get Fooled Again

Under Satsuki Kiryuin's harsh rule, all students attending Honnouji Academy had a strict curfew of 10:00 PM, barring exigent circumstances. Any student found wandering the campus without a reasonable excuse would find themselves at the mercy of the Disciplinary Committee before being handed over to Ira Gamagori, who would go down on the student harder than usual due to having just been woken up. For the most part, every One-Star student and over obeyed the curfew without any fuss or complaints, but Ichigo Kurosaki didn't know about the curfew and wouldn't have cared even if he had.

The good thing about living in an almost empty dorm was that there weren't that many people around to witness anything. Nui Harime's visit on No-Late Day was a prime example of how this was a good thing. Ichigo had no doubts in his mind that if anyone were to have walked in on them, Nui would have easily and without hesitation killed the interloper in order, as she put it, to keep her secret. Ichigo didn't know why she was obsessed with him. Quite frankly it both scared and pissed him off.

Due to the lack of students both willing and able to stay in the dorms, the rooftop made an excellent place to speak without being overheard by spies or nosy people.

"Gah!"

"Hmm..." Mako raised a finger to her lips and tilted her head to the side, "I lost track. How many times was that?"

"Thirty one," Shinjiro Nagita answered without hesitation as he quickly added a tally mark to his writing pad. Much like Mako, he was sitting on the edge of the roof with a sandwich in his hands, "Ryuko's determination to persevere in the face of an unbeatable opponent is truly awe inspiring."

Ichigo frowned from where he was standing, "Yeah, but she's never going to land a hit if she just keeps charging in like that."

Skidding to a stop along the concrete roof, completely unharmed due to Senketsu acting as her skin, Ryuko grumbled angrily and picked herself off the ground. Brushing some dust off her Kamui, she glared at Ururu, who was still standing in the same spot as when the spar began.

" She's really strong, Ryuko," Senketsu's eye narrowed as he tried to come up with a strategy, but every plan the Kamui thought of was shot down by Ururu's lightning-fast reaction time and speed.

"Way to state the obvious," Ryuko wiped a trail of spit off her lips and stared at Ururu. When she had agreed to this spar in order to hone her skills and increase her abilities, she thought it would be simple. In her mind, Ururu only managed to kick Sanageyama's ass because he hadn't activated his Three-Star Goku Uniform. But after activating Life Fiber Synchronization and still not landing a single hit, Ryuko was beginning to wonder just how strong Ururu was, "There's no way you can be this strong."

"I wasn't always this strong," Ururu said softly, her hands clasped together in front of her, "I trained long and hard to get to where I am today."

"Huh," Ryuko grinned cockily as she digested that piece of information. If someone like Ururu, who hated fighting, could be trained to be this strong, then there was no doubt in her mind that she could do the same, "That's good to know. Ready for the next round?"

Ururu nodded her head, "Of course, but might I suggest trying to kill me? You won't be able to, but it would give you the strength and speed to maybe land a hit on me."

What Ururu just told her took Ryuko aback, "Kill you?"

"Yes," For the first time in the spar Ururu adopted a fighting stance. Bumping her gloved hands together softly, she added, "You should get ready, Ryuko. Here I come."

Ryuko nodded and brought her Scissor Blade up into a defensive position, but as much as she thought she was ready, she really wasn't. One moment she was standing almost twenty feet away from Ururu and the next she was sent flying into the air as Ururu's heel connected with her chin.

Winching in pain as specks of blood hovered in the air around her, Ryuko looked down at the roof out of one half-opened eye, "Damn it. I couldn't even see her move."

" I didn't even sense her. She's really tough."

"I know!" Ryuko shouted as she spun around in the air before landing on the roof in a crouch. Just as her heel clicked against the surface of the roof, she was forced to quickly jump backwards when Ururu sprinted towards her.

Barely dodging the first punch, Ryuko was caught off guard when Ururu abruptly switched tactics and swept her leg across the ground. Tossed back into the air, Ryuko was stunned when Ururu thrust her palm into her exposed stomach. Even with Senketsu's steel-like skin, the power behind the blow was like she wasn't even wearing a Kamui. Thrown back along the roof, Ryuko rolled to a stop and immediately noticed her Scissor Blade was no longer in her hands. Twisting her head around, she saw the weapon held firmly in Ururu's hand.

Ururu gazed at the peculiar weapon in her left hand with something akin to wonder and interest. Something about it felt familiar, but that wasn't possible. Turning to a flabbergasted Ryuko, she said, "Your grip was too light. I was able to disarm you with hardly any effort."

"This is terrible!" Mako's arms were raised in front of her body and her eyes were on the verge of tears. Her best friend was equipped with her Sunday best and yet was unable to put up a fight! Gathering her courage, she stood up and shouted, "Come on Ryuko! Where's your fighting spirit? There's no way you should be getting thrown around like my old doll!"

"It is rather strange," Shinjiro flipped through his notepad. Frowning as he recalled something he wrote days ago, he turned to Ichigo, "Ryuko should be stronger than this. Didn't you say she was equal to Satsuki in strength?"

"Just about," Ichigo answered briefly, "She's holding back."

"Ryuko?" Shinjiro asked before wincing when Ryuko was thrown back and her Scissor Blade taken away.

"No. Ururu," Ichigo stated neutrally, "She's probably fighting at about a quarter of her strength. If Ururu wasn't holding back, she would have killed Ryuko when the fight started."

While Mako gasped at that revelation and cheered on Ryuko even more, Shinjiro seemed to become pensive, but Ichigo chalked his less cheery mood to his current state. Some time during No-Late Day, Shinjiro had been ambushed by the Disciplinary Committee and had the crap beat out of him. While most of his wounds had been superficial and needed nothing more than bandages and gauze, Shinjiro was forced to cover his left eye with an eye patch for the foreseeable future.

"Ururu's that strong?" The familiar awe was back in his voice, which showed Ichigo that Shinjiro was back to his old self, "That's incredible! She could be our secret weapon to expose Lady Satsuki's tyranny once and for all!"

"What's with you and taking down Satsuki?" Ichigo arched an eyebrow. There was something odd about how Shinjiro always wanted to go after Satsuki, "Can't you - "

"Look at the color changing!"

Ichigo and Shinjiro turned towards Mako, who had shouted the exclamation, before turning towards Ururu. While they were both stunned by what they saw, it was Ichigo who voiced what was on both of their minds, "It's turning purple?"

They were not the only ones to notice. Both Ryuko, whose eyes were wide as saucers and her lips trembling, and Ururu, who viewed it with a mixture of detached interest and confusion, had noticed it as well. Holding the Scissor Blade out in front of her petite body, Ururu watched as the red color of the blade started bleeding away only to be replaced by a shade of dark purple. In only a few seconds there wasn't any trace of red left on it. It was now a purple Scissor Blade.

"How strange..." Ururu held the blade up to her eyes and stared deeply at it. She had no idea why it had changed color, but nothing seemed to have been changed besides its cosmetic appearance, "Why did it turn purple?"

"You..." Ryuko's body was trembling and her head was tilted down, hiding her eyes beneath thick shadows. Clenching her fists angrily to the point where she should have drawn blood, she glared at Ururu and seethed, "Just who are you anyway?"

With almost wild abandon Ryuko raced along the roof, the vents on her back only helping to increase her speed. As she closed the distance between Ururu and herself, Ryuko cocked a fist back and aimed for her target's face. She could tell by the look in Ururu's eyes that she hadn't expected Ryuko to just come charging at her. That did not, however, stop Ururu from leaning to the side and allowing the punch to go sailing harmlessly past less than an inch from her nose. Nor did it stop her from stabbing the now purple Scissor Blade into the roof, rearing her arm back and driving her fist deep into Ryuko's solar plexus.

"Gah!" Ryuko spit out globs of blood as Ururu punched her with nearly half of her strength. Collapsing onto the ground with only a single shaking arm preventing her face from hitting it, Ryuko gasped for breath and looked up into Ururu's passive face, "Why?"

"Huh?" Ururu blinked owlshly in confusion.

"Why..." Ryuko took a moment to catch her breath, "... why did you kill my dad?"

Ururu stared at the fallen Ryuko before crouching down next to her. Staring level into Ryuko's eyes, she tilted her head to the side and said, "But I didn't kill your dad. I don't even know who he is."

"What?" Ryuko managed to regain some control over her body as the pain in her stomach abated, "But my Scissor Blade. Why did it turn purple when you held it?"

Ururu briefly looked at the skewered weapon, "I don't know, but I'm really sorry for any confusion and anger I may have caused you. Please forgive me!"

A faint blush of embarrassment adorned Ryuko's cheeks as Ururu apologized to her profusely. She was about to apologize when Senketsu spoke to her, "That was dangerous of you, Ryuko."

Ryuko stared at Senketsu's only working eye and saw that it was narrowed in anger, "What do you mean, Senketsu?"

" When you got angry just now, your blood began boiling hotter and hotter," Her Kamui paused for a moment to let his words sink in before continuing, "If it had continued for much longer, I would not have been able to control my taste for your blood. You need to be careful in the future. You mustn't let your anger take control of you or it will not end well for either of us."

"You're right," Ryuko sighed dejectedly, "It's just that I - "

"Ryuko!"

Ryuko didn't have much warning before Mako latched onto her neck, spun around once and tackled her to the ground. As she tried to get Mako's hands away from her neck so that she was able to breath, Mako tightened her grip even more, "Don't die on me, Ryuko! I can't afford to go searching for a new best friend this time of the year. It's too much of a hassle!"

"Mako... can't... breath..." Ryuko comically gasped for breath as her face started turning blue. Her relief came when Ichigo grabbed Mako by the back of her collar and pulled her off of the nearly dead Ryuko.

"Easy Mako," Ichigo let Mako down gently before offering a hand to Ryuko, "Are you alright?"

Instead of taking his hand, Ryuko deactivated Senketsu and sat cross-legged on the ground with her arms folded in front of her chest. With a pout of anger on her face, she asked, "How well do you know Ururu?"

"Ururu?" Ichigo looked at said girl and watched as she played keep away with Mako and the purple Scissor Blade that she still hadn't given back to Ryuko. Scratching his head, he answered, "Well... she worked for Kisuke for a while. I think she's his daughter or something. I never saw her outside of his shop or school."

"So she can't be the one who killed my dad. Then why did my Scissor Blade change colors when she held it?"

"Hell if I know," Ichigo shrugged and extended his hand towards Ururu, who immediately gave the Scissor Blade back. Strangely enough, as soon as his hand closed around the handle, the purple bled away and was replaced by the same dark shade of blue that Tournesol shone with. Giving it an experimental swing, he said, "Perhaps it just changes color if someone else holds it."

Flipping the blade around in his grip, Ichigo handed it back to Ryuko, who took it and watched the blue fade away to red almost immediately. Staring at the blade with a mixture of suspicion and betrayal for several long moments, she sighed and grumbled, "I guess I went a little crazy back there. God, I feel like such an idiot for blaming Ururu for what happened to my dad!"

Ichigo paused and looked to the side and away from Ryuko, "You never said what happened to your dad."

"That's because there isn't much to say," Ryuko admitted sadly, her gaze locked firmly on the ground in front of her, "Dad called me back home to talk about something. When I got back, I found him lying against the wall with this blade sticking out of his stomach. I tried to save him, damn it I tried, but I caught a glimpse of a woman with the other half of this weapon fleeing. That's all I know."

"Hmm..."

Ryuko noticed Ichigo's lack of response and looked up. Seeing him staring into the distance, she asked, "What is it?"

Ichigo watched Mako say something bombastically to Shinjiro, who replied just as enthusiastically, before replying, "I have an idea who the woman is."

"What?" Ryuko shot to her feet, "Who is it?"

Ichigo shook his head, "It's just a suspicion, but I'm pretty sure it's her. Everything just adds up too perfectly to be anything else."

Ryuko huffed angrily, "Can I at least know her name?"

"Yeah," Ichigo yawned and started to head back to his room. It was getting late and he was certain that Tsumugu would be coming back tomorrow to finish what he started with Ryuko, "Her name is Nui Harime."

"Nui Harime..." Ryuko let the name roll off her tongue. It was certainly a name she wouldn't forget anytime soon, "Hey, are you going to help me tomorrow against that guy?"

Ichigo looked at Ryuko, "You want me to?"

"Yes. No. Maybe. I don't know!" Ryuko grumbled and kicked her foot against the roof, "I want to know what that guy has against Senketsu, but he has so many damn tricks up his sleeves. For all I know, he's tinkering right this moment and making new traps and weapons to throw me off guard. He already managed to catch me off guard once already. What's to stop him from doing it a second time when I'm not expecting it?"

That was a good point. Ichigo could see that while Ryuko would have preferred to fight her own battles, she was willing to ask for his help, "I'll do what I can, but if he's as smart as you say he is, he's going to wait until we're separated before attacking."

"Thanks," A smile graced Ryuko's face as she followed Ichigo back into the building. Perhaps tomorrow wouldn't be as bad as she thought.

---

...

---

A frown graced Satsuki Kiryuin's face.

Satsuki liked to believe she could predict events in advance. With human nature being what it was, it was simply a matter of determining how a person usually reacts in order to figure out the best course of action in limiting their power and influence. Sometimes it's their pride, knowledge, honor, or simply adoration, but people have weaknesses. Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi were no different.

Sipping her tea before continuing to read the latest report on Ryuko, Satsuki felt that reading it was a waste a time. She already knew the motivations behind Ryuko's actions, due in no small part to causing them herself. All she needed to do to provoke Ryuko into making irrational choices it to subtly mention the death of her father. It was almost too easy. Ichigo Kurosaki, on the other hand, was more complicated and difficult to read. Satsuki had tried to speak with him on multiple occasions, only succeeding in a couple, but what she was about to deduce wasn't enough to predict how Ichigo would react to future stimuli. He was honorable and law-abiding, but at the same time was willing to break rules in order to do what is right. If she was any other person, Satsuki would have applauded Ichigo, but right now he was a major obstacle to her plans.

"What is the best course of action for reining in Ichigo?" Satsuki leaned back and gently closed her eyes, "He is no doubt suspicious of my motives and will not listen to anything I say without a grain of salt. Perhaps I can use that suspicion to my advantage. By mixing together enough truths and lies, I should be able to trick him into doing what I want."

"Lady Satsuki," Houka Inumuta's voice carried across the room, reminding Satsuki that she wasn't alone, "I have the information you requested about the intruder who took out the Gardening Club this morning."

"I see," Satsuki would think more on dealing with Ichigo once the discussion was finished. She was finding, to her irritation, that her thoughts continued to circulate around Ichigo more than she would have preferred, "What did you find?"

Inumuta pressed a key and immediately a picture of Tsumugu was prominently displayed on the large screen taking up most of the wall next to Satsuki. Staring at the picture, her face illuminated by the green and black glow, she glanced over the various statistics before focusing solely on the pictures of his encounter with Ryuko and Ichigo earlier that day

"Information surrounding this man is surprisingly limited," As a computer expert majoring in data infiltration and gathering, Inumuta took pride in his ability to find out almost anything about anyone. His several failed attempts to find so much as the name of this man irked him to no end, "But the data I was able to gather suggests that he is a member of the Anti-Uniform paramilitary, Nudist Beach, that has been plaguing us over the last three years."

"Nudist Beach?" Ira Gamagori towered over his fellow Elite Fours as he stared at the screen with a mixture of disdain and contemplation, "That same group that's been dismantling several of Lady Satsuki associated academies?"

"The one and the same," Inumuta adjusted his glasses before continuing, "While that group has been working against Lady Satsuki, this man has personally taken out nine academies and schools in the last year alone."

"Nine?" Uzu Sanageyama uncrossed his legs and sat up on the edge of the couch, "Why haven't we caught this man yet?"

"He's smart," Inumuta explained, "Upon arrival at an academy, he immediately heads towards the Student Council and takes them out. Once the Student Council Lady Satsuki put into power is dismantled..."

"... We lose control over the academy and its students," Gamagori finished gruffly. Upon successfully taking over an academy, Lady Satsuki allows a Student Council of her choosing to run the school in her absence. To prevent any potential uprisings, each member of the council is given a Goku Uniform for their role in helping her expand her power. With this man taking out the councils, large swatches of Japan had broken away and joined up with the three remaining academies in the Kansai Region. Frowning deeply, he looked at Inumuta and asked, "How is this man accomplishing this? He doesn't seem to be wearing any Life Fiber-infused clothing."

"I was getting to that," Inumuta annoyingly admonished before typing a few more keys, "As I was about to say, this is the man's primary weapon."

Inumuta slid his fingers across the screen of his laptop and immediately the picture of Tsumugu vanished and was replaced by several of his Sewing Machine Gun. With another swipe, several high-resolution images of the needles used as ammunition as well as a basic schematic of the weapon appeared.

"How barbaric," Nonon Jakuzure quipped playfully as she looked at the weapon, "Using such a crude weapon against Lady Satsuki is just stupid. It's a wonder he even managed to take down a single associated academy in the first place."

"The needles he uses are composed of a special alloy that possesses the ability to sever the link between a human and a Life Fiber," Inumuta explained, annoyed at Nonon's interruption of his explanation, "Hmm? This is strange. It says that the alloy in the needles is the sole intellectual property of Revocs."

"How does a man working for an Anti-Uniform group gain access to classified materials?" Gamagori asked casually, "Could there be a traitor at Revocs assisting these Nudists?"

"I doubt that" Satsuki answered calmly, a cold tone to her voice, "My mother would not tolerate dissension of any kind in her company. If an employee so much as harbors thoughts of espionage, they disappear. Inumuta, pull up the list of robberies, both successful and attempted, against Revocs over the last twenty years."

"Electronic records only go back eighteen years, but I'll try," Inumuta typed rapidly against his keyboard, his fingers little more than blurs of motion. After more than a minute passed in silence without a hint of progress from the former hacker, he managed to find something useful, "I've managed to compile a list of internal Revocs memos. Of the hundreds of memos, only one, dating back fourteen years, references a missing shipment of classified materials. It's not concrete, but I do believe it is what you're looking for."

"It does not matter how he came into possession of the alloy," Satsuki concluded.

"Allow us to confront him directly," Sanageyama offered energetically, "The Goku Uniforms you gave to the other academies were no stronger than Two-Star. There is no way that he can take down all four of us."

"An excellent suggestion, but a pointless one," Satsuki turned her head and waited for Soroi to refill her cup of tea before continuing, "This man's target is Matoi, not me."

"Why would he be after Matoi?" Gamagori asked.

Satsuki spoke as calmly as ever, "His goal is her Kamui. Since his intentions do not involve me, this skirmish is simply a struggle between a sandpiper and a clam. Jumping in and getting involved will only dirty our hands. We will leave him alone and allow Matoi to fight her own battles."

"What about Strawberry?" Jakuzure asked suspiciously.

"You needn't worry about him," Satsuki sighed cockily as she sipped her tea, "Ichigo won't be a problem."

"Do you want me to take care of him?" Sanageyama asked, willingly offering his services to Satsuki. He was still smarting over his defeat to Ururu a few days ago. If getting his ass kicked by a little girl wasn't enough, he failed to get his revenge on Ichigo during No-Late Day. Somehow even without his Kamui, Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi escaped from him with barely a scratch.

"Your willingness is appreciated, " Satsuki condoned, "But unnecessary. It is likely that the clash between Matoi and this man will spread throughout Honnouji Academy. I need you to gather the Athletic Club Captains and be ready to capture this man as soon as the fight is over. Whether he defeats Matoi or vice versa, he will be exhausted both physically and mentally. It will be a prime opportunity to capture a member of Nudist Beach and determine their goals and plans."

"Strawberry is going to be a problem," Jakuzure quipped haughtily, "It'll be just like a prince saving a princess. But in this case the princess is an ugly troll with no sense of fashion."

"Ichigo is the kind of person to step in and help those close to him," Satsuki put the now empty cup of tea down and steeped her fingers, "Getting him away from Matoi for the duration of the fight is going to be a problem."

"Let me deal with Strawberry," Jakuzure chuckled coldly, "He needs to learn his place. What better way is there than to be crushed under my feet?"

"What a peculiar reaction," Inumuta noticed with a bit of sarcasm in his voice, "If I didn't know any better, I would think you were obsessed with Ichigo Kurosaki."

"Quiet doggy," Jakuzure growled menacingly, the mouth of the monkey skull on her hat opening and closing alongside her own, "It is true that the transfer student was the one to wreck my Biology Club, but Strawberry has taken out several other clubs. I'm not going to sit back and let him keep doing that. It is up to the Non-Athletic Committee to take care of its own problems. That is, of course, if Lady Satsuki permits me to do so."

"You may," Satsuki answered after a second, "But you must know that Ichigo's abilities far exceed anything you have witnessed so far. I have seen how he's defeated the Club Captains. It is nothing compared to the strength he used to fight and defeat me. If you wish to fight him, I will not stop you, but you can guess the price of failure. Either you come back to me with his Kamui in hand or you will be demoted down to a No-Star. I am giving you a single chance to reconsider your choice, Jakuzure."

"You don't need to be worried about me, Lady Satsuki," Nonon Jakuzure smirked and brushed imaginary dust off her shoulders, "I'm not going to underestimate Strawberry one bit. If he was strong enough to fight you fairly, it would be quite rude to not go all out myself."

Satsuki smiled minutely at Nonon's determination, "Very well then. If you are so determined on fighting Ichigo, then you have my permission to do so. However, you must know that you would be at a disadvantage to Ichigo's speed and strength."

"That is where I come in," Iori's voice spoke up from the shadows. Stepping forward and briefly acknowledging the Elite Four, he turned to Satsuki and continued, "I have done what you asked of me, Lady Satsuki. After several hours of going through the combat data involving the Symphony Regalia, I believe I have ironed out most flaws and mistakes. Jakuzure, please come with me. I need to test fit the Symphony Regalia Mark II."

A wide grin spread across Nonon's face as she stood up and followed Iori. With the power afforded to her by her new and improved Goku Uniform, she was going to make Ichigo pay for the humiliation he inflicted on her. That was for certain.

---

...

---

Ryuko strummed her fingers against her desk as she barely paid attention to Aikuro's rambling about the Iran-Contra Affair. As much as she liked to learn about history, there was something wrong with Aikuro if he was able to make her zone out as much as she was. There was no way this man was a member of whatever organization Nudist Beach is, which she still thinks is bullshit Aikuro made up to mess with her. Suppressing a yawn and scribbling down a few more notes, she looked at her hand and frowned when she noticed it was shaking.

"Is it because I'm nervous about fighting that man again?"

She would be lying if she said that Tsumugu didn't frighten her. The way the man knew how to disable her attempt to activate Senketsu meant that he must have experience fighting Life Fibers. Did he know about Senketsu and Kamui because he fought them before? How did he know Ichigo's mother? Thoughts like those plagued her mind and it only helped to increase the annoyance she was feeling.

"Your blood has had a bad taste to it all morning, Ryuko."

"Huh?" Ryuko glanced down at Senketsu, "What are you talking about?"

"All the nervousness you're feeling is making your blood taste really sour," Senketsu hummed and his eye blinked once before adding, "Or perhaps its all the lemons you've been eating lately. Switch to less sour fruit."

"Why do you care what I eat?" Ryuko mumbled and tried to focus back on Aikuro's dull lecture. It took Ryuko a moment to put the pieces together, but when she finally did, she stared back down at Senketsu and hissed quietly, "Wait a second, you can tell how my blood tastes?"

" As your Kamui, I have the ability to immediately detect any changes in your physiology. This includes your cholesterol, blood sugar level, weight and even your BMI."

Ryuko bit back a hiss of pain as her knee involuntarily jerked up and into her desk. Rubbing her luckily un-bruised knee, she growled at her Kamui, "Keep your nose out of stuff like that! It's private for a reason, damn it."

" It is private, but as your Kamui I have a vested interest in your health and welfare," Senketsu ignored Ryuko's complaints in order to continue giving his sagely advice. He knew that no matter what she said, she would soon realize everything he did was for her best interests, "Speaking of food, you should cut back on those croquettes. You need to eat a more balanced diet, like Ichigo."

"Don't bring Ichigo into this!" Ryuko tried to keep her voice down to barely a whisper. She was in the middle of class, not outside where nobody would notice her talking to Senketsu. She got enough funny looks as it is. She didn't want people to think she heard voices that weren't there, "And wipe that smug expression off your face."

" You should know by know that I am incapable of having any expression on my face... because I do not have a face!"

Ryuko grabbed Senketsu's collar and pulled hard, "Why you son of a
_ "

Her curse was cut short when the class bell rang, signifying that she didn't need to put up with any more of Senketsu's so-called advice. Quickly grabbing her bag, she made her way out of the classroom and found Ichigo waiting for her in the hallway.

"Hey Ichigo," Ryuko hooked her hands behind her neck, "What are you doing here?"

Ichigo pointed his thumb over his shoulder, "Mako wouldn't stop bothering me until I told her where your class was."

"Ryuko!"

Ryuko stepped to the side as Mako came diving through the air, causing her to go rolling along the ground before flipping into the air and impacting face-first against the nearby wall. As Mako comically peeled off the wall and fell to the ground, she quickly picked herself back up and shook the dust out of her hair, "Why didn't you catch me, Ryuko?"

"Huh?" Ryuko raised an eyebrow, "Was I supposed to?"

"Of course you were!" Mako pumped a fist dramatically, "You were supposed to catch me midair so that I wouldn't get hurt."

"I'll remember that next time," Ryuko sarcastically rolled her eyes and turned to Ichigo, "Hey, where's Ururu?"

"She's thinking about joining a club," Ichigo shook his head. He remembered Ururu expressing a want to join one of the many clubs at Honnouji Academy. Her argument was that there were many different and interesting things to do at the school and she was interested in joining one of the Non-Athletic Clubs. When Ichigo asked her which one, Ururu had paused, tilted her head to the side and said that she didn't know yet, but she would let him know as soon as she did.

"Oh. I was going to apologize for what happened last night," Ryuko turned away in embarrassment. Even though Ururu had been the one to apologize for causing her to snap like that, Ryuko knew it was just because the girl felt the need to please everyone. If apologizing for something she didn't do would help to calm everyone down, then Ururu would do it. Sighing wistfully, she asked, "Have you seen any sign of that guy?"

"No, and that's what bothers me," Ichigo looked out the line of windows along the wall of the hall and down into the courtyard below. At the height they were standing and with all the students milling about outside, it was hard to tell if one of them was that man. Shaking his head, he turned back to Ryuko, "But I doubt he'll just show up in the middle of the day. I don't think Satsuki was too pleased with what he did yesterday."

"Perhaps she'll take care of him for us," Ryuko laughed and added, "But if she thinks I'm going to thank her, she can rot in hell."

" Ichigo."

Ichigo and Ryuko stopped as Mugetsu spoke up, "What is it."

" Something's not right," Mugetsu's voice sounded slightly worried. As her multicolored eyes narrowed in thought, they quickly opened and turned to the right, "Get down!"

Ichigo didn't even think twice. Grabbing Mako and Ryuko, he dove to the ground as the windows exploded inwards, coating the entire hallway in shards of glass and metal while injuring the dozens of students around them. Coughing and getting back to his feet, Ichigo looked around for the source of the attack and soon found out what, or rather who, it was.

"Aw. I missed." From her position hovering just outside the hole in Honnouji Academy's wall, Nonon Jakuzure raised a hand suggestively to her lips as she gazed down at her target. In a deceptively sweet voice that promised sugar and rainbows, she added with a cocky grin, "I'll just have to try harder to hit you with my next salvo."

Unlike her previous bulky and unwieldy Goku Uniform, Nonon's new Symphony Regalia was designed specifically for high speed combat.

Her entire body, save for her head, was encased in a pink flight suit with six red buttons going down her chest. Her drum major's hat, the same one with the skull of a monkey, now looked like an actual skull. Her forearms and lower legs were enveloped by white armor similar to Mugetsu's but resembling pieces of instruments. When she noticed Ichigo staring at her new uniform, Nonon struck a pose and adjusted her lower thrusters to bring her a little closer.

"Do you like my new uniform, Strawberry? It was made specifically to kill you."

"What the hell do you have against Ichigo, Snake?" Ryuko shook her fist at Nonon while calling her the nickname Ichigo said pissed the pink haired girl off.

"Keep out of this, Transfer Student!" Nonon hissed at Ryuko while the woofers extending from her shoulders temporarily glowed with an ominous pink, "Unless you want to die as well, I suggest you stay out of this. Lady Satsuki has ordered me not to deal with you today, so consider yourself lucky."

"Like hell I'm going to stand back," Ryuko reached for the pin on her glove. She wasn't about to allow Ichigo to fight against an opponent like Nonon, but before she could pull it out and give Senketsu the donation of blood he needed to transform, Ichigo's voice stopped her.

"She's right, Ryuko," Ichigo reached for Tournesol on his back with his left hand while his right hand moved towards the spaulder on his left shoulder, "Leave this to me. Take Mako somewhere safe. I don't trust Jakuzure to not hit her during our fight."

"You finally used my name," Nonon smirked and leaned back midair, "Does that mean you respect my power now?"

"Hell no!" Ichigo vehemently denied, causing Nonon to flounder around in the air from the surprise, "If anything, I respect you even less now! Attacking innocent students just for a shot at hitting me?

How low are you?"

Nonon bit her lip at the insult to her honor. How dare Ichigo say she had no honor when it was Lady Satsuki's orders that she take him out! He had no idea what he was talking about, "Bold words, Strawberry, but I'm going to make you eat them."

"Come and try!" Ichigo slammed his hand down on the spaulder and was immediately enveloped in light and blue stars as Mugetsu transformed around his body, "Life Fiber Initial Release: Kamui Mugetsu!"

Stepping out of the smoke that formed from his transformation, Ichigo dispersed it with a swing of his blade and turned towards Nonon, "Let's do this, but not here. I don't want any innocent people to get hurt."

Before Nonon could give an answer, Ichigo leapt out the hole she made in the wall and fell towards the ground below. Scrambling to recover the initiative, she spun around and flew down after him, "It doesn't matter where we fight, because I'm going to wipe the floor with you!"

As Nonon's angry voice faded into the distance, Ryuko ran towards the hole and gripped the jagged edges with her hand. Her eyes fervently looked everywhere, but she couldn't see any sign of where Ichigo went. Cursing under her breath, she was about to turn away when a large explosion appeared in the building next door. Focusing on the rising plume of smoke, she could just barely make out a figure that looked a lot like Ichigo racing across a rooftop with Nonon chasing after him relentlessly.

"Mako, go find Ururu and stay close to her," Ryuko had no doubts that Ururu would protect Mako. Stepping onto the edge of the hole, she prepared to activate Senketsu to follow Ichigo, whether he wanted her help or not, but frowned when she didn't hear Mako say anything, "Hey Mako, I said - "

Ryuko stopped when she saw Mako's needle-filled body falling stiffly to the ground. Realizing who was coming, she quickly pulled the pin out of her glove, transforming Senketsu, and drew her red Scissor Blade just as Tsumugu fired a barrage of needles at her from his Sewing Machines Gun.

"Your skill has improved remarkably since our encounter yesterday," Tsumugu complimented as he stepped out of the shadows, "So let me give you two pieces of useful information. One. Do not think that our fight yesterday was any indication of my skill set. Two. I am giving you a single chance to hand over your Kamui with a fight. If you fail to do so, I will have no choice but to rip it off your body."

" Be careful, Ryuko. This man seems to know a lot about how to counter me.

"You worry too much, Senketsu. So just sit back and let me do the fighting. " Turning towards a frowning Tsumugu, she pointed her Scissor Blade at him and said, "You really think I'm just going to hand over Senketsu? You're going to have to take him over my dead body!"

Tsumugu closed his eyes and took a deep breath, "So be it."

---

...

---

Ichigo was not having a good day.

Moving a large chunk of concrete blocking his path out of the way, he hopped down and accidentally landed on the unconscious body of a member of the Men's Basketball Club.

"Are you having fun yet, Strawberry?" Nonon hovered gently out of the hole she created in the roof. With her hands placed on her hips, she added, "Because I'm having a lot of fun kicking your butt."

"Shut up," Ichigo rolled his eyes at the fake sweetness in Nonon's voice. He was starting to get rather pissed off with the way she was talking to him and treating him. It was almost as if this fight was a game to her which, he had to admit, it was one he was losing. Since she could fly through the air, Nonon had a distinct advantage over him. While his speed and power were great enough that he could jump high enough in the air to hit her, she had proven herself able to reflexively dodge his attacks.

"Don't get angry at me because you suck," Nonon grinned and stuck her tongue out, "But don't feel too bad, Strawberry. There is no way you can defeat my Symphony Regalia Mark II. It was upgraded and improved all in order to defeat you."

"Improved?" Ichigo spit on the ground and stretched his right shoulder. Swinging Tournesol was taking a toll on his body. It had been a while since he used a blade and his body was suffering because of it, "So that means your first Goku Uniform wasn't good enough to fight me?"

"It was more than good enough!" Nonon swung her fist down at Ichigo angrily, which due to her diminutive size, wasn't as threatening as she wanted it to be, "It was all you and your stupid speed! My Symphony Regalia Grave's power was more than enough to defeat you, but you're just too damn fast! Luckily, Lady Satsuki was grateful enough to upgrade my Goku Uniform to its current form. Now I have all the power of Grave with the speed to catch you!"

Nonon punctuated her words by firing another stream of musical notes at Ichigo. Deflecting the abnormal metallic ammo with Tournesol, blue sparks jumping off the blade with every note blocked, Ichigo tried to think of a way to defeat Nonon. Trying to attack her had already proven to be ineffective. She knew how strong and fast he was, so she always made sure to fly just far enough away to avoid his attacks.

"Aw, screw this!" Ichigo twisted his body just enough to the side that the barrage of notes passed right above his skin. With his body still in motion, he sprinted towards Nonon before pushing off the ground towards her with enough power to dent the concrete below.

"How many times are you going to try the same old thing?" Nonon laughed as she prepared to move out of the way, "It's really sad to see - "

She stopped midsentence as her pink eyes widened in shock at the blue blade approaching her neck. Instinctively adjusting her thrusters to fire upwards, she leaned back at the same time and watched as Tournesol missed hitting her but managed to leave a long gash on her helmet. Flying away higher into the sky even as Ichigo landed back on the ground, Nonon raised a trembling hand to her head and ran her finger across the gash in her Symphony Regalia that could have easily been her throat.

" Strawberry was really trying to kill me."

For the first time in the fight, Nonon realized that Ichigo wasn't kidding around. As much as she and the other Elite Four bragged about killing anyone who dared to stand up to or fight against Lady Satsuki, she had yet to actually do the deed. She usually left such tasks to Gamagori or Lady Satsuki. Swallowing nervously as she noticed Ichigo staring at her, she gathered her nerves and thought, "There is no reason to be scared. Lady Satsuki believes in me, so there is no way I can lose! Strawberry is just trying to psyche me out. Like a pampered asshole that got a full scholarship to Honnouji Academy could have ever fought in a real battle. His fight against Lady Satsuki was nothing more than a fluke!"

"Nice try Strawberry," Nonon growled, "But don't think I'll fall for your bluff!"

Back on the ground, Ichigo stared up at the hovering Nonon and let out an annoyed huff, "Damn it, I was close. Hey Mugetsu, you have any ideas on what to do?"

" Oh?" Mugetsu's eyes swiveled around and gazed up at him, "What makes you think I know how to beat her. I'm just as stumped as you are."

Ichigo rolled his eyes, "There has to be something I can do. Can't you fly or something?"

" Don't you think I would fly if I could?" Mugetsu asked sarcastically before her eyes widened and then narrowed, "I have an idea, but I'm going to need a minute to figure it out."

"I don't think I have a minute," Ichigo saw the woofers on Nonon's back charging up with pink light. Clenching Tournesol's hilt in both hands, he prepared himself for what was coming.

"Try to dodge this!" Nonon's body was forced back as two heart-shaped beams of sound exploded out from her woofers, "Symphony Regalia: Grave Assault!"

"The hell?" Ichigo swung Tournesol up and managed to block one of the beams, but he wasn't prepared for the second beam to blow right through his defenses and hit him square in the chest. As his body was forced backward across the ground, he tried desperately to stop the attack right until it detonated around him.

From where she was floating, Nonon smirked as she observed the rising clouds of smoke and dust. There was no way that Ichigo could have survived that attack without taking at least some damage. Hovering closer to the ground, she began combing through the debris. She needed to find Ichigo's unconscious body so that she could tear his Kamui off of him. Seeing his naked body afterwards was simply a bonus.

"Where is that damn Strawberry?" she growled after nearly a minute. She couldn't find a trace of Ichigo or his Kamui, which meant she either blew him to pieces, which was really bad, or she missed, which was even worse. Gritting her teeth and spitting, she decided to smoke Ichigo out, "So you want to hide like a coward, huh? Fine then. Let's see how you deal with this. Symphony Regalia: Moderato Assault!"

The twin woofers on Nonon's back split into four sections each as a pink and purple light began to grow in intensity from within. As the light continued to grow brighter to the point where the immediate area was bathed in shades of pink, Nonon raised a finger into the air and laughed, "Dodge this!"

In a concussive blast accentuated by expanding shockwaves from the woofers, eight miniature heart-shaped beams spiraled through the air and hit the rubble and debris with enough energy to explode the concrete and send cracks radiating outwards from the point of impact.

"Too easy..." Nonon sighed and shrugged her shoulders. It seemed that Strawberry was all talk and no action. After that little display of speed yesterday, she thought he would put up more of a fight than this. Lady Satsuki had warned her about his power, but Nonon hadn't seen anything to suggest he was as strong as Satsuki said he was. Wait a second... if he wasn't as strong as she thought, did that mean Satsuki wasn't as well? Nonon quickly shook her head to stop herself from thinking of such thoughts. Satsuki was the greatest person in the world! Such thoughts were highly insulting to her best friend and leader!

"Oh well," Nonon hovered closer to the ground and began looking for Ichigo. Even if he was hiding, there was no way in hell that he managed to avoid her Moderato Assault.

"Huh?" Nonon stared at several small rocks that seemed to be vibrating and moving on their own. Leaning in to take a closer look, she was nearly blasted out of the air as something shot out from the ground and into the air above her.

"What the hell was that?"

She stared upwards and growled. Hovering in the air over her was Ichigo, but his appearance was different. While Mugetsu usually resembled armor, her new appearance was much more metallic and sleek. Ichigo's feet and lower legs had each transformed into jet engines that expelled enough force to keep him hovering lazily in the air. Mugetsu's eyes, which normally jutted up over his shoulders, extended backwards and out to the side and took the form of jet wings. Lastly, while Ichigo's face was usually uncovered by Mugetsu's transformed state, parts of her white armor now wrapped across his nose and down his cheeks.

"Mugetsu Gufū," Ichigo smirked at the stunned Nonon, "What was it you were saying about the skies being your kingdom?"

Nonon didn't say anything as her expression darkened considerably. Gritting her teeth together, her body tensed up before she rocketed towards Ichigo while shouting, "You orange haired bastard! The sky is my world! I'm going to kick your ass for mocking me!"

The venom in Nonon's voice surprised Ichigo, but it didn't slow him down much. As she quickly closed the distance between them, Ichigo twisted his body around and flew away from her, his body moving awkwardly as he grew used to flight.

"Die, Strawberry!" Nonon shouted and aimed her lower thrusters at Ichigo before releasing a swarm of missiles.

Maneuvering around a missile, Ichigo tsked, "What the hell is her problem?"

" It's something you'll never understand, Ichigo," Due to the new position of Mugetsu's eyes, Ichigo wasn't able to make eye contact, but that didn't stop him from responding.

"And you do?"

" Of course," Mugetsu answered matter-of-factly, "I am well aware of the female mind and I can tell you that your opponent never fought someone able to fly. Your use of Gufū has insulted her."

"What do you expect me to do? Just give up and allow her to hit me?" Leaning back and avoiding having his head blown off by a recorder-shaped missile, Ichigo decided to go on the offensive. Stabbing Tournesol into the missile's casing, he let out a shout as he spun around and, with no small amount of effort, threw the missile back at Nonon.

"Like hell that's going to work!" Nonon had a wild look in her eyes as she deftly avoided her returned missile and countered with another heart-shaped stream of sound, "You're going to pay for that you bastard!"

"Do you have a plan?" Mugetsu's voice was full of sarcasm, "Because I think that just made things worse."

"Oh great," Ichigo sighed as he quickly twisted around before flying higher into the sky. This was going to take longer than he thought. He only hoped Ryuko didn't run into that man until he was done with Nonon.

---

...

---

Ryuko really hated her bad timing.

"Damn that paranoid bastard."

Stabbing her Scissor Blade into the wall, she leapt over the line of trap mines and landed in the relative safety of the hall. The sheer amount of destruction and nude students to her left indicated which way Tsumugu had gone, but Ryuko wasn't stupid enough to follow him. She had already fallen into three spool grenade traps, a pin bomb and something involving laser tripwires. She wasn't too keen on walking headfirst into yet another trap. Pulling out the last few remaining needles from her body, she heard Senketsu let out a sigh of relief upon their removal.

" Thank you, Ryuko," Senketsu sighed gratefully, "There was something special about those needles. You need to try and not get hit by any more of them."

"Yeah, yeah," Ryuko crouched down and stared at the bound and gagged Club Captain struggling on the floor in front of her. There was something strange about his gag, but it took her a few seconds to realize what it was. When she did, Ryuko's eyes widened and she turned around and began running away as fast as possible. In the bound and stripped Kusatao Uwabami's mouth were over a dozen spool grenades, all of which were connected to a timer that had a few seconds remaining on it.

"God damn that mohawk bastard!"

While she was unharmed by the explosions, the force managed to throw her body forward, sending her tumbling through the halls before skidding face first against the ground. With her face on the ground and ass sticking up in the air, Ryuko grumbled curses and threats at Tsumugu, wherever he was, before planting her hands on the ground and picking herself back up.

As she stood up, Ryuko noticed a shadow growing against the wall to her right. Turning and looking out the window, she saw Tsumugu rappelling down Honnouji Academy before he crashed feet first through the window. Blocking his kick by crossing her arms, she found herself surprisingly thrown backwards against the door to the bathroom behind her with enough force to dent the steel door. Angrily and humiliated at his constant traps, Ryuko pushed back and managed to force Tsumugu back.

"Hmm," Tsumugu grunted as he landed and examined Ryuko. This was becoming a difficult fight. He had expected his jamming rounds to take a larger effect on the Kamui, but it didn't seem to be affected at all by his specialized ammunition. That just goes to show how powerful and dangerous Kamui are. Subtly reaching behind his back to his emergency weapon, Tsumugu stalled for time, "I thought my jamming rounds would have disabled your Kamui by now. Impressive."

"Like I care about anything you say!" Ryuko pointed her Scissor Blade at Tsumugu angrily. She was tired of playing games with this man and she had a lot of questions to ask him, "I'm going to kick your ass and then find out why you're after Senketsu!"

'Is that so? Well then, let me tell you two useful pieces of information."

"Screw that!" Ryuko raced forward, cutting off Tsumugu's speech and swung her Scissor Blade through the air. Twisting around the strike, Tsumugu pressed his palm against the small of Ryuko's back before leaping away and running into a room. Hearing a faint beeping sound, Ryuko looked over her shoulder and a plastic explosive pincushion stuck to her back with nearly three-dozen jamming rounds stuck inside.

"What the - "

The bomb went off before Ryuko could finish. As the explosion blew the windows for the entire hallway outwards, Ryuko flew through the air before hitting the wall harshly on the far side of the building.

"Damn that guy," Ryuko began to weakly pull herself free, only for Senketsu's voice to stop her.

" I'm sorry Ryuko, but I'm at my limit. You're going to have to continue on your own."

In a flash of stars and light, Senketsu transformed back to his normal uniform appearance, eliciting a shout of 'Senketsu!' from Ryuko. Before she could say anything else, Tsumugu came barreling towards her and pinned her body against the wall with his foot.

"One. I do not like to be interrupted," Tsumugu continued from where Ryuko so rudely interrupted him before. Pointing his Sewing Machine Gun at her, he flicked his wrist to the side, indicating what he wanted her to do, "Two. Killing you would be a pointless waste of life. You have put up an admirable fight, but all you need to do is simply give up your Kamui and I won't have to hurt you any further."

Ryuko spit out a glob of blood and glared up at Tsumugu, "Fuck you."

Tsumugu was unperturbed by Ryuko's gaze, "With the power of your Kamui sealed, you are completely helpless. Now, take off your clothes. Don't make me ask twice."

"I'm not scared of you, pervert," Ryuko kept Tsumugu staring at her face as her hand crept along the ground towards one of the needles that had fallen out when Senketsu was forced out of his transformed state, "I bet any minute now Ichigo or Ururu is going to arrive and kick your ass."

A boot to her stomach forced Ryuko to cough harshly before Tsumugu smacked her in the side of the face with his Sewing Machine Gun, "Unlikely. Ichigo Kurosaki is currently fighting against one of Satsuki Kiryuin's top lieutenants. He currently has the advantage, but he won't be able to come help you until long after I've destroyed your Kamui. As for Ururu, I have no idea who she is nor do I care. Your Kamui is a threat to the world and I will make sure it never becomes a danger to anyone. Now take off your clothes."

"You... bastard..." Ryuko managed to choke out.

"Defiant to the end?" Tsumugu reached into the pocket on his military vest and pulled out a cigarette. Lighting and taking a long drag from it, he said, "Let me tell you two final pieces of useful information. One. There is a woman who thinks a lot like you. She too believes that human and clothing can live side by side in peace. Even though she was betrayed by clothing, she still clings to her ideals, but she has never been the same since almost getting devoured by clothing. She hears voices in her head and is much more distant. Two. The path you have chosen is identical to hers. If you continue to foolishly believe your Kamui is your friend, you will die. I do not want to see you die. So I will ask you politely one last time, please take off your Kamui. There is no need for you to die a pointless and cruel death at the hands of clothing."

"I have no idea what you're talking about," Ryuko's fingers closed around the needle before she leaned forward and stabbed it in Tsumugu's leg, "But I won't let you take Senketsu!"

"Impressive," Tsumugu stared at the needle jammed in his thigh and, in one swift movement, pulled it out accompanied by a small spray of blood, "But useless. I am human and therefore immune to the effects of the jamming rounds."

" Get out of here Ryuko," Senketsu's voice was weak and it sounded like he was doing all he could to stay awake, "It's me he's after, so get out of here. I'll hold him off so you can get away!"

Senketsu's form almost seemed to bubble before he exploded off Ryuko's body and floated in front of her with his arms held out protectively. Tsumugu saw this as the Kamui's attempt to escape and fired several rounds into him, pinning Senketsu to the floor. Loading a special round into his Sewing Machine Gun, Tsumugu was about to finish Senketsu off when a quiet voice spoke up behind him.

"Please do not fire that bullet," Ururu calmly advised with her hand pressed right against Tsumugu's back, stunning the man since he hadn't sensed her presence until she talked. Turning his head around to face her, he stared into her deep blue eyes as she finished, "If you do, I'll be forced to kill you. You'll be dead before the bullet even leaves the chamber."

Despite the amount of power he could feel wafting off Ururu and the death threat, Tsumugu kept his cool, "This is none of your concern. Step back and allow me to finish my task."

Ururu tilted her head to the side, a gesture Tsumugu had seen only on one other person before, and answered, "Ryuko is my friend. I cannot allow you to hurt my friend any more. If you continue to do so, I will be forced to stop you."

"That's right!" Mako Mankanshoku slid in between Ryuko and Tsumugu while the latter was distracted and picked Senketsu off the ground. Holding the Kamui tenderly to her chest, forcing him to develop a luminous blush across where his face would be, she announced, "This uniform is the only piece of clothing Ryuko has and look how beat up and torn it is! I've tried getting Ryuko to wear some of my old clothing, but she is too big around the chest for it to fit, which is a shame! Do you have any idea how it feels to only have a single set of clothing?"

"I do not," Tsumugu answered bluntly, his eyes leaving Ururu just long enough to ask, "And who are you exactly?"

"I am Mako Mankanshoku," The last name caused Tsumugu's eyes to widen nearly imperceptibly, "Did you know that Ryuko loves this uniform more than anything else in the whole wide world? In fact, the only thing she might care about more is Ichigo, but you can't tell him that because it's a super secret for the moment!" While Mako raised a finger to her lips in the universal sign of keeping a secret, Ryuko began sputtering uncontrollably, "She's always whispering to it when she thinks no one is looking. And she's not the only one. Sometimes I catch Ichigo and Ryuko holding one-sided conversations with their uniforms. It creeps my whole family out when he comes to visit! Taking their clothes is the same thing as taking away a dear friend! This uniform is Ryuko's friend, so please mister, leave Ryuko alone!"

There was one part of Mako's rant that caught Tsumugu's attention. Lowering his Sewing Machine Gun, he took a step closer to her and asked, "What did you say about whispering?"

"Oh?" Mako blinked owlishly before answering, "That's right! Ichigo and Ryuko talk to their school uniforms almost as if they can hear a voice or something. Pretty creepy right?"

Tsumugu didn't bother to respond to Mako. Holstering his Sewing Machine Gun, which caused Ururu to lower her arm, he stepped towards Ryuko and asked, "Your Kamui speaks to you?"

Even in her battered and bruised state, Ryuko nodded and answered, "Y-Yes."

"I see..." Tsumugu grunted and thought back over the last decade. If Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki could speak to their Kamui, then couldn't that mean they aren't the only ones? Tsumugu shook his head to clear his mind and put his hands in his pockets, "I can see that I will not be able to pry your Kamui away from you, Matoi, not with that girl here." He pointed over his shoulder at Ururu, "So I will retreat for now, but don't get complacent. I will come back for your Kamui one day. You can count on that. Until then..."

With a flick of his wrist, Tsumugu let a smoke grenade fall out of his hand. It bounced off the floor once before exploding into a cloud of pink and blue smoke that soon cleared to reveal Tsumugu was gone. Ryuko didn't have long to wonder about what just happened before she began falling unconscious; the last thing she heard was Mako calling out for her.

---

...

---

"I suppose congratulations are in order." Tsumugu glanced at Aikuro before allowing the man to light his cigarette, "Does this mean we're even now?"

Tsumugu shook his head, "That isn't enough."

"It's more than enough," Aikuro leaned back and stared at the sky, "Besides, you know that I prefer girls to be in debt to me."

"That's true," Tsumugu smiled softly before his expression hardened, "There's something I think you should know."

Aikuro looked at his friend as Tsumugu continued, "When I managed to corner Matoi, she didn't back down. Not even once. She was more than willing to die along with her Kamui than allow me to destroy it. When I looked her in the eye, I couldn't help but see Kinue in her place."

"Kinue, huh?" Aikuro ran a hand through his hair. Kinue had been gone for a while now on a secret mission for Nudist Beach to destroy several Revocs factories and buildings in Europe, "Stop talking as if she's dead. You know she's going to be upset when she finds out you said that."

"Who's going to tell her? You?" Tsumugu scoffed when he saw Aikuro's innocent expression on his face, "Let me tell you two useful pieces of information. One. I'm going to give Matoi a single chance to prove me wrong about her Kamui. But if things start coming apart at the seams, you can be sure I'll return to rip it off her body. Two. If anything happens to Masaki's son under your watch, I'll make you regret it."

"No need to get so angry," Aikuro dismissed Tsumugu's threat with a wave of his hand, "If that ever happens, you're going to have to get in line because Isshin's going to get first dibs on me. When he gets angry, Isshin scares me more than Ragyo Kiryuin and the Grand Couturier put together."

What Aikuro said reminded Tsumugu of something he saw earlier, "I saw a girl hanging around Matoi."

"Ah, are you talking about Mako Mankanshoku?"

"No," Tsumugu shook his head, "Another girl. Her name is Ururu, but there is something frighteningly familiar about her. She was able to sneak up on me without being detected. The only way I knew she was there was because she announced her presence. Who is she?"

"I don't know," Aikuro paused pensively as he thought about the latest transfer student, "She just showed up a few days ago as a transfer student from Karakura Town."

Tsumugu's eyes widened, "Isshin's place? What is he up to?"

"Beats me," Aikuro shrugged his shoulders, "That man has more secrets that you and I could count, but I'm sure he had a reason for it. He always seems to know what he's doing."

Tsumugu grunted before revving the engine on his motorcycle and taking off into the distance. He needed to get back to Osaka and report in on what he discovered at Honnouji Academy. Even though headquarters didn't technically endorse his mission, Tsumugu was certain they would forgive him due to what he discovered at Honnouji Academy. The fact that Ichigo Kurosaki had a Kamui was a helpful surprise. Nudist Beach couldn't afford to be taken off guard when the Life Fibers made their move.

As he drove down the highway, Tsumugu reached for his cell phone and dialed a number with a single hand. Raising it to his ear, he waited until the ringing stopped and a tired voice answered before speaking, "Yeah. It's me. I have something interesting to tell you."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #3: A Twenty Year Old Question

"Hmm..."

"What's on your mind, Isshin?" Ragyo Kiryuin asked bemused.

Isshin Kurosaki folded his arms and pursed his lips. The question that was on the tip of his tongue was one he had been wondering about for almost twenty years now. He really wanted to ask, but at the same time he liked the sense of wonder and surprise at what the answer might be. If he asked the question and the answer didn't satisfy him, he would feel extremely let down. Still, he really wanted to know the answer.

"Ever since I first met you, I've wondered something," Isshin leaned back and crossed his legs, "Why does your hair glow with the colors of the rainbow?"

"Oh that," Ragyo didn't seem overly surprised by the question. Sitting back as a grin spread across her face, she chuckled and said, "You're not the first one to ask, but you'll be the first one to survive asking. Do you know why?"

Isshin chuckled nervously, "Because I'm a lovable oaf?"

"Not exactly," Ragyo snapped her fingers and Nui Harime appeared at Isshin's side with several bottles of Life Fiber infused hair dye in her hands.

"You're not going to die because the Director wants you to have rainbow colored hair as well!" Nui said chirpily as she attempted to tie up Isshin. When the man dodged her attack, she frowned, "Hold still please!"

"Stay away from me!" Isshin made a break for the nearest window of Ragyo's office. He knew he could survive a fall from such a height and even if he couldn't, dying as himself was better than the alternative. As his body crashed through the glass and he began falling, Isshin felt a hand grab him by the back of his shirt.

"You weren't planning on leaving me, were you Isshin?" Ragyo had a mock look of disappointment on her face. As she towed him back into her office, Isshin's screams of pain and embarrassment could be heard all across the city.

Behind Blue Eyes

Here's chapter 16 everybody! This story is still going strong and I have yet to hit any type of writer's block, which means that a new chapter should always come out in between 7 to 10 days after the last one. So Chapter 16 and the beginning of Episode 6. I took some liberties with the source material as well as what's happening because, let's face it, you wouldn't read my story if all you wanted was a literary rehashing of Kill la Kill, right?

Anyway, this chapter is a little bit shorter than the last few. If I tried to add more to it, I would just end up cutting into the fight scene and I really don't want to do that. I'm also still looking for someone to draw a picture of Ichigo wearing Mugetsu and, hopefully, kicking ass.

Thanks to all those that reviewed my last chapter and let's get started with the story!

---

...

---

Chapter 16 - Behind Blue Eyes

If she ever allowed anyone to ask, Ragyo Kiryuin would say that the sole regret in her life had been allowing Isshin Shiba to be swayed by that harpy of a woman, Masaki Kurosaki. Ragyo had tried everything in her power to sway Isshin's heart, but no matter what she did or said, Isshin's resolve hadn't wavered. When she heard the news that Isshin had gone and married Masaki, Ragyo recalled feeling the closest thing to sadness that she could comprehend before she immediately killed the lowly secretary who had dared to tell her the bad news. She had actually planned on killing her for a while, but Ragyo thought she should kill the woman under the flair of dramatics.

Ragyo stared at the still image of Ichigo confronting Satsuki on top of Honnouji Academy. Her daughter was so naïve as to think she didn't have hidden cameras throughout the academy. Seeing Isshin's son confronting her daughter gave Ragyo pause to consider that perhaps some good had come out of losing Isshin to Masaki.

La vie est drôle.

"Only a man like Isshin could have fathered such a child," Ragyo's hand began drifting across her chest before slipping under the top of her dress. Ragyo had been ecstatic when she heard the news of Masaki's murder. To keep up public appearance she had shown up at the funeral with a fake expression of pity and sadness, but in reality she couldn't have been happier. She was sure Isshin saw through her disguised emotions, but in a room full of people, as well as his children, there was nothing he could do about her, "If only Isshin was vulnerable to my Mental Refitting, but then he wouldn't be the only man worthy of my affection and adoration."

"Simply wonderful, isn't he Hououmaru?"

Standing on the opposite side of her desk, Rei Hououmaru nodded stoically, "Indeed he is. To think the son of Isshin could control a Kamui's immense power and bloodlust without being overtaken. He is truly worthy of your attention."

"Yes, he is," Ragyo drawled out seductively as she leaned forward, the rainbow undertone in her white hair bathing the office in a cacophony of colors in the process. As she gazed possessively at the screen showing Ichigo's fight against Nonon Jakuzure, her face twisted into a sadistic, but pleased, smile as she witnessed Ichigo nearly behead his opponent, "Ichigo fights with intent to kill, unlike that daughter of mine. Satsuki might think she is able to make me dance to her tune, but a daughter cannot hide anything from her mother. I'll play along for the moment and allow her to string me along. That will only make the eventual destruction of her plans much more enjoyable."

"You are a scamp, Ma'am," Rei answered with her usual expression of adoration.

With a snap of her fingers, the video shifted to Ichigo's aerial battle against Nonon, "Such an exquisite Kamui. Unlike my daughter, Ichigo is able to force his Kamui to shift configurations. This could only mean my experiments all those years ago were a success."

Rei looked at the Director in confusion, "I was under the assumption that the experiments had always been a success. Wasn't that why you had Ichigo Kurosaki transferred to Honnouji Academy?"

Ragyo's silvery eyes briefly shifted towards her assistant before she chuckled, "I was gladly admit that I wasn't completely certain about how well Ichigo took to my experiments. Usually I would have known right away, but with a man like Isshin as his father, Ichigo was hidden from my sight until only a few months ago. You know as well as I do that if Isshin wanted, he could have hidden Ichigo from my sight forever."

Rei was well acquainted with Isshin. While her boss had married Souichiou, who was a brilliant and charismatic man in his own right, Ragyo's heart had always lusted for Isshin. When he had rejected her advances and married Masaki, to say Ragyo hadn't taken it well would have been an understatement. Still, there were several things about Isshin that Rei did not know and that she would never try to find out. Even she wouldn't be immune from Ragyo's wrath if she asked questions she had no right to know the answers to.

One question plagued Rei's mind, "If I may ask, how did you come across the information suggesting Ichigo had been a success?"

Ragyo smirked at her secretary's question. When she had detected the sudden activation of Life Fibers within Karakura Town, to say that she had been curious wouldn't have covered what she truly felt. She knew instinctively that Isshin's presence within the city prevented Revocs or Life Fibers from getting a foothold. The activation of such a dense amount of Life Fibers could mean only one thing.

"It was instinctual, my dear," Ragyo answered mysteriously. When she had informed Nui about Ichigo, the Grand Couturier had immediately offered to go and introduce herself to her 'cousin,' as she called him. Ragyo had asked Nui to hold off on doing such a thing, at least for the time being. As much as she wanted to bring Ichigo into the fold and under her wing, Ragyo knew Isshin would completely demolish Nui if she so much as attempted to touch Ichigo. The last time Nui fought Isshin, she had only survived because Isshin was soft and had gone easy on her.

"I knew you were thinking about me!"

From where she was sitting on the frame of a nearby open window, Nui Harime smiled cutely. With the wind blowing her large blonde pigtails to and from haphazardly and her chin resting on her open palm, she looked to be the epitome of cuteness and innocence. Happily closing her one good eye, she added, "I hope I'm not interrupting anything important."

"Ah, Good afternoon Grand Couturier," Rei said respectfully accompanied by a small nod of her head, "The meeting started ten minutes ago."

"I'm sorry for being so late!" Nui hopped off the window and gently floated to the ground accompanied by a small and cute grunt. After quickly making sure her attire was still prim and proper, she skipped over towards Rei and Ragyo, "But the traffic was simply terrible today. I had to kill at least five people just to leave Honnou City. Hmm... or was it six? Witnesses are so troublesome!"

Ragyo smiled in smug satisfaction despite Nui admitting to murdering at least half a dozen innocent people. Someone with a weak mind would consider Nui a monster, but Ragyo did not care for such trivial things as morals. Humans were simply pigs bred with the singular purpose of becoming food and sustenance for Life Fibers. Leaning her head to the side, she sighed deeply and asked, "Have you been enjoying your time at Honnouji Academy?"

"Oh, most definitely," Nui was glad Ragyo wanted to talk about her time at Honnouji. It was her mission after all, "There's so much I want to tell you, but you probably already know most of it! Nothing can get by you, Director!"

"How true," Ragyo's smile softened as she admitted, "But one thing that still eludes me is what Isshin's son named his Kamui."

"Oh! That's an easy question!" Nui hopped onto the side of Ragyo's desk and leaned forward, "His Kamui is pretty neat and high class. I would even dare to say that Kisuke Urahara could have been my equal in design! But I'm sure you don't want to hear me talk about my feelings. Ichigo's name for his Kamui is Mugetsu."

"Mugetsu... Moonless Sky..." Shivers of pleasure traveled down Ragyo's spine from the symbolism of the Kamui's name. It pleased her that not only did Ichigo possess a high quality Kamui on par with Junketsu, but he even named it something equally elegant. Composing herself for the moment, she steeped her fingers together and pondered, "Ichigo is such an interesting young boy. Isshin has raised him well I see. Perhaps I should have Satsuki try and court him? The product of such a union would be phenomenal."

Nui's face adopted a pensive expression as she tried to visualize the children Satsuki and Ichigo would produce. With a smile breaking out across her face as she imagine someone with Ichigo's hair color, Satsuki demeanor, and their combined body, she answered, "Yes, but something like that would never happen! It's really hard keeping up this charade. I really want to formally introduce myself to Ichigo, but since he's so close to Ryuko, I can't risk him telling her about me and ruining the big surprise I have planned for her. Every single facet of her death has to be just right or it will end up being a disappointment!"

"Oh, my dear Nui, you needn't worry about Ichigo," Ragyo ran a hand across Nui's cheek, "We will bring Ichigo into the fold soon enough. We can't rush things at such a delicate stage. Now, is there anything interesting going on at Honnouji besides my daughter's eventual coup d'état?"

"Satsuki thinks she's so smart, but nothing gets by you Director!" Nui's face lit up as she remembered something important, "But there was something really super interesting I wanted to tell you. Using my amazing skills at disguise, I ingratiated myself as Ichigo's friend. He really is worthy of wearing his Kamui. Anyway, I managed to take this picture when he wasn't looking!"

Reaching into her dress, Nui searched around for the photograph she had taken during Ryuko's spar against Ururu. She really didn't care what happened to Ryuko. Nui knew deep within her heart that no matter how much Ryuko trained, she would never reach the level of someone like herself. It made Nui's heart quiver at the prospect of seeing the hopeless look on Ryuko's face when she realizes all her training amounted to nothing.

"It's of this girl that Ichigo seems to know. I think Isshin sent her to Honnouji," Nui informed Ragyo as she handed the CEO the picture. When she didn't get any type of response, Nui blinked and brought a finger to her lips, "Is it interesting? I thought it was interesting, Director?"

Nui had been expecting a reaction from Ragyo, but she could never have imagined the Kiryuin matriarch's face twisting in anger. As her hand crumpled the picture into dust, Rei began backing up slowly away from her boss. She had seen what happened the last time Ragyo was truly angry and knew it was dangerous for anyone other than a Life Fiber hybrid from remaining nearby.

As Ragyo slammed her fist through her metal desk, causing metal splinters and shrapnel to fly through the air with one piece barely cutting her cheek, Rei knew she had chosen the right course of action, "Please control yourself, Ma'am. That desk was customized to your rich and exquisite tastes. It will be quite expensive to replace."

Ragyo looked at her perfectly normal hand, courtesy of the Life Fibers in her body, "Even after all these years you still managed to pull one over on me, Isshin! To think that it was you that did this to me. I don't know whether to skin you alive and bathe your body in salt or make love to you for doing such a despicable act."

"Director?" Nui stared with rare worry, at least for her, at the behavior of the person closest to being a mother figure.

Ragyo glanced at Nui and just as quickly as it came, the anger washed off her face, "It seems, my dear Nui, that Isshin has been keeping a deep and dark secret from the two of us. Do you know what happens to those that hide things from us?"

"Of course!" Nui answered cheerfully, "We kill them slowly and painfully!"

"Yes, but not this time," Ragyo let her hand slide sensually across her inner thigh. The fact that Isshin managed to pull the wool over her eyes for so many years excited her more than she had felt in years, "Satsuki is holding Parent Student Day in three weeks. When you go back to Honnouji Academy, please make sure that Ichigo invites Isshin. I have many interesting things to talk about with that man..."

---

...

---

Aikuro Mikisugi should have guessed Ryuko Matoi would immediately come to him for answers after Tsumugu appeared and proceeded to beat her to within an inch of her life. It was something the Nudist Beach veteran expected to happen, but when Ryuko showed up backed by Ichigo, Aikuro knew there was no way out for him.

"L-Let's not do anything you'll regret in the morning," Aikuro tried to subtly move towards the door to his apartment. His single hope of escaping what he dreaded happening was dashed as Ichigo slammed his hand against the wall in front of him, blocking his path out and making an already irate Ryuko even angrier. Raising his arms and clapping his hands together in prayer, he begged Ryuko for forgiveness, "Please just calm down and think about what you're doing! Murdering a teacher is still a federal crime in Japan!"

Ryuko's scowl intensified and in one swift motion she pulled out her red Scissor Blade and stabbed it into the wall next to Aikuro's head. As the extremely dense Life Fiber weapon easily and neatly severed more than a few strands of Aikuro's blue hair, Ryuko raised her leg and kicked her teacher in the stomach, "Screw mercy! I have some questions for you and you are going to answer each and every one of them. If you don't..."

Noticing Ryuko's fingers twitching violently, Aikuro turned towards his only hope of making it out of the situation with his manhood intact, "Ichigo! Please knock some sense into Ryuko before she does something irreversible!"

Ichigo looked at Aikuro and scoffed, "Screw you. I'm not helping you out of this mess."

While Ichigo wanted answers from Aikuro about who the man was that attacked them, his mind was thinking about his battle against Nonon. Even though his body sported quite a few cuts and bruises from his battle against Nonon, Ichigo could say he had come out of the fight relatively unscathed compared to Nonon. Before he sensed something wrong with Ryuko and went to go help her, Ichigo managed to sever one of Nonon's recorder thrusters, causing said girl to spiral out of control and slam face first into one of Honnouji's massive walls. After making sure Nonon was unconscious, as well as cutting off her woofers for good measure, Ichigo headed towards where Ryuko was as quickly as possible.

When Ichigo frowned and stepped in between Ryuko and Aikuro, said teacher thought his luck was about to change. His mood was quickly shattered when Ichigo grabbed him by his shirt and picked him off the ground.

"I have one question for you," Ichigo shook Aikuro's body before asking, "How did that guy know my mom?"

"H-How should I know the answer to something like that!" Aikuro was beginning to visibly sweat. It was too early to bring Ichigo and Ryuko into the fold. He still didn't know if Ryuko would help them and Isshin would kill him for getting Ichigo involved.

"Keep playing dumb after seeing this, you perverted bastard!" Ryuko held up a photograph and pointed to two figures in the background dramatically with her finger, "See! Right here in the corner is you and that Mohawk bastard drinking and having a great time!"

Aikuro adjusted his glasses as he looked at the picture, "I don't know who that handsome blue haired man is."

That was the wrong answer for him to say. Dropping Aikuro on the ground, Ichigo groaned and turned away, "He's all yours, Ryuko. Just make sure to not kill him."

Ryuko grinned savagely and cracked her knuckles, "With pleasure..."

"Wait a second!" Aikuro raised his hands placating, "Yes! That's me, but where did you get this photograph?"

"After that Mohawk bastard attacked and nearly killed me, I had Mako's creepy little brother track him down," Ryuko pulled out her Scissor Blade from the wall and sat down on the end of it. Crossing her arms and huffing indignantly, she continued, "I don't know how that brat did it, but he managed to find pictures of someone that looked like that Mohawk guy. If he knows you, it makes sense why he would bring me to you shitty little place."

Slamming her foot on the ground, Ryuko shouted, "That bastard almost killed me you lazy and perverted son of a bitch! Tell me what your damn deal is before I neuter you!"

The atmosphere quickly shifted as Aikuro sighed and flipped his hair back. Letting out a sensual breathe, he smirked at Ryuko, "Why are you so angry, Ryuko? Because of that man's actions, the bond between you and Senketsu has grown stronger than ever. If you are curious about that man's name, you may call him Tsumugu Kinagase."

When Aikuro began to unbutton his shirt, there was a whirling sound as Tournesol embedded itself in the wall next to him. With his hand held out and scowl on his face, Ichigo cracked his knuckles menacingly, "What did I say the last time you tried stripping in front of me, you bastard?"

"Oh, how I wish it was just Ryuko here," Aikuro sighed dreamily. It was always better stripping down in front of woman. At least they appreciated the work of art that was his nude body. Focusing his attention back on Ryuko, he continued from where he left off, "As to how I know him, it is because he and I belong to the same organization. Despite all that, you have to admit that your struggle against Tsumugu's vast arsenal of tactics and weapons have finally made you and Senketsu true partners!"

"Don't try to change the subject!" Ryuko hated knowing that Aikuro was right. She had seen Ichigo and Mugetsu talk and fight. Ichigo never seemed to order Mugetsu around or belittle her. The same could not be said about her treatment of Senketsu. As much as he acting and behaved like a true living thing, she had treated him as nothing more than clothing that gave her the power to fight Satsuki Kiryuin. It had taken Senketsu attempting to sacrificing his life to save hers that Ryuko realized how selfish she had been.

"The game has changed now that Satsuki Kiryuin has a Kamui of her own." Without any prompt, Aikuro's shirt became unbuttoned and two purple lights emanating from his nipples filled the room. Smirking at the fact that Ichigo couldn't blame him for his shirt popping open, Aikuro mentally thanked himself for inventing the self-popping shirt for an occasion just like this, "If both you and Ichigo were to fight Satsuki Kiryuin together, the odds of winning would be nearly one hundred percent, but Satsuki is a crafty and cunning woman. The power of her Elite Four is no laughing matter."

"Ha!" Ryuko laughed haughtily, "They only have a Three-Star Goku Uniform! What can they possibly do to stand up to Senketsu's power?"

"No, he's right," Ichigo's denial caused a confused look to appear on Ryuko's face, "Their power is comparable to our own. Nonon Jakuzure was able to out maneuver me until Mugetsu was able to come up with something to counter her flight. I'm sure Satsuki's other three goons have equally powerful surprises."

"Now you see why I allowed Tsumugu to attack you!" Aikuro leaned forward until he was inches away from Ryuko, "It was all necessary so that you would possess the necessary strength to stand up to Satsuki Kiryuin!"

Ryuko grimaced at Aikuro invading her personal space before she swung her Scissor Blade around and smacked the handle against his cheek, "That's complete crap and you know it! That's just the excuse you came up with to justify your so-called friend nearly killing me! Why would your friend attack me if you need Senketsu to take down the Kiryuin? What the hell are Life Fibers and what was so important about my dad's research that he was killed? Answer me damn it!"

"Letting your blood boil like that is going to be the death of you, Ryuko," Aikuro gently pushed the Scissor Blade off his face and walked towards his window. Throwing it open and allowing a stiff breeze to blow through the room, he turned around and threw his arms out, "You may both have Kamui, but until I'm sufficiently convinced that you can be trusted with such dangerous knowledge, you will have to remain in the dark. Just be content in the knowledge that I have both of your best interests in mind."

"So you know Tsumugu?" Aikuro nodded at Ichigo's question, "Then explain how he knows my mom."

Aikuro let out a long breath, "That's a doozy of a question. To be honest, I don't know how Tsumugu knows your mom. He isn't mister personality. I swear, the only person able to get a straight answer out of him is his sister."

If Aikuro thought that would satisfy Ichigo, he was rudely awakened when Ichigo grabbed his tie and began to choke him, "I'm not an idiot! How does Tsumugu know my mother? If you don't say anything, I think I'll call my dad. I'm sure he'll be real happy to find out that a perverted bastard like you was intimately familiar with his wife."

Ichigo and Ryuko took pleasure from the nervous stuttering coming from Aikuro, but were quickly confused when he muttered, "... Nudist Beach..."

Ryuko looked at Ichigo, "What did he just say?"

"No clue."

Freeing himself from Ichigo's grasp, Aikuro said more boldly, "We are Nudist Beach."

Ryuko rubbed her temple in exasperation, "Is he fucking nuts or something?"

"The name of my organization that you were so curious to find out," Aikuro was nearly shouting as he finished, "Its' name is NUDIST BEACH!"

There was stunned silence in the room before Ichigo and Ryuko exchanged a glance and turned to leave. They had no intention of staying in the same room as someone like Aikuro, especially when he was making up stuff like that.

"H-Hey!" Aikuro paused in his dramatic reveal of his organization when he saw his audience leaving, "Where are you going?"

"Away from you," Ryuko called over her shoulder as she left, "It was stupid to try and get a straight answer from you. I'll play along for now and get stronger, but eventually I'm going to want answers."

"But it is the name of my organization," Aikuro whispered dejectedly. Noticing Ichigo about to leave, he said the one thing he knew would keep him around a bit longer, "You shouldn't pry into how Tsumugu knew Masaki."

Ichigo froze and turned around, "How - "

"Perhaps I should rephrase. It would be in your best interest to not ask such questions right now. There are those out there that wouldn't take too kindly to your line of questioning. Mugetsu might give you a tremendous amount of power, but remember that there is always someone stronger. If you are truly curious about your mother, I highly suggest you wait a while. Good things come to those who wait after all."

Ichigo said nothing as he left, finally leaving Aikuro alone. Grabbing his shirt off the floor, he smirked smugly as he redressed himself, "That wasn't the way I wanted it to go down, but it all worked out in the end."

---

...

---

Without batting an eye in concern, Satsuki Kiryuin looked at the prostrating Nonon Jakuzure, "What do you have to say in defense of your failure today, Jakuzure?"

With her arms, torso and face covered in bandages from her battle against Ichigo, Nonon refused to look Satsuki in the eye. Wearing nothing more than a pink zip-up jersey and red shorts, Nonon apologized, "I'm sorry for letting you down, Lady Satsuki."

"Do not fret, Jakuzure," Satsuki smirked, "Despite the outcome of the fight, your performance today was admirable."

"What?" Nonon asked in shocked.

"While I was suitably impressed with your desire to fight Ichigo Kurosaki, I must confess that the chance of your victory were slim to none." In one elegant motion, Satsuki stood up and walked towards the large windows that took up an entire wall of the room. Staring out into the moon-filled night sky, she clasped her hands behind her back before turning her gaze to Nonon, "Defeating Ichigo would have allowed us an opportunity to study a Kamui extensively, but the true goal of the fight was two-fold. It was to not only investigate the limits of Ichigo's power more extensively, but to also work out any flaws in your Mark II Goku Uniform. In your failure, you have succeeded Jakuzure."

Satsuki would never admit to anyone, let alone a close associate, the anger that had built up in her heart when she witnessed Ichigo's Kamui transform into a flight form. Jakuzure informed her that Ichigo referred to the flight form as Mugetsu Gufū. Satsuki's fist clenched slightly as she saw Ichigo pull ahead of her yet again. How was he able to not only wear a Kamui over ninety percent of his body, but also force it to change into a new form? Even now, after more than week of training her body and mind to withstand the stress Junketsu places, Satsuki was but a single misstep away from her Kamui devouring her. She still remembered the fear when she lost control over Junketsu during her clash against Ichigo. She never wanted to feel that feeling again. Not if she could help it.

"As we speak, Iori is running tests and diagnostics on your Symphony Regalia. It shouldn't take more than two weeks for your uniform to be fully repaired and the Life Fibers re-stitched. Iori has also informed me that your Symphony Regalia will be further improved to Mark III," Satsuki's comment gave Nonon a large sense of relief. When Gamagori had appeared after her less than successful fight, she had immediately growled at him and asked what he wanted. As the large blonde haired teen towered over her smaller frame, his body cast in a dark shadow and his eyes two pinpricks of yellow light, Gamagori had held his hand out and politely asked Nonon to find somewhere to change out of her Three Star Goku Uniform. The sheer amount of politeness and courtesy from the normally strict and bombastic Gamagori had caused her mind to experience a temporary paradox that had only been alleviated when Gamagori grabbed her and began carrying her away.

"I can't wait to get my uniform back," Nonon was still smarting from the way that Ichigo had beaten her. The skies were her domain, damn it! When she fought him again, she wasn't going to let her anger get the better of her. Ichigo was going to suffer tremendously for the insult he gave her, "Strawberry is going to pay dearly for this insult!"

An idea entered Satsuki's mind as she listened to Nonon's revenge ranting. The risk of failing was quite high, but if it worked... the odds weren't in her favor, but the rewards might just be worth it.

"What we have here is a prime opportunity, Jakuzure," Satsuki's words stunned Nonon into silence. She had heard a tone similar to that in the past and it could only mean Lady Satsuki had come up with a plan.

"What is it, Lady Satsuki?"

Satsuki turned back to the moon-lit sky, her face bathed in shades of dark white and grey, before explaining, "One of the written rules here at Honnouji Academy is that if someone is stripped of their Goku Uniform, they are immediately demoted down to No Star ranking."

"B-But I wasn't stripped!" Nonon protested worriedly, "Strawberry doesn't have a Scissor Blade or anything!"

"Just because Ichigo left before finishing you off isn't the point," Satsuki pointed out condescendingly, "His blade is similar to my Bakuzan. Both are as capable of severing Life Fibers as Mato's Scissor Blade. However, you are missing the point, Jakuzure. Wouldn't you say the entire academy believes that you were defeated and stripped of your uniform?"

Nonon's mind worked for only a few seconds before she began to understand what Satsuki was thinking. With a cocky grin on her face, she smirked and replied, "I sure would say that."

A small smile appeared on Satsuki's face, "I'm glad you understand. Starting tomorrow you are to be a No Star student. Gamagori, Inumuta and Sanageyama will be informed tonight of what's happened, so you need not worry about them."

"Pfft," Nonon made a spitting sound in disgust, "Like I would care about what frog, dog and monkey say about me. If they say anything bad to me, I'll show them just how much I can kick their asses without a Goku Uniform!"

"Very good," Satsuki's demeanor quickly shifted back to her normal self, "Jakuzure! Tomorrow, you will begin your assignment, entitled Operation Zero Stars! Your goal is to get close to Ichigo Kurosaki and his associates under the banner of revenge against me. You have permission to say and do anything to get into Ichigo's good graces. This is not limited to fighting against Club Captains and anyone associated with them! Find out any secrets Ichigo may have concerning his Kamui and bring them to me! The time scale of your mission is three weeks, which is when Parent Student Day begins! Do you have any questions?"

"Not one," Nonon grinned happily as she grabbed the standard No Star uniform from Soroi Mitsuzou's outstretched arms, "You can count on me, Lady Satsuki! I'll have Strawberry wrapped around my little finger in a week! First things first, I'm going to need a customized uniform. There is no way I'm going to wear anything this atrocious for a single minute."

Satsuki watched coldly as Nonon left her presence. As soon as the doors closed shut behind Nonon, Satsuki let out a tired sigh. Groaning from the pent up effort of wearing Junketsu, Satsuki looked at the struggling Kamui, held safely behind two inches of bullet-proof glass and several sewing needles, and grimaced.

"You should try to not overexert yourself, Milady," Soroi politely scolded Satsuki's recently rash behavior as he poured her a cup of tea.

"How does he do it?" Satsuki stared at the vicious Junketsu and sighed, "And it's not just Ichigo, but also Matoi. Both of them are able to not only use the full power of their Kamui, but also wear them as normal clothing without the risk of death. It is not a question of willpower, for my heart and mind are leagues above either of them. What am I missing?"

"Milady, if I may be so blunt as to ask a question. Have you considered asking young Ichigo?"

"If only I could, Soroi," Satsuki rested her cheek on her hand and smiled faintly, "But Ichigo and I are on opposite sides of a raging river. If I were to ask him for help, he would easily see it as a sign of weakness and capitalize upon it immediately. That is where Jakuzure's mission comes into play. She will play the betrayed underling, viciously demoted and demeaned by the heartless and cold Student Council President. She will gain Ichigo's trust and friendship and, when the moment is right, find out his secret pertaining to his control over Mugetsu's power."

"I don't fully understand," Soroi admitted as he bowed respectfully, "But I trust in your judgment, Milady."

Satsuki leaned back in her chair and closed her eyes, "How long did the thought persist that you managed to sneak up behind me, Sanageyama?"

"Barely a flicker in my mind," Sanageyama grinned, "I couldn't help but overhear your plans for Jakuzure. Very bold and cunning, just what I expect from you, Lady Satsuki. Do you want me to be the one to publicly kick her out of the Elite Four? It would make your plan all the more convincing after all."

"And it has nothing to do with a personal vendetta?" Satsuki asked inquisitively, "While Jakuzure is no longer a member of the Elite Four in the eyes of the student body; she is still your equal in both power and respect. Do not forget that."

"Of course I didn't forget that," Sanageyama stuck his hands into the pockets of his Blade Regalia and stared outside, "You and I both know that if I truly wanted to humiliate Jakuzure beyond what is needed for your plan to succeed, you would have stabbed me with that teacup."

"That is where you are wrong, Sanageyama." To Sanageyama's bewilderment, Satsuki raised her hand and Soroi quickly walked over to her side. Placing the teacup she was holding onto the tray in Soroi's hands and grabbing another one, Satsuki saw the look on Sanageyama's face and said, "That is my favorite teacup. Attacking you with it would have not been worth the effort. Now, what is it that you wanted, Sanageyama?"

"I want your permission to fight Matoi."

There was a slight cracking sound as Satsuki's fingers tightened around her teacup, "Should I even deign to answer your question with a response?"

Sanageyama whistled under his breath, "I know, I know. With what you have planned for Jakuzure, it would be rather bad if two members of the Elite Four were to fall."

"So you don't believe you can win?"

"Of course I will win," Sanageyama grinned before schooling his face, "You know perfectly well how I get around someone powerful. Matoi's been just a big of a problem, perhaps even more so, than Ichigo Kurosaki. Wouldn't you agree, Lady Satsuki?"

"Indeed she has." Satsuki knew that while Ichigo was the more powerful of the two, Matoi was the one causing the most trouble. While Ichigo was content with just lying back and letting his opponents come to him, an excellent strategy by the way, Matoi sought out and demolished her Club Captains nearly too fast for new ones to be inducted. Satsuki had always prided quality over quantity, but for what she had planned for Matoi, quantity would have to do for the moment, "If I recall, the last time you felt this way was three years ago."

"My bamboo sword is itching for a real challenge," Sanageyama's hand subconsciously drifted to his weapon strapped to his back. He was truly looking forward to fighting Ichigo blade to blade, but Matoi was just a big a challenge, "I want to see how Matoi's skills stand up to the stage you provided me. Once I defeat Matoi, I will know that my power is great enough to take on Ichigo Kurosaki."

"Hmm..." Satsuki sipped her tea calmly before answering verbally, "I do not need to remind you of the price of failure. Unlike Jakuzure, your desire to battle Matoi is not part of my plans. If you lose against her..."

"No need to worry," Sanageyama pointed to his eyes and finished, "With these eyes of mine I cannot possibly lose to the likes of Matoi."

"I see," Satsuki didn't even give a hint as to what she was planning to do. In one swift motion, she stood up and kicked her chair backwards towards Sanageyama, who easily ducked underneath the impromptu projectile. As his eyes caught the hint of movement behind him, he turned and pulled out his bamboo sword as Satsuki tried to pierce his neck with the shattered handle of her teacup.

"Like I said," Sanageyama's grin intensified as Satsuki's strength caused his arms to quiver slightly, "With my eyes I cannot lose."

"Nicely blocked," Satsuki stood up and calmly walked away from Sanageyama, "At your current skill, I will admit that my middle-school self wouldn't have been able to beat you. You may do what you wish, but take heed of the consequences of failure, Sanageyama, for I am not lenient against those who go against my wishes."

"Thanks," Sanageyama took a few steps before suddenly stopping, a frown marring his face, "That boy you spoke of that night, Shinjiro I think his name was, you never told me what was so dangerous about him."

Sitting back down and with an look of annoyance on her face, Satsuki smirked, "I never did. Why do you ask?"

"Because I saw him the night after that Nudist Beach guy showed up," Sanageyama scratched the back of his neck as he vividly remembered what he saw, "But I don't think he's the really dangerous one."

Satsuki arched a single eyebrow, "What do you mean, Sanageyama?"

Sanageyama folded his arms, "I saw Matoi sparring with that Ururu girl, the same girl that managed to toss me around like I weighed nothing, on the roof of Ichigo's dorm. Matoi was getting her ass thrown around, but the really interesting thing is when Ururu disarmed and proceeded to pummel Matoi. That red Scissor Blade she always has appeared to turn purple in Ururu's hands. I'm not saying Shinjiro isn't as dangerous as you think, but Ururu seems to a strange connection to Matoi."

If Sanageyama could have seen Satsuki's face, he would have been surprised at the wavering expression of fear adorning it. Quickly suppressing her emotions, she calmly and stoically answered, "I see."

Thank you for bringing this to my attention. I'll have Inumuta look into this."

Unable to see just how disturbed Satsuki was from what he saw, Sanageyama left to go prepare for his battle against Matoi. Jakuzure's loss against Ichigo Kurosaki opened his eyes, literally and figuratively, to the prospect of losing. His eyes may be able to see everything, but if Ichigo's Kamui could adapt to Jakuzure's flying, who was to say that Matoi's couldn't do the same to him? He needed to think about what he was going to do to avoid being humiliated like his compatriot.

As soon as Sanageyama left, Satsuki leaned back in her chair and crossed her legs, "That was quite rude of me, Soroi."

"It is not a problem, Milady," Soroi placed the shattered ceramic remains on the tray and stepped back, "As long as it wasn't your favorite cup I am more than happy to replace it."

Feeling a wave of exhaustion wash over her, Satsuki closed her eyes and sighed, "Make a fresh pot for me."

"As you wish." Before Soroi could begin his assigned task, the nearby phone began ringing. Usually someone calling past midnight warranted a dismissal of their call, but the people who knew Satsuki's private number wouldn't dare call without an important reason. Putting down the tea tray, Soroi picked up the phone and politely answered, "Good evening. This is the Honnouji Academy Student Council President's Office. How may I be of service?"

There was a slight pause in the line before Soroi seemed to stutter, "Y-Yes, Ma'am. One moment." Wheeling the table with the antique, but expensive, phone over to Satsuki, Soroi covered the receiver with his hand and whispered, "It's your mother, Mistress Ragyo."

"Thank you, Soroi," Grabbing the phone, Satsuki leaned back and composed herself, "This is Satsuki."

From the other end of the line, a smug Ragyo asked, "What's this rumor about you putting on your wedding dress?"

"I'm not surprised you found out, mother," Satsuki glanced out into the night sky in the direction Revocs headquarters was located, "But I'm sure you already know everything about my taking of Junketsu."

"Indeed I do." From where she was standing in her office, Ragyo stared at a picture of Satsuki in Junketsu. It was such a shame that her daughter wasn't able to force the Kamui to accept her as a true wielder. It was just another in a long line of failures, "Tell me, Satsuki, how was your wedding dress?"

"Exquisite," Satsuki didn't dare to think this was the reason her mother called. Ragyo was many things, but purposeless wasn't one of them, "Why did you call, mother?"

"Straight to the point," Ragyo twirled around and held her hand out as Hououmaru handed her a file, "I require your presence at Revocs. There are things we need to discuss and I want to see just how well your body is suited for Junketsu..."

---

...

---

For perhaps the first time in a week Ichigo was enjoying a quiet breakfast. Without any strange and psychotic girls sneaking in to watch him sleep or Gamagori to try and piss him off even more than usual, Ichigo found the peace and quiet a rare blessing. So when there was a loud knocking on his door, Ichigo slammed his head against the table in annoyance. He just had to jinx everything by thinking about it. Groaning and standing up, he shambled towards the door. Whoever was on the other side better have a damn good reason for knocking.

It was to his surprise that upon opening the door he was greeted by a scowling Ryuko.

"Why are you here, Ryuko? It's eight in the morning."

"Here," Ryuko shoved the bamboo sword she was hold into Ichigo's arms and walked past him into his room. Sensing an aura of annoyance as well as eagerness coming off Ryuko, he looked at the weapon in his hands and noticed some writing scrawled on it.

Attention, Ryuko Matoi of Second Year, Class K.

I will be waiting for you after school in the Kendo Club dojo for our long overdue match

~ Uzu Sanageyama ~

"Sanageyama is calling you to fight him?" Ichigo turned the bamboo sword over in his hands, thinking that perhaps there was another part of the message that he was missing. Seeing that there was nothing else written on it, he turned and walked back into his room.

"I found that thing stabbed right outside Mako's house this morning," Ryuko grumbled and plopped down on his couch. Crossing her arms in front of her chest, she scoffed angrily, "Damn bastard is calling me a chicken!"

Ichigo's face fell flat, "I don't think that's what's going on..."

"Satsuki Kiryuin must be a sore loser!" Ryuko grinned smugly as she waved off Ichigo's concern, "After you kicked Snake's ass yesterday, Satsuki must be too scared to send another of her goons after you. That's fine with me though. It's just one less person I have to defeat to find out why Satsuki killed my dad."

Ichigo stopped listening to Ryuko about halfway through, his mind thinking about the message on the bamboo sword. The message was too personal to be something Satsuki would do. Nonon had basically ambushed them yesterday in order to defeat him. From what he knew of Satsuki, that was something she would sanction.

Sanageyama's message was basically giving Ryuko the time and place for their fight. He was missing something important.

"This doesn't seem like something Satsuki would do," Ichigo placed the bamboo sword against the wall and sat down in a chair, "Satsuki's policy in this place is to demote anyone that loses to us. Why would she risk losing two of her Elite four two days in a row? Whatever Sanageyama is thinking, I'm damn well sure it isn't with Satsuki's approval."

"You think this guy has a grudge against me or something?" Ryuko pondered her question for a few seconds before a look of realization washed over her face, "Hey, wait a second! Why isn't he going after you? I haven't said five words to the guy while it was your friend that swung him around like a rag doll!"

"Don't try to pin this on me," Ichigo replied sarcastically, "That was all Ururu, and if you knew her as well as I do, then trying to pick a fight with her is a terrible idea. Perhaps Sanageyama just knows he can't beat me and decided to go after someone easier."

"Are you calling me a wimp?" Ryuko stood up dramatically and rolled up her sleeves, "Because the way I hear it, you weren't able to land a hit on Snake until Mugetsu transformed and saved your ass! By the way, how did you get her to transform and fly?"

" It was necessary to win," Mugetsu answered. Swiveling her eyes to stare at Ryuko, she explained further, "It was insulting to think that a Goku Uniform comprised of 30% Life Fibers could do something that I, a Kamui, could not. When Ichigo asked me if I could fly, how could I say no? The mere thought of that pink haired brat doing something that I couldn't sickened me."

Ryuko leaned in and stared right back at Mugetsu, "So how did you do it exactly?"

" Why don't you ask Senketsu?" Mugetsu growled irritably.

When Ryuko looked at Senketsu's one eye, the Kamui did his best attempt at a shrug, "I do not know how Mugetsu was able to transform. Perhaps in the heat of battle the knowledge of transforming into a different mode will come to me, but for the time being you should focus on increasing your own strength. The upcoming battles will be extremely dangerous."

" You're completely useless," Mugetsu spat and would have pointed a sleeve at Senketsu if Ichigo wasn't currently wearing her, "It is insulting to think that you, a fellow Kamui, is unable to visualize new forms outside of battle. Why, when Ichigo was asleep last night I thought up two new transformations for our next battle!"

" Why don't you go and sew your lapels closed?" Senketsu emphasized his question by pulling the top half of his body off of Ryuko, leaving her bare-chested apart from her bra, in order to wave his sleeve menacingly at Mugetsu, "Ryuko and I are a team! I don't need to hear such nonsense coming from someone like you, who can't even keep her own creases folded properly!"

" WHAT?!" Infuriated at Senketsu's insult, Mugetsu pulled herself off of Ichigo and began wrestling on the ground with Senketsu. Ichigo, now wearing nothing more than boxers, stared at the fighting school uniforms incredulously.

"The hell is going on?" Ichigo couldn't believe what he was seeing. Turning to ask Ryuko if she had any idea as to what was going on, he quickly turned his head upon seeing her in nothing but a bra and panties. Ryuko, noticing Ichigo's averted gaze, quickly blushed and attempted to cover herself.

It took the combined efforts of Ichigo and Ryuko nearly five minutes to pry the two Kamui apart. With both of them dressed once more, but with their respective Kamui glaring at each other, Ichigo was about to ask what Ryuko planned to do about Sanageyama when there was another knock at the door. Walking over, a little annoyed at the intrusion, Ichigo opened the door and immediately got a fist to his face as a result.

"Ichigo!" Ryuko watched Ichigo go flying backwards before gritting her teeth and glaring at his assailant. Standing in the doorway, with actual steam seeming to be wafting off her fist, was Nonon Jakuzure, but something was different about her. Instead of wearing her Three Star Goku Uniform, she wore the standard No Star Uniform, but accessorized to fit with her so-called cute and girlish persona. Adjusting her white beret with the black skull emblazoned on it, she stepped inside Ichigo's room and slammed the door closed.

"That was for yesterday, Strawberry!"

"What the hell's your problem?" Ryuko reached for the pin on her glove to fight Nonon, but was confused when the girl simply ignored her and began eating Ichigo's breakfast.

"Close your mouth before you let the flies in, Transfer Student," Nonon grumbled mid-bite, "As much as I hate it to say it, I'm here to help you fight Lady Satsuki. Ugh, simply saying those words makes me feel sick. You got any mouthwash, Strawberry?"

Rubbing his sore nose, Ichigo stared at Nonon, who had made herself at home, and asked, "What the hell are you doing in my room, Snake?"

Nonon narrowed her eyes and scoffed, "Apparently you haven't heard the news, Strawberry. After our fight yesterday, Lady Satsuki decided I was a failure for losing against you. She not only stripped me of my Goku Uniform, but permanently demoted me to a stupid No Star like the Transfer Student! How could Lady Satsuki do that to me, her closest friend and the one who's been by her side the longest? I thought I knew what her every thought was and she not only demotes me, but orders me to never speak or look at her again? My life sucks almost as much as yours."

"So why are you in my room eating my damn breakfast?"

"Because Strawberry," Nonon waved her spoon at Ichigo, "You and the Transfer Student are the only two in Honnouji Academy willing to fight against Lady Satsuki! I don't care about your motives or whatever the hell your reasons are. I simply want to stand over Lady Satsuki, grab her by the front of her uniform, and demand to know why she's treating me like this! You got that?"

Ichigo glanced over at Ryuko, who shrugged her shoulders disinterestedly, and asked, "Do I have a choice in the matter?"

"No," Nonon answered bluntly, "Because no matter what you say, I'm going to follow the two of you around until I get answers. It looks like you're stuck with me, Strawberry."

"Well, have fun with your new friend Ichigo," Ryuko waved goodbye as she walked out of the room, "I need to get ready for my fight against Sanageyama later on."

"You're fighting Monkey?" Nonon rolled her eyes and scoffed, "While seeing you unconscious and bleeding on the floor would make me happy, defeating Monkey will bring me one step closer to Lady Satsuki. Here's a hint and hopefully that stupid brain of yours can understand it - Sanageyama's eyes see everything. Got it? Well, if you didn't too bad. I'm not repeating myself."

Ichigo rubbed the bridge of his nose in an attempt to stave off a headache, "This is revenge for yesterday, isn't it?"

"Damn straight it is, Strawberry. Now get me some more cereal."

---

...

---

Uzu Sanageyama could feel his blood boiling in his veins. With a cocky grin on his face, he strutted towards the center of the Kendo Club dojo and patiently waited for Ryuko to arrive.

When he had sent Matoi a personalized invitation to fight him, Sanageyama knew she wouldn't refuse. If she was anything like him, she would relish the chance to fight someone strong. That was not mentioning the fact that Matoi needed to go through him if Lady Satsuki would even dare to dream of giving her the time of day. While Satsuki had warned him his desire for battling strong opponents would lead to his downfall, Sanageyama saw it as taking the initiative.

Feeling his fingers trembling in excitement, Sanageyama clenched his fist as he remembered the last time he had felt this way. It had been nearly three years ago to the day when he led a force of nearly 500 people against Satsuki, only to lose horribly and decisively. It was comforting to know that there were two new players that could make him feel excited about fighting again. While Sanageyama craved fighting strong opponents, he was smarter than his wild demeanor suggested.

As much as he wanted to, Sanageyama knew fighting Ichigo Kurosaki at his current level was suicidal. Ichigo had not only fought Lady Satsuki, but actually managed to beat her. While he craved his fight with Matoi, Ichigo was Sanageyama's ultimate challenge. If he could best the boy that captured Lady Satsuki's attention, then he knew he was strong enough to finally take on Satsuki.

A quick shifting of the shadows at the top of the bleachers to his left failed to escape Sanageyama's attention. Turning his head, he grinned when he noticed Ichigo walk in, accompanied by an irate Nonon and that creepy little girl that had so bested him with ease the other day. Noticing the extremely subtle clenching of Nonon's facial features, Sanageyama knew it was time to make the first move in Nonon gaining Ichigo's trust.

"So, you've come to see the show Ichigo," Sanageyama's loud boasting was enough to cause the quiet murmuring that permeated the dojo to cease. As the multitudes of No and One Star students turned towards a now scowling Ichigo, Ichigo tucked his hands in his pockets, "Have you come to see Matoi get crushed to pieces?"

Ichigo simply stared at Sanageyama for several seconds before responding sarcastically, "I've seen your Blade Regalia, remember? If Ryuko's as strong as I know she is, there's no way she can lose."

"Humph," Sanageyama snorted derisively, "I'll admit that you were smart enough to figure out how to fight my Blade Regalia, but even you must admit that Matoi isn't even close to your level of intelligence! There's no way she can beat me!"

"And you brought along a failure," Sanageyama's gaze shifted past a curious Ururu to focus on an irate Nonon, "How does it feel to lose everything, including Lady Satsuki's respect, Jakuzure?"

"Bite me, Wild Monkey!" Nonon spat back angrily.

"It's your own fault for losing to Ichigo and now you follow him around like a lost dog. How poetic."

"Go to hell!" Nonon twisted around and grabbed Ichigo by the front of Mugetsu, "I don't care what you and that Transfer Student agreed on! Go down there and kick that Monkey's ass right now!"

"I don't like anyone but you touching me, Ichigo," Mugetsu began growling angrily at Nonon, which was ironic since Ichigo was the only one that could hear her, "Tell her to let go of me before I decide to bite her hands off."

"There's no need for such language from a failure like you," Sanageyama's grinned widened as he turned around, "So you've finally come, Matoi. Tell me, are you as excited for this fight as I am?"

Ryuko strutted towards Sanageyama through the parting crowd with a grin of her own. Giving a waving Mako a confident thumbs up, she smirked at Sanageyama, "I was called out personally by you. It would be rude for me to not show up."

"I like your spirit!" Sanageyama shouted exuberantly, "Let's get down to business!" Throwing his hands out to the side, Sanageyama was enveloped by a flash of light that originated from the three stars on his collar. As the wind picked up before abruptly dying back down, Ryuko heard him say, "Three Star Goku Uniform: Blade Regalia!"

As the light surrounding Sanageyama faded away, Ichigo muttered, "Ryuko is going to have some trouble with him."

"What the hell does that mean, Strawberry?" Nonon squeaked.

Ichigo rolled his eyes while ignoring Nonon's irritation, "I've fought Sanageyama's Blade Regalia the day Satsuki tried to kill Ryuko. His speed and power may be almost fast enough to catch me, but his biggest advantage are his eyes. If you don't know how to block his sight, Sanageyama can always evade and counter your attacks."

"I knew all that already! I worked alongside him for a while!" Nonon spat on the ground in annoyance. Folding her arms and looking away, she grumbled, "You said the Transfer Student has a chance to win. I may be on your side, but I know the Monkey's power more than you. There is no way that bitch down there has a shot at winning."

"Didn't you say the same thing to me yesterday?" Ichigo's question was quickly, and violently, answered with a swift kick to the shin, courtesy of a pissed off Nonon.

"Bite me, Strawberry!"

Back down on the dojo, Ryuko lowered her hand from in front of her eyes as Sanageyama finished transforming. She had been expecting his Goku Uniform to change, but not to the extent that it did. Unlike Jakuzure yesterday, Sanageyama was covered in a large green suit of armor that more than resembled a standard kendo suit, which fit in with his entire theme.

"This is the power of my Blade Regalia!" Sanageyama roared as a shinai extended from inside his wrist and was firmly grasped in his armored gauntlet. Pointing the weapon at Ryuko, he shouted, "Your Kamui isn't the only thing that can transform! Change into your Kamui, Matoi, so that we can fight!"

"You don't need to say it twice!" Ryuko had an excited look on her face as she reached for the pin on her glove, "I'll do the same! Life Fiber Synchronize: Kamui Senketsu!"

As Senketsu expanded around her body before collapsing back into his transformed state, Ryuko decided to rush in and finish Sanageyama off as quickly as possible. Darting out of the lightshow that always seemed to accompany her transformation, she drew her Scissor Blade and effortlessly sliced through Sanageyama's Blade Regalia vertically.

"That wasn't so tough," Ryuko stated victoriously before noticing something off about her defeated opponent. Sanageyama's body seemed to be frozen in place before the two halves dissipated into thin air, "What?"

"Too slow!"

Ryuko gasped in pain as Sanageyama's shinai was slammed into her back, catapulting her through the air and into a nearby column accompanied by a large explosion.

"Damn," Ryuko wiped the small trace of blood oozing from the corner of her mouth and pushed with both against the column with both of her heels before rocketing back towards the waiting Sanageyama. With her Scissor Blade held out to the side, she shouted angrily as she tried, and failed to hit her opponent, who seemed to be always supernaturally dodging her attacks.

"I told you..." the left hand of Sanageyama's Blade Regalia slammed into Ryuko's stomach before a shinai extended out of it and propelled her into the roof above. Before she could fall back to the ground, he reared his hand back and punched her across the dojo, "... it's useless. I can see all your moves! There is nothing you can do that I cannot predict and avoid. Only two people have ever managed to avoid my attacks and you, Matoi, are nowhere near their levels! Now stand back up and finish this fight!"

"I'm really getting annoyed at his constant blabbering," An exhausted, but otherwise relatively unharmed, Ryuko pushed herself back onto her feet and glanced briefly at Senketsu, "You have anything, Senketsu?"

" Hmm..." Senketsu thought for a moment before replying, "Perhaps, but it's going to be risky, Ryuko. I'm not even sure if it will work."

Ryuko smiled warmly at her Kamui, "Hey, we're partners. I trust you. Now let's do this Senketsu!"

As Ryuko prepared herself for the second round against Sanageyama, up in the stands Ichigo noticed someone missing. Looking around in confusion, he asked, "Hey, where did Ururu go?"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #4 - Mysterious Relations

Ururu, Ryuko and Mako were gathered around Ichigo, who was busy staring at a picture held firmly in his hand.

"He does look eerily similar to her," Ryuko mused as she scratched her chin, "They both look like they have a stick up their asses."

"But that's super impossible!" Mako argued valiantly, "If they were related, then surely she would have told someone by now!"

"I don't know Mako," Ururu said softly as she gazed upon the picture, "He does look a lot like Satsuki. Perhaps he can be her father."

"Did I hear someone mention Lady Satsuki's parentage?"

Ryuko looked up as Gamagori appeared out of nowhere just to tower over them "Take a look at this picture," Ryuko gave the giant of a student the picture, "Tell me he doesn't look like Satsuki."

"I'll be the judge of that," Gamagori stared at the picture, his eyes narrowing in concentration before he nodded, "There does seem to be a familial resemblance, but just to be sure... INUMUTA!"

From behind Gamagori stepped out Inumuta, "What's so important that you deafened half the academy?"

Without even considering the question, Gamagori handed over the picture, "I need you to verify the authenticity of this picture."

"If you say so," Inumuta looked at the picture and held a handheld device to it. After several moments of silence followed by a series of quick beeps, Inumuta looked at the results on the device, "Oh my..."

Ichigo, Gamagori and Ryuko looked over Inumuta shoulder as he announced the results, "According to my computer, this man has a 95% probability of being Satsuki's father!"

"Did I hear someone dare to mention my father?"

"Lady Satsuki!" Gamagori handed the picture over to her, "Ichigo Kurosaki was in possession of this photograph of your father!"

Satsuki thought it was a joke until she saw the picture. Starting up at her with an expression that she had only seen on herself was Byakuya Kuchiki. As Satsuki gazed at the picture, she began to think that perhaps this man was her father after all. The resemblance was too uncanny to be otherwise.

To everyone's surprise, Satsuki turned around and began walking away. Ichigo would later think it was a trick of the wind, but he could have sworn he heard Satsuki muttering 'you must be my father' under her breath, "Great. This is just what I need. I just hope that Satsuki never actually meets Byakuya."

Walk on the Wild Side

Here is Chapter 17. It didn't take me that long to write this chapter, which is surprising considering it is longer than my previous chapter. In this chapter I wrap up the first Sanageyama fight in Episode 6, but unfortunately I wasn't able to actually finish the episode. That's okay though, since I have a bunch of my other plot threads beginning to come together. People and things I mentioned in previous chapters begin to make an appearance as well as a surprising guest of honor. Try to enjoy this chapter as much as you can and don't forget to read and review .

I passed 100,000 views! I have reached the five-figure milestone in less than two months! Hurray for me!

---

...

---

Chapter 17 - Walk on the Wild Side

Ururu Tsumugiyu greatly disliked unnecessary violence. She was of the belief that one should only fight when given no other options or if your friends or loved ones were in danger of getting hurt or killed. Fights like the one between Ryuko Matoi and Uzu Sanageyama disinterested her. She hadn't known what Ichigo was dragging her to when he asked her to tag along. She assumed it had something to do with all the fuss and rumors spreading throughout Honnouji Academy about a big showdown between the Elite Four and the new transfer student. As soon as she realized it was a fight over something trivial, she had quickly slipped away to wander the now mostly empty halls of Honnouji Academy. It was during her travels that she managed to somehow find her way onto the large outer walls surrounding the academy.

The area was unchanged ever since Tsumugu defeated Kusanosuke Yaguruma of the Gardening Club. Standing on the edge of the flower bed, she straightened out her No Star uniform and knelt down to look at the beautiful flowers. With the autumn cold beginning to seep into the nights, the flowers were giving one last hurrah before dying off for the winter, only to come back in the spring.

Reaching down to pick one of the many Sopheria flowers that the Gardening Club had spent a lot of money growing in the fertile flower beds, Ururu's fingers had just closed around a stem when she felt a familiar presence land behind her. Without showing any emotions, she stood back up and turned around to face a smiling Nui Harime.

"Hi!" Nui chirped cheerfully.

Ururu stared emotionlessly at the Grand Couturier, "What do you want?"

"Don't be such a wet blanket." Nui puffed her cheeks out as she pouted cutely. Skipping closer to Ururu, she leaned in and tilted her head to the side, "It's super impressive that you were able to sense my presence as soon as I arrived. A normal human would never be able to do something that extraordinary. You really are quite special."

Instead of answering Nui, Ururu raced forward with her feet kicking up small ripples of dust as she went. With her fist arcing through the air, she attempted to punch Nui in the face only for her attack to be blocked, albeit with a great amount of effort on Nui's part.

"You really are super strong," Nui complemented as a bead of sweat dripped down her cheek. It had been forever since she had fought someone able to actually make her fight. Usually those the Director sent her to kill were unable to put up too much of a fight. Although, now that she thought about it, both Kisuke Urahara and Ryuken Ishida put up enough of a fight to actually make her work for a win. How exciting! As her pink boots were forced back along the ground, Nui smiled and with a quick application of power, stopped her retreat immediately.

As her sapphire eye stared into Ururu's twin blue ones, Nui smile grew even wider. Now that she was up close and personal with Ururu, she could truly feel what the Director told her earlier! Nui would have smacked herself in the forehead if she had the time about how obvious it was now that she thought about. When Ururu didn't say anything, Nui tilted her head to the side, her blonde pigtails bouncing along the way, "Aren't you going to say anything? Having a one sided conversation is really boring. I'm not that into monologuing! That's so cliché!"

"You are a threat," Ururu's voice was quiet, but Nui could feel the power laced in the words. A childish giggle escaped her throat upon hearing it.

"How so?" She asked rhetorically.

"You are a threat to Ichigo and Ryuko," Ururu was beginning to enter her Extermination Mode as the words left her mouth. Already she could feel her restraints and morals disappearing as the overarching goal of defeating Nui Harime replaced everything else. Ever since No Late Day, Ururu had felt something both off and strangely familiar radiating off of Nui, but she still couldn't place where the feeling originated from. Despite Nui's cheerful and peppy demeanor, years of living and training under Urahara Kisuke had gotten Ururu accustomed to those that hid their true feelings and motives. Every single cell in Ururu's mind was telling her that Nui was extremely dangerous. She was an enemy and enemies must be eliminated before they hurt those close to her, "Threats must be eliminated."

"Threats must be eliminated? Could you get any less emotional?" Nui asked sarcastically as she quickly leaned back and under Ururu's attempt to grasp her neck. With a smile on her face, she avoided Ururu's following kick to the abdomen, but failed to take into account Ururu's analytical mind as Ururu appeared to pivot in midair and slammed her heel into Nui's cheek.

"Gah!"

Nui felt actual pain as she bounced across the top of the wall and skidded to a stop. The pain wasn't that bad, perhaps the equivalent of getting a rubber band smacked against her skin, and it didn't come from the nearly half dozen face plants she did before coming to a stop. Those didn't hurt her at all. No, the extremely small amount of pain she was feeling came from Ururu's kick.

Elegantly getting to her feet, Nui pulled a pocket mirror out from within one of her pigtails and examined her cheek. The skin where Ururu's heel had hit her was slightly bruised, but she could see the Life Fibers already healing the damage. What was strange was how slowly she was healing. Such a wound, if she had ever sustained one that actually caused her pain, should have healed while she bounced along the ground. Well, Nui concluded with less than normal care, that's food for thought. Perhaps later on when she had the time, she would sit down and really think about what this all meant.

"That was a nice kick! But aren't you curious about why I'm here or something?" Nui honestly complemented the still stoic Ururu. Her opponent's lack of responses was really starting to tick Nui off. She loved to talk to her opponents during her fights. It made the usually dull and boring battles much more fun! Without Ururu saying anything back to her, she might as well be talking to herself for all anyone cared, and Nui didn't want people to think she was crazy or anything.

"No," Ururu was curious about why Nui seemed to be able to take one of her kicks to the face with almost no damage. Bringing her arms up, she prepared for a lengthy and, most likely, grievous fight.

"Aw, phooey," Nui playfully kicked the ground, "You really need to learn to relax and have fun! I didn't come here to hurt Ichigo or any of your so-called friends! So why don't you just relax and stop thinking about how you're going to choke the life out of me, because I can tell you it won't work."

Ururu's gaze shifted towards the dojo when she felt a spike of power radiate out from within. Deciding that she couldn't afford to waste time dealing with Nui, Ururu turned to leave only to find the Grand Couturier blocking her path.

"Leaving so soon?" Nui seemed almost sad that Ururu was ignoring her. It was almost as if Ururu didn't care that she was willing to spend the time talking with her, "I haven't even gotten to the part where I say you and I are a lot alike."

Ururu saw the calculating looking behind Nui's eye, but there was something else as well. Buried underneath all the manipulation and sadism in Nui's mind was something eerily familiar, "What do you mean?"

"If I say anything, it will spoil all the fun!" Nui pouted and stiffly took a few steps away from Ururu before turning around with a smile back on her face, "Just know that if you ever want to hear the whole story, I'll be just a single call away."

Stepping towards the edge of the wall, Nui stood half off the edge, her blonde hair whipping in the breeze. With a wide smile on her face, she waved to Ururu as she leaned backwards, "Until next time! Bye Bye, Amu!"

Ururu wasn't about to let Nui just leave, not after what she just said. Racing forward at speeds that would make Sanageyama jealous, she reached the Grand Couturier in less than a second. Just as her fingers were about to close upon Nui's pink dress, the Grand Couturier gave Ururu a mischievous smile and pushed off the wall and just barely evading Ururu's extending grasp.

As Nui's body fell out of her sight, Ururu let her arm fall listlessly to her side. Ururu knew it was useless to try and chase after Nui at this point. She could already feel the Grand Couturier's presence vanishing into the distance at an appreciable speed. While she was sure she could track Nui down if need be, Ururu was uncertain about any tricks Nui might possess.

" What did she come here for?" Ururu softly contemplated the ulterior motive for Nui's visit. As she sensed a large release of power from where Ryuko was fighting Sanageyama, she began to make her way back to the dojo.

" And why did she call me Amu?"

---

...

---

There was a whirlwind of swinging blades and sparks as Ryuko's red Scissor Blade clashed with the giant shinai that Sanageyama's Blade Regalia created for him. Knees buckling as she raised her weapon horizontally over her head, Ryuko broke out in a sweat as she felt the ground beneath her feet crack and dent from the sheer amount of force Sanageyama was pushing with. Thinking quickly, she adjusted her grip on her Scissor Blade and grabbed Sanageyama's shinai with her left hand, her fingers digging into the metal before Sanageyama could have a chance to pull it back.

"Let's see how well you do without a weapon!"

Steam shot out from the exhaust vents on her shoulders and back as Ryuko hefted Sanageyama's Blade Regalia into the air. While Sanageyama managed to quite easily right himself and landed safely back on the ground, the same could not be said for his shinai. Held firmly in Ryuko's hands, she held it in the air for a moment before slicing it cleanly in half with her Scissor Blade.

"Now it's going to be fun!" Ryuko shouted excitedly as she raced across the dojo, her speed augmented by Senketsu's power, and stabbed her Scissor Blade straight through Sanageyama's chest. Her elation at finally hitting her opponent was squashed when Sanageyama's form rippled and disappeared, indicating that she had hit nothing more than another damn afterimage.

As Ryuko stumbled forward from the lack of resistance, she heard an annoyingly familiar voice whisper from right behind her, "Fun for whom?"

Her head barely turned around before a shinai slammed into her cheek and whipped her body around through the air. While the world was still spinning around her, Ryuko felt another shinai slam into the small of her back before a third slapped her in the back of her neck and catapulted her body clear across the dojo.

"Oww..." Ryuko moaned in a small amount of pain. Rubbing her sore back, she pushed herself onto her one knee and glanced around at her opponent. If there was one thing about Sanageyama that she could consider a compliment, it was that he was honorable at least. While he would do everything he could to beat her, he wouldn't attack her when she couldn't fight back. Wiping a trail of spit from the corner of her mouth, Ryuko grumbled, "Damn it, how the hell is this guy so freaking fast. Those afterimages are really starting to piss me off."

" I don't know," Senketsu seemed to be just as confused about their lack of success as Ryuko. It was highly strange that Ryuko, whose power and speed rivaled that of Satsuki Kiryuin, should be unable to even land a hit on one of her underlings, "Perhaps there is something else at play here. Do you remember what that girl said to you this morning?"

"Something about his eyes, right?" Ryuko hadn't been paying attention to what Jakuzure had told her. At the time she was still more concerned with why one of Satsuki's Elite Four was trying to hang out with Ichigo. Even with the so-called sob story Jakuzure told them, Ryuko didn't trust the former Three-Star at all. There was no way she wasn't planning something against them.

Stabbing her Scissor Blade into the wooden floor of the dojo, Ryuko felt something approaching and quickly leapt back as Sanageyama came crashing down, his shinai slamming into the ground with a reverberating echo.

"Hitting an opponent when they're down?" Ryuko grinned savagely as she continued moving backwards while sidestepping all of Sanageyama's attacks. She was just beginning to get a sense for his speed and movements. It was only a matter of time before her reflexes and timing managed to allow her to avoid all of Sanageyama's attacks.

"This isn't a practice spar!" Sanageyama retorted enthusiastically and proudly as his form wavered and vanished from in front of her. Gritting her teeth as she knew what was about to happen, Ryuko spun around and brought her Scissor Blade up to block the incoming shinai to her back. There was a clashing of sparks as her blade made contact with the shinai before Sanageyama vanished as quickly as he appeared. Ryuko gasped as Sanageyama's speed increased before there was a sense of radiating pain from her stomach before her body folded around the shinai and exploded across the dojo.

"You grew lax!" Sanageyama pointed his shinai at the smoking crater in the wall where Ryuko's body had crashed, "You assumed my speed was a constant and that I couldn't push myself further! A true warrior does not go all out from the very beginning. That is a lesson I learned from Lady Satsuki!"

"Shut the hell up!"

In a large explosion, Ryuko burst out of the rubble her impact had created and dashed back across the dojo towards Sanageyama. She was starting to get pissed off at Sanageyama's constant lecturing. As her Scissor Blade screamed through the air around Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, a small smirk developed on Ryuko's face as she saw her weapon getting closer and closer with every strike.

Ryuko was not the only one to notice this. From inside his Blade Regalia, Sanageyama's eyes widened in surprise as he saw Ryuko's attacks growing more and more accurate, "This is insane! My eyes should be able to let me predict and counter her every move, but her speed and reaction time is increasing with every second! By the time I figure out the perfect counter to one move, she's already started a second move! If I don't do something soon, I might actually lose!"

Swinging his arm back, there was a sound like a rifle going off as Sanageyama's shinai shot forward and hit Ryuko's Scissor Blade, doing no damage but forcing her away from him.

"I was wrong about you!" Sanageyama held his shinai horizontally in front of his eyes, "You are truly skilled to be able to avoid my base attacks. Prepare to face my true power! The warm up ends here, Matoi! Secret Technique: Higi Tengantsu!"

Ryuko watched as jets of steam began emitting from Sanageyama's Blade Regalia as several sections on his back, chest and arms opened up and exposed bright purple eyes that seemed to constantly swivel around and take in the world around him, "Behold Higi Tengantsu! As long as I possess my eyes, there is nothing you can do, Matoi! Your speed and reflexes may be enough to overcome my base power, but with my true power unleashed, I will always be able to anticipate and counter each and every move you make. You cannot win, Matoi!"

"Say what?" Sanageyama might have called it his secret technique or whatever, but to Ryuko it was the equivalent to cheating. Just when she was getting the timing down with her strikes, this bastard comes along and pulls this secret move out of his ass. How was she supposed to win if his eyes could see everything she did? As she thought that, Ryuko's eyes widened as an idea came to her, "I think I know how to beat him, Senketsu."

" It better not involve you cutting off parts of me to blind him," Senketsu responded dryly.

"What? No!" Ryuko was appalled by the mere suggestion of hurting Senketsu. She wanted to rub Sanageyama's smug face into the dirt more than anything, but not if it meant hurting her friends. Senketsu was more than just a Kamui for her to wear, he was her friend and she would do anything to protect her. Shaking her head, she said, "Do you remember how Ichigo said Mugetsu transformed?"

Senketsu's single eye widened in interest, "I'm listening..."

In a room overlooking the dojo, Inumuta and Gamagori were watching the fight earnestly. With Jakuzure publicly kicked out of the Elite Four and Sanageyama challenging Matoi to an unsanctioned fight, they were effectively down to half strength. That did not mean, however, that they were in danger of being overrun by students who thought they were good enough to serve Lady Satsuki. Even with potentially two of their members defeated, the combined power of their Three-Star Goku Uniforms was enough to destroy each and every One and Two-Star Goku Uniform in Honnouji Academy.

"For every motion a human being makes, whether it is simply breathing to walking, there is a preemptive preparatory motion," Inumuta explained condescendingly to Gamagori. The fight was interesting, to say the least. Due to Ichigo Kurosaki's interference in Satsuki's fight against Ryuko, they had yet to see her full strength in a true fight. Win or lose, Sanageyama's eagerness to fight would gather valuable data for Satsuki's plans.

"It doesn't matter whether the motion comes from the movements of the eyes, muscles or hair," Inumuta adjusted his glasses as he watched Sanageyama pummel Ryuko into the ground. It was quite pathetic to see someone able to withstand the immense power of a Kamui being beaten so easily, "Sanageyama was truly the worst opponent for Ryuko Matoi to fight. Her entire strategy involves using her speed and power to overwhelm an opponent, but Sanageyama is able to instantly read all the subtle motions of the human body and preempt any move she makes. That's what his Tengantsu is capable of, and with his Blade Regalia amplifying his natural ability, she doesn't stand a chance. It's quite tragic really."

Gamagori grunted deeply in his throat as he frowned upon seeing Ryuko apparently losing. There was no way that such a worthy opponent for Lady Satsuki should be losing to someone like Sanageyama so thoroughly. Could this be why Satsuki thought the fight was not worth being watched? But if that was the case, then why would she ask for constant reports on Matoi's progress?

"Lady Satsuki is risking a lot on this plan," Gamagori spoke to Inumuta of his dissatisfaction with the plan to ingratiate Jakuzure within Ichigo Kurosaki's inner circle. It was not that he doubted the success of the plan, but rather the clashing personalities between Ichigo and Nonon. From his limited interactions with Ichigo, he was able to tell he was a headstrong youth who won't take any insult lying down. With the sarcastic wit that Gamagori had come to expect from Nonon, he knew it was only a matter of time before she said something that would annoy Ichigo.

"I trust her judgment," Inumuta answered calmly, "Don't tell me you doubt her?"

"Of course I don't!" Gamagori shouted and turned away when there was a loud explosion as Ryuko's body collided with the wall.

"God damn it!" Ryuko pushed away from the pillar and rolled to the side as Sanageyama's shinai came shooting through the air. Rolling back onto her feet, she managed to bring her Scissor Blade up in time to block the multitude of strikes from her opponent, "This guy is good. He's not giving me any option but deflecting his strikes!"

" Just wait a little longer, Ryuko. I'm almost ready."

"That's easy for you to say," Ryuko said sarcastically, "You're not the one fighting!"

"I'm impressed by your tenacity!" Sanageyama stopped attacked and drifted away from Ryuko. Pushing his fingers into the cylinders on his back, Ryuko could feel the grin on his face as he announced, "But let's see how well you handle this! Shinsoku-Senbonzuki!"

"Oh..." A cat-like grin spread across Nonon's face upon seeing one of Sanageyama's ultimate motives. Leaning against the railing in front of her, she snorted derisively, "It looks like Monkey is going all out. Transfer Student doesn't even have a chance anymore."

"That's not true!" Mako Mankanshoku slid up next to Nonon, startling the girl with her abrupt appearance. Clapping her hands together in prayer, Mako leaned close to Nonon and continued, "Ryuko will most definitely win! I am sure of it! Just because she is at a disadvantage against someone as powerful as Sanageyama doesn't mean she will lose. She has the heart and drive to persevere and win! That is the Ryuko I believe in!"

Ichigo and Nonon stared silently at Mako, who somehow appeared to be illuminated in a spotlight, before Nonon asked dryly, "Who the hell are you?"

"I am Mako Mankanshoku!"

"Wait, you're that Underachiever that always hangs out around the Transfer Student," A mischievous grin appeared on Nonon's face before she waved Mako off, "I can't afford to lose any more brain cells talking to you. So why don't you go away and pretend to be friends with someone else."

Mako opened her mouth to protest indignantly, but was cut off when Ichigo said, "Just ignore her, Mako. Snake here is a sore loser."

Nonon tried to kick Ichigo in the shins again, but Ichigo managed to sense the attack coming and avoided it, "The name's Jakuzure, Strawberry!"

The barrage came at her faster than Ryuko expected. As her body was pummeled over and over again by the spinning shinai, she cursed and wondered where the hell all this speed was coming from.

"You might be wondering why everything you use is useless against me!" Sanageyama shouted excitedly as he continued to attack Ryuko, "Thanks to my Tengantsu, I've memorized all of your blocking moves and devised perfect counters and guard breaks for each and every one of them. Your Scissor Blade that can destroy a Goku Uniform is little more than a normal sword if it can't hit its target!"

After several long seconds of hitting Ryuko repeatedly, Sanageyama decided to disengage Shinsoku-Senbonzuki. It would be a great dishonor to Matoi if she was defeated in such a manner. He wanted to beat her to prove he was strong, but doing so in such a manner proved nothing. As the ten shinai attached to his fingers whirled to a stop, he gazed down at Ryuko's smoking body and mockingly asked, "Is that all you got, Matoi? Where is the fight you promised me?"

"Shut up you bastard!" Ryuko spat as she staggered back to her feet using her Scissor Blade as a crutch. Taking in deep and ragged breathes, she looked into Senketsu's eye, "You ready yet?"

Senketsu gave Ryuko the Kamui equivalent of a nod, "Yes. I'm ready whenever you are. A lot is riding on this move working. I hope you know what you're doing, Ryuko."

"It's not like I have much of a choice," she whispered back, "With those damn eyes of his, I can't do anything without Sanageyama seeing right through it. This is the only shot I have at kicking his ass."

"I understand. Just be careful, Ryuko."

Ryuko gave Senketsu a quick nod before scowling and turned to a patiently waiting Sanageyama, "What are you waiting for, you green haired prick? This fight isn't over yet."

"That's right, Matoi!" Sanageyama shouted gleefully, "Show me your determination and strength!"

Sanageyama flew towards Ryuko with all the speed he could muster. The shinai on his fingers spinning back up to full speed, Sanageyama was prepared for Ryuko to fight him, but when she simply closed her eyes and held her hands out to her sides, a look of confusion grew on his face.

"What is she doing?" Sanageyama skidded to a halt. His Tengantsu was trying to predict what Matoi might be doing, but each and every time it came up blank. Whatever it was, it didn't involve the use of her muscles or movements. Shaking his head, Sanageyama decided that it didn't matter. Matoi was standing on her feet facing him. If she wanted to be defeated with her eyes closed, then who was he to judge? Running forward, he shouted, "This is the end, Matoi!"

Ryuko centered her mind and focused on ignoring all distractions. As she felt Senketsu's power flow through her body, building up as it went, she thought back to what Jakuzure's Goku Uniform was like. She had wondered why Senketsu was limited to simply physical attacks when the Elite Four and other students appeared to have more varied forms of attacks. It was only when Ichigo and Mugetsu were able to transform into Mugetsu Gufū that Ryuko knew there was no way she couldn't do the same.

As a faint red aura began surrounding her body, causing the red lines on Senketsu's armor to light up, Ryuko opened her eyes and declared, "This is it! Senketsu Senkou!"

Everyone in the dojo watched in wonder and amazement as Ryuko held her Scissor Blade parallel to the ground in front of her face while her body seemed to shine with a reflective metallic sheen. As her thigh high, heeled boots began to resemble actual metal armor, the rest of Senketsu appeared to bulk up slightly with his eyes narrowly and jutting upwards into the air. Flexing her right hand, a wide grin spread across Ryuko's face as her Scissor Blade began to shift as well. Starting from where she was gripping the handle, glowing black and red jagged lines raced up the blade.

"Senketsu Senkou?" Sanageyama didn't know Matoi's Kamui could transform! He had heard from Lady Satsuki that Ichigo's could, but nothing about Matoi's, "What is this? How did you transform?"

"There is nothing a Goku Uniform can do that Senketsu cannot!" Ryuko shouted while pointing her Scissor Blade at Sanageyama. Taking a single step forward, Sanageyama found to his shock that Ryuko's speed had increased at least two-fold, but it still wasn't fast enough to overcome the predicting abilities of his Tengantsu.

"This is perfect, Matoi!" Sanageyama saw that Ryuko would be attack his left arm at the wrist in an attempt to sever his hand. Moving back and out of range, he added, "But your new form isn't - "

There was a loud crash as Sanageyama's Blade Regalia was suddenly missing its left hand. While it wasn't actually his own, and thus he could feel no pain from the missing appendage, Sanageyama was still in shock.

"H-How?" He sputtered and turned to a bored looking Ryuko, "My Tengantsu should have seen that attack coming! What did you do?"

"Tch," Ryuko shouldered her glowing red Scissor Blade and scoffed, "You think I'm just going to tell you how I cut off your hand? This isn't a manga, you know. I'm not going to explain my powers so you can find a weakness!"

Sanageyama's eyes easily picked out the swinging motion from Ryuko's Scissor Blade and dodged to the left, but found once against to his consternation she had managed to hit him. Tracing his right hand over the large gash cutting diagonally across the front of his Blade Regalia, he growled, "What manner of attack is this? I didn't see anything, but you still hit me!"

"Like I'd tell you anything!" Ryuko held her Scissor Blade out to her side and willed it to transform into its Decapitation Mode, but as a result of being in Senketsu Senkou, the blade kept the black and red jagged lines and continued to glow with the same red aura, "Sen-I-Soshitsu!"

Despite knowing how the attack would come due to his Tengatsu, Sanageyama realized the actual attack would be nothing like that. Bringing all his shinai in front of his body, his gambit paid off as an invisible force cleaved its way through his right hand and into his Blade Regalia. It was only because of his intuition that his Goku Uniform wasn't destroyed altogether.

"Where are you looking?" Sanageyama's eyes widened as he heard Ryuko's voice coming from above him. Staring up at her falling figure, his Tengantsu was telling him how he would be hit but without any way to block it, he was done for.

"Sen-I-Soshitsu!"

With a loud scream, Sanageyama's Blade Regalia was quickly cut into myriads of pieces. Landing back on the ground in a crouch, Ryuko had a stern expression on her face as the Banshi in the Blade Regalia was absorbed into Senketsu.

"It looks like Monkey lost," Nonon announced lazily. Huffing and spinning on her feet, she shrugged her shoulders at Ichigo, "Well, it looks like my work is done here, Strawberry. I'll see you around whenever the hell I feel like it."

Ichigo turned his head to follow her, "What do you mean 'your work is done?' You didn't do anything."

"Of course I did," Nonon retorted angrily, "I told the Transfer Student about Sanageyama's eyes, didn't I? How else do you think an idiot like her could have defeated a member of the Elite Four?"

Seeing that he was going to get nowhere with Nonon, Ichigo groaned and turned back to the finished fight. Noticing the Banshi being absorbed into Senketsu, he muttered to Mugetsu, "Isn't that similar to what happened after my fight against the Archery Club President?"

"Yes, but at the same time no," Mugetsu replied after a moment of thinking, "Senketsu is absorbing the Banshi into himself to increase his overall power. While I am capable of using the same basic ability, the Banshi are instead absorbed into your blade, increasing its sharpness and cutting power. If you were to absorb enough Life Fibers with your sword, eventually its strength would be enough to sheer through Satsuki Kiryuin's Bakuzan."

"Way to go, Ryuko!" Mako waved cheerfully before leaping out of the crowd and enveloping Ryuko in a full-body hug, "That's one down and two to go! And that mysterious attack you used! I don't know what you did, but you won, Ryuko! Yay!"

"T-This isn't finished, Matoi!"

Ryuko turned around and saw a fully nude Sanageyama staggering to his feet, a single wooden shinai clasped firmly in his right hand. With his breath ragged and body seemingly covered in cuts and bruises, it didn't take a genius to realize that he wasn't in any condition to continue fighting.

"Nope," Ryuko declared dryly as she shouldered her Scissor Blade, "There's nothing you can do to me in your current state."

"Are you taking pity on me?" Sanageyama shouted in return. He may have lost his Blade Regalia, but he was a warrior, damn it! Just because he only had the single shinai, that didn't mean he was going to just give up and die! Taking a shaky step towards Ryuko, he waved his shinai at her and declared, "I can still fight!"

Before he, or Ryuko, could say or do anything, several spiked whips sprang through the air and lashed Sanageyama across his body. "Don't be pathetic, Sanageyama!" Gamagori's boisterous voice shouted from above, "You have disgraced the Elite Four enough already! Don't spread your shame to the rest of us!"

Sanageyama collapsed to his knees, his fists slamming against the ground, as he realized he had lost everything he came to Honnouji Academy for. Holding back the tears of shame and regret that threatened to come out, he knelt there as everyone who came to watch his fight filtered out of the dojo to return to their respective lives. He didn't know how long he was sitting there for, but when he saw a familiar pair of feet stop near him, he looked up and saw Ichigo standing alone next to him.

"Have you come to gloat, Ichigo?" Sanageyama sneered.

With his hands in his pockets, Ichigo asked, "Why did you want to fight Ryuko?"

"Tsk," Sanageyama stood back to his feet and turned away from Ichigo. With his hair shadowing his eyes, he said, "It's not something someone like you would understand. Three years ago, before I met Lady Satsuki, I was the leader of the Northern Kanto Gang Alliance. I had over five hundred students under my control when I received a direct challenge from Satsuki. It was just her and the other three Elite Four at the time. I thought I was going to win, but in one single shout Satsuki defeated every one of my men. It didn't take long for her to defeat me as well. Until I fought Lady Satsuki, I never met someone I couldn't beat. She challenged me to better myself and improve my skills. That's why I challenged Mato! She was the third person to make my blood itch for a fight!"

The choice of words intrigued Ichigo, "Third?"

Sanageyama spit on the ground, clearing his mouth of blood in the process, "You are the second, Ichigo! You are the only person to have actually beaten Lady Satsuki. My goal is to eventually do the same, but to do that I need to improve myself! Fighting Mato! was but the first step. I thought if I could beat her, I would be nearly ready to fight you! And if I could beat you - "

" - you would be able to beat Satsuki." Ichigo sighed and rubbed the back of his neck. Sanageyama was a lot like Ikkaku and Kenpachi. All of them looked for a fight against the strongest opponents they could find. However, unlike the members of the Eleventh Division, Sanageyama seemed quite a bit saner. Looking upwards, Ichigo let out a deep breath, "You were too focused on your eyes."

By the perplexed expression on Sanageyama's face, it was clear he wasn't expecting Ichigo to say that, "When we fought I was able to move quickly enough to avoid your attacks. I don't know what Ryuko did, but you couldn't see her attacks, could you?"

"Why are you telling me this? We're enemies."

"Why shouldn't I?"

Ichigo had been asked that question before, but the answer never changed. Sanageyama may work for Satsuki, but he was honorable to say the least. He could have taken on Ryuko in many different ways, but he didn't.

Sanageyama chuckled as Ichigo's words and their meaning sunk in before evolving into full blown laughter. Grabbing the side of his face with his hand, Sanageyama said, "I can't believe it was that simple. To think that it was my own Tengantsu that led to my defeat, how pathetic."

Taking a few steps away from Ichigo, Sanageyama stopped and turned back around, "Thank you, Ichigo."

"For what?"

"From what you said, I know what I need to do to improve myself," Sanageyama clenched a fist angrily, "While all this time I thought I was improving my skills and getting stronger, I was really stagnating! I let my pride in my Tengantsu prevent me from getting stronger."

Ichigo stood silently as Sanageyama finally left the dojo to head to parts unknown. Looking pensively at the floor, he knelt down and picked up Sanageyama's dropped shinai, "Hey Mugetsu."

His Kamui blinked and looked at him, "Yes?"

Ichigo looked at the shinai before turning to leave, "I have the feeling I just screwed something up."

"I get that feeling all the time, but I just ignore it."

---

...

---

Iori leaned back and let out a stifled yawn as he finished compiling the data on the latest improvements to Satsuki's Goku Uniforms. He knew the urgency of her request to increase their power as quickly, and safely, as possible, but he wasn't a miracle worker. All the time the Sewing Club spent on the prototype Five-Star Goku Uniform turned out to be an enormous waste of time due to the volunteer subject being unable to withstand the will of the Life Fibers. Rubbing his eyes beneath his glasses, Iori was grateful Inumuta had been there to unstitch the prototype uniform. Things could have gotten messy otherwise.

Reading the data scrolling down the screen in front of him, Iori reached for the cup of coffee, his fourth so far, and frowned when he felt it was empty. He knew pulling daily all-nighters was going to impact his health, but he had a lot of work to do. As he stood to get some more, Iori heard a pressurized hiss as the door to the secure room opened. There was only a handful of people with the requisite access to get in, and none of them had called ahead to signal their arrival.

"Who's there?" Iori subtly moved his hand towards the collar of his Goku Uniform. He may be known as the president of the Sewing Club, but he was no pushover.

"Relax, Iori," A heavily bandaged Sanageyama walked into the room as a burst of thunder echoed outside, "I'm calling in that favor you owe me."

Iori turned sadly away from Sanageyama, "I wish to help you, but I can't. Lady Satsuki has made her wishes clear on the matter. You are no longer a member of the Elite Four and, as such, are forbidden any of the privileges. I'm sorry."

Sanageyama didn't say anything as he looked at the machine working tirelessly on the floor below. Watching the bundles of glowing red Life Fibers being drawn into the machine and spun into preliminary Goku Uniforms, he eventually turned back to Iori, "I grew overconfident in my Tengatsu's ability to predict and counter. I never thought I would face an opponent able to take advantage of that. Who knew Matoi had a brain after all. I wasn't expecting her to find a way to negate my Tengantsu."

"I saw Inumuta's data on the fight," Iori leaned back and folded his arms, "It's incredible to think that Matoi's Kamui was that strong. It is truly fascinating. I only wish I had the time and ability to study a Kamui. The things I could learn from it would accelerate Lady Satsuki's plans by months, if not years."

"I know," Sanageyama sighed sadly and placed his hands in his pockets, "I'm not asking you to stitch me a new Blade Regalia. As much as I wish it, I haven't earned the right to wear one of Lady Satsuki's Goku Uniforms. What I want you to do is much more personal. I need you to stitch my eyes shut."

"What?" Iori nearly choked upon hearing the request. There was no way on Earth that Sanageyama, the same person who prided his eyes seeing everything, would ask him to do that, "You can't be serious. Without your eyes, you cannot use Tengantsu!"

"I know." Sanageyama replied solemnly, "I prided myself on my eyes being able to see the world around me without fail. Due to this, I let the rest of my senses become dull and useless. If I had been willing to train my ears to pick up Matoi's footsteps and my nose to sense changes in the air, I would have been able to continue fighting despite whatever Matoi did."

Iori clenched a fist but said nothing. He truly did owe Sanageyama a huge favor and, if he was following Sanageyama's train of thought, this would be what was needed to get back into Lady Satsuki's good graces.

"Alright," he sighed after a moment, "I'll do what you ask, but it will only be a temporary procedure. If at any time you request me to reverse it, I will be more than glad to do so."

---

...

---

Ichigo sat in his room with a familiar scowl on his face. The worst had come to pass and there was nothing he could do to stop it. All the power that Mugetsu afforded to him would not even begin to be enough to change the events surrounding him. Perhaps if Aizen still possessed all the power the Hōgyoku gave him, then something could be done, but that was just a pipe dream. The simple matter was that the one thing he had hoped would never happen had, in fact, happened.

His room had become the de facto hangout of his group of friends.

It wasn't just Ryuko who stopped by his room. If it was only her, Ichigo could deal with it. It was the fact that wherever Ryuko went, Mako was close behind to join in on the fun, as she called it. Once Mako came, it was only a matter of time before Shinjiro somehow popped into existence from some hamper-space in his room. Ichigo would never admit it, but it was amusing to watch Shinjiro pop up from behind the counter and scare Ryuko out of whatever chair she was sitting in. There was also Ururu, who stuck by close to his side no matter where he went out of some desire to protect him from his enemies. Last, and certainly the least welcome, was Nonon, who always showed up with a scowl on her face.

"So tell me again why the hell you're all in my room?"

"It's because it's the safest place, Strawberry," Nonon sarcastically answered as she pilfered his cabinets for food. She may be an undercover Three-Star, but that meant she had the budget of a No-Star student. Since she couldn't afford the luxurious, and expensive, foods she was used to, she decided to simply take what she needed from Ichigo's kitchen. Screw him if he complained about it, "Lady Satsuki has eyes and arms all throughout the One and Two-Star Residential Districts as well as the Slums. The student dorms are the only place she cannot see everything."

"Nonon is right!" Mako said with a nod of her head.

"Who gave you permission to address me so informally?" Nonon deadpanned.

Mako either ignored Nonon's question or simply did not hear it as she continued, "You'd be surprised about the number of spies and informants Lady Satsuki has in the Slums! At least two of our neighbors are spies, but we still invite them over for dinner because that's the Mankanshoku way!"

"That's not something you should be proud of, Mako." Ryuko shook her head at her friend's uncaring attitude. Despite being an airhead, Ryuko found Mako's behavior comforting in Honnouji Academy. Smirking, she turned to Ichigo, "So that's two Elite Four down and two to go, right? You want the next one or should we flip for it?"

Ichigo crossed his arms in front of his body, "I want no part in this! I only took down Jakuzure because she attacked me first. I have no motive or reason for going after Satsuki, no matter how much of a bitch she might be."

"But..." Ryuko turned her gaze away from Ichigo as she recalled the name of the person Ichigo was sure was her father's killer. Nui Harime. Just thinking about that woman caused her blood to boil slightly. As much as she wanted to track down this woman and beat the answers out of her, Ryuko knew she couldn't get angry. Senketsu had warned her about what might happen when her blood began boiling. As much as she wanted revenge, she couldn't risk getting too angry. When, not if, she confronted Nui Harime, she needed to be calm and collected.

"Fine, have it your way!" Ryuko gave up her argument and leaned back on the couch. Letting out a huff, she asked, "You fought Sanageyama's Blade Regalia before, right?"

"Yeah."

Ryuko turned her eyes to Ichigo, "How did you beat him?"

Ichigo gave her a shrug in return, "Sanageyama could predict and avoid all my moves, but once I pushed Mugetsu into increasing my speed and reflexes, there was nothing Sanageyama could do to avoid my strikes. He could see them coming as quickly as ever, but his Blade Regalia was no longer able to adjust to my attacks quickly enough to counter them."

"That brings up another thing," Ryuko folded her arms and sighed, "Mugetsu seems to be faster than Senketsu."

" My specialty is speed," Mugetsu's feminine voice answered Ryuko, "Ichigo is already strong enough on his own. By increasing his speed, I allow him the ability to destroy all those that would bring him harm."

" A real Kamui wouldn't specialize!" Senketsu had been waiting for this moment for quite some time. Unlike Mugetsu, who seemed to have a firm understanding of what a Kamui meant, Senketsu was still missing large chunks of his memory. It was infuriating to the Kamui to always have Mugetsu contradict him and force him to accept her knowledge since she knew what she was talking about, "If you were truly a Kamui, you wouldn't focus on just one aspect of Ichigo's abilities. Focusing on improving one aspect can only lead to defeat, just like Ryuko's opponent today! He trained his eyes to their limit so Ryuko and I took them out of the equation!"

" Don't make me tie you in a knot," Mugetsu threatened only to receive a whack from Ichigo's hand.

"Behave," he warned, purposely ignoring the hurt look from Mugetsu. Turning to Nonon, who was doing her best to ignore them, he asked, "What can you tell us about Gamagori and the other guy?"

"Bite me, Transfer Student! Information doesn't come cheap," Nonon pouted and turned away from him, "I'm not helping you out anymore without compensation."

"Compensation?" Ryuko was in disbelief at Nonon's request. Who the hell was she to demand something like that from them? Slamming her feet into the floor, she leaned forward and snarled, "What the hell should we compensate you for?"

"Gee," Nonon snarked and rolled her eyes. The sheer audacity of the Transfer Student boggled her mind, "Who was it that gave you the hint to defeat Sanageyama?"

Ryuko pointed to her right, "Ichigo."

"It was me!" Nonon shouted and slammed her leg angrily on the ground. What happened to all the respect she had as a Three-Star? It was bad enough that Ichigo always called her the wrong name, but for the credit she so rightfully deserved to be given away infuriated her, "I'm the one that told you to watch out for his eyes! Don't tell me you forgot!"

"Your hint was really vague," Ryuko explained, subtly enjoying teasing the former member of the Elite Four, "It could have meant anything."

"Fine then!" Nonon stormed out of the room, pushing past a confused Ururu in the process and causing the poor girl to spin dizzily around. Slamming open the door, Nonon turned back one last time, "I'll give you a hint that even you cannot possibly screw up, Transfer Student! Gamagori's Goku Uniform gets stronger the more damage it takes!"

With her piece said, Nonon slammed the door shut. Ryuko and Ichigo looked at each other before Ichigo sighed wistfully.

"This is not going to end well," he muttered. Standing up, his spot quickly taken by a more than happy Mako, he stretched his shoulder to work out a kink, "It looks like the fun is over. You should head home."

"Ah! I almost forgot in all the fun!" Mako pointed to her watch, which still boggled Ichigo's mind, and thrust her wrist in Ryuko's face. Grabbing her friend by Senketsu's lapels, she rushed towards the door, "We have a strict 8:00 PM curfew, Ryuko! If we don't get home before then, mom is going to be really mad with us!"

Kicking open his door, Mako made a break for the elevator, but quickly came back to wave goodbye to Ichigo, a still confused Ryuko held tightly in her grasp, "Goodnight, Ichigo! I'll see you at school tomorrow!"

Waving halfheartedly back at Mako, a bead of sweat rolled down his face upon witnessing the strangeness that was Mako. Noticing a presence next to him, he turned and saw Ururu looking nervously at the ground.

"What's the matter, Ururur?"

Ururu wanted to tell Ichigo about her encounter with Nui Harime, but at the same time she didn't want to worry him excessively. If she could deal with Nui without getting Ichigo involved, Ururu would be happy. Still, Ururu knew from experience that Ichigo would get involved despite her best efforts and decided to simply tell him.

"Ichigo, what does Amu mean?"

"Amu?" Ichigo scratched his head, "Where did you hear that?"

"Nui Harime," Ururu's blunt answer caught Ichigo off-guard and caused him to stumble, "During Ryuko's fight today, I ran into her outside. She called me Amu, but I don't know why."

"I don't know," Ichigo couldn't even begin to try and understand the craziness that was Nui Harime. It was just better for his sanity to just shrug and say she did it for her own amusement. Ruffling her hair, he gave her a reassuring smile and said, "Nui isn't the sanest person out there. I would just ignore whatever she tells you."

Ururu smiled and clasped her hands together, "Okay. Thanks Ichigo."

---

...

---

As a crackle of lightning arced across the stormy skies, lighting the interior of the helicopter with shades of white and blue, Satsuki Kiryuin continued to stare out into the storm with a stoic expression etched on her face.

She had heard from Inumuta and Gamagori about Sanageyama's failure to defeat Matoi. While she would have loved to say it was a shock to her, in actuality she had been expecting a result like this. Sanageyama prided himself on the power and perceptive abilities of his Tengatsu. Without his eyes to predict and counter everything around him, he was no stronger than a Two-Star student. What truly intrigued her was the notion that Matoi's Kamui was able to shift into a mode perfectly able to counter Sanageyama's Tengatsu.

"What is so different about Junketsu that it cannot transform into more useful configurations?"

Satsuki had asked her mother that very question, with suppressed bile and pride, when she arrived at Revocs. With a smile on her face that Satsuki had come to expect from her mother, Ragyo had traced a finger down the front of Junketsu before stopping near one of its eyes and told her that it was only a matter of time before Junketsu decided to impart upon her the ability to transform further.

She supposed she should be satisfied that her mother was content with allowing her to continue wearing Junketsu. When she informed her mother about Ichigo and Matoi's Kamui and her need to counteract their growing power, Ragyo seemed to have been expecting her to say something like that. Satsuki shouldn't have been surprised. Her mother's information gathering abilities far outstripped those of Inumuta when she really wanted to know something. The presence of two Kamui not created by Revocs easily fell into that rare and unique category.

"Something bothers me," Satsuki stared down at the growing lights of Honnou City emotionlessly, "Ichigo and Matoi talk to their Kamui almost as if they are able to hear them respond. If that is the case, then why haven't I been able to hear anything coming from Junketsu?"

Knowing she was alone in the rear compartment of the helicopter, Satsuki decided to humor herself while, at the same time, conducting an experiment. If Kamui could truly talk, then perhaps that is how Ichigo and Matoi were able to access new configurations. Leaning back in the leather chair, Satsuki stared at Junketsu's two eyes, "You are a Kamui. You thrive for battle and, if you are truly a sentient being, you must find the prospect of Senketsu and Mugetsu being able to do things you cannot do simply atrocious. If you are willing to work with me to prove you, Junketsu, are the superior Kamui, give me a response."

When there was a lack of any answer, apart from a nearly unperceivable narrowing of Junketsu's eyes, Satsuki chuckled mirthlessly, "Of course you cannot talk. What was I thinking?"

There was a lurch as the helicopter landed at Honnouji Academy, cutting Satsuki's thoughts about the matter off in the process. As the motor ground to a halt, Satsuki walked towards the door of the helicopter and found Soroi waiting for her with an umbrella.

"I trust Lady Ragyo's mood was pleasant?" Soroi asked respectfully as he gave Satsuki the umbrella.

"I explained to her my motives for taking Junketsu out from its containment," Satsuki answered stoically, "She accepted my reasoning. You needn't worry yourself about my problems, Soroi."

A figure prostrating in the rain in front of her caused Satsuki to pause in her tracks. Recognizing who it was, but sensing something different about him, Satsuki said, "I don't have time for losers, Sanageyama."

"Ichigo Kurosaki was right," Sanageyama mumbled, causing Satsuki to quirk an eyebrow in interest. The topic of what Ichigo may have told Sanageyama interested her, but not nearly as much as what Sanageyama had to tell her, "I was overconfident in my eyesight. I allowed myself to grow dull and lethargic! Please give me another chance to fight Mato!"

"You are pathetic," Satsuki motioned for Soroi to continue inside without her. What she needed to say didn't require his presence, "How will fighting Mato a second time change anything? She has already figured out a counter to your Tengatsu. Attempting to fight her will only lead to the same results. I don't need, nor do I want, subordinates who lack the resolve to improve themselves."

"But I do have resolve!" Sanageyama shouted over the din of the falling rain. Slamming his fists on the roof, he picked his head up and declared, "Here is all the proof you need of my resolve!"

Satsuki turned and gazed upon what Sanageyama sacrificed in order to prove his use to her. To be honest, the thought of self-mutilation sickened her. Those that could not live with their bodies were not worth the air they breathed. Noticing the stitching pattern across Sanageyama's eyes, Satsuki recognized it as Iori's handiwork. That meant what Sanageyama had done wasn't permanent. If it was, Satsuki wouldn't have even dared to consider giving him another chance.

With a pleasant smile gracing her features, not that Sanageyama could see it in his current state, Satsuki said, "Oh? This is the full extent of your resolve? Perhaps I was too hasty in dismissing you from the Elite Four. I will allow you to face Matoi again, with the full use of your Blade Regalia. Go inform Iori of my decision. Do not fail me again, Sanageyama."

"Thank you, Lady Satsuki!" Sanageyama lowered his head to the ground joyfully. Here was the second chance he needed to prove, not only to Matoi and Ichigo, but to himself as well that he was capable of improving himself. He had relied upon the strength of his eyes for far too long. Now he would learn to use every one of his senses to view the world surrounding him. Even if an opponent could negate a single one of his senses, it wouldn't be enough to stop him.

"I must thank you, Ichigo, when I get the chance," Sanageyama's finger's clenched as he sat on his knees and stared blindly up into the sky, "For you have allowed me to view the world in its entirety."

---

...

---

"Be careful, Ryuko. There's no telling what Sanageyama has planned."

Ichigo's words reverberated through Ryuko's mind as she ascended the steps leading towards the arena where Sanageyama asked for the rematch. It was strange that he would challenge her to a rematch on a weekend, but Ryuko chalked it down to simply not wanting to get embarrassed a second time. Stepping over one of the smaller spikes dotting the arena, Ryuko huffed when she saw Sanageyama, shirtless apart from his Goku Uniform, standing still.

"What's the big deal challenging me to a do-over on a Saturday morning?" Ryuko folded her arms and scoffed, "Giving someone who I beat a second chance. That isn't like you at all, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

As she talked, Ryuko's voice increased in volume until she was nearly shouting, all of which was directed at the figure looking down at them from above. Wearing Junketsu and with Bakuzan planted firmly on the ground, Satsuki locked gazes with Ryuko.

"Tell me just how soft I am after this fight, Ryuko Matoi," Satsuki replied calmly, her voice amplified by the speakers until it seemed to be coming from all around the courtyard. She was looking forward to seeing how much Sanageyama's affinity with his Blade Regalia Mark II improved due to sewing his eyes shut. She wanted to see how far he was willing to go to prove himself to her. Fighting against Matoi, an opponent he lost to due to his overconfidence, would go a long way towards restoring his honor and placement in the Elite Four, "I'll even up the stakes, as you so crudely put it. If you manage to beat Sanageyama here and now, I will personally come down and answer every question you might have. No strings attached. No secrets or half-truths. You will find out everything you seek to know."

"That's mighty nice of the great Satsuki Kiryuin!" Ryuko pointed her Scissor Blade towards Satsuki, "But I already got the name of the person who killed my dad! All I need to do is track her down and make her pay for what they did!"

"Oh?" To say that Satsuki was shocked would be accurate. How Matoi managed to discover Nui Harime's identity intrigued her. Perhaps after Sanageyama defeats Matoi she would be able to get some answers, "Is that so? Well now, not everything can be taken at face value. What the eye sees is not always what the mind perceives. Ponder on that while you fight."

"Matoi," Sanageyama's voice was monotone as he addressed his opponent, "Where is Ichigo?"

"Ichigo?" Ryuko pointed behind her, "He's probably sleeping in or something. It is a Saturday morning after all."

"Good," Despite not being able to see his face, Ryuko could tell Sanageyama was smiling, "I wouldn't want him to see this fight."

When I fight him, I want him to be surprised at my progress. Watch closely, Matoi, at what happens when a man is forced to change to preserve everything he cares about!"

---

...

---

A lone figure approached Honnou City from the southwest. Revving the engine on her motorcycle, the front wheel flying off the ground momentarily as her speed increased, the woman narrowed her eyes as the spiraling city came into view.

"So..." the woman clamped down on the front brakes, allowing her motorcycle to skid to a stop. Turning off the engine, she got off and jumped nearly twenty feet in the air before landing softly on one of the streetlights lining the highway. Wincing when the sun rising over the horizon in the east hit her eyes, the woman reached into her pocket and pulled out a pair of sunglasses, "... It seems Tsumugu was right after all. A lot of things can change in ten years."

Kinue Kinagase stoically continued to stare towards the city, but focused more specifically at Honnouji Academy at the top. Pushing her shoulder-length black hair, tipped red at the end like her brother's, Kinue focused her senses. She could feel the Life Fibers permeating the city, which caused her to wince and rub her temple.

"Oh, shut up."

Due to the circumstances in her past, Kinue had developed the ability to tell where Life Fibers were as well as in what concentration. Her ability is what allowed Nudist Beach to not only evade the soldiers of Revocs for all these years, but also find and destroy the hidden Revocs factories that the public at large didn't know about. This did not mean she particularly liked sensing Life Fibers. It turned out that the higher the concentration of Life Fibers, the more it caused her... companion agitation. And when her companion became agitated, Kinue needed to have as much control over her emotions as possible to prevent herself from falling into a blind rage. She had been there before. It was not pretty.

"I know you feel them," Kinue answered an unseen and unheard voice. It was strange that after a decade of thinking the voice was her insanity, she was now answering it back. Perhaps she truly was going insane, "I feel them too."

There were Kamui in Honnou City. Three if she was sensing correctly. Tsumugu had told her of two Kamui he had run into, Ichigo Kurosaki's and Ryuko Matoi's. This third one was concerning. She didn't have any data on it, which meant she would be going in blind against it. Unlike her brother, Kinue preferred not to go into a situation half-cocked and hope for the best to happen. She needed to understand everything so that when she did decide to fight, she would most likely win.

"So, Masaki's son has a Kamui," A light smile appeared at the corners of Kinue's mouth, "I don't suppose this is Isshin's doing."

Kinue had the utmost respect for the normally clownish Isshin Kurosaki, but she could understand why her brother hated Life Fibers and Kamui. Subconsciously placing her hand over the center of her chest, Kinue absently traced the black zigzag pattern etched forever on her skin. Isshin's device had saved her from a horrible fate, but she could never be the same woman that could make Tsumugu actually laugh. The risks of losing control and hurting those around her prevented her from showing anything more than light emotions.

A slight narrowing of Kinue's eyes preceded a scoff from the woman, "I did not come here to fight a Kamui. You'll just have to live with it."

Adjusting the jacket and pants she was wearing, Kinue made sure it was covering up the entirety of what was underneath. There were those in Japan, as well as the rest of the world, that would nearly instantly recognize what she truly wore and inform their superiors. Kinue did not need a repeat of what happened in Rome. She was only thankful that the Grand Couturier hadn't managed to recognize her in the dark of night. It would have been really bad if she had been caught. Kinue had heard rumors of what happened to captured Nudist Beach members. It makes what her fate could have been a simple slap on the wrist.

"Hey! Get down from there!"

Kinue looked down and saw a single student wearing a One-Star Goku Uniform pointing at her. From his customized appearance, Kinue could easily guess he must be a member of the Honnou City Patrol Corps. Tsumugu had joked with her about the effectiveness of the corps and how easy it was for him to evade their patrols. It would seem that her conversation had caused her to be detected.

"I said get down from there! I have some questions for you!"

Without saying a word, Kinue stepped off the streetlight and landed softly on the pavement. Standing up to her nearly six foot stature, courtesy of her companion, Kinue walked forward until she towered over the One-Star student.

"Yes?" The One-Star student was slightly put off the lack of emotion in Kinue's voice. He, like many others, must have assumed she was brusque and prone to emotional outbursts. Perhaps in the past she was, but not anymore, "What is it?"

"Your motorcycle, Ma'am," The student pointed towards her bike, which she had parked across two lanes of empty highway, "It's illegally parked. You need to move it or I'm going to have to give you a ticket."

Ignoring her companion's attempt at persuading her to tear apart the One-Star's uniform and destroy the Life Fibers composing it, Kinue gave the student a condescending smile and simply walked past him, "Of course. My apologies."

Sitting on her bike, Kinue made sure the silver case strapped to the back was still secure before revving the engine and continuing towards Honnou City. As the city loomed overhead, Kinue felt an extreme burst of anger emanating from her companion. There was at least one being whose body was composed of Life Fibers somewhere in the city. She couldn't pinpoint where they were, but she didn't have to guess who it was. Nui Harime.

"The Grand Couturier's presence is going to complicate things," Kinue let out a breath. She knew that if it came down to it, she would have to fight the Grand Couturier. While she had trained and grown stronger ever since that day, Nui Harime was in a league of her own. Power and speed meant nothing if your opponent can simply regenerate from her wounds in the blink of an eye.

"I suppose I have no choice in the matter," Kinue admitting dryly, "I suppose you might just get your fight after all... Danketsu."

There was a slight ruffling of something moving under her jacket as Kinue reached the outskirts of the Slums surrounding Honno City.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #5 - An Average Morning for Nui Harime

Humming a song that she had heard on the radio recently, Nui Harime finished adjusting the pink bow in her hair and stepped back away from the full body mirror.

"There we go!" She announced proudly as she twirled around once to make sure everything was prim and proper, "I'm all dressed up and ready to go hang out with Ichigo some more!"

Taking a few steps towards the door to the apartment of the student she killed, Nui skidded to a stop as she remembered something vitally important, "Oh dear! How could I have forgotten to do the most important part of my morning routine? If the Director was here, she would surely be disappointed in my lack of common sense!"

Reaching up into one of her pigtails, Nui pulled out a folded up piece of paper. Scribbled on the front of the page, in a cute handwriting, were the words, 'THINGS TO DO BEFORE LEAVING IN THE MORNING.'

"Let's see now..." Nui chewed on the end of a pencil that magically appeared in her hand, "I checked my apartment for bugs placed by those pigs in clothing, set various traps to capture people who are too curious for their own good and I'm still trying to find out more information about those stupid Nudists."

A muffled sound from the closet drew Nui's attention. Happily walking over to it, she opened the door and looked at the bound and gagged Nudist Beach operative she had caught trying to follow her. The man should have known better than to try and spy on her. He should be grateful that she was in a good mood at the time. Usually Nui just killed and dismembered those following her.

"I'm not going to let you go until you tell me everything you know," Nui informed the man cheerfully. As a flash of purple appeared in her right hand, she added, "Actually, I'm not going to let you go at all. If you aren't going to say anything, I'll just have to come back later and try again when I have the time."

Closing the door and humming the song she really liked once again, Nui looked at the nearby clock and realized she was going to be late, "I should get going. If I don't, I'll miss running into Ichigo and that would just be really bad! It's just a shame he hangs out with Ryuko. Getting close to her is going to be super hard without Ichigo getting in the way!"

Tucking the list back into her hair, happy that she didn't forget anything, Nui Harime left to start her day. There was so much fun and excitement at Honnouji Academy now that Ichigo was here. Nui was sure that if Ichigo hadn't come, she wouldn't have thought about coming here until her plan to kill Ryuko Matoi was all set up and ready to go. But what would she have done in the meantime?

---

...

---

Glossary of Terms

Senketsu Senkou - Senketsu Flash

Danketsu - Unity, Unison, Combination

Tangled Up in Blue

Here is the much-awaited Chapter 18. We finally reach the end of Episode 6 and begin the transition to Fight Club, which I'm not going to talk about until next chapter. In this chapter you will finally begin reading the true and unabridged history between Isshin and Ragyo. Things aren't always as they appear. If they were, then this story would be a boring read since you would know what's going to happen before I write it down.

On a side note, I finally broke the big 500 review mark. Now all that's left is for me to break 1,000 reviews.

I recommend anyone enjoying my story to check out The Swordslinger's Naruto/Kill la Kill crossover: Kill El Kitsune . It's already at five chapters and it's a very good read.

---

...

---

Chapter 18 - Tangled Up in Blue

Tokyo - 22 Years Ago

" But I don't want to go!"

Masaki Kurosaki let out a tired sigh as Isshin Shiba, hopefully her future husband, gave the adult equivalent of a temper tantrum. Rolling her eyes, she gave Isshin a venomous glare that nearly instantly cowed the former shinigami into submission, "I don't care if you want to go or not! Tokyo Fashion Week starts today and I have two tickets to it! I've been waiting for almost a year to go and you are not going to take this away from me!"

Isshin groaned loudly. He loved Masaki with all his heart, but the former shinigami captain could not understand her obsession with clothing. He had seen some of the so-called outfits being paraded up and down the runways by women who were way too thin to be healthy. He didn't think anything that required at least five hours to be put on deserved to be called a dress.

"Aw, fine," Isshin solemnly kicked the sidewalk with his foot. If going to this fashion show made Masaki happy, then Isshin decided he could put up with a few boring hours, "How long is this thing anyway?"

"Seven hours," Masaki answered happily, causing Isshin to fall to his knees in anguish. Seven hours. He would rather fight a vasto lorde hollow without his zanpakuto than put up with something like that. Noticing a subway station just a few blocks away, Isshin was weighing his options. He could make a break for it and get away from a potentially boring day or put up with something that would probably bore him to death. It turned out that his choice was made for him when Masaki grabbed him by the ear and pulled hard.

"Get up, Mister Shiba," Masaki's voice wasn't playing around anymore, "Here's what's going to happen. You are going to go with me to the fashion show and you are going to have a good time. If I hear one bad word out of you during the entire show, you're going to find out how good my aim with a bow is, if you know what I mean."

Subtly, and quickly, bringing his knees together, Isshin gulped, "Y-Yes."

"Good," Masaki's mood quickly shifted back to normal. Twirling around with her arms outstretched, she began running down the sidewalk, "Come on Isshin! The show starts in only an hour."

"I'm coming," Isshin waved nervously at the retreating Masaki. Once he was sure she was out of earshot, he grumbled under his breath, "Like I actually have a choice in the matter."

Pulling himself together and tidying up his shirt, ruffled from Masaki's manhandling, Isshin turned and immediately ran face-first into a complete stranger.

" I'm sorry!" Isshin quickly reached down to help the woman he had knocked over back onto her feet. Even though it was a complete accident, he nevertheless felt terrible about potentially hurting a woman. He was just that kind of a man, "Are you alright?"

" I'm fine," the woman dismissed Isshin's concerns for her health and safety with a wave of her hand. As she stood up to her full statuesque height, Isshin became quite aware of just how stunning of a figure she had. With long black hair that fell down to just below her shoulders and a low cut dress that accentuated her figure tremendously, he was actually considering her to have a better body than his former lieutenant, "But running into a man who is both chivalrous and kind is quite rare in this day and age."

" Well, call me old-fashioned," Isshin chuckled heartedly while averting his eyes from her well-developed chest. He didn't need to tell this woman just how close to the mark she actually was. Growing up in one of the Noble Clans of the Soul Society tended to impart etiquette and discipline, "But are you sure you're ok? I did hit you quite hard after all."

" Oh?" The woman raised a hand to her mouth and laughed, "Well aren't you a big softy. I assure you that I am quite well, but I find your attitude refreshing to say the least. Tell me, what is the name of such a kind and honorable man?"

Isshin smirked and pointed his thumb at his chest, "My name is Isshin Shiba!"

" Ragyo Kiryuin," the woman answered in kind, "And if I may be so bold as to ask, where are you off to?"

Isshin's mood fell, "I'm going to the fashion show with my girlfriend. I don't really want to go, but going will make her happy."

" You must be talking about the Tokyo Fashion Week," Ragyo stated, to which Isshin nodded his head in agreement, "Even though I personally designed and stitched half of the outfits being shown this week, I would never go to watch. It's one thing to create a dress, but an entirely different matter to go watch someone who just can't pull it off. It just sickens me to see such fine clothing debased by those unworthy to wear them."

Not pretending to understand half of what Ragyo was going on about since he didn't care much for fashion, Isshin simply nodded and gave Ragyo a respectful two-finger salute, "It's been nice speaking with you Ragyo, but I can hear Masaki calling for me. I don't want to make her mad."

Ragyo watched with amusement on her face as Isshin sprinted down the sidewalk, nearly running into several people in the process. Bringing a hand to her cheek, she thought that her unexpected meeting with him, while brief and lacking in any true substance brought some much needed variety to her normally dull and repetitive lifestyle. Nobody said that being the head of Revocs, one of the biggest up and coming fashion and attire companies in the world, would be easy or fun. Ragyo was a woman who craved excitement and pleasure, not hours of sitting in meeting rooms listening to old men in ugly suits talk on and on about stocks or finances.

" La vie est drôle."

At that moment in time Ragyo decided that perhaps she would go to the Tokyo Fashion Week. While she already had a meeting planned to discuss Revocs expanding into the European market, Ragyo was far more interested in speaking with Isshin again. That man was perhaps the most entertaining person she had ever met.

End Flashback

Isshin was brought of his memories as he sensed something hit, and then explode, against the basic Life Fiber barrier surrounding Karakura Town. Focusing on where the intruder had come from, he quickly spotted the remains of what appeared to be a white suit burning as it floated to the ground. It appeared that Ragyo wasn't as content with leaving him alone as she professed. Isshin knew it was only a matter of time before she began testing his defenses and strengths. Sending a single COVER to perish against his barrier was worth it in Ragyo's mind if it gained her valuable information that could help her breach his protections in the future.

"But did she have to model them after my old suits?" Isshin scratched his nose, "I knew she was obsessed with me, but come on."

His question would remain unanswered as he felt someone wearing clothing made of Life Fibers penetrate his barrier. Isshin wasn't concerned though. He knew who was coming to see him the second they passed through the barrier. He had already configured it to allow Ichigo to pass through unimpeded and he was just putting the finishing touches on letting through a few more people. Making sure that Yuzu and Karin were out of range, Isshin chuckled.

"You weren't followed, were you?"

Standing behind him in his living room was a figure whose body was completely covered in an intricate white cloak that allowed no one to tell their age, gender or appearance. With the hood pulled down over their face, the figure replied, "Of course not."

"Good, very good," Isshin turned and stared directly at where the figure's eyes would be, "Tell me everything."

---

...

---

Kinue Kinagase's shoulders tensed as she jumped onto the top of a home in the Slums. She hadn't been in Honnou City for an hour, but she could already taste the Life Fibers permeating every facet of life.

People walked around with clothing made of Life Fibers while students wore and studied in uniforms with enough Life Fibers stitched into the fabric to greatly augment their physical characteristics. Kinue scoffed at Satsuki Kiryuin's Darwinist point of view.

Life Fibers were inherently dangerous, even to those most likely to resist their mental influences. What Satsuki was planning was dangerous not only to her enemies, but to her fellow students. Deciding that it was none of her concern for the moment, Kinue noticed out of the corner of her eye a patrol of One-Star students moving through the streets.

"It seems that Satsuki Kiryuin tried to keep some semblance of order even down here," Kinue mused thoughtfully while concealing her presence even further. After entering Honnou City, she had quickly hidden her motorcycle and chose to travel by less overt methods. She did not doubt that Satsuki's security and information network would eventually detect her presence. Believing as such would simply open her up to a surprise attack or trap. Kinue just needed to remain under the radar long enough to complete what she came to do.

Letting out a calming sigh to release some of her pent-up anxiety, Kinue adjusted the silver case strapped to her back. There were very few weapons in the world that could destroy Life Fibers, and unfortunately hers wasn't one of them. Satsuki Kiryuin had her Bakuzan, Ryuko Matoi had half of a Scissor Blade while the woman who killed Professor Matoi had the other half and, if her brother's report was accurate, Ichigo Kurosaki has a blade as well. Not having one of those rare weapons did not mean Kinue was heading into the hornet's nest.

"Hopefully I won't confront any of the students," Kinue mused outwardly. When she felt her companion object to her pacifist mindset, she decided to simply ignore it. Moving into a slow run, Kinue quickly picked up speed and was soon hopping from roof to roof across the Slums. She wasn't worried about being seen. By the time a civilian noticed her and informed the authorities, Kinue would have already been long gone from the area. As she was about to jump upwards and into the One-Star Resident District, she felt a concentration of Life Fibers, Two-Stars by the density of it, rapidly approaching her position.

"Great."

Coming to an abrupt stop at the edge of the Slums, Kinue turned around and decided to face her pursuer. The kid following her couldn't have been more than sixteen years ago and yet he wore an expression of arrogance one could only obtain after being given an extraordinary amount of power and yet did not possess the will or self-control necessary to use said power.

"Who are you?" Kinue asked while ignoring the other question coming from her companion.

"That's a strange thing to ask!" The student said arrogantly while smacking his spiked baton into an open palm, "You may call me Junsu. I am the Club Captain of the Lower Honnou City Intruder Counteraction Squad!"

Kinue listened to the kid brag about his power and tried to clear her head, but found the boy's arrogant attitude mixed with Danketsu's urging her to fight him highly irritating. Pressing the clip on the strap holding the case against her back, Kinue stepped forward and adjusted a glove as the case hit the roof with a loud crash.

"There's something important you should know about me, and that is I don't have the time or the patience to hear you brag about stuff that doesn't matter," Kinue couldn't help but have a trace of irritation lace her words. It was appearing that even the short amount of time she had been in Honnou City was enough to start getting Danketsu riled up. Already she could feel it testing her mental barriers and defenses for any signs of weakness that it could easily and lethally exploit. Clamping down on the intrusive presence quickly enough to cause it to recoil in pain, Kinue reached in one of her pockets, "You don't need to worry, though. I'll end this quickly."

"And what makes you think you have a shot at beating me?" Junsu scoffed and began laughing at what he assumed to be his opponent's bluff. As his Life Fiber baton grew several more spikes and tripled in size, he asked, "Any just how are you going to end it quickly?"

"Like this."

Her arms shot out faster than Junsu could see and his eyes widened when he saw two sewing needles embedded nearly an inch into his baton. Beginning to show a bit of nervousness, he grinned, "Was that supposed to do anything?"

Kinue turned and began walking to pick up her case, "Wait for it."

Junsu only caught it at the very last second, but attached to the ends of the needles were nearly invisible steel wires that began wrapping around his body. As he struggled to free himself, he caught notice of the two pincushion grenades on the other ends of the wire.

Kinue didn't bother to watch as her opponent was caught in the explosion. She could feel the Life Fibers that made up his Goku Uniform being dissipated into the air around her. While her attack was more than enough to destroy the clothing, it was hardly enough to actually kill the Life Fibers. It wasn't like she had a Scissor Blade of her own. If she did, then things maybe would have turned out differently.

"No use dwelling on the past," Kinue looked up at the large and imposing wall meant to separate the Slums from where the One-Stars lived with boredom. Noticing a cable car slowly ascending from somewhere deeper in the Slums, Kinue took a few steps back before taking a running start and leaping nearly two hundred feet to land softly on cable car's roof. Once she made sure she wasn't detected, Kinue sat down and closed her eyes.

"I'm almost there," Kinue muttered, ignoring the rippling around her shoulders from underneath her jacket, "Be quiet, Danketsu."

Kinue hoped her mission to Honnou City was successful. One of the more annoying side effects of being in the presence of so many Life Fibers was that Danketsu tended to get a bit... chatty, and attempting to hold a conversation with something that ordered her to fight anything with Life Fibers was nearly impossible. Staring upwards as Honnouji Academy came into view, Kinue's eyes narrowed as she felt a large burst of energy explode out of the school. Something big was going on and she had a feeling she would find out soon enough.

---

...

---

Contrary to what Ryuko assumed, Ichigo was not, in fact, sleeping in. Ever since the Winter War ended and he lost his shinigami powers, Ichigo had found it incredibly difficult to sleep in. Chalking it down as an effect of the fighting, Ichigo decided that if he wasn't going to be able to sleep, he would be more productive. That was why he was jogging around Honnou City at eight in the morning. Mugetsu had wanted to come with him, and by come with him Ichigo meant be worn by him, but once Ichigo told his Kamui what he was going to be doing, Mugetsu had quickly backpedaled and decided that sleeping in was a better alternative than getting sweat stains all over her Life Fibers.

Reaching the five mile mark, Ichigo braced a hand against a nearby wall. Only five miles and he was already exhausted. He must be more out of shape than he thought. When he still had his shinigami powers, he could jog ten miles before resting. He needed to get his endurance back up to par if he wanted to survive and win the upcoming battles he would surely face.

Mugetsu may have said that wearing her increases his natural abilities to beyond what a human could ever achieve, but Ichigo was of a different mind. He was not satisfied with simply being given power on a silver platter. If Mugetsu amplified his natural abilities, then increasing his own strength would make him that much stronger while wearing Mugetsu.

"Damn," Ichigo muttered and raised a hand to his forehead. With the sun rising over Honnouji Academy above, the air was beginning to heat up. He should start heading back to his dorm and take a shower.

Turning around and taking a few more deep breathes, Ichigo began the long jog back. After more than a mile of uneventful silence, he eventually came across a sight that stopped him in his tracks. With a flabbergasted and confused expression on his face, he watched as Mako and Shinjiro rode towards him on a tandem bicycle. Rubbing his eyes and shaking his head, Ichigo tried to convince himself that what he was seeing just wasn't possible. He wasn't seeing Mako and Shinjiro on a bright pink tandem bike and he certainly wasn't seeing both of them wearing matching bright purple and white uniforms.

"Good morning, Ichigo!" Mako shouted excitedly, dashing all hopes that he was simply hallucinating. Coming to a stop next to him, Mako waved happily, "What are you doing so far out here?"

"Running," Ichigo answered tiredly. Raising his arms and folding his hands on top of his head, he asked, "Where did you get the bike?"

"It's Shinjiro's!" Mako answered matter-of-factly.

"Wait," Ichigo tried to grasp what he just heard, "Why the hell does Shinjiro have a pink bike? It seems... kind of girly."

"For so long have I owned this tandem bicycle," Shinjiro pumped his fist as his single uninjured eye shone with a determined light, "Even though I had no one to ride it with, I could not just throw it away! You see, it was a gift from my mother and giving this bike away would be tantamount to breaking her poor heart. It was as if my dream came true when Mako offered to ride with me. I was so excited that I went out and bought us matching outfits in celebration!"

"I can see that," Ichigo deadpanned and tried his best to not look at his two friends wearing what Mugetsu would probably call a crime against clothing.

"Oh! That reminds me," Mako's eyes widened as she appeared to remember something vital and important, "Ururu was looking for you."

"She was?" Ichigo didn't know what Ururu may have wanted with him. Sure she was somewhat overprotective of him, but with a psychotic girl like Nui Harime somewhere out there doing who knows what, it was better to have someone like Ururu on his side, "What did she want?"

Mako pouted as she strained herself to remember what it was exactly that Ururu said, "She said that your dad called!"

"My old man?" Ichigo hadn't spoken to his dad since the night Mugetsu woke up. He couldn't think of anything that could have caused Isshin to call him, "What did he want?"

"Apparently he wanted Ururu to tell you that he will be coming to Parent Student Day in a couple of weeks," Mako announced proudly.

Ichigo would have collapsed to his knees had he the strength to get back up. He had been sure to not tell his old man about the upcoming Parent Student Day. How the hell had he managed to find out so quickly? It couldn't have been Ururu. As strong and powerful as she was, Ururu was simply not adjusted well enough socially to go around his back like this. There had to be someone else that knew his old man well enough to tell him about Parent Student Day and not draw suspicion. The only question was who it could be.

"Thanks for the heads up," Ichigo muttered dejectedly. His day was shot now. Instead of relaxing and having an enjoyable day, he would have to consider what he could do to limit the amount of social embarrassment his dad could inflict. When it came down to it, Isshin Kurosaki was a master of both pissing him off and making him the laughingstock of all his friends, "I just need to go back and figure out what to do. Damn. I would so rather fight Nui Harime right now than deal with this bullshit."

"What's a Nui? Is it something you wear?" Mako asked innocently.

"Just the lesser of two insane evils," Ichigo answered bluntly, "It's been great talking to you Mako, but I've got to get back to Honnouji before my dad decides to just pop on in."

"Ok then! See you around, Ichigo!" Mako waved.

"Likewise, Ichigo!" Shinjiro added proudly, "I've taken your words to heart and decided to go about my goal of taking down Satsuki Kiryuin much more subtly and safely! When Mako and I return from our excursion, I would like to talk with you about our future plans!"

"You do that," Ichigo muttered at the two retreating figures. Turning back around, he began the long jog back to Honnouji Academy.

"What the hell is wrong with this place? I hope Ryuko is having a better morning than me."

---

...

---

"Three-Star Goku Uniform: Blade Regalia Mark II!"

In response to Sanageyama transforming into his Blade Regalia, Ryuko drew her Scissor Blade out of the pouch on her hip and mentally commanded it to expand to its normal size. She could tell this Goku Uniform was different than the first one she fought. It looked more streamlined and the colors were a shade or two lighter, but the most obvious change was the missing shinai containers on his back.

"Something feels different about him, Ryuko," Senketsu let out a hum of annoyance, "I can't explain it, but I'm getting a completely different vibe than your first fight. Don't get cocky."

"Yeah, I know," Ryuko could feel a change in Sanageyama's aura. While during their first fight he gave off an aura of cockiness and wildness, now all Ryuko could feel from Sanageyama was an overwhelming coldness. It was nearly enough to cause her to freeze up in fear. Steadying her nerves for the fight ahead, she slid her right foot back and reached for her red glove, "Let's not waste time, then."

"Life Fiber Synchronize: Kamui Senketsu!"

Ryuko was surrounded by a familiar burst of power before she decided to quickly add, "Senketsu Senkou!"

As armored heeled boots raced across the arena, Ryuko transformed her Scissor Blade into its Decapitation Mode, the black and red jagged lines glowing softly as she coursed her power through it. Smirking when she saw Sanageyama hadn't noticed her yet, Ryuko leapt into the air and twisted her upper body sideways before releasing an invisible slash towards her opponent. So expectant was she of getting a hit that when Sanageyama shifted his massive body to the side and allowed the attack to sail harmlessly past him that she actually gasped in surprise.

"How did he dodge Senkou?"

Ryuko shook her head and growled. It must have been pure luck. Sanageyama must have figured out the trick to her Senkou and thought of a way to avoid the attacks. Racing towards Sanageyama on foot, she slid across the ground and tried to sever one of his hands only for him to step out of the way and nearly crush her body with a counterattack.

"Damn it," Ryuko shook her head to dislodge the debris that had gotten stuck in her hair. There was no way that Sanageyama could have gotten this fast so quickly. Yesterday he couldn't even see her Senkou attacks and now he was avoiding them like it was nothing. Growling, she turned to attack again only to find Sanageyama literally inches away from her face. Eyes widening in shock, she brought her Scissor Blade up just in time to block the massive shinai from crushing her stomach. Skidding backwards along the platform, Ryuko took a few ragged breaths and wondered, "What the hell is going on here? How is he managing to see my Senkou attacks?"

" Look at his eyes Ryuko."

Gazing into Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, Ryuko was shocked when she saw Sanageyama's eyes sewn shut, "What happened to his eyes?"

"Are you confused, Matoi?" Satsuki Kiryuin shouted down from her perch. With a backdrop of light illuminating her already overbearing persona, she shouted, "You are facing the resolve of a man who has learned the errors of his way and sacrificed everything to fix them! Know that as you collapse in defeat, Matoi!"

"Damn you, Satsuki Kiryuin." Ryuko cursed and prepared herself for the second round of battle, "Counting me out already?"

"Your reflexes are as sharp as ever, Matoi," Sanageyama's unusually cold voice echoed from within the confines of his Blade Regalia, "But the warm up is over. Get ready. Here I come."

It happened nearly too fast for Ryuko to follow. One moment Sanageyama was standing on the other side of the platform and the next he was nearly upon her with his shinai swinging through the air towards.

"MEN!" With a clashing of blade on shinai, Ryuko managed to block the strike to her head. As she was pushed back, she heard the ground cracking beneath her feet. Sanageyama's strength was absolutely insane! Not only did his speed increase, but his strength had to be at least twice what it was yesterday. What the hell did he do to himself?

"DOU!" Ryuko spun her Scissor Blade around her wrist and braced her left arm against the blade as the shinai crashed against her ribs. Gritting her teeth from the force of the blow, the gears in Ryuko's mind were spinning rapidly in order to come up with a plan.

"KOTE!"

Ryuko was thankful that she had decided to go all out from the beginning with Senketsu Senkou. It was only due to the enhanced reflexes and speed afforded to her by the transformation that she was able to counter and block all of Sanageyama's strikes. As Sanageyama's shinai aimed for her wrist, Ryuko took the half second gap between attacks to lean backwards and allow the attack to pass harmlessly less than an inch from her body. Planting her palm on the ground, Ryuko flipped through the air and landed on top of one of the multitude of spikes dotting the arena.

"Damn, he's strong," Ryuko said between breaths. It was becoming clear that fighting these Elite Four jerks was no laughing matter. How on Earth did Ichigo defeat Jakuzure in a Mark II of her own when she was having so much trouble with Sanageyama? Was it that he simply fought an easier opponent or did he know some secret to fighting that? Biting her lower lip in irritation, Ryuko huffed and shouted, "How the hell are you fighting like this without your eyes?"

Sanageyama was silent before he asked, "Your irritated and annoyed, aren't you, Matoi?"

"Say what?" Ryuko had no idea where that had come from, but she had no time to think about it. Vaulting to the side, she barely avoided being hit by Sanageyama's shinai as his Blade Regalia crashed through the spike she had been perched upon. Twisting around in midair, she launched another Senkou attack but bit back a curse as Sanageyama jumped over it and landed back on the ground.

"I can hear your breathing as loudly as if you were standing right next to me," Sanageyama continued calmly as he jumped into the air to attack her once more. Cursing profusely, Ryuko spun around and blocked his attack, only to fall victim as Sanageyama feinted and slammed his free hand into her back and propelling her to the ground. As she landed painfully on the ground, Ryuko noticed a shadow falling towards her and quickly rolled to the side to avoid the incoming shinai.

"The smell of your sweat," Sanageyama rushed forward and clashed against Ryuko's Scissor Blade. As sparks shot off the two weapons, Sanageyama's massive size and strength actually began pushing Ryuko backwards, "And your deodorant, I can sense all of it with ease. I can see your thoughts as clearly as if you told me them yourself! I can see the world with far more clarity than I ever could with my eyes, Matoi! It is thanks to Ichigo that I have been gifted with this incredible ability!"

"Ichigo?" Ryuko spat out from between clenched teeth as she tried pushing back against Sanageyama's overwhelming strength. As she felt herself bending backwards, she roared in anger and managed to parry Sanageyama's shinai to the side. Jumping backwards to put some distance between her and her opponent, Ryuko spat on the ground and waved her Scissor Blade at Sanageyama, "What the hell does Ichigo have to do with our fight?"

"It was thanks to Ichigo's words that I came to the realization that I was too reliant on my eyes," Sanageyama answered proudly, "Now with my eyes closed, the rest of the world is open to me! Behold my released power: Shingantsu!"

" Sanageyama sealed his eyes in order to boost his affinity with his Blade Regalia," Satsuki stared stoically down at the battle. She was honestly surprised that Matoi had managed to avoid being hit by Sanageyama so far. She wouldn't go so far as to say it was due to some inherent skill or power that Matoi possessed. Satsuki could see that the only reason Matoi was still on her feet, slightly exhausted by injured, was because she was able to configure Senketsu into a more speed-oriented form.

" Senketsu Senkou," Satsuki mused at the name of the Kamui's configuration, "It is no wonder that Sanageyama lost even with the use of his Tengantsu. If he hadn't been so focused on seeing attacks, he would have noticed the subtle sound of the air vibrating or the slight smell of ozone in the atmosphere. Senkou uses Matoi's bioelectrical energy to extend the reach of her Scissor Blade by a considerable distance. Even if Sanageyama could see Matoi's movements, there was no way he could have anticipated the invisible blade as well."

Now that Sanageyama's eyes were closed off from the world and he possessed Shingantsu, the invisible blades of Senkou were as clear as day to him.

"Men! Dou! Kote! Men! Dou! Kote!"

Ryuko was pushing Senketsu to the limit as she countered each and every one of Sanageyama's called attacks. It was scaring her that even when he called out his attacks, she barely had enough time to actually block them. The simply thought of fighting him without Senkou would have caused her to break out in a nervous sweat if she was not already fighting for her life.

"Your speed is superb, Matoi!" Sanageyama complimented as he continued to attack Ryuko, "But with my Shingantsu, there is nothing you can do to win!"

"Says you!" Ryuko argued back. As she heard Sanageyama shout 'Men!' she prepared to block the strike to her head only to feel an intense pain in her wrists instead. Gasping in pain, she was caught off guard as Sanageyama took advantage of her confusion to attack her relentlessly. With her grip slackened, it was easy for Sanageyama to knock Ryuko's Scissor Blade out of her hands and across the arena.

"What are you going to do, Matoi?" He asked sarcastically as he continued attacking her, "Without your weapon, there is no way for you to turn the tables and win this time.

Ryuko grinned despite the situation, "So you think."

Dodging around one of Sanageyama's attacks, Ryuko held her arm out and flicked her wrist. Instantly a wire connected from her hand to the handle of her Scissor Blade shone in the air. Ever since Ururu so easily disarmed her of the Scissor blade during their spar, Ryuko had been thinking of how she could prevent something like that happening again. After bouncing a few ideas off Senketsu, she came up with the idea of carefully removing one of his Life Fibers, with his permission of course, and attaching the two ends to her wrist and Scissor Blade.

Swinging her arm back across her body, Ryuko smirked as she heard the whistling sound of her Scissor blade spinning through the air growing louder. Holding her arm up above her head, she grabbed her weapon as it passed over her and swung downwards just as Sanageyama attacked with his shinai.

"I was wrong about you, Matoi," Sanageyama said as he struggled to overpower Ryuko.

"Oh?" Ryuko grinned despite the situation as she pushed back, "How so?"

"I thought you would be nothing more than a stepping stone to fighting Ichigo," Sanageyama stepped forward, causing Ryuko to take a step back to prevent him from gaining leverage, "But I was wrong. You are indeed a worthy opponent. Come at me with everything you got Matoi!"

"Aren't you chivalrous?" Ryuko wiped a spot of blood off her cheek. When Sanageyama leapt back and away from her, she spat on the ground and turned to Senketsu, "I need you to pour all my remaining power into one final Senkou strike."

" You'll be left wide open if it fails," Senketsu said worriedly, "And there is the distinct probability you will faint from blood loss afterwards."

"Don't sweat it," Ryuko smiled as her body was enveloped in a red aura. Taking a deep breath and placing her left hand on top of her Scissor Blade, Ryuko focused all her energy into her blade, causing the red and black jagged lines to glow more intensely than ever, "Here I come, Sanageyama!"

Racing across the ground, Ryuko shouted as she swung her Scissor Blade down into the ground. Sanageyama, sensing the attack coming with his Shingantsu, attempted to dodge it only to be shocked when it suddenly expanded in front of his Blade Regalia, enveloping him in the blast of invisible energy and causing the arena to explode around them.

" Oh?" Satsuki raised an eyebrow at Matoi's attack. It was quite ingenious, something she hadn't come to expect from her, to cause the Senkou to expand after swinging her Scissor Blade, "Shingantsu may be able to see the world in its entirety, but even it cannot predict the unpredictable. Matoi purposely did not focus the energy through her Scissor Blade so that when she swung, she herself would not know how the energy would move or flow. And if she didn't know, than there was no possible way for Sanageyama's Shingantsu to predict it either."

As the smoke from the attack cleared, Sanageyama stumbled forward on barely functional legs. When he had managed to survive the attack with his Goku Uniform intact, large chunks of his armor were missing and several deep gashes were visible along his arms and chest. Reaching up and tearing off his half-destroyed helmet, he took in a deep and ragged breath and grinned.

"Ha... ha..." Sanageyama took one step forward and nearly fell to his knees. Planting his shinai in the ground to keep himself standing up, he chuckled at the irony of the situation, "Ha... ha... Damn it. How was I supposed to predict such an unpredictable attack, Matoi?"

Making my Shingantsu completely useless... you are just full of surprises, aren't you?"

His compliment would go unheard by Ryuko. After putting everything she had left into that Senkou strike, she had collapsed onto the ground, Senketsu already transforming back into his normal form as a school uniform. Seeing Ryuko unable to fight back, Sanageyama stumbled forward and raised his shinai over her head.

"Goodbye Matoi."

As he stabbed downwards, Sanageyama's enhanced hearing picked up the sound of five sharp objects whistling through the air towards his head. Quickly turning around, he raised his shinai and maneuvered it around to block all five projectiles.

"Sewing needles?" The weaponry used against him reminded Sanageyama of the Nudist Beach operative, but it was impossible for him to get back into Honnouji Academy after his first intrusion. Expanding his senses to their newfound limits, Sanageyama was surprised to find that he couldn't sense anyone. Whoever it was that was firing at him was standing outside the considerable range of his Shingantsu.

"Come out and fight me, you coward!"

"I am not a coward," A stern, yet soft-spoken, voice chastised calmly from behind him, "Merely pragmatic."

Sanageyama froze up as the realization that this woman standing so nonchalantly behind him had snuck through his Shingantsu. He didn't know who she was or how she was capable of doing it, but Sanageyama wasn't going to let that stop him. Spinning around, he attempted to hit the intruder with his shinai only to be startled when her presence vanished before it quickly reappeared next to Ryuko's prone body.

"I noticed that you severed your eyesight in order to vastly improve your other senses to superhuman levels," Kinue Kinagase complimented as she checked Ryuko's body for injuries, "While quite an innovative move and one that obviously was too much for Ryuko here, it is useless against someone such as myself, whose speed is faster than even your improved senses can follow."

Kinue fingers twitched as her hand brushed against Ryuko's Kamui. It appeared that Danketsu could detect the Kamui even though Senketsu was currently inactive. Turning towards the still stunned Sanageyama, Kinue noticed Satsuki Kiryuin glaring down at her with all the authority and majesty the eighteen year old girl could muster. It was almost cute to see Satsuki try to cow her into submission. The backdrop of light was a nice touch, nearly as intense as her mother's, but it was not nearly enough to cause Kinue to feel anything.

"I apologize for the intrusion," Kinue ignored Danketsu's growl as she placed Ryuko's unconscious body over her shoulder. If Danketsu was going to argue with her over every little thing she did, then she would just ignore everything it said. It had worked well for her over the last ten years after all, "I would rather not overstay my welcome, so I'll be taking my leave now."

"You are bold to step into my domain so willingly!" Satsuki jumped down, fully clad in Junketsu, and landed in between Kinue and the exit of Honnouji Academy. Holding Bakuzan vertically to the ground with both hands, she locked gazes with the older woman, "But you will not be leaving!"

Satsuki stared at the older woman. Her analytical mind could piece together a familial resemblance with that Nudist Beach operative who attacked Mato, but there were subtle differences that surprised her. The black hair with red highlights gave Satsuki enough to conclude Kinue was related to Tsumugu, but Kinue felt much more powerful than the other man. That, combined with the ease at which Kinue bypassed Sanageyama's Shingantsu, meant she could not afford to assume Kinue would be a simple opponent to face.

"I assume by your appearance that you are related to the man who intruded upon my academy the other day," Satsuki stated, hoping to get some sort of reaction from Kinue. She was disappointed when Kinue's mouth curled up in a slight smile.

"What makes you say that?" Kinue countered calmly, "By that line of reasoning, I could assume you weren't related to Ragyo Kiryuin simply from the color of your hair."

"I see you will not willingly divulge your allegiances," Satsuki scowled at Kinue's lack of respect, "Therefore I will take the information from you by force!"

Satsuki sprung across the arena at Kinue at a speed that caused the other woman to silently praise her. It was not every day that she came across an adversary that actually forced her to actively focus on the fight. As Danketsu tightened around her body, its voice screaming at her to fight Satsuki and tear Junketsu apart, Kinue gingerly readjusted Ryuko's body over her shoulder, and blocked Satsuki's strike with her open right palm.

Satsuki was nearly speechless at seeing this woman block her Bakuzan, the blade with the power to sever Life Fibers, with an open palm. As the energy sparked off her blade, shredding Kinue's glove and part of her sleeve, Satsuki's eyes widened at what she saw underneath.

"That's - "

"Damn," Kinue vanished in a burst of speed and reappeared several dozen meters away. Looking at her exposed arm, the blue and purple armor-like clothing fitted to her skin, she realized that her secret was exposed, and possibly to the worst person here. She knew that someone would find out about Danketsu, but she expected it to be on her own terms. Turning to a still surprised Satsuki, she said "I didn't expect your power to be so great, but you will not be able to stop me from leaving."

"No, I won't," Satsuki closed her eyes and sheathed Bakuzan, "It was clear from my last attack that your power is great enough to make my chance of victory slim. Take Matoi, but tell her to consider herself lucky. One day she will get into a fight where there won't be someone to rescue her from death."

Kinue didn't say anything as she headed towards the entrance to Honnouji Academy. As soon as she passed through the threshold, she leapt into the air and disappeared into the city below.

"Forgive me, Lady Satsuki." In a burst of light and stars, Sanageyama deactivated his Blade Regalia and hung his head in shame, "I was unable to finish off Matoi. I have failed you."

"On the contrary, you have succeeded, Sanageyama," Satsuki took one last look in the direction Kinue fled in before turning and walking past Sanageyama. Stopping right behind him, she tilted her head to the side and added, "Matoi put everything she had into the fight and still lost. If not for the interference of that woman, you would have finished Matoi off. Consider yourself reinstated in the Elite Four."

"Yes. Thank you, Lady Satsuki," Sanageyama stared at the ground and tightened his grip on the wooden shinai in his hand. It was infuriating that Matoi was able to almost defeat him even with Shingantsu. That last attack would have definitely defeated him if he had been one second slower in dodging or it had been even a little bit faster. The next time they fought, Sanageyama vowed to win without interruptions.

Walking away from the arena, Satsuki's mind was a torrent of thoughts and half-concluded ideas. She had no idea who that woman was or how she managed to infiltrate Honnouji Academy. Inumuta had improved security around the academy after the Nudist Beach incident, and yet that woman not only snuck in, but managed to make a fool out of Sanageyama's upgraded Blade Regalia.

" At the moment she blocked my Bakuzan I saw something," Satsuki narrowed her eyes as she felt Junketsu's ire rising at her mention of the woman. It must be highly insulting to her Kamui to see a normal human stop its attack so easily. That was perhaps the only sentiment that Satsuki shared with Junketsu, "It was only for a moment, and she attempted to hide it, but her lower arm was definitely covered by a Kamui."

---

...

---

Ichigo stared at the woman so casually sitting on his couch with an annoyed expression on his face. Usually he would have shouted at her and demanded to know why she broke into his room, but the sheer amount of calmness radiating off her put him on edge. So instead of doing something that might come back to bite him in the ass later on, he settled for sitting down in a chair and folding his arms.

"So, are you going to tell me who you are?"

"In time," the woman answered mysteriously, "But should you be so concerned with my name when Ryuko Matoi is gravely injured?"

"What did you do?" Ichigo asked with a threatening tone, "If you so much as - "

"Calm yourself, Ichigo." The woman seemed completely unperturbed by Ichigo's outburst, "I am not the one who injured your friend. On the contrary, I am the one that saved her life."

Upon seeing that Ichigo was confused by her explanation, she continued, "While you were gone this morning, Ryuko Matoi was challenged to a rematch by Uzu Sanageyama. She went into the fight cocky and unprepared for her opponent, who managed to learn an entirely new skill in less than a day. As such, she found herself outmatched in both speed and strength. It was a miracle she even managed to injure Sanageyama at all."

"I see..." Ichigo cursed himself for being gone the entire morning. While thoughts raced through his mind revolving around what he could have done had he decided to stay at Honnouji Academy, he quickly squashed them. It wouldn't be healthy to wonder and worry about things that already happened. There was nothing he could do to change it, so worrying about it would be a pointless endeavor, "So who are you?"

Kinue chuckled mirthlessly at the joke that only made sense to her. It seemed that Ichigo inherited his sense of directness from Masaki. Crossing her legs and leaning back, she said, "I suppose you deserve the right to know who I am. I am Kinue Kinagase, and I believe you have already met my brother."

"Brother?" Ichigo wracked his brain for what Kinue could be talking about. He certainly didn't remember meeting anyone like that. Wait a minute. Ichigo looked at Kinue's black hair with red dyed tips, "Wait. You're related to that mohawk bastard?"

"I don't think I've ever heard someone call Tsumugu that," Kinue quipped, a rare sign of amusement gracing her face, "But yes. Tsumugu is my younger brother by three years."

Ichigo's expression hardened at Kinue's confession, "Are you here to destroy Senketsu?"

"No," Kinue shook her head, "As a matter of fact, I'm here to - "

Ichigo!"

Kinue was cut off midsentence as Mugetsu, finally waking up from her nap and noticing he was back, transformed into her mobile force and launched herself from the bedroom. Wrapping her sleeves around Ichigo's body, she began squeezing harder than was comfortable.

"Hey!" Ichigo struggled to pry himself free from Mugetsu's insane grip, but only managed to get himself tangled up even further. How something that was essentially clothing to be so strong boggled him. As he pulled with all his might, only managing to free his right arm in the process, he fell out of the chair and hit the ground hard, "What the hell's wrong with you, Mugetsu?"

" You wore clothing other than me," Mugetsu answered in between teary sobs. Ichigo's didn't understand how a Kamui could cry, but apparently Mugetsu figured it out, "You cannot begin to comprehend the sense of betrayal I feel from the heinous act you committed!"

"Sense of betrayal?" Ichigo didn't know what Mugetsu was talking about, "I asked you if you wanted me to wear you while I went running this morning. You said no!"

" Yes," Mugetsu stared at Ichigo accusingly, "But I thought you were going to run naked, not parading around in another set of clothing. How could you, Ichigo?"

"Why the hell would I run around Honnou City naked?" Ichigo shouted back, causing Mugetsu to growl and press herself angrily against his face.

" Why wouldn't you?" she countered just as loudly, "I thought our relationship was special, but I see that I'm just another outfit for you to wear!"

Ichigo's mind was beginning to collapse under the sheer nonsense of Mugetsu's argument, "I have no idea what you are talking about! If you didn't want me to wear other clothing, why didn't you just say so?"

" I don't need to explain myself to you," Mugetsu huffed and folded her sleeves. Turning partially away from Ichigo, she looked at him with a single eye and stated, "I'm waiting for an apology."

"Like hell I'm apologizing to you," Ichigo grumbled and tried to turn his back on Mugetsu. As he refused to meet the gaze of his Kamui, he could literally feel Mugetsu staring daggers at his back. After almost a minute of putting up with it, he groaned, "Fine! I'm sorry. I won't wear any other clothes besides you without asking for your permission first. Are you happy now?"

" Yes," Mugetsu said and launched herself at Ichigo. A minute later, Ichigo, fully clad in a smug looking Mugetsu, was sitting across from Kinue thoroughly embarrassed by what just happened.

"My, my," Kinue looked bemused by what she just saw, "I must say, I didn't expect your Mugetsu to be so... clingy. Are you sure you don't forget to put in a fabric softener when you clean her?"

" Clingy she says..."

Ichigo glared at Mugetsu, "Tell me about it... hey, wait a second. You could hear her?"

"I'm not the only one," Kinue scoffed and closed her eyes while she began reaching for her glove, "If I am to believe the rumors, then Ryuko Matoi can also hear Mugetsu's voice. But hearing it myself... it is quite the relief."

Ichigo didn't know where Kinue was going with this, "What are you talking about?"

A small smirk graced Kinue's face as she pulled off her glove and rolled up her sleeve, "Perhaps it would be better if you were to see it for yourself. Actions speak louder than words after all."

There was almost a phantasmal burst of blue light as Ichigo saw what Kinue was hiding. Her hand and the part of her arm he could see were both covered in familiar blue and purple armor. After allowing the shock to sink in, he asked, "You're wearing a Kamui?"

"I'm bound to it, in a manner of speaking," Kinue ignored the frown that appeared on Ichigo's face upon her comment. Leaning back and sighing, she held her hand up to the light and clenched it into a fist,

"This is Danketsu, the very first Kamui created by Professor Matoi. It was woven from Life Fibers over ten years ago. Consider it the precursor to the Kamui worn by Ryuko."

" Another Kamui..." Mugetsu looked excited at the prospect of a fourth Kamui. While the only other Kamui she had fought was Satsuki's Junketsu, the knowledge that another one of her kind existed filled her threads with happiness. Swiveling her eyes upwards to Ichigo, she asked, "I wonder if Danketsu is stronger than me?"

" Screw you!" The anger in the voice startled Ichigo and Mugetsu while Kinue just sighed tiredly. When they looked at her for an explanation, she decided to come out with it.

"Unlike Mugetsu, Danketsu isn't the most... friendly companion to have." Standing up, Kinue began removing her jacket, "Perhaps you should speak with her yourself."

Ichigo had been expecting to see something as revealing as Junkestu and Senketsu, so when Kinue took off her jacket only a slight blush appeared on his face.

Like Ryuko, the blue and purple armor covering Kinue's body completely encased her arms and upper chest, stopping just above the nape of her neck. However, while Senketsu's transformed state left Ryuko's abdomen and lower breasts completely exposed except for a pair of form-fitting suspenders, Danketsu covered up substantially more of Kinue's body. A dark blue leotard with purple glowing lines covered her stomach, leaving everything else bare. Just before reaching her breasts, the leotard split in two, leaving much of her ample chest naked. Perched on her shoulders were Danketsu's eyes, which seemed to look more fluid and streamlined than Mugetsu's.

" So this is the so-called Kamui Mugetsu," Danketsu's eyes seemed to look wildly at Ichigo before turning back to Kinue, "Why are we just standing here? You said I would get to fight a Kamui. There's one right in front of us. What are you waiting for?"

"I did not say such a thing," Kinue chided as if speaking to a petulant child, "If you would bother to remember, I said that you might get your fight after all. I never promised anything."

Danketsu growled and seemed about to say something, but was beat to the punch when Ichigo asked, "You said you were bound to Danketsu. What did you mean by that?"

"It's a long story that started ten years ago," Kinue began tiredly. Damn, this was harder than she thought it would be. Kinue could already feel Danketsu's emotions bleeding into her. She didn't have much longer until she began to feel as agitated as her Kamui, "I wanted to test fit Danketsu. I believed that clothing and humanity could live together... I was naïve to believe that everyone thought the same way. As soon as I put on Danketsu, she tried to devour me. It was only thanks to an invention from a... friend of Professor Matoi that I survived what should have been my death."

Kinue pointed with a finger to the intricate black tattoo sitting in between her breasts, "While it saved my life, the device had a secondary effect. It forever bound Danketsu and me together. As you can see, she is in her transformed state. Danketsu, unlike your Mugetsu, can never become normal clothing. That is why I must always cover her up."

"I think I understand," Ichigo muttered, even though he really didn't, "But why is Danketsu so different from Mugetsu and Senketsu? None of them are as violent as your Kamui."

" Go to hell human," Danketsu seethed angrily, "I don't need to explain myself to a pig like you!"

" Hmm..." Mugetsu hummed thoughtfully. She did not like how Danketsu gave Kamui like her a bad name. Just because they were comprised of pure Life Fibers, that didn't mean they had to around and devour and kill humans because they felt like that. The gift of sentience was perhaps the greatest thing Mugetsu knew she possessed. Drinking Ichigo's delicious and nutritious blood was a very close second, but Mugetsu considered her sentience to be the best thing in the world.

" I don't like her, Ichigo," Mugetsu said after a moment with an audible huff. Turning her eyes to the side, she added, "Such unrestrained bloodlust... she gives us Kamui a bad name."

" I'll show you bloodlust!" Danketsu shouted back challengingly.

"That's enough out of you," Kinue warned. Standing and grabbing her jacket, she proceeded to put it back on, taking no pleasure in cutting Danketsu off from the world. As she finished zipping it up, she turned to Ichigo, "I don't know if this means anything to you, but I must thank you."

At Ichigo's confused expression, Kinue continued, "For ten years I had thought I was the only one that could hear Danketsu's voice. I was convinced that I had gone insane after the accident and did my best to sequester myself from my friends and family to spare them the pain of seeing me lose my mind. Tsumugu may have broken the news, but after sitting here and talking with you and Mugetsu, a large burden has been lifted from my shoulders. I now understand that Danketsu is a living being with thoughts and feelings of its own, as crazy and delirious as they may be. Perhaps with enough time and understand, I could come to the same sort of understand that you have with Mugetsu and Ryuko has with Senketsu."

" I highly doubt that," Mugetsu said bluntly, "Danketsu is, quite frankly, insane. She is no more than a rabid dog at this point. It would be better for her to be destroyed."

"No," Kinue said sadly as she turned to leave, "Part of Danketsu's condition is my fault. It was soon after the accident that I first heard Danketsu's voice. Back then she was quick to anger and thirsty for blood, that much is true, but she was somewhat more level-headed and calm. I suspect that she became this way after a decade of me, the only person able to hear her voice, ignoring her. I can only hope that my forgiveness and willingness to talk with her will help Danketsu recover some of her sanity."

" Fuck your forgiveness!" Danketsu shouted angrily. Even though she was covered by Kinue's jacket, her blood-crazed voice came through clearly, "I don't care for something as stupid as that! If you really want to apologize, turn around and tear apart that sorry excuse for a Kamui!"

" Bring it on!" Mugetsu scoffed sarcastically, "I'll wipe the floor with you so quickly that your Life Fibers won't know what hit them!"

" Ha!" Despite the crazed tone to her voice, Danketsu sounded confident, "If my wearer wasn't too cowardly to fight you, you would feel just how weak you are compared to her. You are simply being worn by that human, while I and my wearer are of one body! Our power is greater than anything you could ever hope to achieve."

Wincing slightly at her forming headache, Kinue decided to leave before things got out of hand. It was bad enough when Danketsu yelled at her to fight Life Fibers, but Mugetsu's antagonizing isn't making things any easier, "I'm going to head out now. Ryuko Matoi is recovering at the Mankanshoku household. You should stop on by and check up on her. I'm sure she would appreciate it."

"I see," Ichigo paused momentarily before asking, "Where are you going?"

"I'll stick around Honnou City for a while," Kinue shrugged and brought a hand thoughtfully up to her chin, "As much as the amount of Life Fibers within the city will agitate Danketsu, I think it would be best that I stay. If I am to fix any of the damage that I inflicted on it, I need to bite the bullet. I'll see you around, Ichigo. Oh, there is just one piece of advice. As I approached Honnou City, I sensed the Grand Couturier's presence. Stay clear of Nui Harime and anything she says."

"Yeah, I figured that out already," Ichigo's answer must have been a shock to her because Kinue turned in amazement.

"You spoke with the Grand Couturier?"

"Not willingly," Ichigo sighed and let out an annoyed groan, "Both times she's snuck up on me or broke into my room. She seems to have a weird fascination with me."

Kinue's eyes narrowed before she shook her head, "I cannot begin to ponder the machinations that occur within Nui Harime's mind, but she is not someone to be trifled with. Her strength is like a bottomless abyss, only matched by her ability to recover from any damage. If she has an interest in you, you should be cautious, Ichigo. I've encountered the Grand Couturier before, and the one thing I can say for certainty is that to her, love and hate is the same thing. Be vigilant, Ichigo. Nothing good can come from her obsession with you."

As Kinue left his room, leaving Ichigo alone with his thoughts, he sighed and collapsed on the couch. Rubbing the bridge of his nose, feeling a headache forming, he didn't appreciate being dragged into a fight that he had reason to be in.

" Your heart rate is spiking, Ichigo," A still somewhat incensed, but calmed down, Mugetsu stated with worry, "What's wrong?"

"I'm just thinking about what Kinue told us," Ichigo didn't want to admit it, but everything Kinue said about Nui Harime made sense to him. There were just a few things that weren't fitting correctly, "If Nui Harime is obsessed with me, then why have I only met her twice? You would think I would have run into her more often."

" I do not know, Ichigo, but you shouldn't let her words bother you. I'm sure if you were to fight this Nui Harime, you would be sure to win with me at your side!"

"Thanks for the support, Mugetsu," Ichigo sighed again and leaned his head backwards. Why did his life have to be so complicated? At first he thought coming to Honnouji Academy would allow a fresh start away from the reminders of the Winter War and the loss of his shinigami powers. It wasn't long after that he was forcefully dragged into a war against Satsuki Kiryuin, who seemed to have a personal vendetta against him, and finding himself wearing Mugetsu, a literally living school uniform.

Mugetsu must have sensed his state of mind, because her next question was full of sadness at being unable to cheer up her wearer, "What are you going to do about it?"

"Say Kinue is right, and Nui Harime is following me. Sitting around and waiting for her to come to me is stupid." Reinvigorated and determined to push forward, Ichigo stood up and headed to his door, "I'll train and get stronger so that when Nui Harime decides to fight me, I'll be ready for her and if I'm not, I have Ryuko and Ururu to help me out."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #6 - First Rate Shipping

"So let me get this straight, old man," Kon crossed the arms of his plushie body and began pacing back and forth across the desk, "You want to send me to some weird place called Honnou City or whatever just to keep an eye on Ichigo. Is that correct?"

With a grim expression, Isshin Kurosaki nodded in the affirmative. While his head was shaved completely down to the scalp, of his own volition, there still remained traces of rainbow dye in his hair. Isshin mentally cursed Raygo for the torture she put him through. Only she could create a Life Fiber-based dye that would actually prevent other dyes from working. How in the seven layers of hell had she come up with something so insidious?

"Ok, I'll bite," Kon sat down on the edge of the desk and scoffed, "What's the catch?"

"There is no catch," Isshin answered, "Ichigo may be a responsible teenager, but he needs someone there to watch over him and make sure he doesn't do anything stupid. Ururu is nice and all, but she's not the most socially balanced girl. There are some things that will fly straight over her cute head."

"So..." Kon scratched his head, "Is this going to be dangerous? Because if it is, I just remembered I have an important job interview to go to."

"That's a shame," Isshin mockingly sighed and turned to leave, "Because I just so happen to have these pictures of Ichigo and his friends."

Kon grabbed the pictures out of Isshin's hand and would have begun bleeding from the nose if he was capable of doing so. As he stared eagerly at the pictures of Ryuko and Satsuki in their transformed Senketsu and Junketsu, he blinked and rubbed his eyes. There was no way this could be real.

"You're pulling my stuffing, aren't you old man?" Kon asked accusingly, "These are photo-shopped images from the internet, aren't they?"

"Nope, they are real," Isshin knew he had Kon, but just to be on the safe side he added, "And they actually transform into those when they fight."

"Wait!" Kon stood up excitedly, "Are you telling me that there exists a place where hot teenage girls actually and willingly transform into skimpy outfits whenever they fight? Well, pack me up and ship me out, old man! Ichigo needs my help!"

Fire and Rain

Chapter 19 of To My Death I Fight arrives with a few important announcements. As those of you who have been with me since Chapter 1, I started this story between Episodes 17 and 18 of the anime, which means most of the characters and abilities hadn't yet been fleshed out in detail. Some of the important characters include Nui Harime, Isshin Matoi, and Ragyo Kiryuin. To fix this plot hole the size of Honnou City, I have gone back and edited chapters 1 and 2.

Note that this wasn't just a few words here and there, I made several revisions to the chapters. While nothing important has changed, a lot of you might be happy to see that I completely rewrote the Nui Harime vs Kishime Urahara fight in Chapter 2 from scratch. I do think you will appreciate what I did. It's not just completely rewritten, but about ~1000 or so words longer than the original and has a completely different ending that is just as ambiguous as the original ending.

Also note that in the upcoming week I will be revising Chapters 4-7 while at the same time writing Chapter 20 (A new record for me). Sadly, none of the revised chapters will have Kamui Tales. I know, I know. That is a terrible shame, but that just means you'll have to look forward to the next chapter!

*Edit Note: I had an old section in the Satsuki/Ichigo conversation. It's all fixed now.

---

...

---

Chapter 19 - Fire and Rain

Junketsu hated Satsuki Kiryuin with every Life Fiber of its being.

Completely oblivious to her Kamui's hatred, Satsuki Kiryuin stared at the screens with images of Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi going about their daily lives with veiled interest. Tilting her head to another set of screens, each of which highlighted where the various Two-Star students were throughout Honnouji Academy, Satsuki allowed a small and sly smile to grace her features. Everything seemed to be coming together and her declaration against Ryuko Matoi would only help to further her plans. It was simple to predict that the students of Honnouji Academy would allow their greed and avarice to cloud their minds just for a chance to gain a Three-Star Goku Uniform. Whether Ryuko came out on top or not did not matter because in the end Satsuki would be the one and only victor.

"Inumuta," Satsuki's voice caused the blue haired Elite Four to turn his attention away from his work, "Has Jakuzure submitted her daily report?"

If Junketsu could have done something, anything, to show Satsuki its undying hatred of her it would have done so long ago. It was blasphemous to think she would dare associate herself with Lady Ragyo while plotting behind her mother's back. Satsuki's will and determination might be strong enough to hold back its will, but Junketsu was patient. The moment an opportunity presented itself Junketsu was going to devour Satsuki's mind and body. That was not to mention that Satsuki's blood tasted horrible. Junketsu wanted to spit it out but as much as it hated Satsuki it hated being locked up and asleep even more. More than sixteen years of nothing but darkness had caused the Kamui to develop of fear of sleeping.

"It came in around half an hour ago," Inumuta answered calmly as he typed several commands on his keyboard and brought up the report in front of Satsuki, "It seems Jakuzure's mission to discover the secret of Ichigo Kurosaki's Kamui is proceeding at the hypothesized rate... despite her blunt and direct personality interfering with her attempts to fit in."

"Good," Satsuki leaned back in her chair and Junketsu suppressed the urge to growl at her. As much as it wanted to rant and curse at her, the failure of a Kiryuin couldn't even hear it, "I've looked over her initial reports. It appears Jakuzure is throwing suspicion off herself by offering Matoi and Ichigo assistance in taking me down out of petty revenge. It is pleasing to see Jakuzure embracing her role in my plan so thoroughly. Has she discovered why Junketsu is unable to access advanced configurations like Mugetsu and Senketsu?"

Inumuta adjusted his glasses before sighing, "Unfortunately she has not. However, I have a theory. Kamui are composed of one hundred percent Life Fibers, which makes it incredibly lethal for most people to try and wear them. We also know that Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi are somehow able to hear a voice that they refer to as their Kamui even though our surveillance cameras do not pick up any acoustic vibrations. My theory is if Kamui are sentient and able to speak with their wearers than Ichigo or Ryuko could be simply issuing mental commands to their Kamui."

"I see..." Satsuki frowned before she closed her eyes and pondered the situation. Inumuta's theory was sound but it was something that had already passed through her mind. There was no doubt that Junketsu was sentient to the same degree as Mugetsu and Senketsu but the question plaguing her mind was why she could not communicate with it. As a Kiryuin her mind was strong enough to ward off Junketsu's attempts to devour her. Obtaining advanced configurations should have come to her before either of them. What was the key piece of information she was missing?

Junketsu felt Satsuki's blood pressure and heart rate shift and concluded that she was deep in thought about something that was not only important but also bothering her. From the conversation it just overheard it was easily to see Satsuki and that other stupid human were discussing the reasons Junketsu couldn't access its advanced configurations. They could theorize and think all they want but they were never going to realize the true answer - Satsuki was simply unworthy of wielding the true extent of Junketsu's magnificent power.

Satsuki's will and determination might be strong enough to force Junketsu to activate its basic transformation but the Kamui still had the last laugh. It managed to hold back nearly half of its full power from Satsuki. Why should it allow a human to wield its incredible power? Such a notion was absurd. The only ones that should be gifted with the opportunity to wear it were those capable of communing with Life Fibers. Thinking back on its fights against Senketsu and Mugetsu, Junketsu felt a stab of jealousy course through its fibers.

Why couldn't it have been discovered by one of them? Both of them were more than capable of wielding the full power of a Kamui without risking their lives. Junketsu remembered Lady Ragyo telling it that her daughter would wear it one day but looking at Satsuki Junketsu felt nothing but derision. Satsuki was a failure of a daughter to Lady Ragyo and the Kamui would rather be torn apart than willingly grant her its power. Mentally sighing in sadness, Junketsu lamented that it was not worn by something worthy - like Ryuko Matoi. Ryuko seemed liked like the perfect human to wear it and if Junketsu had to mentally adjust Ryuko then so be it.

Junketsu also felt a strange connection to Ichigo and Mugetsu but it would never allow him to wear it. It was not out of hatred or spite but simply because Junketsu's true form was created for the female body and Ichigo was most certainly not a woman. It would be incredibly awkward not only for Ichigo, but for Junketsu as well, if he wore it. Narrowing its eyes in frustration, Junketsu allowed itself to fall into a light slumber and dreamt of what its true wearer might look like.

---

...

---

"This sure does look good, Mako," Ryuko looked at her bento box as her stomach rumbled. She couldn't comprehend how Sukuyo Mankanshoku could make such delicious, and hopefully nutritious, meals on such a low budget. Ryuko didn't care since she loved Sukuyo's cooking more than anything, "Let's eat!"

As she began digging into the croquettes, Ryuko noticed that Ichigo, who was sitting to her left, hadn't started eating. As a matter of fact, Ichigo was holding his chopsticks limply in his fingers and was staring at his bento box with a look switching back and forth between horror and terror. Swallowing the lump of mystery croquette and smacking her chest a few times to help it go down, Ryuko asked, "What's the matter, Ichigo?"

Ichigo shook his head and put down his chopsticks, "I can't eat this."

Ryuko tilted her head slightly in confusion, "Huh?"

"Eh..." Ichigo grumbled as he tried to come up with something plausible that Ryuko and Mako would believe. He couldn't say that he was afraid his lunch was going to kill him. When he was handed his bento box by Mako's mother earlier in the day, Ichigo could have sworn he saw one of the croquettes actually moving around. What made the scene even more disturbing was how Sukuyo, without batting an eye, reached for a knife and stabbed the bento box. Ichigo didn't know whether he was more terrified of Sukuyo or his food, but to be honest he would rather not piss off either one.

"I don't like croquettes that much," Ichigo managed to say with a straight face. Truth be told, he liked actual croquettes a lot, but he refused to eat anything that he couldn't see being made. What happened in the Mankanshoku kitchen was off limits to anyone but Sukuyo and Ichigo didn't intend to push his luck on the matter.

"Mmph!" Mako tried to speak, but with her mouth full of food, all that came out was spittle and clumps of food that Ryuko expertly dodged. After chewing and swallowing, Mako took a deep breath and repeated, "If you don't want it, I'll have your lunch Ichigo!"

"I was going to give it to Ururu. She has a sweet tooth for Mako's croquettes after all." Without even turning around, Ichigo held up his bento box and dropped it into Ururu's waiting hands. Due to how Ururu always managed to pop up when he least expected it, Ichigo had grown used to her apparent off screen teleportation. Evne Ryuko, who still got startled whenever Shinjiro appeared out of nowhere, had become mostly blasé to how Ururu moved around.

"Thanks Ichigo," With a cute huff, Ururu sat down next to Ichigo and clapped her hands together before digging into the food, "I really like Mrs. Mankanshoku's croquettes, especially when she puts crabs in them."

"Wow..." Ryuko watched Ururu tear into the croquettes with a mixture of awe and disgust, "She really loves those croquettes."

Ichigo turned his head slightly so he wouldn't have to see Ururu eat, "I don't know how she stands the stuff to be honest."

As Ryuko chuckled at Ichigo's expense, there was a whistling through the air before a pocket knife embedded itself in the lid of her bento box. With an annoyed expression, she pulled the knife out and muttered, "What the hell?"

"Ryuko Matoi!" A familiar voice shouted from a nearby building, causing Ichigo's eye to start twitching, "I, Jack Naito, President of the Knife Throwing Club, will be defeating you this day!"

"You've got some nerve ruining my lunch!" Ryuko shouted back as she stood up, "Mako's mom made that for me! You're going to pay for that!"

Ryuko reached to pull the pin out of her glove, but stopped when she heard Ichigo ask, "Hey, didn't I kick your ass already?"

"Huh?" Jack turned and froze upon seeing Ichigo behind Ryuko, "Y-You? What are you doing here, Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"That's none of your business," Ichigo smirked and reached for his spaulder. He was really going to enjoy taking down Jack after the hell he put him through when he first arrived at Honnouji Academy, "Stay back and enjoy your lunch, Ryuko. I got some unfinished business with this punk. Life Fiber Initial Release: Kamui Mugetsu!"

Before Jack could react or even try and flee, Ichigo jumped off the ground and punched him in the face, sending the newly reinstated club captain across the courtyard. As Jack landed in a heap some distance away, with Ichigo hot on his heels to enact vengeance, Ryuko calmly sat back down and went back to eating her lunch.

"Huh?" Mako, finally noticing Ichigo's disappearance, looking nervously around before turning to Ryuko, "Hey Ryuko, where did Ichigo run off to?"

"He's dealing with an old acquaintance," Ryuko answered calmly as she took a bite out of a croquette that was filled with steak, "He should be back in a few minutes."

"Ok!" Mako smiled happily and went back to eating.

Putting the strange event out of her mind, Ryuko went to pick up another croquette only for a large red whip to skewer her bento box, destroying all the food in it. With her mouth agape and her fingers trembling in rage, she slowly turned and saw what had to be one of the worst Goku Uniforms she had ever seen.

"Have I got your attention, Ryuko Matoi?" The mysterious club captain taunted, "For the one to defeat you will be me, the Nanjing Lily Club President Kagesaburo Kagero!"

With a deadpan expression on her face, Ryuko held her arm up and, with a complete lack of emotion in her voice, said, "Life Fiber Synchronize: Kamui Senketsu."

Kagesaburo was caught completely off guard as Ryuko vanished, to his eyes at least, before reappearing in front of him with her elbow driven into his stomach. As he gasped for breath, his Goku Uniform cracking around the point of impact, Ryuko looked up at him with a sadistic grin.

"Usually I would just destroy your stupid Goku Uniform," she explained as she held Kagesaburo up with a single hand while she continuously clenched and unclenched her free one, "But since you ruined my lunch, I'm going to make you suffer tremendously."

As Kagesaburo's screamed echoed through the area, Mako and Ururu continued to eat their lunches without care. While Mako was mostly oblivious to the fighting going on around her, Ururu knew that Ichigo and Ryuko would be able to defeat their respective opponents without any trouble. As long as Nui Harime wasn't around, Ururu didn't feel the need to interfere. Speaking of Nui, after her brief clash against the Grand Couturier, Ururu found herself with the ability to sense whenever Nui Harime was nearby. While it wasn't enough to actually pinpoint Nui's location, it was more than enough to give Ururu a heads up for the eventual confrontation.

With her eyes closed and one hand holding her chopsticks, Ururu reached up and snagged the tightrope out of thin air before snapping it up and causing the Two-Star on it to go flying into the outer walls of Honnouji Academy.

"Wow!" Mako had stars in her eyes after seeing Ururu's skills, "That was super amazing, Ururu!"

A faint blush, similar to the one she always had a couple of years back, spread across Ururu's cheeks, "I-It was nothing, Mako."

There was a loud crash as Ichigo reappeared in front of them. With Tournesol held on his shoulder, he tossed the defeated, and nude, Jack Naito on the ground and sat back down. It felt great to finally, and decisively, kick Jack Naito's ass. After his first fight against the Two-Star, where he was mostly on the defensive, it was irony to see the situation reversed as much as it was.

"I've waited a long time to kick this bastard's ass."

"Don't you remember, Ichigo?" Mugetsu's eyes looked at Jack's defeated form before focusing on her wearer, "It was during that fight that your blood first began to awaken me. You can even go so far as to say that he was responsible for our current partnership."

"Yeah, well," Ichigo kicked Jack for good measure before mentally commanding Mugetsu to transform back into her normal school outfit, "You were bound to wake up sooner or later."

"Are you talking to your uniform again?" Mako looked at Ichigo funnily, "That's so adorable!"

Ichigo was saved from giving Mako an answer as a frustrated Ryuko sat down beside him. Groaning in frustration at her battle, she rubbed a hand down her face and exclaimed, "What the hell is up with all these weird, ultra-specific clubs? Who honestly creates a Knife Throwing Club or a Nanjing Lily Club?"

"You shouldn't forget the Tightrope Walking Club," Ururu added stoically in between bites.

"There's seriously a Tightrope Walking Club?" Ryuko asked in bewilderment. When Ururu simply nodded back, Ryuko rolled her eyes, "Wow, this place is even more screwed up than I thought."

"It wasn't so bad a few days ago," Ichigo added, "Remember when that Tsumugu guy arrived? I was ambushed by the Archery Club on the way to meet you for lunch."

"At least that's a real club," Ryuko countered, "Hey Mako, you know anything about these stupid club captains?"

"Oh, that's a simple question!" Mako visibly swallowed all the food in her mouth at once before pointing at Jack's unconscious body with her chopsticks, "All these guys used to be in the Acrobatics Club, but once Lady Satsuki announced the prize for beating you, they split up and formed their own clubs. It's really quite simply and interesting when you don't really think about it."

"Prize?" Ryuko hadn't heard anything about such a thing, "What prize?"

Mako adopted a dreamy look as she continued explaining, "Lady Satsuki has announced that if someone beat you up, Ryuko, they'll be given the same status and power as a Three-Star. With Jakuzure kicked out of the Elite Four and now a member of our group, Lady Satsuki is looking for someone to replace her. Since the school rules say that only a club president can have a Two-Star Goku Uniform, various members of all the different clubs have begun splitting away and forming their own clubs. At this very moment, they are all gunning to take you down, Ryuko!"

"Why me? What about Ichigo?" Ichigo pointed to Ichigo angrily, "Is Satsuki giving out a prize for beating him?"

"Hmm..." Mako appeared to be in deep thought, if the smoke drifting out her ears was any indication, for several seconds before she shook her head and happily said, "Nope. A few days ago Lady Satsuki told the entire school that everyone was forbidden from going after Ichigo without her express permission. She also said that anyone who did so would face execution and torture for insubordination and treachery against her!"

"Holy hell..." Ichigo muttered in shock. Satsuki really wouldn't kill someone for wanting to fight him, would she? Thinking back during their fight, Ichigo realized that she would, in fact, do just that if it happened to be the most pragmatic option at the time.

"What's her deal with you, Ichigo?" Ryuko wondered as she looked him over. There was nothing overly special about him aside from his orange hair and the ability to wear a Kamui. Coming to a realization, she slyly smirked, "Oh, I know what's going on. The great Satsuki Kiryuin has a thing for you, Ichigo."

Ichigo nearly choked upon hearing that, "Wait. What?"

"WHAT?" Mako exclaimed in shock as both of her hands pressed against her cheeks, "Ichigo has grabbed the romantic attention of Lady Satsuki? This is just like out of a manga or something!"

"Give it a rest, Mako," Ichigo spat out and grumbled, "Besides, even if that happens to be true, she's not the kind of person I would even think of dating. I would never be seen with someone who would force people to bet their lives for power. What she's doing isn't right."

There was an awkward silence for a few moments before Ryuko decided to change the subject, "Hey Mako, why would these chumps attack us even if they had no shot at winning?"

"It's all for a better life," Mako said vigorously while staring into the distance, "In Honnou City, one's social class is determined by the number of stars on their school uniform. They are all desperate enough to bring their values out of poverty that they would fight you even if they can't win."

"Man, this place is messed up to hell and back," Ryuko rested her chin on the palm of her hand. After several seconds, she blinked and grinned as an idea came to her, "Hang on a second! I have an idea of how to cheat the system..."

"It better not be what I think it is," Ichigo warned.

"Don't worry," Ryuko waved off his concern uncaringly, "I know that's illegal now, so you don't worry about getting into trouble again."

"It's not going to be a good idea."

---

...

---

In one of the many corridors of Honnouji Academy, the various students, whether they were No-Stars or One-Stars, fearfully parted as a single figure angrily stalked her way through. Pulling her white beret down over her eyes, Nonon Jakuzure grumbled menacingly about the stupidity of those around her as well as her mission.

"Grumble... grumble... stupid Strawberry... grumble..."

Nonon was truly pissed off, but for the first time in days it wasn't at any of her fellow No-Stars. For the first three or four days after Lady Satsuki publically expelled her from the Elite Four, which Gamagori and Sanageyama putting in their helpful input to make it seem believable, Nonon had to put up with jeers and insults from Two-Stars and other students over her failures. It was only when she snapped, turned around and grabbed a Two-Star's face before pushing it through a brick wall that the insults stopped flying. With everyone backing off and leaving her alone, Nonon was free to focus on her mission, but there was one problem that she couldn't fix.

Her attempts and ingratiating herself with Strawberry's group were failing faster than someone attempting to assassinate Lady Satsuki.

"What am I doing wrong?" Nonon mumbled quietly before grimacing, "It can't be me. It has to be something on Strawberry's end."

Nonon tried to figure out what she was doing wrong, but kept coming up with nothing. Lady Satsuki had entrusted to her the mission to figure out the secret behind Ichigo and the Transfer Student's Kamui, but she had yet to find anything of value. Even after giving that stupid Transfer Student the information she needed to beat Sanageyama, they still didn't trust her. What the hell did she need to do to gain their trust? Did she need to go up and publically slap Lady Satsuki?

"Pfft," Nonon stuck her tongue out in disgust, "Even I wouldn't stoop that low just to make friends."

It was bad enough that she had to publically work against Lady Satsuki, which made her feel nauseous just thinking about it, but to actively try and be nice to her enemies was sickening. Ichigo and the Transfer Student were working to bring down Lady Satsuki's sandcastle and she was helping, albeit as a spy, to make it happen. Why couldn't they just trust that Satsuki knew what she was doing?

"Because they're morons," Nonon answered herself while spitting on the angrily.

Noticing something weird from the windows overlooking the massive Honnouji Academy courtyard, Nonon turned and saw Ichigo and the Transfer Student take out several Two-Star students with relative ease. As she watched them no-sell the various attacks, Nonon couldn't help but notice Ichigo go after his opponent with a vigor and anger that she hadn't seen in their fight.

"That guy looks familiar," Nonon narrowed her eyes and a bemused smirk appeared on her face upon recognizing Jack Naito, "Oh? It's that boy that Lady Satsuki sacrificed to fight against Strawberry on his very first day. I wonder why she decided to give him back his Two-Star Goku Uniform."

Nonon really didn't care about his motives. She just enjoyed seeing Ichigo beat the crap out of Jack Naito. Seeing something strange happening near where Ryuko was eating lunch, Nonon whistled in awe as she saw Ururu defeat a ridiculous club president without even looking up. While Ururu's superhuman strength and reflexes caused Nonon to make a mental note to inform Lady Satsuki later, she had a mission to complete.

"There has to be something I'm missing," Nonon pressed her face angrily against the glass as she focused on Ichigo's fight, "There's no way in hell Strawberry is better than Lady Satsuki!"

While she wasn't the most observant or intelligent person, Nonon prided herself on being able to see things others don't notice. That is why as she watched Ichigo's fight against Jack Naito, her irritation kept rising. There had to be a secret to Ichigo's Kamui that Satsuki just wasn't aware of. Once she managed to discover that secret, Lady Satsuki would easily and quickly wipe the floor with these two upstarts and show them just how powerful of a person she really was. It couldn't be that Strawberry was more worthy of wearing a Kamui than Lady Satsuki. That was just impossible! There was no one on Earth with more ambition, will, determination and the notion to see it through than Lady Satsuki. She was the only one worthy of a Kamui!

"What's his secret?" Nonon muttered angrily before cursing and spitting to the side, "I'm going to get you for this, Strawberry! Once I'm done with this stupid mission, I'm going to make you pay dearly! And the Transfer Student is going to get what's coming to her as well. I'm the ruler of the skies, damn it! The next time we fight, I'm going to clip your wings permanently!"

---

...

---

"I still think this is a terrible idea."

"If you think it's so bad why haven't you stopped me?" Ryuko scoffed at Ichigo's caution as she planted the chair she was holding in the ground. Crossing her legs and leaning back, she motioned with her thumb towards the wooden post next to her that read 'FIGHT CLUB' and said, "This is a perfectly good idea. What could go wrong?"

"That's right, Ichigo!" Mako exclaimed in unison. Waving the large white banner with the club's name on it happily, she added, "Ryuko knows what she's doing, after all!"

"I know you believe this will work, Mako," Ichigo sighed and turned towards Ururu with a deadpan expression on his face. Pointing at her, he asked, "But I still don't understand how the hell you managed to convince Ururu to take part in your little scheme."

Standing across from Ryuko and wearing her sparring gear was Ururu. The fear and terror that Ichigo felt upon seeing the same gear that nearly killed him the last time they fought was only countered by how adorable Ururu managed to look. If he didn't know any better, Ichigo would have wrongfully assumed Ururu was completely harmless. She had already asked him to spar twice to, in her own words, 'draw in a crowd' and Ichigo's fingers were constantly twitching toward the spaulder on his shoulder in case Ururu decided to become proactive.

"It's going to be alright, Ichigo," Ururu said softly with a slight smile on her face. While she was usually averse to recreational fighting of any kind, Ururu didn't see the Fight Club as such. To her, the idea of organized, and safe, sparring between two willing club members with no chance of someone dying or getting too injured was perfectly fine, "I think Ryuko's idea of starting a Fight Club is fine. It sounds like a lot of fun, after all."

Ichigo grimaced at the thought of Ururu's definition of 'fun.' As sweet and kind as she may be, there were some things that just went over her head, such as the fact that most humans can't crush rocks in their bare hands, "It's not you I'm worried about..."

"What's got you so scared?" Ryuko chuckled and closed her eyes, "I already told you that my plan has no flaws. I'm just working the system."

"Is that so?"

As if on cue, Ira Gamagori's massive persona appeared in front of Ryuko. With his large, gauntleted arms folded across his massive chest and a scowl adorning his face, Gamagori did not look pleased in the slightest upon seeing what Ryuko was attempting to do. When his eyes noticed what she had written on the wooden post next to her, his scowl deepened even further, "What is the meaning of this abrupt and rude public disturbance, Matoi? Have you filled out the proper paperwork to hold a non-violent demonstration?"

"You have eyes, don't you?" Ryuko smugly answered, "I'm starting a Fight Club."

"Hmm..." Gamagori looked at Ichigo, then Ururu before finally focusing back on Ryuko, "And I am to assume that you have managed to talk your follow students into your delusions? Don't screw with us, Matoi. If you do, I can guarantee you'll be buried in the paperwork for so long that you won't want to look at a pencil ever again."

"Like I'm scared of a little paperwork," Ryuko retorted, "If you ever do that to me, I'll just burn it all. Besides, you are the ones screwing with me by forcing all the students to form idiotic clubs and come after me. I mean, really, the Nanjing Lily Club? Whose bright idea was that anyway?"

Gamagori cleared his throat while he nervously adjusted the collar of his uniform just subtly enough that Ichigo and Matoi didn't pick up on it. They didn't need to know that with Jakuzure undercover as their mutual acquaintance against Lady Satsuki, he had been designated the temporary Non-Athletic Committee Chair by Lady Satsuki. One of his jobs as the temporary chair was to approve and reject various clubs as well as their names, "The club naming system of Honnouji Academy is not up for discussion, Matoi! The rules of this academy are ironclad! IRONCLAD! There are to be no exceptions or irregularities whatsoever!"

"Well, if that's the case, then you're looking at the new Fight Club President Ryuko Matoi!"

"Do you seriously think you have the clout to start a club out of the blue?" Gamagori half-asked, half- stated as he leaned over Ryuko menacingly, "It takes more than just a notion for a club to be formed."

"Oh?" Ryuko questioned and propped her feet up on the table Gamagori had so helpfully brought with him, "Like what?"

One of Gamagori's eyebrows rose in interest, "For starters, you will need a Vice-President to handle the non-administrative aspects of the club such as scheduling meetings and events as well as dealing with complaints from other students."

Ryuko looked back and forth before reaching over and dragging a perplexed Ururu to her side, "Ururu here is the Vice-President! If anyone has a problem with my methods, they can take it up with Ururu!"

Failing to dissuade her, Gamagori's eyebrow began twitching in anger, "Touché Matoi, but two members do not a club make. You also need a treasurer to deal with all the finances of the club."

"Mako!" Ryuko's call woke up Mako, who had fallen asleep while standing up.

Shaking her head to get rid of the still-lingering cobwebs, Mako saluted Ryuko, "Yes Ryuko?"

With a sly grin and not taking her eyes off Gamagori's annoyed face, Ryuko asked, "Mako, what's six raised to the sixth power?"

"Forty-six thousand six hundred and fifty-six!" Mako answered without hesitation before giggling, "Numbers are fun!"

To say that everyone was stunned would be an understatement. Ichigo was looking at Mako in a whole new light while Gamagori was rubbing his eyes in an attempt to remove the hallucination.

"Holy crap," Ichigo muttered in awe, "She's a damn math savant."

"Uhh..." For once Gamagori had nothing to say. Ryuko had effectively, and legally, countered each and every one of his points and arguments. Turning to Ichigo, he asked, "I don't suppose you're a part of this?"

Ichigo shook his head, "I want nothing to do with the Fight Club."

Gamagori stared down Ichigo for a moment before taking a deep breath and barking, "Matoi! You may have the required members to send in a form for club approval, but do you actually think such a thing would ever happen?"

The question had barely finished being asked before a bright light shone down from the top of Honnouji Academy. While Gamagori turned around to face who he knew was there, Ichigo and Ryuko winced slightly from the light.

"I'll allow the formation of this club!" Satsuki Kiryuin's authoritative voice echoed down.

"God damn, Satsuki Kiryuin," Ryuko muttered angrily as she stared up at said girl, "Up there looking down on us from high on her perch. I bet she's never had a problem in her entire life."

With Bakuzan planted firmly on the ground, Satsuki stared down at Ryuko, a sly and knowing smirk on her face, "Matoi, I take it from your childish attempt at forming a club that you're trying to ingratiate yourself within my system?"

"Pfft!" Ryuko stuck her tongue out at Satsuki, "As if! I'm only joining your systems so I can bring it down from the inside. I can't wait to see your expression when everything you built comes crashing down around your ears!"

"How drôle. Do try and not get dragged under by the current along the way," Satsuki quipped before turning her attention towards Ichigo, "And I see you are here as well, Ichigo. Tell me something. Are you going to join Matoi's Fight Club?"

"No," Ichigo answered without breaking eye contact, "But just because I'm not joining, that doesn't mean I'm going to let you just trample all over her."

"I see..." Satsuki's eye narrowed perceptively upon hearing Ichigo's answer. To be perfectly honest, she hadn't been expecting that sort of answer from him. Her assumption was that Ichigo would do one of two things. The most likely choice was that he would stay out of Matoi's way, allowing her to be corrupted by the power afforded to her as a club captain and potentially leading Matoi to joining her cause. The second choice, while not as likely as the first, was that Ichigo would actively participate in the Fight Club, allowing Satsuki to subtly influence them both until they became enemies. She should have expected Ichigo to take a third option.

"I look forward to seeing how that works out for you, Ichigo," Satsuki smirked as she turned to walk away, "Perhaps it will allow us to continue our fight without time restrictions. Gamagori!"

"Yes, Lady Satsuki," Gamagori bowed his head before turning to Ryuko and slamming a table on the ground in front of her, "Matoi! Let us begin the paperwork!"

To no one's surprise, lines of One-Star students appeared behind Gamagori upon his announcement. Even so, Ryuko couldn't help but whistle, "Wow. You sure do switch gears fast."

"Despite my preference on the matter, Lady Satsuki has spoken and I must abide by whatever her decision may be," Gamagori formally stated before dropping large stacks of documentation on the table, "Matoi! As the president of the Fight Club, you are required by law to submit your club activity log every Friday by 4:00 PM. At the end of each and every month, excluding this one, your expenses are to be settled promptly and new expense applications for the next month are to be filed perfectly and in order."

Ryuko stared blankly at the piles of paperwork crowding the table and could only utter, "Guh?"

Uncaring of Ryuko's state of mind, Gamagori continued, "In addition to the previous requirements, you must also submit a Club Use Request Form in triplicate, sign the Honnouji Academy Club Contract and hand in a complete club member spreadsheet complete with their family members, emergency contacts, and life insurance policies. Lastly, every morning at 7:00 AM there will be the Club President Council Meeting, which you are required to attend without fail! Any questions Matoi?"

Ryuko continued to stare at the paperwork, one eye twitching in angst, before pulled Mako over, "I lied to you. My friend, Mako Mankanshoku, says she would love to be the club president!"

"Bwa?" Mako's scream of shock caused everyone to wince in pain. As she began blubbering incoherently and nervous tears threatened to fall from her eyes, Ryuko began consoling her.

"You'll be a fine club president, Mako," Ryuko calmly said as she patted Mako on the head, "The main point of this club is for me to fight, so everything's pretty much already set up. After I beat the crap out of all the other club presidents, your reputation will skyrocket and your family will live in a better house."

"I know all that," Mako blubbered, "But I don't wanna be a club president!"

"I believe in you Mako," Ururu said cheerfully, but the lack of emotion in her voice negated some of its impact, "I'll help you be the best club president in all of Honnouji Academy."

"R-Really?" Mako asked tearfully.

Ururu nodded, "Uh huh."

With his hands in his pockets, Ichigo watched the scene with mild interest. He should have expected Ryuko to do something like pawing off the responsibilities of being a club president as soon as she saw how much work it would be. The only question he had is whether or not Mako could handle the strain of the job. Back in Karakura Town, he had taken quite a few odd jobs during his school breaks. A few of them had involved him doing inventory and crap like that. He just hoped Mako didn't think she could do everything on her own.

"I give them a week tops."

Ichigo looked upwards and saw Gamagori standing behind him. Standing in the giant man's shadow with a crestfallen expression, he asked, "What are you talking about?"

"Did I stutter, Ichigo Kurosaki," Gamagori glanced down at Ichigo briefly, "I give the Fight Club a week before it collapses in on itself. Matoi has no real motivation to form a club and Mankanshoku will collapse under the strain of being a club president. It's such a shame to see talent wasted on the youth."

Ichigo had to double take when he heard what Gamagori said, "Wasted on the youth? Just how many grades were you held back for anyway?"

"I'll have you know I'm only nineteen years old, Ichigo Kurosaki," Gamagori growled before coughing into his hand, "But there is another matter. Lady Satsuki requests your presence within the hour."

"Oh," and with that, any good mood that Ichigo may have had went away. He didn't like talking to Satsuki and went out of his way to publically avoid her. The matter wasn't helped by her apparent interest in him. Rumors had begun spreading until a few students, the instigators of said rumors, abruptly disappeared one night, "I thought she would leave me alone after I kicked not just her ass, but her little lackey's as well. You can go tell her that I want nothing to do with whatever she's planning."

"Who said you had a choice in the matter?"

Before Ichigo could respond, Gamagori reached down, grabbed Ichigo and threw him over his shoulder before turning to walk away. As Ryuko and Ururu started to get up and stop him, Gamagori turned and said, "Go about your business! Ichigo Kurosaki has a scheduled meeting with Lady Satsuki that he must attend! He will be returned to you unharmed physically and mentally within three hours. You have my word as the Disciplinary Committee Chair!"

"Oh." Seemingly giving up on saving him, Ryuko sat back down and waved goodbye, "Have fun talking to Satsuki, Ichigo. We'll see you back at Mako's new digs."

"What!" Ichigo couldn't believe that he was being betrayed by Ryuko, "What the hell does that mean?"

"Yeah," Ururu mirrored Ryuko in waving goodbye, "Have fun Ichigo."

"Damn you both!"

---

...

---

"Would you like some tea, Ichigo?"

"No thanks."

"Suit yourself," Satsuki waved away Soroi's attempt to give Ichigo tea with her hand. She had offered Ichigo Kurosaki the tea as a sign of courtesy and respect, but since he didn't want any, it would be prudent to keep stringing him along. Sipping her tea and sighing pleurably at the familiar taste, she closed her eyes and asked, "Do you perchance know why I've called you up to my private chambers?"

"I have an idea," Ichigo muttered as she folded his arms and looked around. Half the stuff hanging on the walls was more expensive than everything he owned put together. It wouldn't be too much of a stretch to say that Byakuya would find her tastes in art and decoration to be 'acceptable.' Refocusing on Satsuki, he added, "But I don't think that's why you called me up here."

"Indeed it is not," Satsuki agreed without opening her eyes, "Those that spread such dreadful and false rumors must be forced to account for their actions. It is simply preposterous that I harbor any sort of emotional feelings for you. You and Matoi are obstacles in the path of my goals, and as such you two must be dealt with."

"And how did that work out for you last time?" It seemed his question struck a nerve as Ichigo noticed Satsuki's fingers tightening around her teacup.

"I will agree that my previous method was a tad... confrontational," Satsuki put her teacup down before she shattered it. She had to remind herself that Ichigo Kurosaki was not one of her Elite Four or even Matoi. He was someone that not only beat her while she was using Junketsu's full power, but did it without anger or emotions. If she had fought Matoi, Satsuki assumed that she would have been greatly angry with her. That anger would have clouded her judgment and dampened her skills. Opening her blue eyes and staring directly into Ichigo's brown ones, she asked, "Have you given any thought to my proposal?"

"I'm not going to be your student council Vice-President," Ichigo answered bluntly as he stood up to leave. If that was the whole point of this little meeting, then he had nothing else to talk about. Before he could take three steps, he found Satsuki's Bakuzan hovering next to his neck.

"We are not done speaking, Ichigo," Satsuki ordered authoritatively. She couldn't believe that Ichigo would have the gall to rudely leave her presence. Power or not, she was not about to just let him get away with it, "There is still one matter I need to discuss with you."

Ichigo looked at Bakuzan before turning to face Satsuki. He didn't like having a sword pointed at his neck for no reason. Eyes narrowing in annoyance, he coldly asked, "What?"

"Your Kamui, Mugetsu was it?" Satsuki's eyes drifted down until they locked gazes with one of Mugetsu's, causing the Kamui to narrow them and growl in retaliation. Despite the fact that Satsuki didn't feel like she was going to attack Ichigo, Mugetsu still didn't appreciate the looks she was receiving. Satsuki, upon noticing the reaction she was getting from Mugetsu, stepped back and sheathed Bakuzan, "So my theory was correct. Kamui are indeed sentient to the point where they can understand and visualize the world around them. If the reaction I received from Mugetsu is any indication, they are also able to heard and comprehend verbal commands and phrases."

"What's the point?" Ichigo didn't like where Satsuki was going with this. He wasn't some mannequin for her to stare at.

"My point is as follows." As she spread her arms out wide, Satsuki motioned for Ichigo to look at Junketsu, "When you bear witness to the majesty of Junketsu, what do you see?"

At first Ichigo thought Satsuki was joking, but upon seeing the stern look on her face, he decided to humor her. As he looked over Junketsu, from Satsuki's shoulders down to her thigh-high boots, Ichigo felt, rather than saw, the Kamui's gaze on him. While Junketsu still did not say a word to him, he could sense the hatred wafting off the Kamui. It wasn't directed at him, that much he knew, but that it seemed to hold such hatred for Satsuki gave Ichigo cause for concern.

"I sense it too, Ichigo," Mugetsu's voice was full of caution upon sensing Junketsu. While her interaction with Danketsu was one of mutual dislike and with Senketsu one of annoyance, Mugetsu did not understand Junketsu's motivation. That Junketsu did not say a word, even in the presence of another Kamui made Mugetsu think something was off with it, "You can feel it, can't you Ichigo? Junketsu's hatred for Satsuki Kiryuin is nearly palpable. If given half a chance, it would devour her without hesitation."

"Is something the matter, Ichigo?" Satsuki's question brought Ichigo's attention away from his conversation with Mugetsu, "It appears that you were listening intently to something I could not hear. Could it be your Kamui?"

Ichigo wasn't that shocked that Satsuki realized Mugetsu was talking with him. She was anything if not observant if the way she fought him was any indication. Shrugging his shoulders, he wanted to keep his mouth shut, but at the same time he didn't want to see Satsuki die. He may seriously dislike her, but he would not want to see her die.

"I was just thinking about something," Ichigo dodged around the question expertly, "And it concerns your Kamui."

"Oh?" Satsuki's eyebrow rose in mild interest, "And what might that be?"

Deciding against skirting around the issue, Ichigo bluntly said, "Junketsu hates you with every Life Fiber of its being. You should stop wearing it as soon as possible. If you let your guard down once, it won't hesitate to kill you.

"So am I to assume this advice is coming out of some concern for me?" Satsuki asked as she turned her back to Ichigo, "That is what I've come to expect from you, Ichigo. Showing concern and mercy for your enemies even when they are trying to kill you. Chivalry exists in the world, but you should be careful not to let it cloud your judgment, Ichigo. There are those more opportunistic than myself in this world that won't hesitate to use your chivalry against you."

Ichigo remained silent as she walked over to the large windows of her private quarters and gazed upon the autumn afternoon, "Junketsu's dislike for me is not news. Since the moment I shared with it my life blood, it has constantly tested and probed my mental defenses for a weakness, but it is all for naught! My will and determination are like a castle while Junketsu's attacks are nothing more than thrown rocks! It will be a cold day in hell when my mind becomes weak enough to fall victim to clothing!"

Mugetsu growled at Satsuki's lack of respect and appreciation for Kamui, and Ichigo couldn't help but agree. Kamui weren't things designed to be enslaved and controlled by humans. Through his time working with Mugetsu, Ichigo had come to realize he and his Kamui needed to work together to be at their most powerful. Satsuki was strong, that much was true, but as long as she kept her current point of view, she would never be strong enough to take him down. Ichigo only hoped she realized her mistake before Junketsu killed her.

"Whatever," Ichigo mockingly waved goodbye as he turned to leave. Perhaps he would be able to take three steps before getting a sword pointed at his neck, "Tell me how that works out for you when I defeat you a second time."

Satsuki didn't bother to face Ichigo as he left. Once he was gone, she winced and clasped a hand on her shoulder. It seemed that Junketsu hadn't appreciated being in such close contact with his Mugetsu, but Satsuki couldn't understand what would cause such a negative reaction. There had to be something she was missing. As the pain abated for the moment, Satsuki sat back down and consoled herself with the knowledge that Jakuzure would soon return with the information she needed to unlock Junketsu's actual power.

---

...

---

Aikuro Mikisugi sat alone in his classroom. Staring out over the night sky above Honnou City, he couldn't help but reminisce about the day's events.

"Well," He muttered as he chewed on the end of his cigarette, "Ryuko completely fell for Satsuki Kiruin's trap hook, line and sinker. At least Ichigo was wise enough to stay on the sidelines. That will make bringing her back a lot easier in the long run."

Ruffling a hand through his blue unkempt hair, Aikuro sighed and rubbed the back of his neck, "It's been a while since we've met face to face. How have you been, Kinue?"

Sitting in Aikuro's chair with her legs propped up on the desk was Kinue Kinagase. While she still wore the same type of biker's outfit as when she saved Ryuko's life, she had changed the colors to match up with Danketsu. It was a small nod of acknowledgement to her Kamui and it was only the first of many steps to helping it recover.

"Pretty good I guess," she answered calmly. Despite what she was doing, she still couldn't express herself too much. It seemed that her attempts at helping Danketsu only made the Kamui more pissed off, "Nothing's really happened except I learned that hearing my Kamui speak isn't a sign of insanity."

"Oh?" Aikuro was slightly intrigued. Sure, he had heard Ryuko and Ichigo speak and listen to their Kamui, but he assumed it was more of a symbolic thing since he couldn't hear anything, "That's good news I guess. I was worried that you would snap and come after me. I was all prepared to take you down and stuff."

Kinue's hand shot out faster than Aikuro could react to and beamed him in the forehead with his coffee mug. As he held his slightly bleeding forehead, Kinue got up and walked over to the window next to him, "Satsuki Kiryuin is playing them for fools."

"Well..." Aikuro rubbed his nose to make sure it wasn't broken, "Really she's only playing Ryuko. Ichigo, on the other hand, is savvy enough to not get involved with Satsuki's schemes."

"Still..." Kinue clenched a fist and ignored Danketsu's demands to fight Junketsu. It seemed that every time her Kamui wanted to fight, it would pick out a random Kamui. It was almost as if it couldn't make up its' mind, "... there is no doubt that Satsuki will try and influence Ichigo in some way, shape or form. She has never met someone that she considered her equal. Ryuko, as much as we would think otherwise, is nothing more than an extremely belligerent pawn for Satsuki. As much as she wishes to take down Honnouji Academy's ruler, Satsuki simply brushes off her attempts and baits her along with enough information to keep her on the leash."

"It's not that bad," Aikuro muttered, "Ichigo's broken some of the hold Satsuki has on Ryuko. Did you know he's already told her who he thinks killed her dad?"

Kinue looked surprised at Aikuro's information before shaking her head in amusement. She should have known that Aikuro would be able to find out information such as that. He wasn't Nudist Beach's top information gatherer for nothing. Chuckling lightly, she folded her arms across her chest and said, "It's good to see that you haven't changed much since our last meeting. I would have thought going undercover as a teacher would dampen your skills, but they seem to be as sharp as ever."

Aikuro smirked back, "Some things never change."

"I suppose they don't," Kinue quipped before refocusing herself, "You said that Ichigo told Ryuko about her father's murderer. Who did he say it was?"

"I'll give you three guesses." Aikuro solemnly held up three fingers, "Here's a hint: Her name starts with the letter 'N'."

Kinue bit back a curse as she felt Danketsu become riled upon hearing the Grand Couturier's name, "Nui Harime... I should have known it was someone like her. There aren't many people that would have been able to take down Professor Matoi in his own home. The man had defenses specifically designed to destroy Life Fiber clothing and weapons. Only the Grand Couturier would have been strong enough to simply stroll right through the automated defenses without so much as a single scratch."

"Ryuko knowing about Nui Harime will only help her in the long run," Aikuro turned away from the window and moved to his desk. Unlocked the bottom-most drawer, he began rifling through various files he had been meticulously keeping. Humming as he searched for a particular one he explained, "I don't think I need to remind you about how the Grand Couturier likes to fight. We lost enough operatives getting what little we know about her that it would be dishonorable to not put it to good use."

Kinue took the folder from Aikuro without saying a word. As she flipped through the mostly detailed pages, she couldn't begin to think about the amount of operatives Nudist Beach has lost to the Grand Couturier. The ones that were found dead were always considered the lucky ones. At least they knew what happened to them and could inform their families that they fell in the line of duty. It was the ones that were never found... or partially found... that caused Kinue to pause upon the thought of fighting the Grand Couturier. There was a reason Nui Harime got to where she was and thinking of her as nothing more than a teenage girl with superhuman abilities would only lead to an untimely and violent death.

" Strengths... tactics... knowledge... abilities... they are all in here. Yet none of that will be helpful if I'm forced to confront her again."

Everything that Nudist Beach knew about Nui Harime was in this folder. The only problem was that they didn't know what her weaknesses might be. Even six months later, headquarters was still trying to puzzle out how Professor Matoi managed to blind Nui's left eye. Any previous attempts at hurting the Grand Couturier all failed without causing injuries. What did Professor Matoi have up his sleeve that Nui Harime didn't expect?"

Noticing a small addendum to the bottom of one page, Kinue frowned, "I noticed that you added my observations from my encounter with the Grand Couturier in Rome."

Nui Harime liked to talk, and by talk Kinue meant hold entire one-sided conversations with her opponent. During their clash in Rome, where Kinue managed to get away mostly unscathed, Nui had tried baiting her time and time again with information that the Grand Couturier should not have access to. It was only thanks to her ironclad grip on her emotions that Kinue didn't snap back at her.

Aikuro smiled smugly, "Who knew the Grand Couturier would be distracted by a sweets shop? Perhaps we should create a candy bazooka to take her down? But on a more serious note, we need to figure out what she hopes to accomplish from her little gambit. How does telling Ryuko about murdering her father give her an advantage? I can see how it might make Ryuko angry, but what else are we missing?"

"That's her exact goal," Kinue said in realization as she completely understood the Grand Couturier's final plan, "Nui Harime is banking every aspect of her strategy on enraging Ryuko with the knowledge of her father's murder. Ryuko doesn't know what happens to those that lose control over their Kamui, does she? If she snaps as badly as I think she will, Senketsu will merge with her body and form a bloody, raging monster. I don't think I need to remind you how bad that would be."

Aikuro grimaced while his eyes narrowed. That day would forever live in his memories as one of the few that he was absolutely sure he was going to die.

Flashback - 10 Years Ago

Aikuro pushed against the flow of fleeing Nudist Beach operatives as he held a hand to his side. He could feel the blood seeping through his fingers, the result of being thrown through a safety window and getting a shard of glass stabbed in his abdomen.

"Tsumugu!" Aikuro pressed a finger to his ear and shouted in order to be heard over the emergency alarm going off, "Where is she heading?"

"She's heading along North Corridor B!" Tsumugu's response was punctuated by a loud explosion, "She's already torn through two bulkheads! If we don't stop her soon, she's going to reach the surface!"

Kinue, or whatever she had become, could not be allowed to reach the surface. Nudist Beach operatives had weapons designed to take down and destroy Life Fiber clothing, but so far their efforts had amounted to crap. If Kinue reached the surface before she was stopped, the death toll would easily reach in the thousands.

" Do what you can to stall her!" Aikuro ordered as he reached in his pocket for his specialized ammunition. It was only one bullet, but it should do the trick, "I have something that should take her out."

" What?" Tsumugu's pain-filled voiced shouted through the earpiece, "She's my sister! We can't kill her."

" We don't have a choice," Aikuro grimaced as he stepped over several dead operatives. From the wounds on their bodies, it was clear that Kinue had quickly, and hopefully painlessly, dismembered them, "Pretty soon we won't have enough people to even stall her."

" I know," Tsumugu's voice lowered in regret and Aikuro could barely hear him over the siren, "Just give me a chance to - "

Whatever Tsumugu said next was cut off as a loud, and distinctly feminine, roar echoed through the Nudist Beach base. Turning around a corner and opening the door to the stairwell, he hoped that he would make it in time. He still could not believe how this all started.

It had been a simple training exercise. The same one that Kinue had been doing almost every day for the past three months. There were no deviations, changes or anything different about it except for the number of enemies and overall configuration of the training chamber. Aikuro had been the overseer for the day's exercise and for the first half hour everything had gone smoothly. With the aid of her Kamui, Danketsu Professor Matoi had dubbed it, Kinue was looking to be their secret weapon against Revocs. What better weapon was there to use against those that used Life Fibers?

Then Kinue started losing control.

Aikuro had asked what was wrong, but Kinue couldn't explain what was happening. All she could say was that Danketsu was getting angry and telling her to destroy her enemies. Aikuro, panicking at Kinue's state of mind, told her to stop the exercise but it was already too late. Kinue screamed and halfway through it, she was surrounded by a burst of purple and blue light that looked and felt wrong to Aikuro. Before he was thrown backwards and through the observation window, Aikuro was sure he saw a bloody purple and blue monster with Kinue's hair cutting its way out of the test chamber.

" Damn it," Aikuro's fist tightened around the Adhesive Bullet in his pocket. It would work to stop Kinue's bloody rampage, but Aikuro wasn't certain if she would survive the effects.

End Flashback

Aikuro considered everyone fortunate that Tsumugu was somehow able to bring his sister back from whatever hell she had gone to. Even so, the death toll from her rampage was staggering. Thirty three operatives died trying to stop her and over one hundred more were injured. Kinue herself had almost died from blood loss and it was only due to Tsumugu sharing the same type of blood that she survived at all.

That day was the last he saw Kinue or Tsumugu truly smile.

"Nobody blamed you for what happened," Aikuro stated the obvious, "Not even Professor Matoi expected what happened to occur. You were the first human to wear a Kamui and survive. The effects, good and bad, on your mind were completely unknown."

"I am aware of that," Kinue answered stoically, "But I fear for what might happen to Ryuko. I trust that Ichigo will not lose control of his emotions. He is, after all, Masaki's son. If the worst comes to pass, do you think you'll be able to kill Ryuko to stop her?"

"I don't know," Aikuro admitted solemnly, "But let's hope that never happens. I don't want to die and find Professor Matoi waiting to kick my ass up in heaven."

The corners of Kinue's lips curled up in a facsimile of a smile, "I'm glad you haven't changed much over the years. You mentioned that Ichigo told Ryuko that Nui Harime was the most probable suspect for Professor Matoi's murder, correct?"

Upon seeing Aikuro nod, Kinue let out a sigh of relief, "That's just what we needed to happen. If she is aware of her father's killer, when the Grand Couturier tries to break the news as badly as possible, Ryuko won't snap as badly."

"That only leaves the question of Nui Harime's obsession with Ichigo," Aikuro had pondered what the Grand Couturier's motives were, but came up with nothing.

"My best guess..." Kinue narrowed her eyes in thought, "... is that it has something to do with Isshin's past connection with Ragyo. It would be helpful he had been more forthcoming with information concerning their relationship."

Aikuro smirked seductively, "Just be glad Isshin's told us anything at all. More than half of the information we have on Revocs and Ragyo Kiryuin is due to Isshin's firsthand knowledge."

"Before I take my leave, there is just one last thing I need to ask you." Kinue paused in mid-stride as she turned back to Aikuro, "I noticed another girl always hanging around or near Ichigo. Your report says that she transferred from Karakura Town a few days after Ichigo. Do you know who she is?"

"Her name is Ururu Tsumugiyu, and all I know is that Isshin sent her to protect Ichigo," Aikuro explained as he put back on his thick glasses. It wouldn't be proper for a student to see him half naked after all, "At first I didn't know what he meant by that, but after hearing that the Grand Couturier has been stalking about, with her focus fixated on Ichigo, I think I understand why. Her strength is monstrous. She was able to defeat Sanageyama in seconds, not in his Blade Regalia mind you, and stop Tsumugu in his tracks."

"That is not Ururu Tsumugiya," Kinue felt trepidation as her thoughts continued to swirl around one central concept, "In all likelihood, the real Ururu was killed long before arriving at Honnou City. Ichigo and Ryuko are in grave danger."

It took Aikuro a moment to see the connection, but when he did he moved quickly. Rushing back to his desk, he began haphazardly pulling out folders and pictures. Eventually grabbing Ururu's file, he slid it open on the desk next to the file on Nui Harime and nearly collapsed upon seeing the two pictures side by side, "Dear god... how could I have not seen it?"

"I'm going out to stop her," Kinue stormed towards the window and threw it open in one motion. With one foot firmly on the frame and her hand on the side, she turned to Aikuro and said, "If I have any luck, I should be able to expose her plans long before they come to fruition. Watch my back Aikuro."

"I will..." Aikuro watched Kinue fall to the ground before she disappeared into the distance, "... and be careful."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #7 - Not Meant For Children

If there was one thing Tessai Tsukabishi loved, it was the peace and quiet that enveloped the shop whenever Kisuke and Yoruichi left to do things. Kisuke called it research, but Tessai was no idiot. He didn't care to know about their debauchery or whatever they planned to do. Whenever Kisuke would announce they were leaving, Tessai would simply nod and warn them about getting caught or in trouble.

As he checked off another set of items while doing inventory, Tessai heard the bell above the front door of the shop ring. Wondering who it could be, since it was nearly ten at night, he arched an eyebrow and headed to the front of the shop. Upon entering, he was greeted with the sight of an overly dressed blonde haired girl in a pink Lolita dress walking down the aisles with a smile on her face.

"I must apologize," Tessai said in his normally deep voice, "But the shop is closed. If you want to buy something, you'll have to come back tomorrow morning at 7:00 AM."

"Oh, that's not a problem," Nui Harime cheerfully correctly, "I'm actually looking for someone. Are you Kisuke Urahara?"

"You're looking for the boss?" Tessai hummed thoughtfully before saying, "Mr. Urahara is out of town and won't be back for a few days. As his assistant, I am privy to everything he knows. Perhaps I could be of service?"

"That's awesome!" Nui said happily as she pulled out her purple Scissor Blade. As the light reflected off the surface of the weapon, an unholy glee filled Nui's remaining eye, "Perhaps you can tell me where the Life Fibers are?"

It all happened so fast that Nui didn't see it coming. One minute she was holding her Scissor Blade against the defenseless human and the next the weapon was missing. Blinking owlshly and looking at her empty hand, Nui looked up and saw Tessai holding her Scissor Blade delicately in his hands.

"Children should not play with sharp objects," Tessai said as the light glinted menacingly off his glasses, "I see from your eye patch that you have already learned this lesson the hard way."

Nui quickly recovered from her shock and twirled around before reappearing behind Tessai with her arm outstretched, "Stealing is wrong you know."

Almost as if able to see her, Tessai turned and grasped Nui by the back of her dress, "But when stealing is done to keep someone from further hurting themselves, then it is fine."

Walking towards the front of the shop, Tessai opened the door before dropping Nui onto her feet. Before closing the door, he told her, "I will only return your toy to you once your parents come and pick it up. Have a good and safe night, young lady."

Nui didn't understand how Tessai, a stupid pig in clothing, managed to not only overpower her but also steal her purple Scissor Blade. What made it even more embarrassing for her was that she had to use her Mental Refitting on a pair of humans that looked enough like her to recover her weapon. There was no way that the Director would ever find out about this.

One of These Nights

Some of you are no doubt surprised by the quickness that this chapter came out with? Well, don't be alarmed because the quality is still as high as ever. This chapter could be called, with a lot of evidence backing it up, the culmination of several plot threads coalescing together and finally meeting. The events that happen in this chapter were bound to happen eventually and could have been a lot worse or better depending on whether certain events had come or not come to pass. Anyway, enjoy the chapter and review it if you can!

The edits of Chapters 3 and 4 are coming along smoothly. I felt that you, my readers, would appreciate a new chapter over some rehashed old content. So expect the updated 3 and 4 within the next few days.

---

...

---

Chapter 20 - One of These Nights

Isshin Kurosaki knew that when one works hard all day, the best thing to do was to take a nap. Unlike his friend, Ryuken, who was the head of a multinational corporation and was a complete stick in the mud when it came to hanging out, Isshin didn't have much to do. Sure he still needed to set a few final touches to the Karakura Town defense network, but at this point not even Nui Harime could get inside to threaten his family. If only he could adjust the network to stop Life Fibers from regenerating. Isshin would do his damn best to trick Nui from coming after him, but alas, that was never going to happen. He was just going to have to live with the knowledge that his defenses blew off several of her limbs.

"No Masaki..." Isshin muttered in his sleep as a goofy smirk spread on his face, "... I'm not into that kind of stuff. Wait. Ragyo wants to do it with you? Well then, I suppose I'm up for trying new things..."

"Karin!" Yuzu Kurosaki looked through the whole house for her twin sister only to find her staring at her father's sleeping body. Walking up next to her, she looked down at Isshin, "What are you doing?"

"Listening to dad," Karin answered with a hint of annoyance in her voice, "I think he's having a perverted dream."

Yuzu gasped before asking, "Oh! Should we wake him up?"

"Nah," Karin waved off her twin's concerned and turned to leave. Simply being around her dad was giving her a migraine, "I don't care. Let the perverted old man have his fantasies."

Isshin's Dream - 21 Years Ago

For decades Isshin Shiba thought doing paperwork as a captain was the most boring and tedious work in all of existence. He had never expected that something else existed in the world even more boring. Propping his cheek on his hand, he looked at his watch and repressed the urge to audibly grumble upon seeing that he had only been here for an hour. He would have thought from the amount of stubble on his face and the fact that he must have lost around ten pounds that he had been trapped in this hellhole for days.

Isshin HATED talking about clothes.

To be perfectly frank, he wasn't the one talking about clothes and fashion and other boring stuff. It was Masaki, god bless her, and Ragyo Kiryuin who were discussing the new and hot trends and fashions spreading across the world.

When he received his invitation from Ragyo to come to Kiryuin Manor for lunch, or whatever rich people on Earth ate, he thought it would be an interesting trip. It didn't take long for Masaki to find out and, upon hearing the news, screaming in happiness and begging to take her with him. So here he was, sitting in Ragyo's massive study while listening to the only two women on Earth willing to talk to him discuss clothing.

" You have great tastes, Masaki," Ragyo's noble voice complimented. She was once again wearing a low-cut dress that emphasized her well-endowed body, which Isshin did his damn best not to look at. He didn't need Masaki threatening the one important part of his body again, "But have you noticed what is coming out of Italy in the next week..."

That was the final straw. Deciding to cut his losses and flee before he was sucked completely into the nightmare, Isshin stretched and stood up, "Uh, Ragyo. Where's the bathroom?"

" Fourth door on the right," Ragyo answered with a bemused smirk.

" Thanks," Isshin said as he quickly left the study. As soon as he was in the clear and the doors were shut behind him, he sighed in relief. That had been really close. Just a few more minutes and he would have become one of them. Isshin shuddered at the thought of enjoying talking about clothing, fashion and other weird things like that.

" I don't know how much more I can take of this," Isshin rubbed his eyes to try and get some of the tiredness he was feeling out of them. When he heard a familiar chuckling, he turned and saw Soroi walking towards him with a smile on his face.

" Having fun, Master Isshin?" The butler's voice was full of mirth, which meant that he was being sarcastic. With a head full of still mostly brown hair that was just beginning to thin, the Kiryuin head butler still looked several years younger than he was.

" How many times do I have to tell you not to call me that?" Isshin grumbled in response. He knew that Soroi appreciated his presence around Ragyo. He was the only one, according to Soroi, that made

Ragyo act like her old self. Since becoming the CEO of Revocs, Ragyo had become consumed by her work and Soroi was beginning to worry it would affect her health. Once she met Isshin, Ragyo began relaxing and enjoying life again.

" Just one more time I'm afraid," Soroi chuckled at the familiar joke, "Were you aware of a rumor going around concerning Lady Ragyo and yourself?"

Isshin did not like the sound of that one bit. Rumors were evil beasts worse than hollows that could drag down even a shinigami captain into an abyss that their soul could never escape from, "What rumor?"

" Well, I probably shouldn't say anything. It would be rather rude of me to comment on such rumors," Soroi may have said those words, but Isshin could see the bemused smirk on the elder butler's face. He was not particularly amused by it, "But if you insist on knowing, I suppose I will tell you. Rumor has it that Lady Ragyo is smitten with you and is hoping you would propose to her by the end of the year."

" I... propose... her..." Isshin collapsed on the ground and began sputtering incoherently as various images of Ragyo and himself walking down the aisle passed through his mind. Quickly bringing himself back to reality by focusing on Masaki's smiling face, Isshin gasped and returned to the conscious world. He was simply friends with Ragyo. There was nothing special about their relationship. She knew he was in love with Masaki and as far as he could tell, she was perfectly understanding of it.

Pushing off the ground, Isshin grabbed the front of Soroi's suit and glared harshly at the still smiling man, "Don't you ever joke about something like that again. Love is not something you should joke about, but..." Isshin paused and thought about Soroi's words. What if the man was right and Ragyo did love him. Could he look her in the eye and say that he didn't feel the same way about her?

" If you're not kidding about this, then jeez," Isshin let out a breath and scratched the back of his neck. What was he going to say to Ragyo if she was expecting such an answer? He needed to think about this for a while, "I-I don't want to break Ragyo's heart or anything. I will always be in love with Masaki and nothing will change that, but I can't just ignore Ragyo's feelings for me. Damn, this isn't an easy thing to think about."

" You truly are a gentleman worthy of Lady Ragyo's love and attention, Master Isshin," Soroi said with a short bow, much to Isshin's annoyance, "But I do see your point. Love is fickle, as they say, but if anyone could let Lady Ragyo down gently without hurting her feelings, it would be you. Simply put, you are the best - "

" Lady Ragyo! Lady Ragyo!"

Both men turned and saw a young woman running down the hall towards them in a state of full blown panic. Eighteen year old Rei Hououmaru, the bookish and overworked personal assistant to Ragyo Kiryuin, looked as if she hadn't slept in days, which was extremely likely given the amount of work she did. Dressed in a skirt that fell to just below her knees and with her light purple hair in a disheveled state, Rei looked like she would collapse at any moment.

" Ah! Mr. Shiba!" Rei looked over the side of the large stack of folders and files in her arms once she noticed Isshin standing in the hallway. Her relieved smile quickly vanished when she stepped on her untied shoelace and fell face first onto the ground with a loud thud while her files and papers flew everywhere.

" Uh..." Isshin stared at the fallen form of Rei, a trail of smoke seeming to drift out of her ears, for several awkward seconds before asking, "Are you alright Rei?"

" I'm sorry!" Rei apologized as she got back up. Organizing the folders as best she could, Rei continued, "I forgot my glasses and I can't see that well right now! Do you know where Lady Ragyo is? It's really important that I speak with her!"

" She's in there," Isshin numbly pointed towards the study, "But I don't think she wants to - "

" Lady Ragyo!" Rei ignored Isshin's warning as she barged through the doors and made a beeline towards her boss, "I have the latest reports from the European office. The market saturation values for Revocs products are thirteen percent lower than the estimates!"

As Rei Hououmaru continued to list off things that she was absolutely sure Ragyo needed to take care of right away, Isshin shook his head. That girl really needed a vacation.

End Dream

Isshin woke up with a snort. Yawning and rubbing his face, he sat up and noticed that it was almost ten at night. Noticing his phone on the table, Isshin began to panic. Kinue should have arrived at Honnou City by now and she most likely already met Ururu.

"Oh crap," Isshin raced to his phone and frantically began dialing a number. He can't believe he completely forgot to tell Aikuro about Ururu. If Kinue met Ururu before he had a chance to explain, things were going to get bad.

---

...

---

Ichigo was relaxing after a terrible, at least terrible to him, day. First Ryuko had the bad idea of forming a Fight Club, but once she saw how much work it required she pawned it off to Mako without even asking her and finally he was once again kidnapped by Gamagori and brought before Satsuki Kiryuin. He wondered if it was healthy to begin thinking of all of this as normal.

"What are you thinking about, Ichigo?" Ururu asked in concern from her spot next to him. They were sitting on the roof of Mako's new condo, where her family had been relocated once she became the Fight Club president. It was similar enough to Ururu's place, she did live in the One-Star Residential District after all, but it was quite the step up from the Slums they were used to.

"Ah, nothing," Ichigo waved his hand dismissively.

Ururu looked at him before turning her gaze towards Tournesol, which Ichigo was holding in his hand and staring at intently, "It doesn't look like nothing."

Ichigo sighed, "I'm just thinking about everything, is all."

A lot has happened to him since his arrival at Honnouji Academy. With everything that's happened, from No Late Day to Nui Harime to Satsuki Kiryuin's persistent and pathetic attempts at flattery, Ichigo hasn't had the chance to just sit back and relax. Every time that he's thought he would have the time to do just that, something happened to annoy or piss him off, "It's just weird, you know? Everything that's happened here just feels really weird. A couple of months ago I would have thought people wearing clothes that could talk and transform was stupid, but now that I have Mugetsu everything has changed."

" You better not be talking about me, Ichigo," Mugetsu growled sleepily before yawning and closing her eyes, "Because if you are, I'm... going... to... zzz..."

"It's not so bad being here, actually," Ururu smiled gently as she pulled her legs closer to her chest, "It feels more natural and safe than Karakura High School. Everybody is so nice and friendly and they don't look at me like I'm some sort of outcast. Here I have friends like you, Mako and Ryuko. Jinta was my only friend back in Karakura besides your sisters."

Ichigo didn't say anything in response. He hadn't known how hard of a time Ururu had fitting in and making friends until he asked Kisuke about it. She was too socially awkward and was so afraid of hurting someone with her supernatural strength that she never made too many friends. It made sense why Jinta, who was strong in his own right but nowhere near Ururu's level, would be her closest friend.

"It's not going to be safe here for much longer," Ichigo commented stoically. Whatever it was Satsuki was planning, he knew for a fact that it wouldn't be diplomatic. If the worst came to pass, he would have to fight her again, "Odds are you're going to be forced to fight. I... uh... know you don't like fighting and conflict, but can you do it?"

Ururu was silent as she thought about Ichigo's question. Could she willingly go and fight someone? Being forced to protect those she cared about from a known threat, like Nui Harime, was one thing, but if she were to fight someone, Ururu was afraid that she might kill them. Her strength was too high for a normal person to survive a single attack. The students of Honnouji Academy may have Goku Uniforms, but none of them, not even the Elite Four, could stand up to her if she went all out on them.

"If it's to protect my friends, I think I can do it," Ururu said as she stared up at the moon.

The next several minutes passed in silence, which was broken when the door to the top of the building was kicked open. Turning to see who it was, they saw it was Mako who, before saying anything, grunted as she hefted a large bag over her shoulder, nearly hitting Ryuko in the process, "Hello Ururu! Hello Ichigo! What are you two doing up here?"

"Just thinking about some things," Ichigo answered with a shrug of his shoulders, "What's with the bag?"

"This is all the food I was able to buy that I've never tried before!" Mako exclaimed while she literally dove into the large sack. As she looked for something in particular, causing Ryuko to duck out of the way lest she get hit in the face by a piece of exotic fruit, Mako continued to talk, "There are fruits and meats in here that I've never seen before. I didn't even know a color like this existed! It's fantabulous! Oh, that reminds me! I found something for you, Ururu!"

"Something for me..." Ururu tilted her head, "Like what?"

"Here!" Mako thrust a piece of food into Ururu's mouth, "I know how much you like crabs, lobsters and other shellfish! So I had my mom order this! It's called a crab omelet! So what do you think?"

Ururu chewed on the food for a few moments, her eyes glazing over, before quickly turning to Mako and saying, in the happiest tone Ichigo had ever heard from the normally quiet girl, "That was the best thing I have ever tasted. Do you have any more?"

"Nope, but I can order more!" Mako said happily with a wave of her arms, "My family has enough money now, and it's all thanks to Ryuko!"

Ryuko scratched the back of her neck in embarrassment. The constant thanks from Mako's family were too much for her. She started the Fight Club so that Mako and her family would have a good life that was free of hardship and poverty. While she and her dad never saw eye to eye for the most part, Ryuko had grown up quite privileged and she wanted Mako to have the same opportunities.

"Come on, Mako," Ryuko blushed and turned away, "You don't need to constantly thank me. I did it for you as a friend, not a favor."

Ichigo rolled his eyes as Mako exclaimed that she was never going to stop thanking Ryuko, "Hey Mako, just don't let the wealth go to your head. I know a guy who's really wealthy, and he's such a boring and snooty asshole."

"Don't worry, Ichigo!" Mako pumped her fist in the air, "As long as my name is Mako Mankanshoku, I will not let the corruption inherent to wealth and power get the better of me!"

Ryuko laughed at Mako's behavior. She really did appreciate Mako's sense of humor, even if her friend didn't realize it. It helped to even out some of the weird and crazy things that tended to happen at Honnouji Academy.

" Ryuko. Something's coming."

"Huh?" Ryuko turned to Senketsu. Up until now her Kamui had been fast asleep, "What are you talking about, Senketsu?"

" Hmm..." Senketsu's single eye narrowed in contemplation, "It's just like I felt before your fight against Satsuki Kiryuin. Another Kamui is approaching us!"

"What? Another Kamui?" Ryuko's outburst caught the attention of everyone on the roof, "Can you say anything more - "

Ryuko barely saw it coming out of the corner of her eye. One second she was asking Senketsu to tell her what he felt before she saw a blue star-like object appear in the distance. The next thing she knew she was tumbling backwards across the rooftop. Skidding to a stop with her face against the roof, more pissed off than unharmed, she picked herself up and was immediately crushed under Mako's big bag of food.

"Oh, for fuck's sake..." Ryuko's muffled voice grumbled as she dragged herself free from under the bag, "Who the hell would attack us on a school night?"

"Please watch your language," An older female voice chastised, "A young lady like yourself should not speak so crudely, especially around the presence of boys."

"Huh?" Ryuko squinted as the smoke from whatever impacted against the roof cleared away before gasping when she saw the woman standing between her and Ichigo was Kinue Kinagase, "Hey, I know you. You're that woman who saved my life after my fight against Sanageyama."

Kinue's mouth curled up in the barest hint of an approving smile. It appeared that Ryuko had taken her loss against Sanageyama to better improve herself. She could feel the difference in Senketsu's power. While it wasn't appreciably noticeable just yet, Kinue was certain Ryuko would only continue to get stronger, "I'm glad you remember me. I saw the end of your fight. You were quite impressive to come up with a plan on the fly like that. Well done."

"Err... thanks," Ryuko muttered before everything caught up with her, "Hey! Wait a second. Why did you just attack me?"

"I'm afraid that you are mistaken. I didn't attack you," Kinue corrected as she slammed the silver case hanging off her back onto the roof hard enough to create spider cracks in the concrete. As Kinue undid the three latches on her case, she continued speaking, "Neither did I come here to attack Ichigo or your friend, Mako. My goal here tonight is to stop her."

Kinue pointed to Ururu, who was oblivious about the whole thing, "Me?"

Narrowing her eyes at Ururu's question, Kinue opened her silver case and pulled out an intricately designed blade. She couldn't afford to go easy on her opponent. Doing so would only end up in her death or worse. Her weapon of choice, which she noticed was as polished as ever, if the glint of light reflecting off the faint red surface meant anything, would be perfect. While her blade wasn't as sharp or powerful as the Scissor Blade or Tournesol, it would suffice for her mission. As she gripped the handle of the blade with both hands, Kinue let her eyes drift downwards and read the letters mechanically etched onto the surface of the weapon.

G.E.N.J.I.

The Genji blade was one of Professor Matoi's last completed projects before his murder. While the Sword Scissors he created were superior in almost every way, they were prohibitively expensive to create, half of Nudist Beach's annual budget went into their creation, and took nearly a year to shape and form. The Genji blade, although unable to sever and kill Life Fibers, was nearly as sharp and much cheaper to produce. It was depressing that Professor Matoi was the only person who knew how to create her blade. Towards the end of his life he became increasingly paranoid that someone was following him and refused to save any copies of his work in fear of it being discovered and used against Nudist Beach. Thus Kinue was stuck with the only copy of the G.E.N.J.I. project, which she continued to call the Genji blade out of respect for her superior.

"Don't be coy with me," Kinue stated while pointing her Genji blade directly at Ururu, "I am well aware of who you truly are, so why don't you stop fooling around and just drop the act?"

Ururu seemed to pull into herself upon the accusing glare coming from Kinue, "I'm sorry, but I don't know what you're talking about. My name is Ururu."

Kinue's eyes narrowed, "So be it."

"Hey! Wait just a damn minute!" Ichigo slid in between Ururu and Kinue. He needed to stop things before they got out of hand. He didn't know why Kinue was targeting Ururu, but he wasn't about to let the two of them fight each other, "Tell me what's going on, Kinue."

"All you need to know is that I'm doing this to save you," Kinue stated regretfully as she swiftly flew across the rooftop. Just as she passed by Ichigo, who was surprised at her speed, she whispered, "You will thank me later on."

Stomping down on the roof in front of Ururu, Kinue cocked her fist back before swinging it. Ururu had only a second for her blue eyes to widen in shock before she was hit in the face hard enough to blast her off the roof and into the distance with Kinue hot on her heels.

"Damn it!" Ichigo cursed as he watched a cloud of smoke rise from where Ururu impacted the ground, "What the hell's gotten into her?"

"I don't know and I don't care," Ryuko argued as she stood to Ichigo's left. Reaching towards her red glove, she frowned and said, "She saved me from Sanageyama and I'm thankful for that, but she's attacking Ururu for no reason. That means she has to be taken down."

Ichigo looked ready to protest Ryuko's involvement, but relented upon seeing the determined look on her face. Kinue had a Kamui of her own, so if he tried to intervene in her misguided fight against Ururu, he might be overpowered and defeated by her. He had felt her power back at his dorm. It was not something that he could take lightly.

"Fine," he muttered as he moved his hand towards the spaulder on his left shoulder.

"Mako!" Ryuko turned her head around towards her still stunned friend. Since Mako had strapped the bag of food onto her back, when Kinue landed on the roof Mako found herself unable to get up and was comically kicking and waving her arms and legs in the air, "You should get somewhere safe."

"Ok!" Mako saluted Ryuko while tilted upside-down as she continued to try and free herself.

"You ready for this, Ichigo?"

"Yeah," Ichigo's fingers pressed down on his spaulder and allowed the two needles to pierce his skin, "Let's go save Ururu."

---

...

---

With nary a grunt of pain Ururu opened her eyes and sat up. Shaking her head to dislodge any rubble or debris that may have gotten stuck in her hair, she stood up and looked around for any clue as to where she was. Casting her gaze upwards at the large wall leading to the Two-Star Mansions, Ururu realized just how far she had been hit.

"That wasn't very nice of her," Ururu lamented sadly, tears threatening to fall from her eyes, "I didn't even do anything to deserve being attacked."

Ururu couldn't comprehend or understand why Kinue had punched her or even why she was angry with her for that matter. Wracking her mind for an answer failed to come up with anything of substance. For all she knew, Kinue had attacked her for no good reason other than to try and cause her pain. With her mind firmly wrapped around that idea, Ururu decided that she needed to protect herself from any more of Kinue's attacks. While she was still firmly against killing her, nothing would ever change that, Ururu would do everything in her power to defend herself.

As she stepped through a hole in the wall that she made upon being attacked, Ururu noticed that it was an almost perfect outline of her body, but that was physically impossible. She may not have an extensive background in physics or engineering, but if her body crashed through a wall, it should either have destroyed the wall or simply created a large, circular hole. An outline of her body with small cracks radiating outwards was impossible. Confused by what she was seeing, Ururu turned away before she developed a headache...

... Just in time to see Kinue falling towards her with her Genji blade arcing silently through the air towards her neck.

Ururu's eyes widened in momentary surprise before she quickly sidestepped around the blade, allowing it pass only inches from her body. As a large trench was created in the ground from Kinue's attack, Ururu took the opportunity to leap back and away from the woman, but she underestimated Kinue's speed. Ururu's feet had barely touched the ground before Kinue was upon her once more. Leaning back to avoid a decapitation strike, Ururu's eyes locked gazes with Kinue's and suddenly Kinue spun her blade around her wrist and stabbed downwards, hoping to pierce Ururu through the stomach.

Vaulting up in the air and away from the attack, Ururu was quickly forced back on the defensive as Kinue swung her Genji blade in a nearly completely unpredictable manner. What Kinue didn't know, and most people didn't aside from Kisuke Urahara, was that Ururu had an extremely analytical mind.

Each time she dodged one of Kinue's attacks, her mind was already processing the data on her opponent's movements and power. From the way that Kinue breathed before each attack to the way her arms flexed and twisted, Ururu was studying and remembering everything. So when Kinue unintentionally repeated one of her attacks, Ururu simply twisted around the blade and clasped Kinue's wrist within her hand.

"Why do you keep trying to attack me?" Ururu tightened her hold upon Kinue's wrist, "What did I ever do to you?"

Kinue stood there, purposely ignoring Ururu's voice, as she tested the limits of Ururu's hold on her, "Why do you continue to pretend you don't know what I'm talking about? There are no witnesses around for your games that you love so much to play... Nui Harime."

"Nui Harime?" The confusion in Ururu's voice bothered Kinue. From what she knew about the Grand Couturier, whenever someone managed to figure out a vital part of her plan, she would smile and reveal herself in all her glory before proceeding to kill them. She wasn't expecting to see the emotions literally begin bleeding off Ururu's face, leaving her to stare at a completely emotionless girl, "I am not Nui Harime. Do not make that mistake again."

"There is one thing you should understand about me," Kinue said and was satisfied when she saw Ururu become confused when she tightened her grip on her wrist to the bone a normal human's bones would shatter and yet nothing happened, "I am not as brittle as a normal human!"

Kinue crouched down slightly before jumping off the ground and into the air. With Ururu's hand still gripping her wrist, Kinue pivoted in midair and planted her foot against Ururu's cheek. Said girl didn't utter anything, not even a gasp of pain, as she was forced to let go of Kinue and staggered back. Kinue's elation upon getting a solid hit quickly disappeared when Ururu lowered her hand and showed that she was perfectly fine. There was not even a scratch or bruise upon her face. She should have expected that. Nui Harime wasn't someone that could be easily harmed.

Tilting her head to the side, Ururu asked something that had been troubling her, "How do you know Ichigo?"

"I don't believe that's any of your business," Kinue stated as she prepared herself for her next move. Raising her Genji blade and gripping the weapon with both hands, she tried to think of a plan to take down Ururu, "All that's important is stopping your plans involving Ichigo and Ryuko."

Kinue's words deeply hurt and offended Ururu. She couldn't understand why Kinue thought she was trying to hurt Ichigo or Ryuko. They were her friends. She would never do anything to put them in harm's way.

"You're lying," Ururu took a single step towards Kinue, causing the weapon to tense up in retaliation. Instead of outright attacking her, Ururu slid one leg outwards and tucked her left fist back behind her body. As a shimmer of purple energy surrounded her right hand, Ururu said, "I'm still working on this attack so please try not to die. Dragon Dash."

Kinue tried to follow her movements, but all she could hear were the very fast pitter-patter of Ururu's feet along the ground before she was upon her with her fist cocked back and aimed for her stomach.

" She's fast."

She had been prepared to deal with the Grand Couturier's speed, but how the hell could she expect Nui Harime to engage in a direct frontal assault? That girl's modus operandi was practically sneaking up on her opponent before slicing them apart. Speaking of which, Kinue was worried why Nui hadn't brought out her Scissor Blade yet. Surely even Nui wasn't overconfident to the point where she could take her on and win.

Tensing her body up, Kinue quickly braced her arms against her Genji blade as Ururu's fist impacted against it. There was a stream of purple and blue sparks escaping off her blade as she desperately held back of the flow of power emanating from Ururu's fist. As she stared over her blade, Kinue locked gazes with Ururu, and for a moment she embraced the notion she might be wrong about Ururu. That quickly came to an end when Ururu's attack managed to slip under her Genji blade and explode against her right shoulder.

There was a sonic boom as Kinue was tossed through a building. As she spun through the air, she snapped her arm out and dragged her Genji blade along the ground, creating a large trench in the ground but arresting her movements at the same time. Breathing heavily as she finally stopped moving, Kinue looked at her arm and frowned when she saw that her jacket over her sleeve and half her chest had been disintegrated by the attack, exposing Danketsu's blue and purple armor.

"Damn it," Kinue stood up and grabbed her shoulder with her left hand. She expected that much power from the Grand Couturier, but that attack she was just hit with was entirely new. She hadn't heard anything about Nui Harime being able to do something like that. In the end, Kinue was simply relieved she had managed to deflect the majority of the power away from her body.

Glancing down at her ruined jacket, Kinue decided that continuing to wear the other half was now completely pointless. In one quick motion, she grabbed and tore it off her body, exposing Danketsu's upper half. As she saw Danketsu's eyes darting around in glee at the unrestrained access to the world, Kinue felt a presence land behind her. Turning around quickly, she saw Ururu standing just a few meters away from her with a perplexed look adorning her face.

"A Kamui..." Ururu's voice was still unemotional, but there was no hiding the curiosity in her voice. It was clear that she hadn't been expecting Kinue to be wearing a Kamui, "Why do you have a Kamui like Ryuko and Ichigo?"

" Oh. This is just perfect."

This was the worst thing that could have happened to her. Kinue always knew that Nui Harime would eventually find out about Danketsu. She was the Grand Couturier after all, so it made sense she would be able to spot her Kamui from a mile away. She just never assumed it would be under such circumstances. Raising her Genji blade and holding it aloft above her shoulder, Kinue asked, "Does it really matter if I do?"

" What's going on? Are you actually fighting someone?"

Danketsu looked around, her eyes full of excitement, before they focused on Ururu, "Oh! Please tell me you're going to destroy her completely."

"This is the Grand Couturier," Kinue chided. As much as she was trying to make up for years of neglecting her Kamui, Danketsu's questions and voice still managed to annoy her, "Not going all out would be tantamount to suicide. Besides, she's targeted Ichigo and Ryuko. I can't let her do anything to them."

" Why should I give a crap about those other two humans and their pathetic excuses for Kamui?" Danketsu spat out in disgust before adding, "Don't assume I feel the same things you do. I will never work together with you on anything."

"I do know that," Kinue said, causing Danketsu to pause in the realization that her wearer was actually agreeing with her on something "But I feel I should remind you that fighting me for control of my body will probably destroy the only chance you'll have at defeating Nui Harime. Odds are she will be prepared for whatever tricks we have up our sleeves next time. But if you want to be so stubborn about it..."

" Hmm..." Danketsu actually seem to be mulling over Kinue's words, "I hate you, but I hate Nui Harime even more. For just this once I will not fight you. Use my power to destroy this Life Fiber abomination!"

Immediately after Danketsu's announcement, Kinue felt the Kamui's presence in her mind disappear. For the first time since she was forcibly bonded to Danketsu, Kinue could access all of her power without fearing being overwhelmed by the Life Fibers. As she stared at the palm of her hand, contemplating how it was to be able to feel again without risking losing control, Kinue turned to Ururu, who was still standing and watching her, and asked, "Tell me something, Grand Couturier. Why haven't you attacked me?"

"Because that would be rude," Ururu answered while tilting her head. She made it a point to ignore Kinue calling her Nui Harime because that just wasn't true. Kinue may think she was Nui, but Ururu knew that she was very different from that girl, "Ichigo would be upset if I beat you by cheating."

" Manners from the Grand Couturier. I never thought I'd see the day, but still..."

Something wasn't right about this. Everything Kinue knew pointed to Ururu Tsumugiya being Nui Harime, but several things weren't lining up. Deciding that talking was out of the question, Kinue took a deep breath to calm her nerves. Holding her Genji blade parallel to the ground, Kinue momentarily stared directly at Ururu before the twin vents on her shoulder blades burst to life, expelling a mixture of light purple and blue energy behind her. Biting her lower lip, Kinue took a single step and immediately flew inches over the ground towards a surprised Ururu.

With her arms spread out to her sides, Ururu cross-stepped and spun around the attack before jamming her elbow into Kinue's side. While Ururu sensed she had hit her opponent with enough force to temporarily incapacitate a shinigami at a lieutenant's level, she was shocked as much as she could be when Kinue simply shrugged off the attack like it was nothing. After quickly ducking under Kinue's retaliatory strike and leaping back, Ururu looked down and noticed a tear along her No-Star uniform.

Upset at the damage to her favorite uniform, Ururu nevertheless did not take her attention off the fight. When she heard the telltale sign of something quickly moving through the air, she pivoted on her right foot and narrowly dodged being skewered by Kinue's Genji blade. Stepping inside Kinue's guard, Ururu proceeded to slam her heel into Kinue's wrist, causing her to let go of her weapon. As Kinue stepped back, wincing slightly in pain from the attack, Ururu planted her hands on the ground and attempted to deliver a double-heeled knockout blow to Kinue. To Ururu's surprise, as her heels just grazed Kinue's face, the woman seemed to shimmer before her form disappeared entirely.

"Huh?"

Ururu looked around for her opponent. She was surprised that Kinue had been able to move quickly enough that her eyes were unable to follow her movements. Looking everywhere for where Kinue might be coming from to attack her, Ururu wasn't prepared for a heavy blow to hit her back hard enough to lift her off the ground. Gasping more from the shock of the impact than any actual pain she felt, Ururu was thrown through the air and into a nearby building when Kinue spun around and slammed her foot into the small of her back.

Landing back on the ground, Kinue sprinted towards where Ururu had crashed with her Genji blade trailing along the ground. She needed to press her advantage while the Grand Couturier was momentarily down. If she didn't, odds are Nui would simply reappear right outside of the building she crashed into with a sadistic smile on her face.

" But why she hasn't thrown off her disguise is bothering me," Kinue jumped up and landed on a piece of rubble that allowed her to gaze through the rising cloud of smoke, "I can definitely feel her strength, and her regeneration is as fast as ever, so why does she refuse to shed her disguise as Ururu?"

"Double Moon."

Kinue quickly leaned backwards as Ururu appeared out of the smoke. As her body slowly fell, Kinue's eyes widened when she saw Ururu plant her hands on the ground before spinning and kneeling her in the underside of her chin. With spittle flying out of her mouth, Kinue's gasp of pain was cut off as Ururu grabbed her ankle and threw her through the air.

" What's up with her tactics?" Kinue spun her body around and dug her feet into the ground to arrest her movement. Once she managed to come to a complete stop, courtesy of some last second help from her Genji blade, Kinue noticed that two long furrows had been dug in the ground from her newly exposed purple high heels.

" She's not fighting like she did the first time." Kinue ducked under Ururu's fist before driving the hilt of her Genji blade deep into Ururu's stomach. Shrugging off the attack without a sign of being in pain, an emotionless Ururu continued to attack Kinue at faster and faster speeds, forcing the older woman to go on the defensive.

" Where is the taunting? The mocking? The disregard for civilian casualties?" Kinue winced when Ururu managed to land a kick in her side, but quickly recovered before clasping both her hands together and slamming them down on the back of Ururu's neck, "It's like I'm fighting an entirely different person... but that's impossible. There is no human on earth with the same level of strength and speed as Nui Harime. Who else is there besides Ragyo Kiryuin that could keep up with my level of power after Danketsu decided to work alongside me?"

" This is pathetic, even from you," Danketsu stated angrily, "Why is she still breathing?"

"Give it a rest. I thought you weren't going to fight me?" Kinue retorted as she wiped the trail of saliva from the corner of her mouth. That last attack from Ururu had destroyed her favorite pair of boots, leaving her with only the tattered remains of her pants, "Besides, she's the Grand Couturier for a reason. Thinking that killing her will be as easy as breathing is just asking for her to kill me."

" So you say," Danketsu's eyes drifted downwards towards her feet, "I see that my full form is nearly visible. It was fucking stupid for you to hide what we are under all those layers of idiotic and ugly clothing. How shameful."

"Did you expect me to just travel around the world wearing nothing but you?" Kinue retorted with a roll of her eyes, "Revocs would have come down on my head so fast it would still be spinning. I wouldn't be surprised if Ragyo herself came after me."

" You may not be embarrassed to be one with me," Danketsu said smugly, "But your idiotic fear of being caught limited my power. Because you were so fucking stupid as to assume you could hide me under those layers of clothing, my power was limited."

"And you're telling me all this now?" Kinue asked sarcastically.

" Yes," Danketsu replied bluntly, "I fucking hate you, so why would I allow you the chance to access more of my power? You and I may share one body, but that does not mean I have to like it in the slightest. By the way, I would block that kick unless you want to be suddenly missing your head."

Kinue quickly brought her forearm up and winced in pain as Ururu's foot impacted against her arm. Gritting her teeth and pushing herself past the pain, she twisted her arm around and tried to grab Ururu's ankle only for the girl to plant her other leg on her shoulder and jump out of range.

" It felt like my arm was about to break," Kinue knew with certainty that if it wasn't for Danketsu, her arm would have shattered in at least a dozen places from that last attack.

"Are you ready to stop fighting yet?"

Ururu's question startled Kinue, "What are you trying to imply?"

"This fight is pointless," Ururu shook her head quickly enough to cause her pigtails to bounce around, "You're fighting me because you think I'm Nui Harime, but I'm not. If you would please simply believe me, we could stop fighting and go back to Ichigo and Ryuko."

Kinue didn't bother saying anything as she gripped what remained of her pants and ripped them off her body, finally exposing Danketsu's full and true appearance for the first time in many years. Much like Ryuko and Satsuki, she wore thigh high heeled boots of a predominantly blue color with purple glowing lines etched intricately along the length. At the front and back of the top of the boots, several purple skin-tight suspenders connected with the sides of her leotard.

"Oh," Ururu gazed at Danketsu with awe, "How pretty."

Gripping the hilt of her Genji blade with both hands, Kinue took a deep breath and focused herself. She couldn't let whatever mind games Nui Harime was playing affect her. If she wanted to stop the Grand Couturier and save Ichigo and Ryuko, she needed to finish the fight now.

Ururu sighed miserably when she saw Kinue was willing to continue fighting. She hated pointless fighting like this. It was clear to the young girl's mind that Kinue was totally convinced she was Nui Harime and nothing she could say or do would change her mind. Ururu didn't understand how she could be confused with someone so weird and psychotic. There had to be more than two girls with superhuman strength on the planet, so why was she the one getting confused with Nui Harime?

Shaking her head, Ururu refocused her thoughts when she saw Kinue gathering energy in her Genji blade. If Kinue wanted to fight her, Ururu would hit back with everything she had until Kinue was unable to fight any more. She would not kill her. Ichigo seemed to be familiar with the woman, so if she killed Kinue, Ichigo would be upset with her and Ururu wanted to avoid that at all costs.

"I don't wish to fight you anymore," Ururu crossed her arms as she began gathering energy, "But you leave me no choice. I must defeat you now. Shimmering Cut."

With her hand cocked back, Ururu ran towards Kinue with her body enveloped in a faint purple aura that was barely perceivable, even to Kinue's enhanced sight. Jumping up into the air in retaliation, Kinue spins around before swinging her Genji blade downward towards Ururu. Both attacks, purple and blue, met in the middle and clashed for dominance. After a few seconds of a stalemate, there was an explosion of energy as everything near the two combatants was simply blown away.

---

...

---

Satsuki Kiryuin could not sleep.

It was not for a lack of trying on her part. She had been sound asleep not an hour ago when the sounds coming from the trapped and secured Junketsu became so loud that she felt the need to investigate the disturbance. As she stood on the other side of the bulletproof glass separating her from the rabid Kamui, Satsuki had astutely noted that despite its behavior, Junketsu was not looking at her. Rather, it seemed to be solely focused on some point out in Honnou City. That was why Satsuki was clad in Junketsu and stood on top of Honnouji City with a stern expression on her face. If someone or something that could agitate Junketsu was currently in Honnou City, she needed to deal with it.

"What have you found, Inumuta?"

Hoka Inumuta, although tired and wearing a normal pair of pajamas, bowed respectfully as he typed away on his laptop, "I've been searching through the video feeds of the cameras through the individual districts. Although I found nothing of interest in the Slums, something is going on in the One-Star Residential District that you should see."

Satsuki turned and stood behind Inumuta as he brought up the video feed from near the One-Star Botanical Gardens. As a figure darted into view and stood looking off into the distance, she frowned and asked, "Ururu Tsumugiya. Do you know what she's doing?"

"Wait just a second," Inumuta said as he typed in a few commands.

As the other figure came at Ururu only for said girl to easily dodge around the strike and leap out of view of the camera, Satsuki could not hide the surprise in her voice, "Another Kamui?"

"Indeed," Inumuta was flabbergasted and astonished that there was yet another Kamui in Honnou City. He had thought such attire were prohibitively dangerous for a normal human to wear. Lady Satsuki was, of course, different but for some reason Ryuko Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki could also withstand the dangerous energies coursing through the pure Life Fiber outfits, "This woman appears to be in her early to mid-thirties and possesses a Kamui with a blue and purple color configuration."

Satsuki narrowed her eyes further as Inumuta froze the feed and allowed her to get a good glance at the same woman that interrupted Sanageyama's fight against Matoi, "She's the woman that saved Matoi during her rematch against Sanageyama. So my suspicions were indeed correct. She does possess a Kamui of her own. That explains how she was able to stop my Bakuzan so easily."

"Shall I inform Gamagori to apprehend her?"

"No," Satsuki turned and looked toward the horizon while the wind blew her hair to the side, "If she was able to stand up to my power, Gamagori will have no chance of apprehending her. Instead, I want you to record her fight. Study every one of her techniques as well as what she says. This is a perfect opportunity to bear witness to a new Kamui the likes of which I have never seen before!"

" More importantly, it allows me to learn more about Ururu Tsumugiya," Satsuki thought calmly to herself as Inumuta left to carry out her orders. Junketsu was still acting up and she could see flashes of light through the One-Star Resident District as Kinue and Ururu continued to fight. The fact that Ururu, despite wearing a No-Star uniform, was facing a Kamui-wearer on even terms meant there was more to the girl than she first thought. She was someone that Satsuki would need to keep an eye on in the future. There was no telling who she was taking orders from or whether even the Ururu that she had seen was the true persona at all.

" You have such fascinating colleagues, Ichigo," Satsuki smirked as the outline of a plan formed in her mind, "But are they as close as you think they are?"

---

...

---

Kinue panted heavily as she pulled herself out of a pile of rubble. Clenching her fist tightly in frustration, she managed to pick herself up and get back onto her feet. After stumbling briefly from exhaustion, she hopped down and noticed Ururu waiting for her.

Her adversary appeared to be just as tired as she was, but unlike her, Ururu had no visible signs of injury on her body. That made sense to Kinue. The Grand Couturier was able to regenerate from any injuries she sustained, if someone was strong and fast enough to cause them in the first place. The one thing Nui Harime couldn't quickly recover from was simple exhaustion. During her fight against the Nu in Rome, Kinue had begun to see signs of the Grand Couturier starting to get sloppy and vulnerable. The only problem was that Kinue was even more tired at the time.

Tightening her grip on her Genji blade, Kinue raised it over her shoulder and stared at Ururu. Biting her lower lip and summoning the last dredges of her strength, Kinue twisted her wrists and soared towards Ururu.

Ururu saw Kinue coming towards her and was conflicted on what to do. Kinue was perhaps one of the few people she had fought that hadn't been killed by her attacks, even though she was holding back a lot of her power. Granted, Kinue wasn't nearly as strong as she was, but Ururu was still impressed. She was sure that Kinue would have made a valuable ally if they hadn't been on either end of this misunderstanding. Closing her eyes, Ururu decided to hit Kinue with everything she had since fighting at three-quarters of her full power just wasn't enough anymore. At first Ururu had hoped to incapacitate Kinue long enough for her to explain everything, but Kinue's Kamui was strong enough to let her shrug off that much of her power with only sustaining minor injuries and wounds. Cocking her fist back, Ururu flexed her ankle and shot off towards Kinue. This one punch would be enough to stop her cold. She just hoped it didn't kill Kinue in the process.

"That's enough!"

Ururu's head turned slightly at the familiar voice before Ichigo, clad in Mugetsu, crashed down between her and Kinue. Turning to face Kinue, he spun around and managed to block her Genji blade with Tournesol.

"Ichigo Kurosaki?" Kinue was shocked to find him here. She was sure he would have stayed back and out of harm's way, "What are you doing here?"

"What do you think?" he growled, feeling slightly relieved when Ryuko, wearing a transformed Senketsu, landed next to Ururu and began checking her for injuries. Smirking slightly upon seeing she was alright, Ichigo asked, "Why the hell are you attacking Ururu?"

"That's not Ururu!" Kinue let a brief burst of emotion escape her steel-like hold and was fortunate that Danketsu had decided to still stay out of her mind for the moment. Pressing down on Tournesol with enough force to cause Ichigo's knees to buckle, she said, "Ururu Tsumugiya died before she came here! That girl over there is Nui Harime! I've fought her before! There is no one else on Earth with that much strength and power!"

"Ururu's always been special!" With a supreme amount of effort, Ichigo managed to force Kinue's blade back. He was impressed that even in her tired and exhausted state she still possessed enough energy to nearly overpower him. He shuddered to think what it would be like to fight a completely refreshed Kinue, "I don't know why you think she's somehow Nui Harime, but I've known Ururu for a long time. Sure, she might have superhuman strength and other abilities, but that doesn't mean she's who you think she is!"

"Naiveté can be extremely dangerous Ichigo," Kinue grunted and held a hand against her arm. Now that there was a lull in the fight, she could feel her injuries starting to catch up to her. To be perfectly honest, part of her was relieved Ichigo had shown up when he did. Another minute or two and she wouldn't have been able to use her left arm at all, "Tell me something though. That girl, Ururu, was she always this strong?"

Ichigo turned to Ururu, who was being comforted by a reluctant and embarrassed Ryuko, before speaking, "When I first met her, Ururu asked me to wear safety gear because she was afraid her strength would kill me. She's very timid and scared that her power would hurt those close to her. I've met Nui Harime, and whoever she may be, one thing is for certain. She is a complete lunatic. There is no damn way Ururu could be Nui!"

"I see..." Kinue sighed in regret as she tightened her grip on her Genji blade, "I may have been a fool all this time. I - "

She was cut off as Ichigo's cell phone, which he somehow managed to duck away in a fold of Mugetsu's armor, began ringing. Recognizing the ringtone as belonging to his dad, because who else would use the 'Macho Man' song as their theme, he pulled it out and sarcastically asked, "What the hell do you want, dad?"

"Ichigo!" Isshin's voice came through the speaker so loudly that Ichigo was forced to hold his cell phone at arm's length lest he go deaf, "Thanks for picking up! I tried calling a few people all night and I kept getting their voicemail. "

"Then why the hell did you call me?" Ichigo shouted back.

"Because you always seem to know strange and odd people," Isshin replied honestly, "Have you seen your circle of friends? Hooligans and hoodlums the lot of them! Anyway, have you met a woman by the name of Kinue Kinagase?"

Yeah, she's standing right..." Ichigo paused as his brain kicked into high gear, "Hey, wait a damn second. How the hell do you even know her?"

"That's not important," Isshin quickly blurted out, "What is important is that I speak with her right this second!"

Ichigo thought about simply hanging up the phone, but he was sure his dad would call right back and be even more annoying. After several tense moments of debating the pros and cons of what to do, Ichigo decided to relent and tossed his phone to Kinue, "It's my dad. He wants to talk to you for some reason."

Kinue's eyebrow rose as she held the phone up to her ear, "Yes."

Ichigo and Ryuko tried to listen to what his dad was telling Kinue, but for some strange reason his voice had dropped to a normal human's level. What was interesting, though, was that Kinue's facial expression continued to shift between shock, confusion and abject realization.

"Are you completely certain about this? I know, but... alright," Kinue hung up the phone and tilted her head back before sighing dramatically. Closing her eyes and collapsing on the ground, she tossed Ichigo's phone back to him and muttered, "He could have told me this five hours ago and saved me all this trouble."

Turning to Ururu, Kinue let out a deep breath, "Look Ururu... I'm sorry I thought you were Nui Harime. I was just doing what I thought was the best course of action to save Ichigo and Ryuko from a psychopath like her."

"It's ok," Ururu didn't fully understand why Kinue had quickly changed her mind, but assumed it had something to do with what Mr. Kurosaki had told her on the phone. Perhaps he was calling to make sure Ururu wasn't confused with Nui Harime? Deciding to do some apologizing herself, Ururu bowed and said, "I'm sorry for hurting you so badly. Please forgive me."

"Please, don't say anything," Kinue stood up, with some difficulty, and began walking away. Before getting too far, she stopped and said, "I think I've overstayed my welcome in Honnou City. This vacation must come to an end, after all. But before I go, I have some parting words for you, Ryuko Matoi, from your father."

Ryuko's mouth opened in shock, "My... dad...?"

"Yeah," Kinue turned enough that one of her eyes was staring directly at Ryuko, "Do not let your anger and emotions get the better of you. Giving into your rage while wearing Senketsu is just as bad as killing yourself." Kinue, finished speaking to Ryuko, turned to Ichigo, "And you, Ichigo, stay out of trouble. You're just like Masaki, always willing to throw your life on the line to save others. Don't do anything stupid that can get you killed."

With nothing else to say, Kinue leapt off the ground and disappeared into the night, leaving the three teenagers behind.

"So what was that all about?" Ryuko asked while shouldering her red Scissor Blade, "She just comes here, fights Ururu for no reason and then apologizes? What did your dad say to her exactly?"

"I don't know," Ichigo stared at his phone for a moment before closing his fingers around it, "But my dad knows more about this stupid place than he told me."

"Are you going to talk to him?"

"No," Ichigo turned and began the long walk back to Mako's new home, "I know my dad. He'll tell me what he knows when he feels the time is right. I'm not going to push him or anything."

"Really?" Ryuko looked at Ichigo incredulously, "That doesn't seem smart."

Ichigo thought back to the Winter War when his dad exposed himself as a former shinigami captain. While he was stunned that his dad was a shinigami, Ichigo knew he wouldn't have kept it a secret if it wasn't important. That was why he was so calm about what just happened, "Yeah, I'm sure, but I'll ask him on Parent Student Day."

"Oh, yeah," Ryuko looked crestfallen at the mention of the school event, causing Ichigo to mentally facepalm at his stupidity.

"Why don't you use Mako's parents?" He asked, causing Ryuko to look at him strangely, "Don't they see you as their daughter or something already?"

"Hey, you got a point," Ryuko smiled as she was brought out of her funk, "I think Mako would really like that, although what I'm really starting to get curious about is your dad. Is he nice?"

Ichigo nervously looked away, "In a way..."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #8 - The Kamui Personality Test

There was a flash of light before Senketsu, in his sailor uniform appeared on the screen.

"Hello readers of To My Death I Fight," Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a salute as he raised his sleeve and pulled out a remote control, "You were all probably expecting another omake segment involving Nui Harime, Ichigo Kurosaki or some other character in a whacky and hilarious situation. Unfortunately, the author of the story has decided to write something educational instead. So i hope you're happy, because you're stuck listening to me instead of hearing about Kon's adventures through - "

Before he could spoil anything else, Mugetsu leapt out of nowhere and kicked Senketsu with one of her legs. As the male Kamui fell to the ground with his one visible eye swirling around dizzily, Mugetsu huffed and grabbed the remote control, "Humph. You should be honored to be doing this omake segment. Anyway, this particular omake is all about different Kamui Personalities!"

Mugetsu's sleeve pressed down on a button and immediately a short clip of Senketsu assaulting Ryuko appeared on the screen behind her, "Kamui are living beings and so they all have their own individual personalities that may or may not clash with their wearers. Take Senketsu for instance. He threw himself onto Ryuko Matoi without caring what she thought about wearing him while I came to a mutual accord with Ichigo."

"That's nonsense." Senketsu groaned as he got back up. Waving his sleeves at Mugetsu, he shouted, "The way I hear it, you threw yourself at Ichigo as well. Have you no shame?"

"Yes, because I asked Ichigo first," Mugetsu bluntly replied before turning away from Senketsu. Facing the camera once more, she pressed another button while pointedly ignoring her fellow Kamui's insults, "The personality of a Kamui can greatly influence the amount of power their wearer can access. The Kamui Danketsu, who is worn by Kinue Kinagase, is a prime example of what happens when Kamui and wearer are out of sync. She hates her wearer and this hatred holds back a lot of her potential. Why, I would never be like that with -"

Mugetsu was cut off as Junketsu appeared from off screen and hit her over the head with Bakuzan, which it had somehow stolen from Satsuki. Looking at Senketsu, it gave it a mock salute before proceeding to drag the unconscious Mugetsu away to parts unknown.

"Ah, thank you for that," Senketsu picked up the remote before scratching his lapels, "One day the author will have to decide on its gender and voice. Perhaps the budget will allow it next chapter? Anyway, it seems like we're out of time, so please don't unfavorite this story! With the anime on hold until September, this is my only job!"

Carry On Wayward Son

I had a bit of a dilemma while writing this chapter. I had originally intended to have the Mako versus Ryuko fight here (completely unlike the anime I assure you), but in order to do so, I would need to cut out a bit of the story to do so. While writing a fight is easy and helps move the story along, the plot and exposition given by said plot is much more important. So what originally started out as Chapter 21 became 21 and the first half (or three-quarters... It's a LONG fight scene) of Chapter 22. I do apologize to anyone that had expected to read the Two-Star Mako fight. You'll get it next chapter, which, coincidentally, is the beginning of Parent Student Day.

**Oh! I finally got a tvtropes page for this story! Since I can't link to tvtropes here, simply google "To My Death I Fight" and "tvtropes" and it should be in the top few searches. It's still a little new at the moment so it's a bit bare. If you see any missing tvtropes, pm me and I will add them in.*

**Also, a virtual cookie to anyone who can name the source of the dress at the end of the chapter. And anyone who I've already told cannot guess.*

**This story is now over 200,000 words!*

---

...

---

Chapter 21 - Carry On Wayward Son

The annoyance in the air was nearly palpable as Ichigo looked down at the formal letter in his hands. As he read the fancy script on the letter that spelled out his name, Ichigo looked at the One-Star student that had delivered it to him. The teen looked nervous just being in Ichigo's presence. No doubt he was thinking Ichigo was going to kick his ass for just breathing near him. Deciding to let the teen leave before he fainted from nervousness, Ichigo crumpled up the letter and tossed it over his shoulder without even reading it.

"You can tell Satsuki that my answer remains the same," Ichigo said to the teen, who was sweating in fear. Nodding frantically at Ichigo's answer, he turned and ran off, no doubt to inform Satsuki what Ichigo just told him.

" That was quite mean of you, Ichigo," Mugetsu commented.

"What?" Ichigo looked at his Kamui and scoffed, "You think I was actually going to hurt the guy? Nah, I was just messing with him. I'm just a little pissed off that Satsuki won't take the hint and leave me the hell alone."

" Another letter, huh?" Mugetsu seemed pensive about something before quickly adding, "Do you think she's interested in you?"

"Where the hell did that come from?" Ichigo growled at Mugetsu, who simply continued to stare up at him.

" Satsuki Kiryuin's interest seems too personal to be plutonic or business," Mugetsu paused as she mulled something over, "But then again, I am but a Kamui. Although I may be female, the inner workings of the human mind sometimes baffle me."

Ichigo didn't like nor did he appreciate Mugetsu's opinion of the matter. He didn't care if Satsuki Kiryuin had some sort of affection for him. He was never going to like someone who killed and imprisoned people for disagreeing with them. Her attempt to kill Ryuko after gaining Junketsu didn't help her case either. There was also the matter of Mugetsu's feelings for Junketsu. Ichigo had tried to get his Kamui to explain what she felt, but Mugetsu was surprisingly tight-lipped about the whole thing. All she would say was that Junketsu thought it was so much better than her. When he asked how she could know that if it never said a word, Mugetsu said that she could see it in Junketsu's eyes.

"What was that all about, Strawberry?" Nonon asked as she stuck her head out of the room. She was starting to get annoyed and curious about what was taking Ichigo so long. As she watched the One-Star student flee down the hallway, her lips curled up in a bemused smirk, "You scared the crap out of him. Did he ask you out or something?"

Ichigo glared at Nonon, who smiled mischievously at getting under his skin, "It was another one of Satsuki's errand boy. She keeps asking me to be her Student Council Vice-President and simply won't take no for an answer."

"WHAT?" Nonon nearly fell to the ground at what thought to be Ichigo's absolute stupidity. That was the reason he kept getting Student Council messengers over the last week? What the hell was wrong with him? Angrily clenching her fists, she grabbed Ichigo by the front of Mugetsu and shouted her displeasure, "Are you stupid or something? When Lady Satsuki asks you to be her Vice-President, you jump for joy and say yes! You're not supposed to ignore her gift that she places on your lap! No one, not even us Elite Four, are worthy enough of the honor she is bestowing upon you and you have the gall to so callously throw it away? You're one stupid bastard, Strawberry!"

"Shut up, Snake," Ichigo bit back, causing Nonon to stamp her foot angrily at Ichigo's nickname for her, "I don't need the commentary from the balcony. Besides, why the hell should you even care what I do? The last I heard, Satsuki kicked you out of the Elite Four after I defeated you. Why are you so concerned whether or not I take Satsuki up on her offer?"

"Er..." Nonon blushed in frustration as Ichigo caught her between a lie and her mission. Deciding to go about the best course of action, she kicked Ichigo in the shin and headed back into the classroom to finish her lunch. If she had her mouth full of food, then there was no way she could say anything incriminating to Ichigo without being socially rude.

The only other occupant in the room besides Nonon watched her storm past with a quirked eyebrow. Mako Mankanshoku, dressed in an expensive blue business suit with a matching skirt, turned to Ichigo who had followed Nonon into the room, "Jakuzure is correct, Ichigo. If you were to accept Lady Satsuki's offer of becoming the Student Council Vice-President, the prestige and honor of the Fight Club would forever eclipse the rest of the clubs in Honnouji Academy. No one would be able to contest our place and power."

"Screw that," Ichigo huffed as he sat down at a desk across from Mako, "And why are you even wearing a suit, Mako?"

"It's simple," Mako adjusted her glasses smugly, "As the President of the Fight Club it is my duty to set the standards of the club. By dressing formally and cleaning up my act, I am only encouraging the rest of the academy to view the club with a higher regard."

"Get rid of the suit. It makes you look ridiculous."

Ichigo wasn't really keen on the new Mako. She was becoming increasingly arrogant and stuck-up, which was exactly what he constantly warned her about throughout the week following Kinue's fight against Ururu. Ichigo knew it was the money and prestige of being the equivalent of a Two-Star student. He was just glad he hadn't decided to join the Fight Club alongside Ryuko. With the way Mako was running her ragged fighting all the other clubs, he would have likely died from exhaustion by now.

"No," Mako glared firmly at Ichigo from over the top of her glasses. She wasn't appreciating Ichigo's constant criticism about what she was doing, "Anyway, I did some calculations. If you were to accept Lady Satsuki's offer, she would be forced to concede a lot of power over Honnouji Academy to you in order to keep you in line and under her control."

"Do I look like I care about power?" Ichigo asked sarcastically and scoffed, "Satsuki is up to something. I can feel it. She's not someone who would simply give up power. I've talked to her a couple of times now and even fought her. I think I know how she thinks and acts. I would rather have my soul devoured than work under her."

"Wow, Strawberry," Nonon whistled mockingly, "That's really emo of you. Did you make that up just now or did you have to spend all night thinking about it?"

Just as Ichigo was about to say something, there was a loud groan as Ryuko opened the door to the room and promptly collapsed onto the ground from exhaustion. As Ryuko lay on the ground, mumbling something incoherently, Ururu walked in behind her and calmly sat down to eat her lunch.

"Hey, Ururu," Ichigo couldn't understand what Ryuko was trying to say. It sounded important judging from the volume at which she was saying it, "What did she say?"

Ururu glanced at Ryuko, who repeated what she mumbled, and turned to Ichigo, "She said she's really tired and would like some food."

Without thinking, Ichigo grabbed Nonon's lunch out of her hands, getting a squeaky 'what the hell' from her, and dropped it next to Ryuko's prone body, "Here. Have the rest of my lunch. I'm full."

"Hey!" Nonon stood up angrily and shouted indignantly, "That was my lunch, Strawberry!"

"Really?" Ichigo countered uncaringly, "Because I could swear everything in your lunch you stole from my dorm."

After finally gathering the strength necessary to get up off the floor, Ryuko yawned tiredly and collapsed into the nearest available chair. Sitting down with an audible sigh of relief, Ryuko began wolfing down what remained of Nonon's lunch, "This is great, Ichigo! You make this yourself?"

Ichigo glanced at an irate Nonon, "Something like that. So, how's the Fight Club working out?"

"Mako's a slave driver!" Ryuko exclaimed while being careful not to spit out any food. After grabbing Nonon's water bottle, causing the former Three-Star's lip to quiver in anger, Ryuko drank almost half of it before speaking, "I just fought the Basketball, Baseball, Wrestling and Soccer clubs all at once. I'm exhausted!"

"Don't get too relaxed, Ryuko," Mako informed her friend, "You have some more fights this afternoon, but I'm still setting up the time and place. You can relax for the next few hours until I'm done."

Ryuko frowned, "Yeah, I'll catch up with you later Mako."

As Mako left to go prepare everything, her high heels clicking confidently on the ground as she thought about the prospect of her family's wealth and status becoming permanent, Ryuko's frown deepened. She really missed the old Mako. Even her friend's imagination, which had gotten on her nerves once or twice, was something she greatly missed. Not knowing what to do about Mako, Ryuko decided to focus on other things for the moment. She could always come back to Mako at a later time, "So Ichigo, what are you going to wear to Parent Student Day? I hear there's a formal dress code and everything."

"There is?" Ichigo hadn't heard anything about a dress code and, gathering from Mugetsu's cough of surprise, neither did his Kamui. He knew well enough how Mugetsu felt about him wearing other clothes. Even if he didn't understand Mugetsu's feelings towards the matter, it was easier to just allow her to get her way rather than hearing her complain to him about it before demanding an apology.

"You can't possibly be that dense, Strawberry," Nonon mocked scornfully, "Parent Student Day was created by Lady Satsuki to make sure none of the students were having any trouble with their classes. Do you honestly think you'll be able to wear that ratty old Kamui tomorrow?"

" Ratty?" Mugetsu seethed and would have launched herself at Nonon if Ichigo hadn't been wearing her, "I'll show this pink haired bitch who is ratty!"

"Calm down, Mugetsu," Ichigo grumbled tiredly.

" You better not wear anything better than me!" Mugetsu warned angrily, "I am your best set of clothes and will remain as such!"

"Ha," Ryuko chuckled at Ichigo's misfortune with Mugetsu. Even as tired as she was, she could still take the time to enjoy seeing Ichigo getting flustered.

" The same goes for you, Ryuko," Senketsu added, causing Ryuko's amusement to come to a premature end, "I will not allow you to wear anything else... except your pajamas."

"Damn," Ichigo sighed miserably, "So Parent Student Day is next week right?"

Finally having enough and taking her lunch back from Ryuko, who protested at the treatment, Nonon took a large bite from her sandwich. With a mouthful of food, she told him, "Tomorrow dumbass."

Ichigo began panicking as he realized what that meant. No one here, not even Ryuko or Satsuki and hopefully not Nui, knew what that meant. Quickly standing up, he began mentally listing off what he needed to do in order to survive. He knew he had enough food in his dorm to last him at least a week and he was pretty sure he knew of at least five places throughout Honnou City he could hide. The only difficulty he was going to have would be during Parent Student Day. There was no way he could hide from his peers during the event. While he was listing off various things, mumbling all the while, Ururu turned towards the nearby window and pointed outside.

"Look," she said with complete stoicism, "Mr. Kurosaki is swinging on a rope."

"Oh fu - "

Ichigo's explication was cut short as Isshin crashed through the window, startling everybody except for Ururu, who remained as stoic and unperturbed as ever. As shattered glasses peppered the floor, Isshin swung forward and planted his feet against Ichigo's face before propelling him through the nearby wall. Landing in a dignified crouch and dusting his brown leather jacket, imported leather mind you, off, Isshin shouted towards where Ichigo had crashed.

"So what's this that I heard about you receiving the attention of not one girl, but two?"

There was a flash of lights and Ichigo came running out of the hole in the wall clad in a fully transformed Mugetsu. Punching his dad in the stomach, he answered with annoyance in his voice, "The hell kind of question is that? What kind of father crashes through a window only to kick his son in the face anyway?"

"The kind that cares about his son!" Isshin shouted back as he butted heads with Ichigo, "Besides, you're the one who's been screwing around! You have multiple girls pining for your attention and yet you don't notice? Just how dense of a son did I raise?"

"Dense?" Ichigo slammed his forehead against his father's hard enough to cause the older man to stumble back. He had to thank Mugetsu later for making every part of his body as hard as steel when she's transformed like this. Growling, he pointed his hand at Isshin and shouted, "Look who's calling the kettle black!"

"That's complete nonsense!" Isshin sang as he recovered, quicker than Ichigo anticipated and slammed both his heels into Ichigo's stomach. To everyone's surprise, especially Ichigo's, Isshin had hit him with enough force to actually launch Ichigo back through the same hole he had created just a minute ago and, by the sound of it, several more behind him. Popping up off the ground and adjusting the collar of his jacket, Isshin turned to rush off after Ichigo, but before leaving turned to Ururu, "Make sure you keep an eye out on everyone, Ururu!"

Ururu snapped off a salute, "No problem, Mr. Kurosaki. I'll do my best to keep everyone safe from harm."

While this was all going on, Ryuko was trying to understand what the hell just happened. Did she seriously just see Ichigo's dad crash through the window before kicking him through the wall? Ryuko rubbed her tired eyes and hoped what just happened was a hallucination brought on by the past few days of constant fighting, but when she opened her eyes and saw the flabbergasted look on Nonon's face, she knew that what she just witnessed had really happened. After she saw Ichigo get kicked through the wall while wearing Mugetsu, she knew he was in trouble.

Managing to push herself onto wobbly legs despite the extensive exhaustion she felt, Ryuko took a clumsy step forward to go help Ichigo when she saw Ururu blocking her path.

"Please don't interfere," Ururu said calmly, "Ichigo's not in any danger."

"You're kidding right?" Ryuko looked at Ururu and saw that the girl really didn't think there was anything wrong with what Ichigo's dad was doing. Feeling as if she was the only sane person in the room, she pointed to the large hole in the wall and said, "Ichigo's dad just kicked him through the wall! That isn't normal!"

"Sure it is," Ururu answered neutrally as she looked at the hole briefly, "I can do that. Besides, this is just how Mr. Kurosaki says hello to Ichigo."

"Ah, Ryuko!" Mako for some reason appeared outside the hole. Without even caring as to why it was there or how it formed, she stepped through and calmly patted down her skirt, "I've just been informed that the Volleyball Club would like to fight you. Let's go."

"What?" Ryuko tried to get away but in her tired state couldn't do anything as Mako grabbed her by the back of Senketsu and began dragging her along.

"Wait! Let go of me, Mako!" Senketsu shouted fearfully, cursing the fact that no one besides Ryuko and Ichigo could hear him, "Ryuko, tell her to let go of me before she stretches out my Life Fibers!"

Nonon watched Ryuko leave before grumbling and throwing her lunch on the ground. She had two choices to make now. She could either follow the Transfer Student to her little bout or she could track down Strawberry and watch him fight his dad. Lady Satsuki had given her the mission of determining how and why Ichigo's Kamui could do things hers could not. It would be rebellious to follow the Transfer Student, so with a large mischievous grin adorning her face, Nonon proceeded to track down where Ichigo went. Sure her mission was to observe Mugetsu, but watching him get the tar beat out of him was simply a bonus she couldn't afford to pass up.

"This ought to be good," she quipped.

---

...

---

Kon was seriously confused and lost. Scratching the back of his head, he looked around and tried to find any landmarks that could help him find his way to wherever Honnouji Academy was.

When Ichigo's dad brought him to Honnou City, he was secretly dropped off and ordered to find his way to Honnouji Academy on his own. The only rule was that he couldn't be seen or caught. Everything went well for Kon until he somehow ran into a group of people. Instead of gawking or staring at him while muttering about a talking and moving lion plushie, they simply waved hello and continued on their way. That was why Kon was walking in the middle of a busy street without care. If these people didn't seem to mind a moving plushie, who was he to hide and sneak around like a freaking ninja?

"I know it's up there," Kon craned his head up and looked at Honnouji Academy stretching into the sky above him. The only problem was that the roads and streets were like a maze, crisscrossing each other and circling back. It was like a maze and Kon hated mazes, "The only question is how to get there. I know Ichigo's dad said to keep a low profile, but I'm never going to meet up with Ichigo unless I get directions. Now who to ask..."

Kon didn't like any of his choices. Everyone in the Slums had this weird look about them. He couldn't wrap his mind around it, but the one thing he couldn't help but notice was the weird red threads in their clothing. It was really weird how the threads seemed alive and aware of his presence whenever he walked by. It was almost like he was in a horror movie or something. All he needed was to run into the psychotic killer and the circle would be complete.

"Aw, screw it!" Kon declared bombastically, "I know Honnouji Academy is that-a-way, so all I have to do is keep heading in that direction!"

With a purpose in his mind, Kon hopped down off the table he was standing on, turned the corner and promptly ran into someone. Falling on his back with a soft squeak, Kon groggily brought a paw up to his head, "Did anyone get the number of that brick wall?"

As his senses came back to him, Kon picked himself off the ground and dusted his plushie body off, "Sorry about that, good sir, I didn't see you there. Now, if you will excuse me..."

Kon tried to move past the person he ran into, who still hadn't said a word. He hadn't taken three steps before a large purple blade skewered through the ground in front of him.

"Hey!" Kon said angrily while pointing to the person who had almost hit it, "What's the big idea? You could have severed my stitching! Do you know how hard it would be to sew myself back up afterwards?"

Before Kon could do anything, he found himself being picked up and held in the person's arms. It was only when he found her grip to be superhumanly strong did he begin to realize that something may be wrong. Deciding to play it cool for the moment since there was always time for panicking later, he asked, "Uh, I'm Kon!"

Nui Harime stared at the creature in her hands with abject glee, or at least the closest feeling to happiness that someone like her could feel. Strange, over the past few weeks she had felt something off. Sure she still murdered and tortured those going against the Director's plans and wanted to kill Ryuko Matoi for what her father did to her eye, but she seemed more thoughtful somehow. Nui didn't know what to make of it, but for the moment she was content with the knowledge that she was still the same Grand Couturier as ever.

"Aren't you something?" Nui asked happily, her single eye closing in mirth. So this creature's name was Kon, was it? Nui could feel the Life Fibers inside the plushie's body, which meant Kon had to have been made in one of Revocs's daughter companies. It would be foolish for Lady Ragyo to simply cover the world by infusing Life Fibers within just clothing. The Director's plans were much more grandiose!

"And you contain Life Fibers as well," Nui squeezed Kon's body, "That's awesome!"

"Hey, be gentle with my stuffing!" Kon didn't appreciate being manhandled like this. He was a living being, you know! He had the same rights and privileges as Ichigo, even if he wasn't exactly human. When Nui stopped squeezing and tilted her head in confusion, Kon composed himself and asked, "And just who are you anyway?"

Nui leaned forward until her face was only a few inches away from Kon's, "I'm Nui Harime!"

"Nui Harime, huh?" Kon could swear he heard that name before, but the memory eluded him. It couldn't have been anything bad, or else he wouldn't have forgotten about it, "That's a strange name. Anyway, do you mind letting me go now?"

"Why would I do that?" Nui raised Kon above her head and smiled, "You're just too fascinating to let go. In fact, if I didn't know any better, I would say you were a COVERS."

"I ain't covering anything," Kon answered indignantly while completely missing the emphasis Nui put on COVERS.

"Still..." Kon saw Nui's face shift slightly and he immediately knew he was in trouble, "I'm just so curious about what makes you tick. As the Grand Couturier, it wouldn't be prudent of me to simply let you go. Not when there's so much I can learn from your body..."

" Oh crap," Kon began shaking nervously as Nui's true persona began to surface, "Why do I always seem to attract the crazy ones? Come on, Kon. Think of something before this girl mounts your head above her fireplace. What would Ichigo do?"

Then it hit Kon. It was so obvious that he would have smacked himself in the face if he currently wasn't in the grip of a psychopath. Coughing to gain Nui's attention, or at least part of it, Kon calmly said, "I think there's a slight problem with your suggestion."

Nui was slightly confused by Kon's state of mind. One minute the creature that was not a COVERS was scared of her, as it should be, and now it was calm and collected? Tilting her head to the side, her pigtailed bouncing along the way, she asked, "Oh? Like what?"

Kon made the motion of thinking hard before speaking, "Well, wouldn't taking me apart stop me from talking? How will you figure out how I work if I can't talk?"

"Don't be silly!" Nui beamed, "I'll just sew you up afterwards and start all over again if it doesn't work the first time!"

" Ok, that didn't work."

Kon didn't like it, but he needed to rely on his failsafe. Ichigo's dad had installed it about a week ago without even asking for his permission. Kon had been pissed, rightfully so, and would have kicked the elder Kurosaki's ass if he could, but since he couldn't he simply settled for glaring angrily at Isshin. Completely nonplussed at the treatment he was receiving from Kon, Isshin had chuckled clownishly before telling Kon to only use this device if he ever ended up in a situation with no other way out. It was very expensive and Isshin didn't want to have to buy another one.

"Well then..." Kon saw no other option. He would have to use it after all, "Since you are so serious about this, I suppose I have no choice in the matter, but before we go anywhere, can you do a simple favor for me?"

"You better not ask me to tell your family you loved them," Nui said jokingly, "Because if you do, I'll just track them down and kill them all for the trouble."

"No, it's not that," Kon was really starting to wish he hadn't come to Honnou City and stayed in the relative safety of Karakura Town, "See this button on my stomach? If you press it, I'll compact into a smaller form. It will make me much easier to carry."

Nui seemed to mull it over before moving Kon until he was right in front of her face, "Really?"

There had never been a moment in his existence that Kon was more appreciative of the fact that his plastic eyes couldn't express the lie he was telling, "But of course. I am Kon. I have never lied once in my lifetime."

Nui puffed out her cheeks and considered her options. Kon was obviously trying to trick her into a trap. That much was certain, but Nui wasn't too worried about it. She wasn't a stupid human that was weak to poison, fire, lack of blood and generally getting stabbed by a Scissor Blade. If this was indeed a trap, then Nui thought she should be a good host and spring it. It was the polite thing to do after all.

"Ok!" Nui said cheerfully and pressed the button. In hindsight, when she found out that Kon belonged to Isshin, Nui would come to see what she did as very, very stupid.

As soon as she pressed the button, a thick blue smoke shot out of Kon's face. Immediately Nui let go of Kon and began coughing harshly. How could she, who wasn't even human, be affected by tear gas? This was impossible and yet she couldn't stop coughing or even open her one good eye.

Kon didn't bother waiting around or even gloating that he got Nui good. As soon as she let go of him, Kon promptly turned around and fled as fast as his legs could move. He needed to get to Honnouji Academy before Nui Harime recovered, which seemed to be quite soon, and find Ichigo's dad. He didn't feel safe in this city anymore, not with psychopaths like Nui Harime running around.

" Damn it. This isn't worth all the half-naked babes Isshin promised me!"

---

...

---

"It appears that we may have misjudged the determination of Ryuko Matoi and Mako Mankanshoku," Ira Gamagori's booming voice echoed through the Student Council chambers. Without Nonon Jakuzure as part of the Elite Four, at least publically, Gamagori was enjoying the peace and quiet afforded to him by the distinct absence of Jakuzure hurling insults at Sanageyama, "Their tenacity is to be respected, but unless we do something to limit their growth, they will become part of your inner circle, Lady Satsuki."

Satsuki looked at the folder Gamagori had given to her just moments prior. In it were various statements and files from the defeated clubs attesting to Gamagori's point of view. While they are all most likely true and highly accurate and precise, the inclusion of Gamagori's signature on each document was proof enough of that, Satsuki tossed it away without even opening it.

"Anyone that has been defeated by Matoi no longer possesses the right to complain about losing," Satsuki said before sipping her tea, "The fact they decided to complain about it means they are no longer worthy of the power I bestowed upon them. Let them know that I have denied their requests to have their Two-Star Goku Uniforms re-stitched and that they are forbidden from ever having one again."

Gamagori bowed respectfully, "Of course, Lady Satsuki."

"Tch," Sanageyama banged his fist against the arm of his chair in anger. What was the point of allowing Ryuko to fight all the small fries when he was willing and able to fight her himself? Ever since their rematch, Sanageyama had felt cheated out of his win. After a grueling and worthwhile match against Ryuko, who was still able to fight him even after he obtained Shingantsu and his Blade Regalia Mark II, his win was stolen from him by that strange woman. The problem he had wasn't with the woman herself, but that she so obnoxiously stepped in and interfered in his fight just as he was about to win. It wasn't fair, god damn it.

"Let me fight her again," Sanageyama called out to Satsuki, "It's been more than a couple of days since that woman's been spotted, right? That means she's left the city. If you let me fight Ryuko again, I'll be able to win without any issues this time."

"Do not be too hasty in your judgment, Sanageyama," Satsuki said calmly, "You will fight Matoi in due time. For right now, Jakuzure's mission takes priority over your need to fight."

"I thought Jakuzure was to observe Ichigo Kurosaki's Mugetsu?" Inumuta asked.

"She is," Satsuki conceded, "But fighting Matoi might jeopardize her mission. Once Jakuzure is safely out of reach of Ichigo's retribution, I will determine whether you may proceed against Matoi, Sanageyama."

Sanageyama didn't like it, but he wasn't about to argue and complain to Satsuki, "Fine."

"Hmm, this is peculiar," Inumuta leaned forward and stared at what was being displayed on the monitor. Typing in a few commands, his eyes widened substantially as he saw what the particular alert he was seeing meant, "Lady Satsuki, it appears that the Honnouji Academy Perimeter Detection System has just sensed an unauthorized visitor."

"Such news does not require the attention of Lady Satsuki, Inumuta," Gamagori growled, and it was true. Honnouji Academy received, on a weekly basis, at least four spies and cases of attempted espionage from other academies, mostly the Kansai Region academies. It had become so commonplace for spies to be discovered and killed that the club captains had begun taking bets on the next spy to be discovered. Gamagori had tried to curb the illegal gambling, but stopped when Inumuta showed him the amount of money Lady Satsuki was receiving as part of the 'winner's cut.'

"You are correct. That on its own would not be concerning," Inumuta's sarcasm did not pass Satsuki by. Turning her head ever so slightly, she subtly motioned for Inumuta to continue, "What is concerning is that the Honnouji Academy Interior Alarm went off before the perimeter alarm by seventy three seconds."

The slight narrowing of Satsuki's eyes was all the Elite Three needed to know that she wasn't pleased with Inumuta's news. The notion that someone bypassed her security wasn't as concerning as the fact that she knew of only a handful of people in the world that do so with such impunity. What was most interesting was the anachronistic order of events. Why had the interior alarm gone off before the perimeter alarm?

"Bring up the exterior cameras above Honnouji Academy," Satsuki ordered Inumuta as she stood up and turned towards the large wall of screens to her right, "Focus on the area around the breach."

Inumuta nodded and began rapidly typing in commands. It didn't take long for him to find what he was looking for. He honestly assumed that whoever this intruder was, they would have been able to turn off the cameras and feeds around their location. Here he was hoping for some sort of challenge. Clicking the final button, Inumuta looked up at the large wall of screens as the camera feed over the last ten minutes began playing. When he saw who the intruder was, he took off his glasses and cleaned them off. There had to be some sort of mistake. What he was seeing was socially impossible and yet, when he put his glasses back on, the intruder was still there.

"Is that -?"

"What is it?" Sanageyama shouted in annoyance. Although Shingantsu allowed him to see the world and fight at a level he previously thought unreachable, he still couldn't actually see, which meant that whatever was being displayed on the screens escaped him.

Satsuki's hands clenched in annoyance and mild anger as she witnessed Isshin Kurosaki somehow walk out onto the top of Honnouji Academy with impunity. If that wasn't enough, she then watched him anchor a nylon rope onto the floor before running off the edge of the school and crashing through one of the classroom windows, laughing the entire way if the expression on his face was accurate.

"What could possess this man to commit such an audacious act?"

This was the man that her mother urged her to be cautious around? Satsuki would have found the concept of such a joke truly laughable if it weren't for the fact that her mother never joked. No, Ragyo Kiryuin's sense of humor was much more cynical and black. Those that heard her humor tended to not be around much afterwards.

Refocusing herself, Satsuki tried to think of a reason why Isshin would do what he did. What motive did Isshin have and what did he hope to gain from being caught?

" Did he allow Inumuta's cameras to see him? " Satsuki puzzled while her mind went into high gear, "Was part of his plan allowing us to discover that he had made his way into Honnouji Academy?"

"Who was in the room Isshin Kurosaki broke into?"

"Let's see..." Inumuta switched off the exterior camera and moved to one of the hallway cameras that were generally used to catch tardy and lazy students. Setting the timeframe for ten minutes before Isshin's arrival, Inumuta put the feed on fast forward and let it play out. It wasn't long afterwards that several familiar people appeared on the monitor.

"Ichigo Kurosaki..." Gamagori's voice rumbled as a familiar orange head of hair walked out of the room, spoke to a One-Star student, before scaring him off. When he saw Ichigo crumple up a letter, Gamagori couldn't repress the growl emanating from his throat. How dare Ichigo refuse Lady Satsuki's kind and generous offer of being her Vice-President!

"And he's not the only one," Inumuta clicked a key and several pictures appeared on a different screen, "Ryuko Matoi, Mako Mankanshoku, Ururu Tsumugiya and Jakuzure were also in the room."

As the feed continued playing, Satsuki watched as the camera shook before Ichigo crashed through the wall of the room, flew across the hall and tore through the adjacent wall without slowing down. Looking at the time stamp, it seemed that the cause of Ichigo's abrupt flight was his father's rather grandiose entrance. A few moments later, there was a bright blue light and a flash of stars as Ichigo, clad in Mugetsu, came running out of the hole in the wall and headed back into the room.

"Is he going to fight his father?" Gamagori wondered out loud, "Surely if there was any animosity between him and his father, it wouldn't require the use of -"

Gamagori was forced to bite his tongue when Ichigo once again flew out of the room, this time clad in Mugetsu. He was not the only one shocked at the turn of events. Both Inumuta and Satsuki were stunned into silence as well. To see Ichigo in Mugetsu getting thrown around was one thing, but seeing it happen so easily was another. When Isshin finally walked out of the room and into the view of the camera, Satsuki noticed that he was wearing what looked to be a brown leather jacket and pants.

"I'm not detecting any Life Fibers in Isshin Kurosaki's clothing."

"What?" Satsuki knew that was impossible. Almost every scrap of clothing in the world was created and distributed by Revocs. Her mother made sure of that, but then again several things about Isshin disturbed her.

"I see..." Satsuki turned around and placed her hand on the hilt of Bakuzan. She needed to take care of this matter before it got out of hand. From what little she saw of their family squabble, the likelihood of collateral damage to Honnouji Academy being in the millions of dollars increased with every minute, "Gamagori. Sanageyama. You two come with me. We have a meeting with Isshin Kurosaki."

---

...

---

" I'm confused, Ichigo," Mugetsu watched in confusion as Ichigo was tossed through a wall before eventually managing to land on his feet. As he looked around, Ichigo saw that his little... fight... with his dad had somehow ended up taking them to one of the many gymnasiums scattered throughout Honnouji Academy.

"About?"

"How your dad is keeping up with us," Mugetsu couldn't sense any Life Fibers within Isshin's clothing. As a Kamui, she prided herself on being able to detect Life Fibers wherever they may be. It was how she knew how strong Danketsu and Junketsu were compared to her, "He is not wearing a Kamui or a Goku Uniform and yet he is winning. What's going on?"

"It's because my dad is too stupid to let something like logic get in his way," Ichigo spat as he could literally hear his dad approaching, "And he just doesn't know when to give up."

"Talking to oneself is a sign of mental instability!" Isshin leapt through the hole Ichigo had made in the wall and tried to tackle his son. Try being the key word because Ichigo managed to avoid the fairly obvious attack from his dad without much trouble. Quickly pivoting around, Ichigo attempted to jam his elbow into the small of his dad's back. When Isshin somehow managed to maneuver around his arm and backflip away, Ichigo began to lament the fact that he left Tournesol back in his dorm. Stabbing his dad would probably be seen as wrong by the rest of academy, but Ichigo was nearing the point of not caring.

Starting to get a little pissed off, Ichigo flew after his dad and finally managed to slam his fist into Isshin's face. His initial jubilation was cut short when Isshin's arms shot out and drew Ichigo into a headlock, "Is that why you don't have a girlfriend? Are you touched in the head, my son?"

"Get the hell off me!"

Ichigo's hands gripped the back of his dad's jacket and, in one fell swoop, flipped him over his shoulder. As Isshin landed bodily on the ground, a gasp involuntarily leaving his mouth as the air was forced out of his lungs, Ichigo tried to smash his elbow into his diaphragm, but once again he found his arm stopped mere inches from his intended target.

Where the hell was his dad getting this strength from? As Isshin grinned clownishly before pushing Ichigo off him, Ichigo tried to rationalize what was happened. Ok, he knew he dad was a former shinigami captain that was able to fight Aizen at an even level. That pretty much made him a badass, but his dad was in his gigai right now, so how was it he was kicking his ass so easily?

"You left your flank exposed, my son!"

Ichigo glanced upwards to find Isshin falling down towards him. Grimacing in annoyance, he cocked a fist back and prepared to punch his dad in the face, but was stopped when a spiked whip shot out of nowhere and pummeled Isshin into the nearby wall.

"There shall be no unauthorized fighting at Honnouji Academy!" Ira Gamagori shouted bombastically as his feet smashed against the ground. Grabbing the end of his whip and snapping it taunt, he glared at the smoking crater where Isshin's body had impacted, "That goes double for intruders such as you!"

"Stand down, Gamagori," Satsuki Kiryuin strutted forward past the massive teenager and planted Bakuzan against the ground. Staring directly at where she knew Isshin Kurosaki to be, she asked, "Isshin Kurosaki, I presume?"

"Oh, you know of me. That saves me a lot of time introducing myself. I was never really good with social introductions anyway."

Walking out of the hole looking little worse for wear, Isshin dusted off jacket. He was lucky that Gamagori's attack hadn't torn it. If it had, he would have forced the young man to foot the bill for repairing it. Coughing and scratching his beard, he opened his mouth to speak to Satsuki and promptly received a foot in the face courtesy of Ichigo.

"What do you want?" Ichigo asked Satsuki, his temper already shortened enough already. His dad always seemed to piss him off and Ichigo's inability to make Isshin stay down was irritating him,

"Can't you come back in five minutes? I just need to teach my dad a few lessons on manners."

"Now, Ichigo..." In the time it took Ichigo to turn and stare at Satsuki, Isshin had moved across the gym and smashed his knee into his son's stomach. As Ichigo gagged, Ichigo grabbed him in another headlock, "What I have taught you about manners? Besides, you let your guard down. A year ago you would never have fallen for such a simple and obvious trick. It is clear that your time at Honnouji Academy has softened you tremendously. Is everyone here a pansy?"

"Watch your mouth around Lady Satsuki!" Sanageyama brandished his shinai at Isshin.

"It's fine, Sanageyama," Satsuki raised her arm to calm down her subordinate before she slowly unsheathed Bakuzan, "If he deigns to speak as such to me once more, I shall have no choice but to punish him."

"Please ignore my dad," With a grunt of frustration, Ichigo slammed his foot down on Isshin's foot. As he dad hobbled around, cursing his son for such cowardly tactics, Ichigo sighed and rubbed the bridge of his nose, "He's an idiot. He'll just ignore anything you say to him."

"That's not the proper way to speak to your father!" Isshin shouted obnoxiously before turning his attention to Satsuki, "So, who might you be young lady? You look quite important, so you must be quite powerful around here."

Satsuki narrowed her eyes as she felt Junketsu view the man in front of her with apprehension. The behavior of her Kamui baffled her as much as the knowledge that she was able to sense what her Kamui was feeling. Concentrating on that feeling, Satsuki concluded it wasn't so much as sensing what Junketsu was feeling as it was her Kamui tightening up around her body without drawing any more of her blood. The combination of such strange events gave Satsuki the knowledge that Isshin Kurosaki was more than he appeared to be.

"I am Satsuki Kiryuin!" Satsuki shouted bombastically and immediately she was illuminated by a bright white backlight emanating from somewhere behind her, "As Student Council President, it is my sacred duty to destroy and eliminate any threats to Honnouji Academy! You will tell me your purpose for trespassing in my academy or face the consequences of your crime!"

Isshin looked at Satsuki with a discerning eye. There was no doubt in his mind that she was Ragyo's daughter. She even had the whole backlight and everything. Still, he wasn't one to allow such theatrics to bother or make him submit. Masaki had taught him that lesson quite well.

"I'm here to visit my son, the delinquent," Isshin pointed with his thumb at Ichigo, who didn't say anything and simply glared in retaliation, "I heard tomorrow was Parent Student Day and thought it would be a good idea to come by and check up on him. One of my sources said that my son had two girls pining after him and as an overprotective father, I couldn't allow that to continue without speaking to these girls myself."

Ichigo didn't know what was worse, that is dad had a source in Honnouji Academy feeding him information or that he assumed there were girls interested in him. Ichigo wasn't anywhere near as dense as people made him out to be. Just because he didn't go around asking every girl in sight for their number didn't mean he was an idiot. Realizing something important he almost missed, he turned to his dad and asked, "Just how did you find all this out anyway?"

"There isn't much a child can do that their parents don't know about!" Isshin answered proudly, "Hey, is Satsuki one of them?"

Ichigo blinked in confusion, "One of what?"

"You know," Isshin made a series of motions with his hands, "The girls that have a crush on you. Do I need to spell it out?"

As Ichigo choked in embarrassment, his ears picked up the sound of a blade singing through the air. The cause of the noise was Satsuki, a look of mild irritation on her face, attempting to stab his father through the throat. It was just her luck that his father's reflexes were incredibly quick and Isshin bent backwards and let Bakuzan pass harmless just over the tip of his nose.

"Do not speak of such things unless you wish to lose your ability to speak at all," Satsuki warned Isshin with venom lacing her words. How dare this man presume to understand the workings of her mind! Her interest in Ichigo was purely from a militaristic standpoint. As one of the few people able to withstand the incredible power of a Kamui, his help in her grand plans would greatly bolster her overall power. While she intended the same for Matoi, she was still too weak for Satsuki to use in any regard. Perhaps after a few more tests she would extend her hand to Matoi.

"Well..." Isshin looked at the black blade of Bakuzan and was greatly reminded of Ichigo's former bankai, "I should have expected that. You are Ragyo's daughter after all."

Satsuki twisted her wrist and suddenly Bakuzan was pointed directly over Isshin's heart. At the same time, Gamagori and Sanageyama had moved to block Ichigo from attempting to rescue his father.

"How do you know my mother?" Satsuki pressed the tip of Bakuzan against Isshin's jacket, causing the leather to tear slightly upon contact.

Isshin looked at the weapon with curiosity. So Ragyo's daughter wielded a blade made of Life Fibers? Its craftsmanship was superb, but even he could tell it was not at the level of quality of Ichigo's Tournesol. Then again, there were very few people that could match the intelligence and genius of Kisuke Urahara when the man put his mind to it. If Ragyo and Kisuke were to work together... Isshin shuddered at the mere thought of that team up. The world would be destroyed in hours if that ever came to pass.

"Ah, that's a long story," Isshin stroked his chin, completely uncaring of Satsuki's death threat. If Aizen couldn't kill him, Satsuki didn't have a chance, "It had to be thirty years ago..."

Ichigo stared uncaringly at his dad, "I thought it was twenty two years?"

Isshin raised a knowing finger, "At my age you lose track of the years. Anyway, I met Ragyo around twenty two years ago, you are the splitting image of her by the way, and we soon became close friends. After that, other things happened, Masaki and I got married, had Ichigo and now the circle is complete."

Satsuki stared at Isshin for a moment longer before stepping back and sheathing Bakuzan. In her brief clash with Ichigo's father, she had ascertained that the man was indeed extremely dangerous. As much of a show as he had put on, which would have fooled most other people, when she pressed Bakuzan against his chest he had not flinched even an inch. The fact that such a man could look at her blade with absolute calmness suggested that there was more to the man than first appeared. That was not to mention that he was fighting Ichigo and winning despite Ichigo already being clad in Mugetsu.

" Such strength to go head to head with a Kamui and come out on top," Satsuki mused thoughtfully. The only person she had ever witnessed doing such a feat was the Grand Couturier, but she wasn't exactly a normal human. Was this the reason her mother took a vested interest in him? Satsuki did not know, but that did not mean she wasn't going to find out. Inumuta's earlier queries had failed due to a lack of information. Isshin's newly revealed capacities should help Inumuta dig up something.

"My mother will be attending Parent Student Day tomorrow," Satsuki informed Isshin as she walked away, "She has informed me she is looking forward to speaking with you."

"It's always great to see Ragyo," Isshin said sarcastically before adding, "Although the last time we spoke she tried to kill me. I suppose that was my fault for egging her on, but it seems her aim has improved over the years..."

Satsuki made the motion of ignoring Isshin's rambling, but inside she was memorizing everything he said. It was subtle, a misplaced word or fantastical sentence, but several things Ichigo's father said raised alarms in her head. If she were to believe Isshin's words, Satsuki needed to adjust her plans and account for every new variable. If her mother was truly on to her plans, then Satsuki needed to become unpredictable. She was nobody's puppet, dancing at the whims of the puppeteer. If her mother thought Satsuki was simply going to be strung along for her own amusement, Ragyo Kiryuin was going to be surprised when things didn't go to plan.

Isshin watched Satsuki leave with contemplating eyes. The last thing he wanted to do was speak to Ragyo while in the presence of hundreds of innocent people. She would have no compunctions using them against him since she knew Isshin would never risk the lives of innocent teenagers and their families. In fact, that was what Ragyo was probably counting on. She was a very smart woman, after all, and would quickly capitalize on Isshin's reluctance to confront her in the presence of humans.

It was either that or she somehow found out about Ururu, but then again, it wasn't like he had kept her existence a secret. If it took Ragyo sixteen years to figure it out, perhaps Isshin had overestimated her intelligence. As he imagined Ragyo's immediate reaction to finding out, Isshin suppressed a shudder. The saying that there isn't anything worse than a woman scorned was probably created with Ragyo in mind. And if Ragyo was coming, then Nui wouldn't be far behind. He just needed to keep her away from Ururu. The Grand Couturier's lack of morals and sanity was only matched by her insatiable curiosity.

Ichigo watched Satsuki and her two goons leave before turning to his dad and asked, "Are you going to tell me what the hell is going on?"

Isshin gave him son the best goofy smile he could muster, "I have no idea what you're talking about, Ichigo."

"Dad..."

"I suppose you got a point." There was a point where Isshin knew acting like an idiot wouldn't work anymore. After the Winter War and Ichigo seeing who he truly was, Isshin couldn't play that card anymore. Pushing himself off the ground, he ran a hand through his hair, "So that's Mugetsu huh? It's a pretty well-crafted Kamui. Kisuke did a hell of a job making her."

Ichigo's eyes narrowed slightly, "How do you know that?"

"Come on now!" Isshin drew his son into a one armed hug, "I'm your old man, for crying out loud! There isn't much that you can do that goes over your head. I heard you speaking to Mugetsu on my way over here. She has a lovely voice you know."

" Aw... " If she was able to at the moment, Mugetsu would have blushed. She wasn't used to hearing complements from other people besides Ichigo.

"I'm not going to even ask how you are able to hear Mugetsu." With a simple mental command, Ichigo transformed Mugetsu back into her normal school uniform and sighed. Looking his dad straight in the eye, he asked, "Just tell me something. How do you know Satsuki's mother? Don't give me another one of your stories. I want to hear the truth."

"The truth..." Isshin knew there was a high chance that Satsuki, and most likely Ragyo, were listening in on this conversation. He couldn't afford to give too much away and risk Ragyo figuring something out, "Do you remember last winter when I dragged you across town? Think back on what you told me afterwards."

" I got nothing to say. If you haven't told me by now, then you must have a good reason for doing so. It's your past. I don't know how to ask you about it without trampling your feelings and tracking mud all over them."

"Yeah, I remember what I said," Ichigo's voice dropped a few decibels as he remembered what happened that day as clearly as though it had only happened yesterday. So much happened in those few hours that Ichigo wasn't sure where his memory ended and his imagination began. Looking down at Mugetsu's eyes, which seemed to show concern for her wearer, Ichigo sighed and turned around, "I'll let you tell me whenever you feel like it. Just don't keep me in the dark this time."

" I wish I didn't have to."

Isshin watched Ichigo walk away with pride visible in his eyes. It was subtle at the moment, but Ichigo was really coming into his own as a person. He had a Kamui of his own and yet he didn't allow the power Mugetsu offered him go to his head. If anything, he was more careful with his new power than when he had his shinigami powers. Dusting off his jacket while frowning at the minute hole near his heart, Isshin tried to think of a way he was eventually going to tell the truth to Ichigo. He knew without a doubt in his mind that if he didn't tell Ichigo, Ragyo would sure as hell take pleasure in doing so herself. He wouldn't bet against her tearing his son's heart out just to show it directly to Ichigo's face.

"Ragyo was always one for dramatics," Isshin noted to himself as he walked after Ichigo.

While his main priority in coming to Honnouji Academy was to meet up with Ichigo and attend Parent Student Day, he had several other things to do while he was here. Looking at his watch, Isshin was starting to wonder what Kon was up to. It wasn't like the mod soul to skip out on something like this. Shrugging his shoulders, Isshin realized Kon would show up eventually. Where else could the mod soul go?

---

...

---

"How long do you plan on hiding, Jakuzure?"

"I was not hiding, Lady Satsuki." Nonon walked out of the shadows and bowed respectfully, "I was waiting for you to address me."

"I see," Satsuki was glad that Jakuzure's time amongst Ichigo and his peers hadn't dampened her social etiquette. It would have been quite the shame for a girl from such a prestigious and wealthy family to suddenly lose everything that made her unique. Motioning for Sanageyama and Gamagori to leave her alone, Satsuki asked, "Do you have anything new to report?"

"... no," Jakuzure admitted reluctantly.

That did not please Satsuki. The parameters of Jakuzure's mission said that she only had until Parent Student Day, which was tomorrow, to find the source of Ichigo Kurosaki's control over Mugetsu so that Satsuki herself could use that to boost her own control over Junketsu. Hadn't Jakuzure smugly promised her to have results in a week? Well, Satsuki hadn't been too expectant to see such quick results. It was better to assume it would take as long as possible and be pleasantly surprised when it doesn't rather than the other way around.

"You have until tomorrow to find out something of value. By the time my mother arrives you will either have what I want or your expulsion from the Elite Four shall be made permanent!" Satsuki ordered, causing Nonon to cast her head downwards in shame. She really has been trying to figure out how Ichigo was controlling Mugetsu, but every time she subtly inquired about it, she got strange looks and no one said anything. The possibility that they were aware of her mission had crossed Nonon's mind a few times, but she couldn't afford to just give up. Her entire life as one of Lady Satsuki's closest friends was on the line. She needed to succeed.

As an idea came to mind, Nonon asked, "Well, what about the Transfer Student?"

Satsuki raised an eyebrow in interest. Truth be told, Matoi's involvement in her silly Fight Club had been at the back of her mind as she prepared for Parent Student Day and the arrival of her mother. Everything had to be perfect and in working order, which meant Satsuki had focused the majority of her time to doing so. That is one of the many reasons she requested Ichigo become her Vice-President.

"What about Matoi?" Satsuki asked. Just because she wasn't focused on Matoi's progress did not mean Satsuki wasn't keeping track of what was going on. Satsuki was quite pleased to see Mako Mankanshoku assimilating so rapidly into the culture of Honnouji Academy. It was nearly at the point where Satsuki was certain Mankanshoku would choose her wealth and power over her friendship with Matoi. It was nearly sickening to see a human so easily corrupted by power to the point of forgoing everything that made them who they are.

"She has a Kamui, right?" Nonon tested the waters of her question and, upon seeing Satsuki's subtle motion to continue, did so, "You assigned me this mission after my defeat against Strawberry, but how were you to know that the Transfer Student's Kamui could change as well? Perhaps trying to get the secret from Strawberry is a waste of time when the Transfer Student is much stupider and easier to fool."

That was one of the reasons Satsuki respected Jakuzure as a colleague. Even when she was on the verge of losing her wealth and status, she was still able to come up with brilliant ideas.

"Matoi?" Satsuki thought about it and decided that perhaps going after Ichigo was no longer the best option, not when Matoi provided a much more readily available target. Smiling smugly, she began formulating a plan on what to do, "That could work. Good work, Jakuzure. Go and return to Ichigo. I will inform Sanageyama that his match against Matoi has been pushed up to this afternoon."

Nonon couldn't believe what she was hearing, "You're going to let the Monkey fight the Transfer Student?"

"Did I say that?" Satsuki began walking away, "As I recall, all I said was that the match has been moved up. If I know Matoi, it will never come to that, but in the end we will still get the match needed for Inumuta to collect information on Senketsu."

---

...

---

Ragyo Kiryuin threw open the doors of her closet and grinned upon seeing all the different outfits hanging inside.

"Ma'am," Rei Hououmaru walked towards her boss and wisely stopped some distance away from the room. Even though she was the personal assistant of Ragyo Kiryuin, even she wouldn't be immune from the urges of the Life Fibers within the room. Rei trusted her ability to avoid most attacks, but she wasn't naïve enough to believe she could do so against dozens, if not hundreds, of outfits.

Still ecstatic upon witnessing the true majesty of her designs, Ragyo asked, "What is it Hououmaru?"

"I have just received word from your daughter," If Rei noticed the barely perceivable frown of disgust on Ragyo's face, she dared not mention it, "She informed me that Isshin Kurosaki has arrived at Honnouji Academy as of earlier this afternoon."

So Isshin decided to attend Parent Student Day after all. Ragyo was finding this day to be just full of surprises. There were so many people she needed to meet and speak to at Satsuki's little school. Isshin... Ichigo... and little Amu...

"Thank you for the wonderful news Hououmaru," Ragyo hooked her fingers around the clasps on her shoulders that held her constantly pristine white, low-cut dress over her body. As her thumbs caressed the latches, she turned her head partially around, "You are dismissed. Let Satsuki know that I will be arriving around noon tomorrow. I don't need to assume that she will roll out the welcome mat for me."

"Right away Ma'am," Rei bowed her head and turned to carry out her orders. As close as she was to Ragyo, there were only three people that had ever seen her pure and naked body and one of them was already dead. She wasn't willing to make it two.

Once her assistant had left to carry out her orders, Ragyo stepped within her closet and immediately felt all the Life Fibers reacting to her presence. If she had been just another pig in clothing, her clothes would have quickly and painfully drained them of all their blood before devouring their body. It was her favorite method of disposing of spies that thought they were clever, smart and stealthy enough to break into her own manor.

Reaching over towards one dress, Ragyo brushed her fingers against it and immediately felt it move in response to her touch. She always took such pleasure in seeing all her clothes and outfits react to her presence with such child-like reverence. They all knew of her connection to the Original Life Fiber and saw her as one of the few beings in existence that were to be respected and adored. Her dear child Nui was another, but Ragyo wished there were more than just the two of them. When she finally met Isshin's son, Ragyo hoped to induct him into the Kiryuin family. She was sure Ichigo would be someone the Life Fibers would follow.

Ragyo stepped away from the dress and turned towards the back of her closet. Past the hundreds of dresses in her collection, all of which were pristine and virgin white with a faint rainbow undertone that constantly seemed to emit from somewhere within the dress was the exact outfit she was looking for. It was perhaps one of a handful of dresses in her collection that she did not create herself.

Rather, it was chosen out for her and given to her as a gift. Ragyo smirked as she remembered the sheepish and embarrassed look on Isshin's face after he spent over an hour trying, and mostly failing, to find a dress she would like all on his own. She found it so cute that Isshin, the same man who had no fashion sense, did his best to pick out something he knew she would like.

Raising her arm as she approached the back of her expansive closet, Ragyo mentally ordered her outfits to move out of her way as she strolled forward. Hanging on the back of her closet, wrapped in plastic and as pristine as the day she received it, was a form-fitting purple dress. As her eyes took in the one outfit she had yet to wear, Ragyo had to give Isshin credit. Fashion sense or not, when the man put his mind to it, he managed to pick out something she really liked.

"You are far too valuable and precious to be worn as just clothing..." Ragyo hooked her finger in the plastic around the dress and slashed downwards. Unlike the rest of her attire, this dress contained no Life Fibers and why should it when it was created before she started incorporating Life Fibers within Revocs products? A slightly psychotic and lusty smile spread across Ragyo's face as she thought about what she was going to do next. Just because it did, didn't mean that it couldn't.

Pressing her palm against the unmoving purple silk, Ragyo watched in satisfaction as dozens of Life Fibers emerged from her wrist and hand and began weaving themselves into the fabric. Unlike the rest of her clothing, she wasn't going to give this dress just enough Life Fibers for basic life. It was given to her by Isshin and, as such, it deserved the same treatment she would give that man. As more and more Life Fibers left her body and became one with the dress, Ragyo began to feel the dress come alive. Already she could feel it probing her, sensing that she was its greater and that her will was its only command.

"No, mon précieux," Ragyo caressed the dress as she continued to give it more and more Life Fibers, watching all the while as the Life Fibers merged and replaced the silk. Already she could see the dark purple fading to a lighter color. Soon it would be as white and pristine as the rest of her clothing. Ragyo smirked as she witnessed the interior of the dress beginning to glow before sighing dreamily, "You are much more than clothing to me. You are a gift to me from the only man I love and thus are more precious to me than my daughter. Now come, be worn by me!"

The once purple dress didn't need any more incentive to be worn by its mistress. Coming to life, it immediately threw itself at her and began to wrap itself around her naked body. Sighing in ecstasy, Ragyo couldn't wait until tomorrow when she would finally meet Isshin's progeny and see firsthand how well her experiment all those years ago succeeded.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #9 - All From a Name

"Welcome back for another installment of Kamui Tales!"

Senketsu said dramatically as he hopped backwards away from the screen, "Unfortunately Mugetsu couldn't be here tonight. Apparently Ichigo is washing her on his day off and that is much more important than doing this..."

Senketsu's tone carried a bit of anger and envy in it, which meant that he would rather be doing that than hosting the omake segment. As a growl emanated from where his throat would be Senketsu looked at the card in his hand and said, "So instead, Junketsu will be helping me explain the origins of Kamui names!"

As if on cue, Junketsu appeared on the edge of the screen and reluctantly waved to the camera. Hopping across the screen, a white board tucked under one of its sleeves, it stopped near Senketsu and gave its fellow Kamui a salute. Noticing the tool for communication, Senketsu scratched his lapels and asked, "So the author still hasn't given you a voice or gender yet?" When Junketsu nodded in affirmation, Senketsu huffed, "Just how lazy is he? It's not like it's hard to change it to he or she. Since you're here Junketsu, why don't you tell the readers what gender you are?"

Junketsu seemed to brighten up at the idea and began frantically scribbling something on the board. Once it was satisfied with what it wrote, it nodded to itself and flipped the board around, "I am **male."

"Wait a second," Senketsu leaned in close with his one good eye. It was a curse to be created without good depth perception, "Is that a smudge or the first part of the word?"

Junketsu looked at what it wrote before turning to Senketsu and simply shrugged.

"Oh well, I suppose it really doesn't matter. The readers will have to find out eventually, unless the author cops out like the anime team did," Senketsu turned his body towards the screen and pressed a button on the remote held in its sleeve. Immediately a picture of Kinue Kinagase with Danketsu exposed for everyone to see appeared on screen.

"This is Danketsu," Senketsu informed while Junketsu had written 'DANKETSU' on its white board, "Danketsu is the Kamui worn by Kinue Kinagase. She is not only powerful enough to give Ryuko and me a run for our money if we were to ever fight, but she is also rude, obnoxious, and quite insane - "

Senketsu was cut off from saying any further insults as a brick flew in from somewhere off screen and beamed him square in his back. Quickly recovering, he rubbed his now sore back while faint laughter, most likely Danketsu, echoed in the background. Growling, Senketsu turned back to the screen, "Danketsu has multiple meanings, but here it stands for 'Unison,' which comes from the fact that Danketsu cannot be separated from Kinue no matter what."

The screen abruptly shifted before showing all four Kamui in their various transformations, "All Kamui are named after some aspect of either their personality or meaning. In fact, it is rather simple to name a Kamui. All you need to do is - "

Senketsu stopped in midsentence when Junketsu tapped his shoulder and showed him what it had written down, "But what about you?"

"What do you mean?"

"Where does your name come from?"

"Ah!" Senketsu sighed happily, "Ryuko gave me my name. It means 'Fresh Blood.'"

"But all Kamui require blood. All she gave you was a word describing what you do."

"Yes, but - "

"Do you mean to tell the viewers that you are the only Kamui without a true name? How ironic..."

"No! It's... I... but..." Senketsu seemed to tear up before he ran off screen shouting, "Ryuko! Why didn't you give me a proper name?"

Junketsu watched its fellow Kamui leave before hopping to the center of the screen and wrote, "I apologize for the abrupt ending of this segment of Omake Tales. My fellow Kamui are quite strange and prone to irrational emotional bouts. Perhaps next time we will actually get something done."

Let's Stay Together

Huh, I actually managed to post this chapter a week after the last one. Usually that would be no problem, but for three days I had a massive writer's block and it wasn't until Tuesday that my muse came back to me. So I hope you enjoy Chapter 22 and don't forget to review it once you're done!

I have a tvtropes page for this story! Just reminding you all.

I will be posting snippets and omakes of the chapters at spacebattles. So if you can't wait a whole week to see the polished and final chapter, head on over there and see the mostly finished segments as I write and post them.

Edit: I really screwed up at the end of Ichigo's fight. I fixed the ending so it should be more in line with who Ichigo is and his stance on fighting and killing.

---

...

---

Chapter 22 - Let's Stay Together

Ryuko thought tracking down Ichigo's dad would be easy. The man was, after all, a bumbling idiot who had the mentality of a child. It was to her eternal surprise that even after following the trail of destruction, as well as Ichigo's directions, that she only found the man completely by accident.

She had just given up searching after an hour and kicked a nearby door in frustration. When the door fell off its rusted hinges, making her nervous since that Gamagori bastard would order her to pay for the damage to the academy, Ryuko tried to put it back only to see Isshin Kurosaki had put several unused desks together and was using them as a makeshift bed in order to take a nap.

"Hey," Ryuko nudged Isshin only for the man to snore in return, "Get up."

When Isshin didn't move, even after several increasingly violent attempts on her part, Ryuko found herself reaching her breaking point. Taking a step back, she reared her leg up and kicked out the desk under Isshin's head and shoulders. As the force of gravity reminded Isshin that she was completely heartless by causing his entire body to tumble painfully to the ground, Isshin tried to understand what exactly had just happened.

"I see you're awake now," Ryuko huffed and folded her arms, "So you're really Ichigo's dad and not some weird relative?"

Isshin stopped rubbing his sore neck and saw Ryuko staring irritably down at him. So she was the cause of all his current pain and suffering, "Yup! It may not look like it, but Ichigo is my flesh and blood!"

Ryuko's eyebrow rose at the proclamation. The man was like a complete opposite of Ichigo, "Have we met before?"

"I can't say that we have," Isshin answered mystically, "But then again, Ichigo was always one to keep me out of the loop. It's such a sad, sad day when a son doesn't trust his father anymore!"

"I see..." Ryuko's eye began twitching as she finally understood why Ichigo did not like his dad. The man was a complete idiot! How he could have raised someone like Ichigo boggled her mind, "Let me ask you something else. Have you ever met my dad?"

"Your dad?" Ryuko was getting into dangerous territory, so Isshin decided to go about solving the problem the old fashioned way with a great big lie, "Probably not."

"Oh yeah?" Ryuko reached into Senketsu and pulled out an old and time-weathered photograph she had absconded with from her dad's ruined basement, "Then how do you explain this?"

Ryuko hadn't initially thought much about the picture she found in her dad's house. She had almost completely forgotten about it when Ichigo's dad came swinging in and attacked him. While at the time she was too much in shock from watching what was happening to think about the photo, now that she had some free time between fighting club presidents, the photo was all she could think about. Ichigo's dad resembled the man in the photo too much for it to be a coincidence. There had to be a connection between him and her dad.

Isshin looked at the photo and could honestly say that he had completely forgotten about it. Isshin Matoui hadn't wanted to go on vacation with him and Masaki. His excuse was that he had a lot of work to do setting up everything as well as taking care of little Ryuko. As much as he tried to argue with the man, Isshin couldn't dissuade the elder Matoui from his decision. That was when Masaki walked past him, a thin smile on her face, and told her husband to leave everything to her. When Masaki pulled the professor away and whispered something into his ear, Isshin could swear he saw his hunchback almost straighten out. When he asked Masaki what he said to him, all she would say to him was that a mother knew best.

He, of course, didn't want to say much about his history with Ryuko's father. Humming thoughtfully as his mind tried to come up with something Ryuko would believe, Isshin decided to go with an old classic - tell a lie with a sprinkling of the truth.

"That's Masaki and me on vacation in Hawaii with your old man," Isshin paused momentarily as he scratched his stubble, "Man, that shirt was gaudy, but let me tell you something. It was really confusing having everyone call out 'Isshin' and the both of us turn to see who it was."

Ryuko was surprised by Isshin's straightforward admittance. She was so sure he would have denied being in the picture like Aikuro tried to do until she threatened to castrate the man, "Good, now who is Masaki?"

Isshin's tone as he replied was somber and Ryuko realized she probably said something wrong, "Masaki was Ichigo's mother. She died nearly nine years ago."

"H-How - ?"

"But that's enough about such sad memories!" Ryuko was thrown off by the sudden change in Isshin's behavior, but the next words out of his mouth nearly caused her own to gape in complete and utter surprise, "I'm sure you've shown me such an accusing photograph hoping that I would tell you more about your father, right? Well then, ask away!"

Ryuko couldn't believe what she was hearing. After weeks of Aikuro dodging around the issue of her father to the point at which it was almost like an art to him, here Ichigo's dad was offering what she sought. Swallowing nervously and taking a moment to compose herself, she asked, "How well did you know my dad?"

"I suppose as well as can be expected. Your dad was quite the workaholic, after all," Isshin folded his arms and thought back to all the times he had visited Isshin only to be rebuked by the busy scientist. While they hadn't really talked much during the last ten years, Isshin still tried to keep in touch for Masaki's sake, "I knew him for nearly twenty years. You can't imagine how much of a shock it was to find out old Isshin had a kid! Masaki was fawning over you, but I was laughing at trying to figure out who would want to marry your old man!"

"Hey! That's my dad you're talking about!" Ryuko snapped and kicked Isshin in the shin, causing the elder Kurosaki to hobble in pain while holding his leg. Taking no small amount of pleasure from Isshin's pain, Ryuko turned her head and grumbled, "What was he like?"

Isshin looked at Ryuko with owlsh eyes, "Shouldn't you know that? He was your dad, not mine, although with the way he always criticized everything I did he may as well have been my father."

"Dad was always busy working," Ryuko couldn't look Isshin in the eye as she thought back to every time she asked her dad to play with her only for him to tell her he was too busy to do so. As first she thought being sent off to boarding school would be a godsend, there were other kids to play with after all, in the end it only made things worse. Despite her best efforts to fit in, she became a social outcast and joined several gangs. Turning back to Isshin, she whispered, "I once asked him about how mom died. He just stopped working and wouldn't speak to me for a couple of hours. You were his friend right? Tell me why he was like that."

"Jeez, you really made a mess of things, didn't you?"

As much as Isshin wanted to sit down with Ryuko and explain everything her dad was doing that caused him to become so distant with her, he had to admit that Aikuro had a point about waiting until she was ready. Staring deep into her eyes under the guise of thinking about his answer, Isshin saw the desperation, loneliness and anger dwelling just below the surface. Ryuko had a lot of lingering problems and the murder of her father only made things worse. Although, now that he looked carefully, it seemed that Ichigo's influence was a positive influence on Ryuko's emotions. Isshin chuckled at that little piece of information. Perhaps he would wait a few more weeks for his son to mellow out Ryuko a tad bit more before telling Aikuro to let Ryuko know more about her father's work. It wouldn't be good to rush these things. There was no way to tell how Ryuko would react to the truth, but Isshin knew it most likely wouldn't be pretty.

"Isshin was a brilliant man," Isshin started suddenly, bringing Ryuko back to attention. Chuckling at an old memory, he continued off with his lie, "If you gave him any piece of clothing, all he would need to do is sniff it, rub it and stare at it to know what composed it and in what percentages. That's what made him famous in the fashion industry until he retired from most of his work after you were born. One thing he wasn't good at was expressing his emotions."

Isshin stopped when he heard a loud commotion coming from outside. Turning toward the window, he noticed a large group of students setting something up in the large courtyard outside. Filing that information away as unnecessary, he continued where he left off, "Your dad may not have seemed like the most loving man, but that was because he didn't know how to express himself in front of you. In the last decade I spoke with him only once, about six years ago, and all he would talk about was how proud he was of you."

"Proud?" Ryuko gazed at Isshin in stunned surprise.

"Yeah," Isshin nodded. This part was true at least. Aikuro didn't know about that particular little chat, but Isshin had gone back to try and patch things up between the two of them. It worked, to some extent, but things just weren't the same, "He was keeping close tabs on you but promised to never interfere unless you needed it. When he told me about how you were in a gang, he laughed and said that he hoped you knocked the hell out of those boys and showed just how strong of a woman you are. He really loved you."

"I can't believe it." For the first time in months, Ryuko felt genuinely happy. While being around Mako and Ichigo helped to make her forget what happened to her dad and why she was at Honnouji Academy in the first place, what Isshin just told her made her feel truly happy. As a smile broke out across her face, Ryuko chuckled and asked, "Is there anything else you can tell me about him? What about my mom? What was she like?"

"Whoa!" Isshin raised his hands placating, "Once question at a time, young lady! I suppose I should start by saying Isshin didn't really talk about your mom all that much. I think the pain of losing her was too much for him and he would rather not talk about it than risk remembering her."

"Oh..." Ryuko was crestfallen but that was alright with her. As long as she knew her dad had always been proud of her, she could deal with this little setback.

"There is one thing I would like to talk to you about..." Isshin needed to tread very carefully with what he was about to say. One wrong step and he could really hurt Ryuko emotionally and if that happened, Ichigo would kick his ass so hard he wouldn't be able to sit down for years. Rubbing the back of his neck, he thought carefully and said, "When I dragged my no-good son out before, I had a little chat with him. He told me a few things, but the one thing that stuck with me is how he thinks someone called Nui Harime killed Isshin."

When he saw the anger appear on Ryuko's face at the mention of her father's murderer, Isshin knew he needed to act fast, "Look, I know better than anyone that revenge is a sucker's game. If this Nui person really did kill Isshin, what will tracking her down and killing her accomplish other than wasting your life? It won't bring him back."

"What... what gives you the right to say that?" Ryuko growled at Isshin.

"I told you Ichigo's mother died nine years ago, right? The truth is that she was murdered. Once I heard what happened, I immediately had my suspicions about who did it, but in order to go after them I would need to leave my family. I could have easily tracked them down and made them pay for what they did, but the tradeoff was too great. Ichigo and his sisters had just lost their mother. They couldn't lose their father as well. In the end I made my choice and I haven't looked back or regretted it for a single day."

Ryuko wanted to say something to Isshin, but every time she opened her mouth the words just seemed to dry up in her throat. Was going after Nui Harime really so pointless if it didn't bring her dad back?

"Maybe you're right," she conceded, casting her gaze away from Isshin, "But I can't give up looking for her. I still need to know why she killed my dad!"

Isshin nodded sagely. That was the best he was going to get out of her and he knew it. It would be naïve of him to think that he could change someone's mind so readily after just talking to them once. For the last six months revenge had been on the forefront of Ryuko's mind. He would have been more worried if she had suddenly agreed with him. That still left the matter of how to deal with Nui Harime because Isshin knew the Grand Couturier would want to gloat about what she did to Ryuko's dad.

"I never said you should give up looking for answers," Isshin shook his head, "I'm just saying you shouldn't do it alone. I'm sure Ichigo and your other friends would be more than happy to help bring this Nui woman to justice."

"Really?" Ryuko didn't know what to think at the moment, "I - "

"There you are Ryuko!"

Standing at the entrance to the classroom was Mako. Upon seeing Ryuko, she smiled and flipped the clipboard in her hands around and showed her something circled several times in red ink, "Lady Satsuki has finally authorized your match against the Elite Three! The first fight is at 5 PM tonight! Let's go. We don't have much time to get you ready."

"W-Wait a second Mako!" Ryuko dug her heels into the floor to arrest her movement. She was still exhausted from the constant fighting. The Two-Star club presidents may not pose a challenge to her, but fighting ten in a row was just tiringly. As Mako continued to pull Ryuko along, heedless of her friend's protests, Ryuko was saved when Isshin somehow stepped in front of her and picked up Mako.

"It's good to see you again Mako!" Isshin said gleefully with stars in his eyes, "I haven't seen you since Ichigo's first day! Do you want to see some more of Ichigo's cute baby pictures? I didn't forget to bring a few dozen embarrassing ones with me this time!"

"I'm afraid I must decline, Mr. Kurosaki," Mako informed the older man while stoically adjusting her glasses, "Ryuko has a match to prepare for. I'm afraid we don't have the time today for such childishness."

The tone of Mako's voice threw Isshin through a loop. Eyes narrowing suspiciously, he began shaking Mako while shouting, "Who are you and what did you do with the real Mako? I may have only met her once, but the Mako I knew was a happy bundle of joy! A pod person like you could never replicate the true Mako! Tell me where you hid her!"

"That is Mako," Ryuko said.

"Huh?" Isshin looked at Ryuko before glancing back at a shaken Mako, "Are you sure? She looks like she's been practicing a really snooty noblewoman's laugh."

"Yeah I'm sure. Can you let her down now?"

"Well... ok," Isshin plopped Mako back onto her feet and she immediately began fixing her appearance. After looking into a pocket mirror and making sure not a hair was out of place, Mako turned to Ryuko and gave her friend a thumbs up.

"Let's get going, Ryuko. This little distraction wasted too much time already," Mako grabbed Ryuko's hand and began dragging her friend out of Honnouji Academy and towards the courtyard.

" Don't let her take me, Ryuko!" Senketsu's mostly unheard voice echoed through the hallways, "My Life Fibers are already too worn out from all this fighting! If I don't rest I'll surely fray!"

As he listened to Senketsu's voice fade into the background, Isshin had to admit that Souchiro did a good job in making a Kamui.

Senketsu was extremely well put together. Isshin wasn't even sure if Kisuke could have made Mugetsu much better than Senketsu in the same amount of time.

As he listened to Senketsu's pleas fade off into the distance, Isshin let out an involuntary sigh of relief. That was not a conversation he wanted to do again anytime soon, but he supposed it was better Ryuko heard it from him rather than someone else.

"You seem to be having a good time, Isshin."

Isshin didn't need to turn around to know who was speaking to him, "Well, what kept you Aikuro? I expected you to stop by the moment I got here."

"Humph," Aikuro stepped off the window ledge and ran a hand through his shaggy blue hair, taking off his glasses in the process, "You must really be self-centered to think my life revolves around you. I am a teacher after all. I have students counting on me to teach them the subtleties of history three times a day. It just so happened that your timely arrival coincided with one of those classes."

Isshin couldn't really fault Aikuro for not showing up when he arrived. Isshin wasn't as close with Nudist Beach as he used to be after more than a decade of raising his family alone, "So what do you want to discuss? These rooms aren't exactly the most private place to hold a conversation."

"You don't need to worry about Satsuki's bugs. I removed those a few hours ago." Aikuro held out his hand and showed nearly two dozen small devices resting in his palm, "Of course I'm going to give her the most expensive ones back. Those will put a dent even in her vast wallet. In any case, I couldn't help but overhear your little talk. That was some motivational speech you gave to Ryuko."

"Someone had to give it to her," Isshin grumbled and stared accusingly at Aikuro.

"Hey now," Aikuro held his hands up nervously, "You know well enough that I'm not good at those sorts of things, although I didn't expect you to actually tell her about Masaki."

"Ryuko needed someone to relate to," Isshin sighed and thought back over the last couple of hours, "You must have seen the anger shimmering just beneath the surface. She was one big push from losing it, and control over Senketsu as well. Satsuki and her cronies wouldn't risk doing that to Ryuko, but there is one person that would..."

"Nui Harime," Aikuro muttered, "Kinue said what she thinks the Grand Couturier's plan is. I have to say that if Kinue was right, Nui Harime is truly an evil being. Who in their right mind would do something like that to someone?"

"Whoever said Nui was in her right mind?" Isshin turned away before adding, "You better not be stripping behind my back. You know I don't swing that way."

"I'm not suicidal," Aikuro chuckled at the joke while absentmindedly buttoning his shirt back up. He still bore the mental scars from the last time he unconsciously began stripping in Isshin's presence, "You're still a letdown Isshin, just as you always were, but I don't think you came to Honnouji Academy to exchange such pleasantries."

"I know," Isshin sighed wistfully and sat down on one of the desks, "Parent Student Day."

Aikuro looked at Isshin curiously, "You think Ragyo Kiryuin's going to make her move tomorrow?"

"What?" Do I look like I know the inner machinations of Ragyo's mind?" When Aikuro gave him a pointed look that said 'yes,' Isshin grumbled into the palm of his hand, "No, I don't think she will. It's much too early, even for her, to put anything into motion. She's after something and the only way she can get it is by coming to Parent Student Day."

"What do you think it is?" Aikuro asked before his breath caught in his throat, "Is it Ichigo?"

Isshin's eyes narrowed as he thought about it. His sources had told him that Ragyo didn't go to the previous two Parent Student Days, so what made her decide to go to the one this year? The only difference that he could think of off the top of his head was that Ichigo was attending this year.

"Perhaps," he conceded, "But she won't dare do anything as long as I stay close to Ichigo. That means she'll try to do something to draw Ichigo away from me. I need you to keep a close eye out on Ichigo tomorrow. Make sure he doesn't do anything too stupid."

"Fine," Aikuro drawled, "What about Ryuko? Professor Matoi wanted me to gradually tell her everything about what he was doing."

Isshin didn't answer Aikuro right away, "... tell her what she needs to know when you think she's ready, but try and wait a few days. Let her come to terms and deal with what I just told her."

"Alright," Aikuro looked out the window and noticed a large commotion coming from the courtyard, "Something big is about to go down. Perhaps we should go check it out. What do you say Isshin?"

Aikuro turned and saw the elder Kurosaki had already vanished. Sighing in frustration, he began to follow Isshin out the door. One day he was going to ask the man how the hell he managed to always disappear like that.

---

...

---

"Let's get this wrapped up soon!" A nameless One-Star student dressed as a manager shouted into a megaphone while directing other students to and fro across the courtyard, "We have a little more than an hour until the match starts! If Lady Satsuki arrives and finds the arena not yet finished, I'm going to blame each and every one of you!"

As the workers grumbled curses at the manager, causing him to yell at them some more, Ichigo stared down from the recently erected bleachers at the scene with a frown adorning his face.

" Still thinking about Mako?"

"Yeah," Ichigo mumbled. Ever since Mako became the president of the Fight Club, allowing her family to move into the Two-Star Residential District, she had become nearly a complete stranger. It started with a few small things that could have been mistaken for simply Mako's excessive imagination but eventually Ichigo realized that despite his repeated warnings Mako had let the power go to her head.

" What do you plan on doing about it?" Mugetsu asked before shifting her gaze to the arena below. Following her line of sight, Ichigo saw Mako march out and begin giving directions to the manager.

"To be honest I don't know," Ichigo stretched out a kink in his shoulder, "But I don't think words are going to work on Mako. She's much too stubborn to listen."

Mugetsu seemed to mull something over before she excitedly said, "Perhaps you should hit her on the head a few times."

Ichigo was a little stunned by his Kamui's need for violence, "You want me to fight Mako?"

" Of course not!" Mugetsu seemed incensed by Ichigo's accusation. She would gladly admit that liked to fight. It was what she was created for after all. But there was a fine line between fighting and indulging in senseless and pointless violence. Doing her best to look up into Ichigo's eyes, she scoffed haughtily and said, "I'm suggesting Mako's head is hard enough to be hit a few times without sustaining injury. Have you seen how many times she's been attacked since you met her? There's a better chance that Mako will die from forgetting that she needs to breathe than from anything you can do to her!"

Ichigo hated that Mugetsu had a point. With all the injuries Mako's received, ranging from getting hit in the face with dozens of tennis balls to nearly being vivisected by the insane Biology club, she should have died or at least been gravely injured a long time ago. How Mako managed to survive being hit with dozens of tennis balls without sustaining at least a minor concussion or broken jaw boggled his mind.

"You have a point," he conceded and immediately felt a surge of smugness emanate from Mugetsu. Deciding to nip it in the bud as soon as possible, he added, "But even if that's true I'm still not going to fight Mako. It just doesn't seem right to fight her."

Mugetsu didn't say anything that, choosing instead to stare annoyingly at him in the hopes that he would take her advice. Despite the looks his Kamui was giving him, Ichigo's attention was focused elsewhere at the moment. Ryuko had just appeared down in the arena and immediately Mako went over to her and began pointing out various things to the tired girl. Mako must have really lost perspective on her life if she was unable to see just how exhausted and beat Ryuko was.

Noticing something out of the corner of his eyes, Ichigo glanced up to the top of Honnouji Academy and saw a shadowy figure standing on the roof. While he couldn't exactly see or make out who it was, Ichigo had a pretty good idea who it might be. Judging from the fact that she hadn't yet made her presence known, Ichigo figured Satsuki Kiryuin wanted to keep a low profile for the moment. That meant she was up to something and it most likely involved Ryuko.

" Satsuki's up to something," Ichigo watched as Ryuko tiredly nodded to everything Mako was telling her and tried to put himself in Satsuki's position even though the idea irritated him. The Elite Four, or was it three now, were the three toughest fighters at Honnouji Academy. It would take Ryuko at her full strength to defeat just one of them. Why would Satsuki allow Ryuko to fight them so soon after constant battles against the Two-Star club presidents?

" It would be pragmatic for Satsuki to make Ryuko fight her Elite Four when she's exhausted," Ichigo realized, "But it's not Satsuki's style. If she wanted to do that, she would have announced the fight the day before, giving the academy enough time to come see. Announcing the fight only a few hours in advance means she's planning something else and I'm just not seeing it."

When he heard his cell phone beginning to ring in his pocket, Ichigo originally decided to ignore it in favor of trying to think of what Satsuki was planning. As the phone continued to ring for over a minute, Ichigo muttered a curse and fished it out of his pocket. It was probably just his dad calling to say that he got lost on the way to the bathroom, "Hello?"

"Hiya cousin!" An excessively cheerful and familiar voice shouted from the other end of the line, "It's been such a long time since we've talked. I was starting to think you forgot about me."

"Nui Harime..." Mugetsu tensed up around Ichigo's body as he spoke, "How did you even get this number?"

"Pfft," Ichigo could hear Nui giving him a raspberry over the phone, "I have my ways. It's so upsetting to hear all this hostility coming from you, Ichigo. And here I've been nothing but friendly to you."

"That's interesting," Ichigo turned his back to the arena and held his cellphone closer to his ear, "I don't know who you take me for, but I'm not stupid. I'm pretty sure you're the one that killed Ryuko's dad. Why did you do it?"

There was a pause on the other end of the line and Ichigo would have assumed Nui hung up on him if not for the faint breathing coming through the speaker. When Nui did speak to him again after nearly half a minute of silence the hairs on the back of Ichigo's neck stiffened at the very subtle venom in Nui's voice, "You know, it's not very nice to lie to people like that. If you keep telling such outrageous fibs, I'm going to have to hurt your friend a lot more."

"Friend? Who - "

Ichigo's voice froze in midsentence when he heard the very distinct sound of Shinjiro screaming in pain somewhere in the background. Gritting his teeth when he heard Nui giggle, he nearly shouted into the phone, "Shinjiro! What the hell did you do to him?"

"Oh... not much," Nui's saccharine voice answered in the same tone in which someone might ask how your day went. Humming something to herself, she continued with a giggle, "I only stabbed him in his arms and legs five times. He's actually doing pretty well if you ignore the pain and blood loss. If he doesn't get help soon I don't think he's going to make it. Humans like him tend to do that way too often for it to be fun anymore."

Ichigo's hand clenched around the phone, "What the hell do you want with me?"

"Oh ~ don't be so serious Ichigo!" Nui's voice seemed to sound disappointed at the anger in his voice. It was almost like she couldn't understand why he felt the way he did, "All I want to do is talk with you. Capturing your little friend was just to make sure you couldn't say no to me. Ah! Tell you what! If you come and meet with me in thirty minutes I'll let your friend go alive and with all his limbs still attached to his body. I think that's a fair deal, don't you?"

"You tortured Shinjiro just to speak with me?" Ichigo would have scoffed in outrage if he wasn't trying to think of something, anything, he could do to save Shinjiro.

"It's because you were so mean to me," Ichigo could sense the pout on Nui's face through the phone, "Getting all those strange and wrong ideas about how I'm psychotic and evil. I needed a chance to prove you wrong and so I decided to do this. All I want to do is talk to you and get to know my cousin a little better. Is that so hard to ask? Besides, do you really have time to argue semantics? Your friend only has like twenty seven minutes to live now."

This was so obvious a trap that Ichigo was already tripping over it, but there really wasn't anything he could do about it. If Shinjiro really was in danger from Nui Harime, then he needed to do something. With a resounding sigh, he said, "Fine."

"Goodie!" Nui clapped her hands in happiness before speaking again, "Meet me at the old power station deep in the Slums within thirty minutes. If you're one minute late, your friend here is going to be sorry~"

"Wait! Don't you - "

Ichigo was cut off when Nui hung up on him in midsentence. He couldn't understand what her fascination with him was. Was she so determined to speak with him that she would kidnap and torture his friends just to do it?

" What are you going to do?" Mugetsu was nothing but concerned for her wearer. She could feel his pulse racing and the temperature of his blood was rising. Ichigo was angry and she didn't like it, "Ichigo?"

"I'm fine. Just give me a moment to think," Ichigo muttered and took a deep breath to calm himself down. Making him upset, and irrational, was no doubt part of Nui's plan or whatever it was she truly wanted from him. He wasn't naïve enough to believe she really wanted to just talk with him. If she wanted to do that, she could have appeared next to him like the last two times she invaded his personal space. Running a hand through his hair, he went over his options.

Going in alone would be nearly suicidal at the moment. He had no idea how strong Nui was but there was no doubt that she was extremely strong... and also batshit insane. From the way she spoke to him, Nui didn't seem to see anything wrong with torturing people. It even sounded like she found it to be fun. He needed backup from someone at least as strong as him. Thinking rapidly, Ichigo came up with three people - Ryuko, Ururu or Satsuki.

He couldn't take Ryuko even if she was the best choice. She was already exhausted from all the fighting she had been doing. Taking her to rescue Shinjiro would have risked her death since Ichigo was certain Nui would kill her. Ururu would have also been fine, but Ichigo knew Ururu's place was to keep Mako from going too far off the deep end. As the Fight Club Vice-President, Ururu's job was to be Mako's sounding board for scheduling and ideas. Since Ururu was most likely immune to power corruption, she had been vital in keeping Mako from doing anything too stupid or dangerous.

Ichigo groaned when he realized that meant he was only left with Satsuki.

As he made his way to where he knew Satsuki was watching, Mugetsu decided to voice her concerns on the matter, "Are you sure you can trust Satsuki to help you? You aren't exactly friendly with her."

"Satsuki's the head of the Student Council," Ichigo said as he pressed down on his spaulder, allowing Mugetsu to transform to her true state. Clenching a fist as her power coursed through his body, Ichigo glanced upwards before bending his knees and jumping, "I'm sure she wouldn't want one of her students to die under her watch."

" But she's admitted to killing spies posing as students and those that rebelled against her," Mugetsu pointed out worriedly.

"I know," Ichigo admitted as he took the last jump needed to reach Satsuki, "But I don't have a choice in the matter. You're just going to have to trust me on this."

As soon as he appeared over the edge of the roof and even before he touched down, Ichigo found himself surrounded on both sides by Gamagori and Sanageyama. Both men had their respective weapons out and aimed at vital areas of his body. Uncaring about the possible threats to his health, Ichigo stared at Satsuki's back and said, "We need to talk."

"It's a pleasure seeing you again, Ichigo," Satsuki answered without turning around. As her long black hair blew in the breeze, she continued, "Although it is a rather strange turn of events for you to come see me, but I must ask you something. What gives you the right to so brazenly come near me?"

Ichigo's eyes glanced back and forth between Sanageyama and Gamagori, "Nui Harime."

Satsuki's hands tightly clenched the hilt of Bakuzan upon hearing the Grand Couturier's name. She didn't know what Nui Harime wanted with Ichigo, but if she were to go by the Grand Couturier's previous interests, it would not be good for anyone involved. Hiding her anger and trepidation with a haughty scoff, she looked at Gamagori and said, "Leave us."

Gamagori looked shocked, "But Lady Satsuki - "

"That was not a suggestion," Satsuki's tone brokered no arguments, "You too Sanageyama. Ichigo and I have private matters to discuss. If you are concerned about my safety, your worry is unwarranted. Ichigo has no intention of assaulting me."

"Very well Lady Satsuki," Sanageyama's hands tightened around his shinai before sheathing it.

Once they were left alone, Satsuki turned to completely face Ichigo, "Speak. You have my attention."

"How well do you know Nui Harime?"

Satsuki paused to consider the question before answering, "More than you would think. Why did you bring her name up?"

Ichigo knew that dodging around the issue wouldn't work with someone like Satsuki Kiryuin. Deciding to be as blunt as possible, he said, "She's kidnapped and is torturing one of my friends. She says she will kill him if I don't go meet with her."

"Then your friend is lost," Satsuki answered without hesitation. She knew far better than anyone at Honnouji Academy what happens to those that Nui Harime takes an interest in. Satsuki had personally seen the Grand Couturier's work and she would never admit that it gave her more than a few nightmares in the following weeks, "It would be best to not get involved in Nui Harime's schemes."

"That won't work," Ichigo argued, "Even if I wanted to leave Shinjiro to be killed, Nui has already shown the ability to appear at random whenever she feels like it. What's to stop her from appearing in my dorm again?"

"Nui Harime was already here?" That piece of information bothered Satsuki greatly. The Grand Couturier damn well knew that the academy was off limits to her ploys without announcing her presence beforehand. If she were to believe Ichigo's words, then Nui had already visited Honnouji Academy at least once before. Of course Satsuki had suspected Nui was in Honnou City disguised as someone else, but without a body count or murders with her modus operandi Satsuki would only have her assumptions.

"I thank you for bringing this to light," Satsuki analyzed Ichigo's expression and saw that his determination had not wavered. Ichigo was still set on rescuing his friend from the Grand Couturier, "I assume you came to speak to me in regards to gaining my help in a rescue operation. I will tell you now that I do not believe in pointless confrontations."

"You are the Student Council President," Ichigo argued angrily, "It's your damn job to make sure every student is kept safe!"

"You are absolutely correct!" Satsuki clicked her heel against the roof as she planted Bakuzan in front of her, "But sending students against Nui Harime is the equivalent of sending pigs to the slaughter! It is pragmatic to allow Nui to kill only one student instead of dozens! At this point in time there are only two people in Honnouji Academy that can stand Nui Harime's power and live. Those two people are you and me, Ichigo! Therefore I shall offer you a proposition!"

Ichigo couldn't help but feel that he wasn't going to like this, "What do you want?"

"Become my Vice-President!" Satsuki shouted and she immediately became surrounded by a backdrop of light, "Agree to do so and I will personally go with you to rescue that student from Nui Harime's clutches!"

For a moment, Satsuki thought Ichigo was going to agree to her quite lenient terms. Despite what Matoi and Ichigo might believe, she had no part in Nui Harime's schemes. Satsuki did not like the Grand Couturier any more than she needed. Putting up with Nui was simply a necessity that would not harm her as long as her mother ordered Nui not to. She was appalled that Nui would not only take a student hostage but also proceed to torture them.

She was taken aback when Ichigo raced forward and grabbed her by the front of Junketsu, "What the fuck is wrong with you? One of your students is going to die without help and you're more worried about your power? Who the hell do you think you are to make such a decision? I don't even know why I bothered to ask for your help when you obviously didn't care enough in the first place. Forget it. I'm going to go rescue Shinjiro from Nui Harime's clutches."

Satsuki was stunned by Ichigo's words, but she was still composed enough to say, "You'll be falling into her trap."

"Maybe so," Ichigo said as he let go of Satsuki and walked towards the edge of the roof, "But you said I'm one of the only two that could face her in combat. I think I'll manage just fine without your 'so-called' help. Let's go Mugetsu."

Without bothering to hear anything else Satsuki had to say, Ichigo leapt off Honnouji Academy and raced towards where Nui was hiding. He didn't have much time left before she killed Shinjiro. His futile decision to ask Satsuki for help had wasted too much time and he didn't want to think about the consequences.

" Do you have a plan for when you confront Nui?" Mugetsu was worried for Ichigo. She could sense something wrong with Nui back when the Grand Couturier first appeared. Mugetsu didn't want Ichigo getting hurt.

Vaulting over the outer wall of Honnouji Academy, Ichigo slid down the large walls leading to the Two-Star Residential District as he answered, "No, but I think fighting Nui is going to be the answer no matter what I do. Are you ready for whatever she has planned?"

" Yes," Mugetsu sounded extremely confident, "We have grown much stronger since Nui first appeared before you. I'm sure we are more than a match for whatever she has planned for us."

Ichigo's eyes narrowed as he spotted his destination in the distance, "I hope so. I really do."

---

...

---

Ryuko tapped her foot impatiently against the ground as she tried to think about what to do. Glancing up into the stands for what seemed like the twelfth time in as many minutes, she saw once again that Ichigo was no longer there. She didn't know what was so important that he ran out of Honnouji Academy, but Ryuko was certain it had something to do with Satsuki Kiryuin. She saw him talk to her just before running off. As much as Ryuko would have liked to storm over and demand to know what Satsuki told him, she would have to wait until the Student Council President came back from wherever she went.

" Your blood pressure is spiking, Ryuko," Senketsu's voice would be a comforting presence if not for what he said next, "It's making your blood much too salty for my tastes."

"Is drinking my blood all you think about?" Ryuko asked in complete disbelief.

" Of course not!" Senketsu answered in a tone that didn't betray his shock at the accusation, "But getting stressed out about everything isn't going to help. I find that in times like this it is better to just sit back and see what happens."

"I know that! It's just that..." Ryuko absentmindedly went to bite the tip of her thumb, a nervous habit she thought she already kicked, before stopping herself. She must have been more nervous than she thought, but Ryuko knew the upcoming fight wasn't what was making her feel this way.

" It's Mako, isn't it?"

"Yeah," Ryuko muttered sadly, "I must be a terrible person. Mako's my best friend and I'm letting her become something she's not. Everything's falling apart and I don't know what to do Senketsu."

"You look nervous, Ryuko."

Ryuko was brought out of her contemplation when she heard Ururu speak to her. Unlike Mako, the Vice-President of the Fight Club had refused to wear a business suit and Ryuko wasn't certain if Ururu could even pull off the look as well as Mako did. Instead, she had chosen to keep her No-Star uniform, albeit a new one after her first one got torn up during her fight against Kinue Kinagase.

"Tch," Ryuko scoffed and tried her best to hide her sadness, "It's just fighting four battles in a row is going to be a problem. By the time I get to Satsuki Kiryuin, I'm going to be dead on my feet."

Ururu stared at her and for a moment Ryuko was concerned she was having her soul examined. After a moment Ururu turned her gaze away and shook her head, "Mako is doing this for her family. She might not have told you or Ichigo, but Mako hated being poor more than anything. Whenever she would tell me about her day, she would also stare forlornly at the One and Two-Star students and say how jealous she was of their wealth and money. She's really glad you were able to help her achieve her family's dream, you know."

Ryuko opened her mouth to speak but quickly closed it again. She had known something was bothering Mako ever since they met, but Mako never said anything to her about it and Ryuko wasn't one to pry. The Mankanshoku's had taken her in as their surrogate daughter. Who was she to ask them such personal questions? Swallowing the bile in her throat, she asked, "Why did Mako tell you and not me?"

"It's because you're her best friend," Ururu answered softly and Ryuko momentarily thought she was looking past her and into the distance, "She didn't want to worry you about her problems. She was just really happy to have her first real friend." At this Ururu's voice trailed off and Ryuko noticed she seemed really sad about something, "I miss Mako. She's not fun to be around anymore. Ever since she became the President of the Fight Club she's been too busy working to hang out and play. I don't like being alone, Ryuko."

"Damn it," Ryuko smacked her fist against her palm, "Nothing I can do will fix this! If I help get the old Mako back, her family will go back to being poor and it will be my entire fault. If I allow her to stay like this, I'll lose my best friend. What can I do, Ururu?"

"I don't know, but I know what Ichigo would do." A small smile spread across Ururu's face, "If Ichigo were here, he would say to do what is right and forget about the consequences until later. It's good advice. It's worked before so it should work fine with you. Do what you need to do, Ryuko, but please get the Mako that was my friend back. Please."

" Ryuko..."

"Yeah," Ryuko nodded to Senketsu and placed her hand on Ururu's shoulder, "Don't worry Ururu. I know what I need to do. Just hang tight and everything will be back to normal as soon as I'm done."

Ryuko walked past a visibly happier Ururu towards Mako. Her best friend was standing in the middle of the arena with her hands placed firmly on her hips as she barked out orders to various One-Star students about where certain things needed to be. As she noticed her friend approaching, Mako turned and gave Ryuko a cocky smile that didn't belong on her face, "This is it, Ryuko! This is the day we've been waiting for. Once you defeat Lady Satsuki's Elite Three nothing will stand in our way! The Fight Club's prestige and power will never again be contested by the other clubs of Honnouji Academy!"

"Yeah, about that," Ryuko struggled to say the words, "Don't you think you're taking this a little too far?"

"What are you talking about?" Mako scoffed haughtily and pressed her glasses further up her nose, "This is what you've been waiting for. Lady Satsuki has given you permission to fight her forces for the answers you seek."

I know that! It's just..." Ryuko took a deep breath before staring at Mako, "This isn't you! The Mako I know wouldn't act like everyone is beneath her!"

"You don't know what you're talking about," Mako huffed angrily, "You've been talking to Ichigo, haven't you? He's always been the one to say I shouldn't be doing this and that it won't end well for me! Well, I'll prove him wrong! Today the Fight Club becomes the best club in Honnouji Academy!"

Mako then started laughing and Ryuko knew her friend was gone. The laughter she was hearing was not one of happiness or glee, as the old Mako was prone to do, but one of smug haughtiness. Realizing her friend was gone, Ryuko turned her head and saw a dejected look fall over Ururu's face and decided enough was enough. She had been hoping that she wouldn't need to do this but it seemed that she had no choice. Reaching into Senketsu, she clenched her hand around a sealed envelope and threw it at Mako.

"Huh?" For the first time all day Mako had a genuinely perplexed look as she caught the envelope, "What's this?"

"My letter of resignation," Ryuko answered softly as she turned to walk away, "I'm done with the Fight Club. I can't stand who you've become Mako. You want wealth and power? Then fight Satsuki and her goons yourself. I quit."

"But... but..." Mako stuttered her words as Ryuko continued to walk away without a second glance. She couldn't do this to her! Ryuko was her friend and she was just going to abandon her to the wolves like this? Mako's hands clenched in anger as she shouted, "You can't do this to me, Ryuko! Do you know what quitting will mean for my family? We'll go back to being poor and living in the Slums again!"

Ryuko paused in midstride and said, "That's a risk I'm willing to take."

"No. no. no!" Mako stomped her foot impetuously, "I won't ever go back to the Slums! Never again!"

In the midst of Mako's tirade against her return to poverty, she became acutely aware of a whistling sound in the air. As she looked around for the source of the strange and irritating noise, she was suddenly throw forward as Ira Gamagori landed on the ground just behind her. Holding an armoire on top of one of his shoulders, Gamagori looked back and forth between Ryuko and Mako before speaking.

"Matoi! Ryuko!" Gamagori's booming voice was loud enough to cause Ryuko to wince slightly from the noise, "There has been a scheduled change of venue!"

Ryuko dug a finger into her ear to relieve the sound-induced headache, "What the hell are you shouting about, Gamagori bastard?"

Gamagori glared angrily at Ryuko for once again referring to him by the audacious name originally given to him by Ichigo Kurosaki, but he did not respond. He was down here for a very specific reason and with Lady Satsuki taking a leave of absence. With Satsuki gone it was up to him to both keep order among the students and Satsuki's grand plans going. Gripping the armoire in his hand, he slammed it on the ground and turned to Mako, "Mankanshoku! Lady Satsuki apologizes but due to new circumstances she will not be able to witness today's events. She sends her regards as well as a gift - your very own Two-Star Goku Uniform!"

"My very own uniform?" A bit of Mako's old behavior filtered through in that moment of confusion, "But I didn't order one."

"Lady Satsuki thinks otherwise!" Gamagori shouted with the unmistakable hint of pride in his voice. He wasn't happy that Mako was associated with the rabble that was Ryuko Matoi, but there was no way he could deny the efficiency and perfectionism that Mako brought to the Fight Club. In the short time she had been the club president, Mako had passed by each and every other club in following the rules and regulations. That was something that would have brought a tear to Gamagori's rule abiding eyes if he happened to be alone at that moment.

Turning his attention to the hushed crowd, Gamagori took a moment to clear his throat before shouting louder than ever, "Listen up students of Honnouji Academy! Today's events have been altered from what was earlier announced! Instead of Ryuko Matoi fighting us, the Elite Three bodyguards of Lady Satsuki, she will now fight Mako Mankanshoku!"

"What?" Ryuko grit her teeth and took a threatening step towards Gamagori, "Like hell I'm going to fight Mako you stupid bastard!"

"If she doesn't..." Gamagori continued off from where he was, uncaring of Ryuko's threat, "... then Mankanshoku will forgo her current social standing and lifestyle. It will be as if she never became the Fight Club President in the first place! If Mankanshoku manages to defeat Matoi and strips her of her Kamui, Lady Satsuki has promised to bestow upon her a Three-Star Goku Uniform as well as a place in the newly reestablished Elite Four! Now what is your decision?"

"Damn it," Ryuko hissed through clenched teeth. How dare Satsuki Kiryuin try and pull something like this on her! Trying to turn Mako against her with the promise of money and power was just playing dirty.

"Don't focus your anger at me, Matoi," Gamagori informed her evenly, "The decision on whether this fight will take place rests solely on the shoulders of Mankanshoku."

"Shut up!" Ryuko shouted as she pulled the pin out of her glove and announced, "Life Fiber Synchronize: Kamui Senketsu!"

As the exhaust vents on her back burst into life and she rocketed along the ground towards Gamagori, Ryuko was confused as to why the larger man was simply standing there with his arms folded across his chest. Her answer came soon enough when a pair of knuckle dusters slammed into her cheek and sent her flying across the arena until she managed to skid to a stop.

Shaking her head as she rubbed her sore cheek, Ryuko looked around, "What just hit me?"

"That would be me, Ryuko!"

Ryuko rolled out of the wall as a pair of geta smashed into the ground where her head had just been. Springing back onto her feet,

Ryuko saw who had attacked her and could only mutter a single word, "... Mako?"

"That's right, Ryuko!" Mako spun her black hat around while adjusting the green reed from one side of her mouth to the other, "Fight-Club Spec Two-Star Goku Uniform worn by me, the Fight Club President Mako Mankanshoku!"

" Damn, " Ryuko pulled her red Scissor Blade out of the pouch on her waist and quickly willed it back to its normal size. She could see the look in Mako's eyes and knew there was nothing she could do but fight Mako and hope she would get her old friend back. As her hands nervously gripped the handle of her weapon, Ryuko realized that she was just kidding herself. As much as she knew she needed to fight Mako, somewhere deep inside her heart she just couldn't bring herself to do it. Mako was her friend and nothing would change that.

Something out of the corner of her eyes caught Ryuko's attention and quickly caused her to reevaluate her decision. Standing on the side of the arena with her hands held right under her chin was Ururu and it was apparent that the normally shy girl was only minutes away from crying. Steadying her nerves upon seeing that, Ryuko took a deep breath and turned completely towards Mako.

"Are you ready for this, Senketsu?"

" Yeah," Senketsu would have nodded if he was able to, but the best he could do was turn his eye towards Ryuko, "This won't be easy. Mako appears to be more powerful than those other Two-Star students. We might have our work cut out for us."

"I know," Ryuko swallowed the lump in her throat as she saw Mako's feet move ever so slightly on the ground. Knowing what was about to happen, she shifted into a defensive stance of her own, "Get ready Senketsu! Here she comes!"

---

...

---

The Honnou City Area One Subdivision Power Station's history was as long as it was bloody. Three years ago when Satsuki Kiryuin came into power a group of students waged a guerilla war against her leadership. Hiding out in the Slums as well as the homes of those embracing their cause, they managed to fight against the power of the Goku Uniforms for nearly a month. It was no coincidence those thirty one days was the amount of time Satsuki decided to give the rebels the option to surrender or pay the price.

On the end of the first month Satsuki struck back hard. In less than five hours she not only managed to cripple their leadership but also drive them out of almost their entire territory until their last bastion of power was the power station. It was there that they held off the forces under the leadership of Ira Gamagori for another ten hour, each room of the power station taken back by Satsuki but only after taking heavy casualties. At the end of the tenth hour, Gamagori finally managed to strike down the last rebel leader and crushed the rebellion once and for all.

In the ensuing months, Satsuki began rebuilding the destroyed areas of the Slums as well as fortifying the power station among other important structures. It was only because the rebels controlled the power to the Slums that they were able to hold off her forces for so long. By preventing a repeat of such an occurrence, Satsuki made sure that her power would never be contested again.

Ichigo approached the chain link fence, topped with razor-sharp barbed wire, and grimaced when she saw the normally padlocked outer gate hanging haphazardly on its hinges. Giving the gate a slight push with his hand, he wasn't surprised when it fell off its hinges and hit the ground with a loud thump.

" Do you think she heard that?" Mugetsu asked sarcastically.

"I'm pretty sure she already knew I was here," Ichigo muttered as he caught sight of a security camera that seemed to constantly follow his movements. He has seen several similar cameras in the surrounding area, so the odds of Nui Harime already knowing of his presence were pretty much assured. Pulling out Tournesol from its scabbard on his back, Ichigo cautiously walked towards the thick steel door leading into the power station. Just because he managed to get here in less than thirty minutes didn't mean Nui Harime was going to play fair.

Taking a deep breath, Ichigo stepped forward and swung Tournesol at the door. The Life Fiber blade was more than a match for the three inches of reinforced steel and moments later the two sides of the door fell to the ground with a resounding crash.

As Ichigo stepped inside the power station, the first thing he noticed was the lack of lighting due to the facility being nearly autonomous apart from the weekly maintenance and systems checkup. The second thing he noticed was that for a power station designed to maximum space and resources there was a lot of room to move around in. The third and final thing Ichigo noticed was Nui Harime standing in front of a door across the room.

"You've finally made it Ichigo!" Nui's shadow seemed to shift and morph eerily from the deep orange light seeping out from under the door behind her. If that wasn't enough, Nui's pink Lolita dress appeared to remain as bright and vibrant as ever despite the lack of light. Noticing Ichigo's suspicious gaze, Nui stepped forward towards him, her hands clasped behind her back, and smiled happily, "I was beginning to worry that you decided to not show up. That made me feel really sad, you know."

Ichigo didn't answer as he looked past Nui and into the room behind her, "That must be where she's keeping Shinjiro, but I don't hear anything? Did she kill him?"

"Let me ask you something," Ichigo focused his attention back on Nui, "You said that you would let Shinjiro leave here alive if I came within thirty minutes. I'm here so let him go."

"Ah, ah, ah!" Nui wagged her finger childishly at Ichigo and puffed her cheeks out, "That's not how the game works, but a promise is a promise and you're supposed to keep your promises. That's what I've been taught after all. Unfortunately there's a bit of bad news. That human friend of yours just wasn't tough enough to stand up to my games and passed out about... I don't know... ten minutes ago from blood loss. That's probably why he's so quiet. I don't know about you, but I would take him to see a doctor or something or he might die."

"Let me take Shinjiro to a doctor and then I promise I will talk to you as for as long as you want."

"Really?" Nui's eye widened in surprise and happiness, "That's a really generous offer, Ichigo, and I would really like to take it. Unfortunately I'm going to have to pass. Until we have our heart to heart talk, your friend is going to have to wait."

"Damn you!" Ichigo stepped forward and pointed Tournesol at Nui, "This isn't a damn game! Let Shinjiro go now!"

"You really shouldn't be too hasty..." Nui's voice remained cheerful as she reached into one of her pigtails and pulled out a detonator, "If you continue to act rude to me I think I'll have to press this button. The other end is connected to plastic explosives wrapped around your little friend. You don't want to have to clean up after him, do you cousin?"

"I'm not your damn cousin," Ichigo reiterated once again as he forced himself to calm down. For the moment Nui Harime held all the cards. Getting angry would only force her to press the switch and kill Shinjiro and he knew without a doubt that she would do it. Most likely with a smile on her face the entire time.

"So this is the wonderful and beautiful Mugetsu..." In the split second Ichigo had blinked, Nui Harime disappeared from in front of him and reappeared to his left. As her hand gently rubbed his sleeve, her eye looking into Mugetu's multicolored pair with an unholy glee, she said, "It's such a high quality design. Whoever made it for you is really a master. It's perhaps even better than anything I can weave and that makes me feel super jealous."

" Ichigo!" Mugetsu was beginning to go into a full blown panic as Nui continued to stroke her. She did not like the Grand Couturier's touch one bit. It was like the touch of the dead.

Grabbing Nui's hand by her wrist, Ichigo turned his body towards her, "You said you wanted to talk. Now talk."

"C'est désagréable..." Nui pouted adorably as she easily pulled her hand out from Ichigo's grip, "But when you're right, you're right, you know. The first time I tried to talk with you it was really late and you looked really tired so I didn't want to bother you. The second time we were so rudely interrupted by Amu, but good thing the third time's the charm! Now we have all the time in the world to get to know one another as cousins."

Something in the way Nui said cousins disturbed Ichigo. Glancing briefly towards the back room, he stalled for time and asked, "Why do you keep insisting we're cousins?"

"That's the perfect question, Ichigo!" Nui exclaimed happily as she twirled away from him and skipped a few steps. Stomping her feet on the ground, she turned back around and placed a finger against her bottom lip, "It's because while we aren't brother and sister, I'm still closer to you than those sisters of you. Inside the two of us beats identical pulses that resonant with one another. Being around you makes me feel really happy, you know. It's such a shame that Satsuki isn't fun. She's much too serious to play with. You're serious too, but in a good way. I think I could get used to being around you Ichigo."

Months of fighting for his life developed in Ichigo a finely honed battle sense. Without even giving a sign of what he was about to do, Ichigo leapt back and avoided the thrust from Nui's hand that easily pierced the concrete floor.

"Simply amazing!" Nui was ecstatic at the fact that Ichigo not only managed to dodge her attack, but avoid taking any damage at all, "You passed my test. Congratulations Ichigo!"

"I understand now why you brought me here," Ichigo muttered quietly as he kept his eyes firmly locked on Nui, "It was to kill me, wasn't it? Somehow I'm getting in the way of whatever twisted plans you have and now you want to kill me."

"Kill you?" Nui laughed as she reached into her dress, "I don't want to kill you Ichigo! All I wanted to do was get to know my family and you've been nothing but hostile to me. I suppose this calls for some tough love."

In one swift and deliberate motion Nui pulled out a purple Scissor Blade. It was at that point in time that Ichigo realized without a doubt in his mind that Nui Harime was the one who not only attacked Kisuke but also killed Ryuko's dad. As his grip tightened around Tournesol, Ichigo noticed that the color of Nui's Scissor Blade was nearly identical to when Ururu disarmed Ryuko of her weapon all those days ago. He knew for a fact that Ururu was not Nui but he could not explain why he felt such unease about the notion.

"Tell me something," Ichigo slid his foot back and raised Tournesol, "That Scissor Blade. Why is it purple?"

"Oh don't be so silly Ichigo." Nui tapped her Scissor Blade against her shoulder as she answered, "It is the same reason why your sword is blue! It's as simple as that!"

That didn't answer Ichigo's question, but he didn't have time to think about as Nui rocketed towards him with the tip of her Scissor Blade pointed at his throat and a sweet smile on her face. Thinking quickly, he ducked to the side and used Tournesol to parry the Scissor Blade away from his body in a shower of sparks.

"It's really awesome that you dodged," Nui complemented as she spun her Scissor Blade around her wrist and swung it down at Ichigo. As their respective blades locked again, Nui noticed Ichigo was putting up a great deal of resistance and stuck her tongue out, "That's just what I expected from my cousin, after all!"

"Damn..." Ichigo gritted out as the concrete began to crack beneath his feet. Nui's strength was intense and it looked as if she wasn't even putting everything she had into it. As beads of sweat dripped down his face, Ichigo twisted his body to the side and allowed Nui's Scissor Blade to pass harmlessly by him. Before Nui could react to the sudden lack of resistance, Ichigo jammed his knee hard enough into her stomach that she flew backwards through the air.

"Gah!" Nui shouted in pain before smiling, "Just kidding! That didn't hurt a teeny tiny bit!"

As she floated down gently in the air from Ichigo's counter, Nui's smile never left her face. She could see why Ichigo really was worthy of not only being her cousin but also to wear a Kamui. Unlike that ratty Kamui Ryuko Matoi wore, which Nui didn't care to know its name, Mugetsu was a true Kamui in every sense of the word. What was really amazing was how Mugetsu covered up nearly all of Ichigo's body and yet he was still in firm control. Nui had only believed the Director could accomplish such a feat and yet Ichigo was doing it right in front of her eyes.

"You're super strong, Ichigo," Nui said cheerfully, "But are you strong enough to - "

Nui's single eye widened in shock as Ichigo rushed towards her nearly too fast for her to see. Swinging her Scissor Blade awkwardly in the air to try and stop his attack, she was stunned when Ichigo stabbed Tournesol through the hole in her weapon before slashing upwards and causing her blade to go spinning through the air. As she gaped at what was happening, Nui felt Ichigo's weapon pierce through her shoulder and out the other side accompanied by a shower of blood.

"W-What?" she gasped as she flew across the ground and slammed her against one of the walls.

"N-No fair," Nui muttered as blood spilling from her mouth with every syllable, "A-Attacking a defensive I-little girl like me is q-quite rude, y-you know."

"I don't like attacking girls," Ichigo admitted reluctantly as he pulled out Tournesol from Nui's body. As she slid to the ground with blood pouring out of her shoulder, Ichigo grabbed her purple Scissor Blade and jammed it so far into the ground that only the handle remained sticking out, "I also don't like killing people when given another option. With that wound in your shoulder you won't be able to do much of anything involving this blade. I hope I never have to see you again because if I find out you've threatened my friends, next time I'll end this."

Nui looked up at Ichigo for a few seconds before her eye closed and she appeared to fall unconscious from the blood loss. Ichigo wasn't worried about Nui dying on him. Even though she was a psychopath who took delight in torturing people, Ichigo just didn't have it in him to kill her. That wasn't who he was. Turning away from Nui's unconscious form, Ichigo quickly hurried towards where Shinjiro was being kept. Hopefully he made it in time to save his friend.

In one motion, he kicked open the door, "Shinjiro! Are you - "

Ichigo's voice failed him as he looked in the room and found that it was completely and utterly empty. There was no sign of Shinjiro anywhere. In fact, it looked like he had never even been here. There were no blood stains on the ground or anywhere else.

"What the hell?" Ichigo muttered as he stepped into the room. Glancing around he tried to figure out what was going on. He had been sure he heard Shinjiro's voice on the phone. So if he wasn't here, then where was Nui Harime keeping him?

" Ichigo!"

Mugetsu's shout of warning came too late. Ichigo barely had time to hear her call his name before the purple Scissor Blade was thrust through his back and burst out of his chest covered in blood.

Gasping in pain, he grimaced and shakily turned his head around to find a perfectly fine and smiling Nui Harime standing behind him.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #10 - Laundry Day

Ryuko Matoi loved the laundry room at Ichigo's dorm, and by that, she meant that Senketsu loved the laundry room.

While she was perfectly content with allowing Mrs. Mankanshoku to wash Senketsu, apparently her Kamui did not feel the same. Even though Senketsu greatly appreciated being ironed, the trade off, according to him, was much too steep. That was why Ryuko found herself hand washing Senketsu on a Friday night in the laundry room of Ichigo's dorm. She had no idea that a Kamui could be so... picky about how to be cleaned. After ten or so orders from Senketsu about what to clean next, Ryuko simply gave up and started nodding tiredly.

Washing Senketsu took longer than she thought it would because by the time she was done drying Senketsu, it was past midnight and she barely made it back to Mako's house before collapsing from exhaustion with the basket of her laundry left unfolded next to her bedspread. Her last thought before drifting off to sleep was that she would apologize to Senketsu tomorrow and maybe even iron him.

She certainly did not anticipate waking up wearing Satsuki's Kamui.

"What the -?" Ryuko bolted up and noticed her pajamas neatly folded next to her bed. Staring down into Junketsu's eyes, she growled and began trying to pull it off, "Hey! Get the hell off of me!"

Even with all the effort she was putting in, it seemed that the foreign Kamui just didn't want to be removed. Every time Ryuko would get a handhold, Junketsu would tighten itself up around her body, causing her to trip and fall to the ground. After her latest fall, Ryuko rubbed the back of her head and stared at the Kamui.

"How did you get here?"

The Kamui didn't say anything, which was as much as Ryuko expected. The question of why she was wearing Junketsu stupefied Ryuko. Didn't Satsuki keep her Kamui under lock and key most of the time? Looking at her basket of laundry, Ryuko's heart fell when she didn't recognize anything inside. It appeared that she, against all odds, ended up taking Satsuki's clean clothes home by accident. That begged the question of why Satsuki Kiryuin, daughter of one of the richest people in the world, was doing her laundry in a dorm laundry room. Didn't Satsuki have someone to do her laundry for her?

"Ok, look. Are you going to tell me how you managed to put yourself on me in the middle of the night?" Ryuko glared down at Junketsu and noticed, to her irritation, the Kamui staring up expectantly at her. Didn't Ichigo say it tried to devour Satsuki? Then why was it looking at her as if to say 'I'll do anything you ask?'

Sighing in frustration upon realizing that she had been waiting for Junketsu to say something, Ryuko decided to do the one thing she promised never to do - ask Satsuki Kiryuin for help. Running a hand down her face, Ryuko stepped over a remarkably still sleeping Mako and began the long trek to Honnouji Academy. Hopefully Satsuki was the one that ended up with Senketsu. Ryuko really didn't want to go on a quest around the world to get Senketsu back.

As if reading her thoughts, Junketsu emitted a soft growling and tightened itself up around her, eliciting an annoyed growl from Ryuko, "No. There is no way that I'm going to make you my Kamui! Senketsu is the only Kamui I'll ever wear."

Junketsu looked up at Ryuko with teary eyes and she immediately felt like she just kicked a puppy. Steadying her nerves by biting her lip, Ryuko huffed and looked away as she stormed out the Mankanshoku household and headed towards the trolley that would take her to Honnouji Academy.

"That's not going to work on me!" She declared stubbornly as she pointedly ignored the looks she was getting from other students. After three long, agonizing minutes of waiting for the trolley, what little happiness Ryuko had disappeared as she saw a familiar face.

"Hey, Ryuko." Ichigo waved before he saw what she was wearing, "Uh... you know that's not Senketsu, right?"

"Don't say another word," Ryuko threatened.

" Ha, ha!" Mugetsu's laughter permeated the air and Ryuko would have died from embarrassment if anyone besides Ichigo and herself could hear the Kamui, "Junketsu wanted to be worn by you! Senketsu is going to be so jealous when he finds out! Let's go with her, Ichigo! I want to see the fireworks!"

Ichigo thought about the crucial decision for maybe three seconds. On the one hand, he did want to see what happened when Satsuki and Ryuko met, but on the other hand, it was not likely to be pretty. Realizing that he might get caught in the crossfire, Ichigo crossed his arms in front of his chest and vehemently shook his head.

"No way," he nearly shouted, "There's no way I'm getting involved in this."

When the bell on the trolley began ringing and the trolley lurched forward, Ryuko could swear she heard Mugetsu mention something about 'extra clingy Life Fibers' and what that meant for her. Grumbling to herself, Ryuko sat down in the empty trolley and spent the next ten minutes trying her best to ignore each and every attempt by Junketsu to make her happy. While they all failed before they had a shot, the only one that gave her pause was Junketsu motioning towards the three blue bands on her left bicep. As much as transforming Junketsu intrigued her, Ryuko realized that to Senketsu it would seem as if she was cheating on him.

As the trolley stopped in front of Honnouji Academy, Ryuko frowned when she saw Satsuki waiting for her. The Student Council President was all alone, which was a good thing, and was wearing Senketsu with as much dignity and nobility as when she wore Junketsu.

"How dare you wear another Kamui, Ryuko!" Senketsu shouted angrily.

"I took the wrong basket of laundry, ok?" She mumbled out apologetically, "Besides, why is Satsuki wearing you?"

"Because I will not debase myself by wearing anything lower than a Kamui," Satsuki answered her coldly, "Now, if you don't mind, I would like to have Junketsu back."

"I would if I could!" Ryuko argued and made a motion of trying to take the Kamui off, "But the damn thing just won't get off of me!"

"That's not a problem," Ryuko didn't like the smug grin on Satsuki's face. She especially did not like it when Satsuki snapped her fingers and Iori appeared next to her holding what looked like a fire extinguisher.

"Now hold still, Matoi," Ryuko could feel the terror wafting off Junketsu as Iori approached her and, for once, she agreed with the Kamui, "This won't hurt a bit..."

Have You Ever Seen the Rain

So I finally bring the Fight Club episode to a close. It was fun while it lasted and it allowed me to flesh out characters and their motives, drives, and/or reasons but it is time for me to move on. Greener pastures await in Chapter 24, and by that I mean Parent Student Day is right around the corner. That's going to be a real ball of fun when Isshin meets Ragyo. Foreshadowing for the win!

Note #1: I have a tvtropes page full of info about this story that you may have missed.

Note #2: Currently revising Chapter 3 a bit. It should be up within a day of this chapter being posted

---

...

---

Chapter 23 - Have You Ever Seen the Rain

With a childish giggle accompanied by a smile, Nui Harime removed her purple Scissor Blade accompanied by a spurt of blood from its place within Ichigo's chest.

Ichigo felt his knees weaken and it took every last scrap of energy in his body to stop himself from collapsing onto the floor. Gritting his teeth as pain coursed through his body, he ignored the frantic ramblings from Mugetsu and quickly stabbed Tournesol into the concrete beneath him in order to keep himself standing. As blood flowed out from his wound, staining Mugetsu's white and black coloring with a deep shade of crimson, Ichigo saw Nui stroll around him with a satisfied smirk across her face.

"That was so much fun!" Nui exclaimed happily as she stopped in front of Ichigo and leaned forward in order to stare into his eyes.

Exhaustively and angrily looking at Nui's single eye, Ichigo was floored when he couldn't see a trace of animosity in her expressions. Stabbing her Scissor Blade into the ground, Nui began leaning on it and sighed, "That was amazing! I wasn't expecting you to be so fast, but surprise, surprise there I was pinned against the wall with your blade stabbed through my shoulder. It was so much fun to be on defense for once, even if it was just for pretend, but I think that's enough playing. Heal yourself back up and let's talk. There's so much I want to talk to you about!"

While Nui was beginning to ramble on about stuff that interested her, half of which involved killing and maiming her enemies, Ichigo was doing his best to keep from passing out. While he had managed to stay standing on his feet, the rate of blood loss was beginning to worry him. Even with his hand pressed firmly against the front of his chest in a futile attempt to stem the flow of blood, he quickly realized it could have been much worse. Whether it was by design or coincidence, Nui's sneak attack had managed to miss each and every one of his vital organs. She even somehow missed shattering any of his ribs. Putting the improbability of such an attack on the backburner since he was living proof it had happened, Ichigo tried to keep his mind focused on getting out of here alive. He needed to see a doctor but he was certain Nui Harime wasn't just going to let him leave.

"... and then I chopped his arm off and he screamed for at least five minutes!" While she was telling her story, Nui hadn't noticed Ichigo was still bleeding, but why would she? Ichigo was her cousin and if he was her cousin, like she knew he was, he would have healed himself right up and been back to normal within a few seconds. When he didn't move, she just assumed he was standing around politely listening to her story. Blinking owlshly as she saw he was still bleeding, she frowned in confusion and asked, "Why aren't you healed yet?"

"T-The hell are you?" Ichigo managed to say between ragged gasps for air. Already he could feel the pain from his wounds becoming nothing more than a general numbness. Even the flow of blood was beginning to lessen, but he was attributing that to Mugetsu doing her best to keep his blood within his body. When Nui removed her Scissor Blade from his body, it had taken Mugetsu a few moments to regenerate her form over the wounds, but it was already too late to stop a lot of his blood from pooling on the floor. Grasping Tournesol with shaky hands, he brought the blue blade up and pointed it at Nui in an attempt to look like he wasn't about to fall over, "No normal person could have regenerated from a wound like that so quickly!"

"Well... duh!" Nui stuck her tongue out childishly and giggled, "Whoever said I was a normal person, Ichigo? But you're being quite rude, cousin. You're standing in front of me acting and bleeding like a normal human when we're both much more than that! You should stop fooling around, you know."

When Nui attacked him, it was with a speed that made her previous attacks seem like teleportation. Ichigo didn't know whether she was mocking him or not, but the fact that her purple Scissor Blade was arcing through the air towards the junction of his neck and shoulder meant that he couldn't care. Gathering his strength while ignoring his wounds as best he could, Ichigo raised Tournesol with his left forearm braced against the blue blade for added support, and blocked Nui's attack.

Almost immediately he felt the concrete beneath his feet crack from the sheer amount of force Nui was pressing down with. Ichigo cursed himself for assuming that since Nui was lazily swinging her weapon that she wasn't trying. He had to remind himself that Nui Harime was a sociopath and was probably taking a great amount of pleasure from screwing around with him. He couldn't make the mistake of allowing her to live if given the chance a second time. As much as it conflicted with his ideals, he needed to fight Nui Harime with the intent to kill her.

"Damn!" Ichigo grit out while a trail of blood escaped from the corner of his mouth. Nui's strength had to be at least three times what it was when he fought her just a few minutes ago and with his wounds, he had only seconds until his arms failed and he died. He needed to think of a plan fast but despite his best efforts nothing was coming to mind.

" Don't push yourself Ichigo! You've already lost a lot of blood. If you keep fighting at this rate you'll pass out in only a few minutes," Mugetsu's frightened voice was shouting desperately at Ichigo to do something, anything, to survive the battle. Ichigo had lost a lot of blood from Nui's treacherous attack and nothing she could do could help him, "Your wounds are slowly healing, but if she stabs you like that again you'll die!"

Beads of sweat were freely dripping down Ichigo's face and neck as he desperately pushed back against Nui's overwhelming strength. As he locked gazes with the Grand Couturier, Ichigo couldn't help but shudder at the utmost glee in Nui's expression. It was as if this was all a game to her. When his knees began to buckle from exhaustion, he whispered under his breath, "Can't you heal me any faster?"

" I'm not healing you," Mugetsu answered, "I thought you were healing yourself."

"What?" Ichigo was not just as confused as his Kamui. Risking a glance at Mugetsu's eye, he asked, "Then how am - "

"Think fast, Ichigo!"

Ichigo found himself doubling over as Nui's fist hit his stomach with the force of a truck. With spittle and blood escaping his mouth and a gasp of pain from his throat, Ichigo was blown back through the door of the room and across the power station, eventually coming to a stop at the far wall. As he slid down the wall onto the ground, his body refusing to move for him, he heard the sound of something dragging along the floor towards him.

"This game is getting boring, Ichigo. I'm not having fun anymore."

Ichigo bit his lip hard enough to draw blood just to keep himself conscious and aware of his surroundings. With his left eye forced shut by the blood dripped out of a cut on his forehead, he could barely managed to see Nui Harime slowly walking towards him in the dim lightning of the power station. Right away he noticed something was off in the way she was walking. Instead of the happy and peppy walk or skipped he had seen Nui do in the past, she was shambling towards him with her Scissor Blade dragging aimlessly behind her, carving a trench in the concrete as it went. It was her face though that caused a lance of fear to spread through his chest. Nui no longer had that perpetual smile splashed across her face. Instead it had been replaced by a nearly emotionless mask.

" You need to get out of here, Ichigo!" Mugetsu couldn't believe her wearer was so powerless against someone like Nui Harime. Ichigo was able to go head-to-head against Satsuki Kiryuin and her minions without much effort, but he was powerless against Nui Harime. Mugetsu could sense that the Grand Couturier wasn't even wearing any Life Fibers so why was she so strong.

"Damn it," Ichigo managed to harshly cough out as he struggled to remain awake. The loss of blood was beginning to cause spots to develop in his vision and it was only his determination and willpower keeping him conscious, "I know!"

"I'm really sad, you know," Nui's voice was completely drained of emotion as she stalked towards Ichigo's downed form, "Why are you playing with my emotions, Ichigo?"

Ichigo couldn't say anything as he struggled to get to his knees. As he managed to do so but quickly fell forward, he found himself locking gazes with Nui Harime, who was mere inches away from his face. As he stared into her dull and surprisingly unexpressive sapphire eye, he was unprepared for a sharp pain as she stabbed her Scissor Blade through his shoulder. While his body was forced back and into the wall with a resounding crash, Ichigo couldn't help but realize that Nui had stabbed him in the exact same spot he had hit her earlier. Coughing harshly and with blood freely flowing from his new wound, Ichigo glared daggers at Nui. If he was going to die here, he wasn't going to go out begging and crying.

"This isn't right..." Nui crouched down in front of Ichigo and wrapped one perfectly manicured hand around the handle of her Scissor Blade. After looking interestedly at the blade, she tore it out with one harsh movement, eliciting a muffled scream from Ichigo as every nerve in his body seemed to be set alight in pain.

"You're my cousin!" Nui was starting to become hysterical as she paced back and forth in front of him, "Something like this shouldn't hurt you. So why, WHY are you bleeding Ichigo?"

Ichigo didn't say anything in response to Nui, simply deciding to glare at her instead. Nui didn't seem to notice the stare as she continued to talk and rant to herself before abruptly stopping and backing off a bit.

"Oh... I see what you're doing Ichigo," Nui laughed softly as she raised her Scissor Blade, still dripping with his blood, over her head. With a maniacal grin adorning her face, she giggled psychotically and shouted, "You're still asleep, aren't you? Well don't worry your cute little head. I'm going to make you feel so much better in just a moment..."

"Damn it!" Ichigo watched the Scissor Blade falling towards his neck in apparent slow motion, his body unable to do more than twitching after getting wounded so badly. Even with the slight healing he was attributing to Mugetsu, it just wasn't enough for him to deal with the likes of Nui Harime. She was in an entirely different class than him, "I won't let it end here, not like this!"

Unbeknownst to either Ichigo or Nui, about ten or so minutes after Ichigo left Honnouji Academy, Satsuki Kiryuin did so as well. It was not, as she would say, because she was worried about what the Grand Couturier would do to Ichigo if given the chance. If anyway were to insinuate such a notion, Satsuki would have Gamagori capture and throw them into detention for even considering such a thing. She was simply being pragmatic. Ichigo Kurosaki had the potential to become one of her powerful assets in her plan. Nui Harime could not be allowed to do with Ichigo what she wished no matter what. That was why she was currently leaping across the Slum rooftops towards the Honnou City Area One Subdivision Power Station. Before taking her leave, she had Inumuta track down where Ichigo was heading and was surprised that Nui Harime would choose such a location.

Clenching a fist, feeling the power of Junketsu coursing through her body, Satsuki knew that it wouldn't matter against someone like Nui Harime. Even if she were to go all out against the Grand Couturier, the best Satsuki could hope for was an extended draw. As she finally reached the outer perimeter of the power station, Satsuki swung Bakuzan vertically and split the chain link fence in two. There was no time for subtleties at the moment. Clicking her heel against the ground, Satsuki leapt into the air and stabbed Bakuzan downward just as she landed on the roof of the power station, destroying the roof and allowing her access all at the same time.

"Nui Harime!" Satsuki slammed Bakuzan into the ground as a backdrop of light appeared out of nowhere behind her, "What do you think you're doing in Honnou City without giving a two day notice?"

"Hi..." Nui stopped her Scissor Blade inches from Ichigo's neck and smirked. Turning around, her face a picture of barely repressed insanity, she said, "Don't worry Satsuki. I'll be done in just a few moments. Ichigo and I were just playing around a bit."

"Is that so?" Satsuki took a step toward Nui, who had turned fully to face the Kiryuin heir, "Do you take me for a fool? I know what your definition of fun is and nothing good can come from it. Now leave Honnou City unless you wish for me to tell my mother you are here."

Nui's hands clenched at the thought of not talking to Ichigo. She wasn't going to give up speaking to a true member of her family. Not when she was so close to doing so after waiting for so long, but she couldn't attack Satsuki. Lady Ragyo wouldn't condone such behavior. Well, at least for the moment she wouldn't. That gave Nui an idea. She couldn't kill Satsuki, but she sure could play around with her. Raising her Scissor Blade, a maniacal grin on her face, she muttered, "I don't like that you're interrupting such a valuable bonding moment."

Satsuki's eyes widened in surprised when the Grand Couturier actually attacked her. She had been under the assumption that her mother had forbidden Nui from laying a hand on her body. What was it about Ichigo that Nui was so determined to find out that she was willing to risk the ire of her mother? Quickly raising Bakuzan, Satsuki was taken by complete surprise by the force behind the swing. It was strong enough that while it wasn't able to hit her, it still sent her careening backwards through the power station, destroying several generators in the process and sending half of the Slums into darkness.

"I won't let you take my cousin away from me," Nui gleefully said as she walked after Satsuki, "Not after I waited for so long."

As Nui left to deal with Satsuki, she did not witness Ichigo struggling back onto his feet. He may have been injured nearly to the point of death, but he wasn't going to let someone like Nui do anything to Satsuki. No one deserved to be on the receiving end of Nui's playing.

---

...

---

Ryuko knew perhaps better than anyone else that the normally lazy and happy Mako could become one of the most determined people on the planet if she happens to spot something she really wanted. More than once she had been walking with Mako only for her friend to stop, look around and chase after something in the distance. Usually it was something pet or food related, but Ryuko had grown used to it. At least she thought she did.

She had no idea just HOW determined Mako could be.

"MAKO KICK!"

Ryuko didn't have time to think as she crossed her arms in front of her face. There was a moment of absolute silence when Mako's foot connected with her forearms before a resounding boom accompanied by a sparkle of stars exploded through the area. The explosion quickly broke the sound barrier and literally blew away the students who happened to have ringside seats to the fight.

Back on the battlefield, Mako glared at Ryuko, determination evident in her eyes, as Ryuko managed to block her attack with apparent ease. Eyes narrowing when she spotted the look of pity in Ryuko's blue eyes, Mako grabbed Ryuko's shoulder, spun her body around and tried to slam her geta into Ryuko's face. In a flash of red light, Mako found her kick stopped when Ryuko jammed her Scissor Blade between the spikes on her geta.

"Snap out of it Mako!" Ryuko implored as sparks arced and faded into the air from the spikes on Mako's geta clashing with her Scissor Blade. When Mako didn't say anything, Ryuko lashed out with her Scissor Blade, forcing Mako to quickly jump away lest she get hit by the Life Fiber weapon.

"Stop it, Mako!" Ryuko repeated a second time. The anguish of fighting her first true friend was evident in Ryuko's eyes and it was apparent that the thought of fighting her friend was hurting her more than any of her wounds, "This isn't you!"

Mako didn't say anything as she landed on the ground, her geta making clip-clop sounds in the process of regaining her footing. Biting down on the green reed sticking out of her mouth, Mako adjusted the brim of her hat as she reached into her coat and pulled out several golden kunai. With nearly supernatural skill, Mako deftly placed the weapons between her fingers and spun around before throwing them towards Ryuko.

"Oh, come on!" Ryuko shouted as she parried the first volley of kunai with her Scissor Blade before darting off to the side to avoid the previously hidden second barrage. Ducking and weaving around the deadly weaponry, Ryuko tried to think of how Mako acquired such accuracy. She knew Mako was a huge fan of that stupid show about ninjas, but when in hell did she have the time and money to actually practice throwing kunai? Ducking down under a particularly accurate kunai, Ryuko jumped off the ground and spun her body horizontally through the air, her Scissor Blade trailing behind her, as she managed to dodge the last set of kunai.

Landing back on the ground, her heels leaving twin trenches in the soft ground, Ryuko barely noticed Mako was gone before the arena around her was cast into shadow. Twisting her head upwards at the sun, Ryuko's eyes narrowed when she saw Mako rocketing downwards towards her with her right fist extended.

" This is wrong."

Pivoting on her foot until she was facing Mako, Ryuko leapt backwards just before Mako reached the space where she had been standing. Ryuko's blue eyes locked gazes with Mako's brown irises in the split second before Mako's fist connected with the ground. In a flash of light and stars, the ground erupted around Mako and Ryuko realized that her friend's current strength wasn't something she could afford to be hit with. Even Senketsu's steel-like armor and skin would matter little against an attack that powerful.

" I can't believe Mako isn't even trying to hold back," Ryuko swallowed nervously as Mako turned to face her, "If she had hit me with that, I might have actually died!"

Ryuko tilted her head to the side as Mako's fist passed through the air, her hair being blown back by the bronze knuckles emblazoned with 'MAKO' on each of Mako's fingers. As Mako continued forward with her momentum, in almost slow motion she turned towards Ryuko. Locking gazes with her former best friend, Ryuko momentarily froze when she noticed the look of anger mixed with betrayal in Mako's eyes. In that single moment where she let her guard down, Mako planted her geta firmly on the ground and struck with a kick that easily connected with Ryuko's stomach.

With an audible 'oomph' Ryuko was propelled backwards across the arena, her body bouncing haphazardly and awkwardly along the ground with a spin or two thrown in as well. After the third bounce, Ryuko decided that was enough and regained adequate control of her momentum and managed to stab her Scissor Blade in the ground and arrest her movement. Getting back onto her feet, a ragged breath escaping her mouth, Ryuko wiped a spot of dirt off her cheek and quipped, "This is going to be tougher than I thought. Mako is really strong. I would be proud if I wasn't fighting her."

" Pulling your punches isn't helping, Ryuko."

Senketsu may have sounded annoyed and condescending when he spoke, but he truly was concerned for Ryuko's health, both physically as well as mentally. Mako was Ryuko's first and best friend, as Ryuko's Sunday best he could understand that relationship fairly well. Even if he was unable to perfectly relate to how Ryuko felt while fighting Mako, Senketsu knew it must feel as terrible as having his Life Fibers torn off one by one, "There's no reason you should be having this much trouble against a Two-Star Goku Uniform."

Ryuko bit her lip as Mako flew towards her and attempted to slam both her feet into her neck. Quickly reaching out and grasping Mako's ankles, Ryuko spun around before letting go and watching her friend sail through the air and land in a smoking crater across the arena.

"It's not that..." Ryuko sighed miserably as she grabbed her Scissor Blade and waited for Mako to attack her again. If she truly wanted to fight Mako, Ryuko could have easily, perhaps not that easily, finished the battle quite some time ago. While she was actively attacking Mako, her heart just wasn't into fighting her best friend, "I just can't fight Mako. I know I promised Ururu I would bring the old Mako back, but I-I don't think I can fight her."

" I don't like fighting Mako anymore than you do, Ryuko. She is, after all, the only one who irons my Life Fibers just the way I like it," Senketsu paused momentarily and coughed in embarrassment as he realized he divulged something he'd rather keep a secret. When Ryuko cracked a smirk at his confession, he growled and continued, "You must put your feelings aside for the moment. Didn't you promise Ururu you would help get Mako? As much as it might bother the both of us, you have to fight Mako until she comes back to her senses. Put more effort into helping Mako than you do your schoolwork and you are sure to succeed!"

"Where do you get off saying something like that?" Ryuko pinched Senketsu's eye in frustration and disbelief. She couldn't believe the gall Senketsu had in saying something like that to her!

Senketsu ignored Ryuko's mistreatment of his body for the moment and turned his eye towards her. He would get her back later, but for now he had more important matters to deal with, "As your Kamui, I am privy to pretty much everything in your life. It is a shame that my wearer doesn't care enough about her schoolwork to put in the required amount of effort."

"If you haven't noticed, I've been kind of busy tracking down the woman who killed my dad," Ryuko countered, "Besides, getting ambushed by Satsuki Kiryuin's goons every day makes studying hard! I'm doing my best!"

" That is no excuse, Ryuko. Ichigo gets into almost as many fights as you and his grades are near the top of the class."

"Why are you comparing me to Ichigo?" Ryuko asked incredulously.

Senketsu began to speak, but his answer was cut off as Ryuko's ears picked up the increasingly familiar clip-clop of Mako's geta along the ground. Spinning towards her friend, a look of exasperation on her face, Ryuko bent her knees and leaned backwards just as Mako's bronze knuckles whipped through the air.

As she slowly fell backwards, Ryuko grabbed her Scissor Blade by its blade, careful to not cut Senketsu in the process and smashed the grip of her weapon into Mako's bare stomach. With an almost cartoonish grunt as the air left her lungs, compounded with her face distorting comically, Mako flew backwards and bounced along the ground before eventually skidding to a stop with her face planted in the ground and several wisps of smoke rising from her body.

With Mako disposed of, at least momentarily, Ryuko turned her attention back to Senketsu and glared harshly enough to cause the Kamui to actually break out in a cold sweat, "It has nothing to do with Ichigo! You're just all hot and bothered by Mugetsu, aren't you? You have a crush on Ichigo's Kamui!"

" W-What?" Senketsu blubbered nervously as he desperately tried to think of a way out, "I... but... Here she comes, Ryuko!"

At first Ryuko thought Senketsu was simply trying to think of a way out of the embarrassing situation, but when she noticed Mako getting back to her feet, she begrudgingly admitted to herself that he had a point. Gripping the handle of her Scissor Blade with both hands, she took a deep breath and sighed, "Fine, but don't think you're off the hook yet!"

"I'm not done yet!" Mako shouted angrily as she pumped her fist into the air, "Mako Mankanshoku has her eye on the prize and nothing will stop her! Take this Ryuko!"

Instead of attacking head-on, like Ryuko assumed she would, Mako reached into her coat with both of her hands and began throwing a barrage of gold-plated weapons and tools at Ryuko. Eyes widening momentarily at the strange attack, Ryuko quickly recovered and sliced her Scissor Blade through the air, deflecting and parrying each impromptu weapon. As she blocked several knives and daggers from hitting her body, Ryuko couldn't help but note wrenches, pliers and even a spatula or two in the barrage of weaponry aimed at her face. As she forced her arms to move faster and faster to combat the rate at which Mako was attacking her, Ryuko gagged when a mace appeared out of nowhere and smacked her square in the forehead.

" Ryuko!"

"I'm fine," Ryuko snapped back as a trickle of blood ran down the bridge of her nose and over her cheek. Licking the blood that fell into her mouth before spitting it onto the ground, Ryuko kept her eyes locked firmly on Mako as she asked, "Any ideas, Senketsu?"

" Let me think for a moment." Senketsu's eye closed and he hummed quietly to himself for several seconds before answering, "I got nothing. You're her best friend, Ryuko, so you should try to use that to your advantage. Remind Mako of all the times you've spent together and everything you've done. Perhaps that might help."

"Remind Mako..." Ryuko frowned before ducking out of the way as a morning-star about the size of her head smashed into the ground. Backflipping away while using her Scissor Blade as a shield against any further attacks, Ryuko skidded to a stop as a confident grin spread across her face, "That's not a bad idea, Senketsu."

Senketsu gave the Kamui equivalent of a nod. He couldn't wait to rub it in Mugetsu's face, "I do my best. Now let's bring Mako back!"

---

...

---

For her entire life, Nui Harime felt as if something was missing.

After much internal debate and questioning, she determined that she couldn't be missing anything. She had everything she ever wanted as the Grand Couturier of Revocs. She was the second most powerful person on Earth and had free reign to do nearly anything she wanted, as long as it did not conflict with Lady Ragyo's plans.

Yet still, she couldn't help but feel as if something important was missing.

For most of her life it had been nothing more than a nagging feeling in the back of her mind. The equivalent, if you will, of forgetting whether or not she already tortured a Nudist Beach prisoner for information already. Over the past year or so, however, Nui had felt that nagging feeling develop into a clenching of her Life-Fiber infused heart that she just couldn't alleviate.

Then she met Ichigo and suddenly that bad feeling went away.

Nui really liked Ichigo. In fact, she liked him WAY more than she liked Satsuki but just a little less than she loved the Director. He was exactly like her in every single way. She knew without a doubt that their hearts beat as one yet it made her sad that he refused to play by the rules. Why would he allow himself to bleed and feel pain when he could just heal himself up in seconds? It wasn't like she was trying to kill him or anything. In fact, she purposely skewered in body in such a way that her Scissor Blade would miss all his organs, which took much trial and error on volunteers to get down just right. So when he didn't heal himself and even had the nerve to look at her like she was insane, Nui felt something snap in her mind. If he wasn't going to play fairly, she would just have to cheat as well until he did. Fair is fair after all.

If only Satsuki hadn't butted in at the last second. Nui was just about to get some quality time with her first, and favorite, cousin only to have Satsuki barge in and declare her presence in Honnou City illegal. Nui would have usually coyly responded to Satsuki's sweet, but ineffective, orders but she was already too upset with Ichigo at the moment to care. She would just have to show Satsuki just how upset she made her feel by interrupting what was quality family time. Nui wouldn't kill Satsuki. She was still needed for the final stage of Lady Ragyo's plan after all. Although, a twinge of an unknown emotion briefly passed through her chest, Nui didn't know what would happen to Ichigo if that happened. Once she was done here, she would go and ask Lady Ragyo about it. The Director would surely know the answer to such an important question.

"You know..." Nui's normal demeanor resurfaced as she saw Satsuki collide with a wall before punching through it like paper. Lady Ragyo had instilled into her mind the need to stay composed as long as possible. It would be really bad if she let her anger and disappointment get the better of her. It only took one lucky shot, even from a human like Satsuki, to hurt her. The wound on her eye was testament enough and Nui repressed the deep-seeded rage within her soul at the single blemish on her beautiful and perfect body. Dragging her Scissor Blade along the ground, sending up sparks and pieces of metal, Nui tilted her head and smirked, "... I am quite mad at the moment, you know. Interrupting my family time with Ichigo is bad enough, but ordering me to stay away from him is just plain rude. If you are so against me talking to Ichigo, well I'll just have to play with you instead."

Satsuki snapped her leg out and flung a piece of rubble the size of her body towards Nui. The Grand Couturier watched the ton of steel and cement fly towards her before stabbing her Scissor Blade forward and immediately shattering it into dust, "Scissor beats rock!"

Nui let out a small gasp of surprise when Satsuki appeared at her side, the familiar grimace she's come to know and love on her face, and tried to impale her through the neck. The surprise quickly turned to faint amusement as Nui seemed to float backwards at the exact speed of Satsuki's strike, Bakuzan's tip hovering just off her delicate skin, and raised a manicured hand to her mouth in forged shock.

"You're really trying to kill me!" Nui's voice sounded as if she was stunned Satsuki was actively trying to hurt her, but to anyone that knew who she was it came out as condescending arrogance. Nui wasn't shocked at all. Satsuki knew she was simply acting that way to make her lose her temper at her inability to injure the Grand Couturier. Hovering up and landing on top of a nearby roof, Nui stuck her tongue out childishly at Satsuki, "Oh dear. I wonder what the Director will say when she finds out. I don't think simple purification will be enough. Do you?"

There was a slight tensing of Satsuki's features at Nui's words, but to the untrained eye it would appear as if she was unaffected. A barely visible twitch of her right arm, her left eye narrowing ever so slightly, but to Nui it was as if Satsuki's mouth had opened in shock and that made her extremely happy. She was glad she hadn't lost her touch after so long out of the field. She was starting to become afraid that hanging out with Ichigo, as much fun as that was, had caused her to lose a bit of her expertise.

"Perhaps you do not understand the ramifications of your actions," Satsuki countered as she stepped towards Nui and pointed Bakuzan at her. She could not let the Grand Couturier's way with words affect her. She had put up with Nui's games for as long as she could remember and a few more taunts weren't going to break her, "My mother has expressively forbidden your ability to set foot within Honnou City without informing me in advance."

Nui puffed her cheeks out and turned her head away. She hadn't forgotten that little rule humorously invented by Lady Ragyo to placate Satsuki, but if Satsuki thought she was just going to up and leave right when she met Ichigo than she wasn't as clever as she thought.

"Hmm... that's true and all," Nui shouldered her Scissor Blade and took a step off the roof, gently floating to the ground and landing on a piece of overturned concrete. Stabbing her weapon and using it as an impromptu chair, Nui smirked and rested her chin in the palm of her hand, "But you're forgetting one crucial and super important rule. I don't need your permission to be anywhere when the Director gave it to me in the first place."

Satsuki hadn't expecting Nui to admit to that. What was her mother thinking in sending someone like Nui, a rabid dog that's nearly chewed through its leash, to Honnou City? If the Grand Couturier decided to do something, anything, Satsuki would be hard pressed to stop her without receiving significant losses. That was if she could stop her in the first place.

"Ah... I see you realize how much trouble you're in," Nui wagged her finger childishly at Satsuki and giggled. Screwing around with Satsuki was a lot of fun as always, but Nui was sad that she had to stop so soon. If she reported back to Lady Ragyo about what happened, she would likely be forced to stay at Revocs for a few days. She would even miss out on Parent Student Day tomorrow and Nui wouldn't miss that for the world! Sighing nostalgically and tilting her head to the side, Nui said, "But telling on you would mean I wouldn't be able to hang out with Ichigo for a while and that's super bad, you know. You can stop worrying your pretty head about whatever I might do. I'm only in your silly town to hang out with Ichigo."

"That may be true," Satsuki clicked her heel loudly on the ground. After her abysmal performance against Ichigo, Satsuki had trained her mind and body to resist Junketsu as best she could. Through her sheer willpower she could now wear her Kamui for nearly half an hour in its activated state before the extreme fatigue hit her. She had almost twenty minutes left before she would be forced to transform Junketsu back she wasn't about to risk being drawn into an extended confrontation with the Grand Couturier, "... but as the Student Council President of Honnouji Academy it is my solemn duty to not let any threats into the city! Until I hear from my mother otherwise, you are forbidden from stepping foot in Honnou City! Failure to listen will result in retribution!"

"Phooey," Nui absentmindedly kicked the ground and crossed her arms over her chest. She couldn't believe how much of a stick in the mud Satsuki was being. It wasn't like she came to this stupid town to kill anyone. Ok sure, she killed a few people to keep her presence a secret but it wasn't more than six or seven people, which was not that much actually. As an idea came to mind, Nui clapped her hands together and stood up straight, "Ah! I have an awesome idea that I think will make us both happy Satsuki! I won't tell Lady Ragyo that you're going against her orders and you let me stay in your little town. I promise I'll be extra good and stuff! You won't even have to worry about any mutilated bodies or corpses just lying about. I'm just here to hang out and have fun with my favorite cousin, Ichigo!"

Satsuki narrowed her eyes, "I don't believe you. I know what you mean by that, but nothing good ever happens to those you take interest in."

"That's not true," Nui blatantly lied. Everything that happened to those that interested her helped make the Grand Couturier feel truly happy and alive, which they were meant to. Of course, there was that woman in Rome that tricked her with candy, which annoyed Nui to no end. Sticking her tongue out and closing her eye, Nui giggled and said, "Aw, don't tell me you care about Ichigo? I don't know where you got the notion I'm going to hurt him, but that's simply not true. I simply love Ichigo so much that I - "

Both Satsuki and Nui were shocked when a blue blade burst through the Grand Couturier's chest covered in her blood.

"Oh?" Nui looked down at Tournesol in confusion before a wide and happy smile spread across her face. She was ecstatic that Ichigo finally decided to show up and what made it even better was that he was playing with her again! Twisting her head up and staring deeply into Ichigo's determined brown eyes, she laughed and said, "It's so good to see you again Ichigo! I was wondering when you'd show up. Talking with Satsuki is such a bore. Now that you're here I can get to know you a little bit better!"

Ichigo wasn't surprised when Nui leaned forward and literally pulled her body off his blade. He was even less surprised when the wound in her back healed up, leaving both her and her pink dress with nary a scratch or tear on them. After getting ambushed and nearly killed by her earlier, he couldn't afford to go easy on her. The only reason he had stabbed Nui was because he knew she most likely wouldn't be that injured by the attack.

"So I was right," Ichigo raised Tournesol and held it aloft over his shoulder, "You can regenerate."

"Gosh, you're super smart!" Nui puffed out her cheeks happily upon the compliment. Ichigo was really smart to figure that out on the first go. Even Satsuki hadn't realized the regenerative qualities of the Life Fibers within her body for several weeks. Sitting back down on her Scissor Blade, Nui chuckled and asked, "So does that mean you're finally awake, Ichigo? It's going to be so much fun hanging out and playing with you now!"

Ichigo narrowed his eyes as he thought about the specifics of what Nui said. He couldn't understand why she kept asking and talking to him as if he was asleep. Was there something he was missing that Nui believed she understood? Could that explain why his wounds, the same ones that Mugetsu was adamant that she didn't heal, had mostly closed and healed over the last few minutes? Truth be told, Ichigo would have been a lot more shocked about healing that quickly if he hadn't already experienced it whenever his inner hollow took over. While his friends and colleagues would tell him he was unconscious during the entire time his hollow was in control, Ichigo could vividly remember experiencing whatever his hollow did. That was how and why he recognized his healing as a form of regeneration, which just raised further questions as to WHY he had regeneration.

" Please don't tell me I need to talk to dad about this," Ichigo thought in annoyance. Somehow he knew his dad would have just the answers he was looking for. It always seemed the old goat knew something about everything. He was nearly as bad as Kisuke.

"I don't know what you're talking about," Ichigo said, testing the waters carefully. He had seen what lay just beneath the surface and Nui's cheerful demeanor. It was not something that belonged to someone that had their mind in order. Nui was an unstable person and Ichigo could tell it would just take one major event to pull her off the very edge of sanity forever, "But I'm not asleep or whatever you're calling it."

Satsuki watched the exchange between Ichigo and Nui earnestly. Usually she would find interference in her familial matters subject to punishment, but she was curious about the reason Nui was so interested in Ichigo. As she filed away any pertinent information she overheard, she felt her skin begin to crawl as Nui's cheerful smile slowly and deliberately fell off her face.

"Not awake?" Nui's smile was now more forced than true. Tilting her head to the side, her sapphire eye seeming to bore deeply into Ichigo's mind in the hopes of discovering he was lying, Nui's hand gripped her Scissor Blade tightly as she slowly walked towards him, "No, that's not possible. You're back to normal and everything! You can't possibly still be asleep Ichigo!"

Without even giving a warning, Nui shot towards Ichigo and chaotically swung her Scissor Blade at him. Temporarily flinching backwards in shock, Ichigo quickly brought up Tournesol and managed to block Nui's strike, albeit only after he was forced backwards several feet, his heels digging up the concrete floor in the process.

"You can't still be asleep!" Nui declared, her voice rising with every syllable until she was nearly shouting at the end, "You're back to normal and not bleeding anymore! You're not a lowly human who dies when they're stabbed so why are you saying such awful lies?"

As Nui increased her strength, Ichigo found his arms buckling and folding under the pressure. Even if he was mostly healed apart from the feeling of pain where he had been stabbed, he was unable to stand up to the Grand Couturier's increasing power. As his elbows began to shake from the exertion of fending off Nui, he was relieved when Satsuki snapped her leg out and managed to connect with Nui's ribcage. The Grand Couturier's body seemed to bend cartoonishly around her foot before rocketing out and crashing into the side of the power station accompanied by an expanding cloud of dust and smoke.

"Ichigo!" Satsuki's voice was full of her standard authority and Ichigo found himself unconsciously scowling in annoyance. Leave it to Satsuki to bark out orders like a drill sergeant even in the midst of a life and death battle. Slamming Bakuzan on the ground, she stared him deeply in the eyes and said, "We seem to have a common goal for the moment - the expulsion of Nui Harime from Honnou City. Let us put our differences aside for the moment to deal with this common threat!"

"Yeah, fine," Ichigo grumbled as he sensed Nui returning to the battle, "But don't try to order me around. I'm not one of your damn soldiers."

A graceful smirk adorned Satsuki's face, "I wouldn't dream of it."

---

...

---

"I won't let you take everything I've worked hard for away, Ryuko! I can't go back to being poor!"

Mako was furious at Ryuko for betraying her like this! Couldn't Ryuko understand that she was the only reason her family wasn't living in the Slums, hoping to have enough money to afford dinner? Her mom's mystery croquettes were delicious to be sure, Mako still salivated at the thought of what could be inside them, but Mako couldn't live like that forever. She had watched for years as the One and Two-Star students bought and ate anything they wanted without care. So many different foods like steak, chicken and even vegetables and fruits. Mako had seen all those foods so often without being able to actually eat them. Now that she could, she was never going to go back to her old life!

The sound of loud and exuberant cheering from the stands caused Mako to frown in determination. Her dad and Matorou were cheering her on to defeat Ryuko as quickly as possible. She couldn't let them down. Looking around, Mako noticed that her mom was absent. She must still be sick, Mako thought more intelligently than usually, or she would be here cheering her on as well. Mako was starting to get worried about her mom because ever since she became the president of the Fight Club, her mom had been sick. She never came to any of the high-class events the Mankanshoku family was now being invited to and whenever Mako asked about her health, she would simply smile and pat her on the head.

Mako pulled hard on the golden chain she had managed to wrap around Ryuko's right arm only to have her former friend dig her heels into the ground and use her Scissor Blade to easily sever the much weaker chain. Frowning and adjusting the reed in her mouth, Mako drew her chain back with a level of skill she still couldn't figure out how she possessed. Whipping it around her body several times, Mako stomped her geta on the ground and threw the chain back at Ryuko. This time, she noted with intense determination, she managed to wrap it around Ryuko's neck.

"Take..." With a supreme amount of effort, Mako snapped the chain upwards and bounced Ryuko's body against the ground before whipping it into the air. Spinning around on one leg, Mako grit her teeth and slammed Ryuko back into the ground hard enough to cause cracks to radiate outwards from the point of impact, "... this!"

"Ugh," Ryuko grumbled and pulled herself out of the indentation her body created when it hit the ground. Shaking her head and dislodging a couple of pebbles, she grabbed the handle of her Scissor Blade and stood back up. Spitting some dirt out of her mouth, she focused her senses inwards and was relieved she didn't feel any pain apart from a few cuts and bruises, "Damn. Are all Two-Star's this strong or is Mako just special?"

" That's hard to say," Senketsu added unhelpfully. It was disturbing to see Ryuko struggling with Mako, who he knew wasn't even close to the level of power Sanageyama had in their second fight. Ryuko was still holding back her full strength and if either of them didn't come up with a plan, it was going to end up badly, "But it seems that despite greed overwhelming her mind, it's still the same Mako deep down."

"Maybe," Ryuko admitted reluctantly, "But how can I bring her back if she is still the same Mako?"

" I don't know," Senketsu's tone did not betray the sadness he felt at being unable to help his wearer, "But I'm sure you'll figure something out. You are her best friend after all."

Ryuko cast her gaze downwards as the scope of her failure began to weigh down on her. If Mako wasn't going to listen to anything she said, then what was the point of trying to talk to her? She didn't want to fight her best friend, damn it, but Ryuko couldn't see any other way out of this whole mess. It was all Satsuki Kiryuin's fault for corrupting Mako and her family with wealth and greed. Sighing in resignation, Ryuko clenched the grip of her Scissor Blade and tried to convince her body to fight Mako, but the trembling of her arms said all that there needed to be said about that. If she didn't take this fight seriously and continued to hold back, then she was going to die. Wait a second...

"Hey Senketsu," Ryuko's voice came out as a whisper as she addressed her Kamui. She didn't like the plan she came up with, but with everything else failing it wasn't as if she had a choice. Ryuko hoped she wouldn't have to use her plan, but when she saw Mako pull out a bat with a dozen nail stabbed through the end, she knew she had no choice but to use it, "I have an idea, but I don't think you're going to like it..."

Senketsu thought there was nothing Ryuko could say that could take him by surprise, but as Ryuko whispered her plan to him that notion went out the window. Over the course of her explanation, Senketsu's emotions flew through shock, fear, contemplation before finally ending in general annoyance. Senketsu politely waited until Ryuko finished talking before taking the mental equivalent of a deep breath.

" That's the stupidest, most dangerous, plan I've ever heard."

"I know that!" Ryuko snapped before grumbling. She didn't like the plan any more than Senketsu did, but it was the only way she knew to get Mako back.

When Senketsu saw Ryuko's determination in going through with her insane plan remain firm and intact, he knew there was no other choice. As much as he would like to think otherwise, Ryuko's plan was a good, if not extremely dangerous, one. The only problem was that if it didn't work... Senketsu shuddered at the mere thought of what might happen if it failed. He couldn't allow that to happen to Ryuko, "If you're so determined to go through with it, I'll stay by your side. Just be careful Ryuko."

"Thanks Senketsu," Ryuko turned to Mako and stabbed her Scissor Blade into the ground, "Let's go get Mako back."

Standing on top of Honnouji Academy were Satsuki's Elite Three, Elite Four if you still counted Jakuzure. When Satsuki mysteriously took a leave of absence and informed Inumuta to not track her movements, the Elite Three were surprised but nevertheless complied with her orders.

"Hmm," Gamagori stared down at the battle in earnest. He was surprised when Matoi had initially taken the fight seriously but her most recent move had given him pause, "She giving up? Don't tell me she values her friendship with Mankanshoku over victory."

"I'm not certain that's what she's doing," Sanageyama replied sagely. He would have been able to give more information, but the distance separating him from Matoi severely reduced the effectiveness of Shingantsu. Strumming his fingers along the inner length of his arm, Sanageyama was annoyed that he was forbidden from fighting Matoi, but Lady Satsuki's word was law and he would simply have to wait his turn, "Her breathing appears to have leveled out in the last minute although by going by her heartbeat she remains nervous. The question is whether such nervousness stems from her fight with Mankanshoku or is there an ulterior reason."

Gamagori looked incredulously at Sanageyama, "You can tell that from all the way up here?"

"No," Sanageyama replied bluntly, "But I can hear Inumuta's computer."

Gamagori looked at Inumuta, who simply shrugged and fixed his glasses, "I managed to install various cameras and sensors in the walls and stands surrounding Matoi and Mankanshoku to analyze and record her pulse, perspiration and overall health. Sanageyama is simply hearing the pulse application on my laptop. Speaking of which, I was told that you would be in the control room overlooking the fight, Sanageyama. Could it be that you are out here with us solely because you cannot see anything on the computer screens?"

Sanageyama scoffed at the mention of his single weakness, "This is completely different!"

"I suppose it is," Inumuta admitted sarcastically, "But that still begs the question about what Matoi is planning. Perhaps you are right. She is not someone that is prone to simply giving up in the midst of a battle, even if it is against her friend."

"Indeed. We simply have to believe that Lady Satsuki's plans will come to fruition," Gamagori grunted. When his eyes picked out a mop of pink hair in the stands nearest the fight, a grimace developed on his face. Jakuzure's undercover work was set to expire at midnight tonight and her reintroduction into the Elite Four was to take place during the ceremony tomorrow afternoon. Gamagori was all for allowing Jakuzure back under Lady Satsuki's wings, but he could not admit to himself that her work in discovering the origins of Ichigo Kurosaki's control over his Kamui was sorely lacking. He knew she did her best but her abrasive and rude attitude surely turned Ichigo's suspicions against her.

Back on the battlefield, Mako grimaced angrily when she saw Ryuko leave her Scissor Blade behind and walk calmly towards her. What could her former best friend be thinking by approaching her completely unarmed? A rogue thought passed through Mako's mind. Could Ryuko, even after betraying her trust and friendship and allowing her family to go back to being poor, be taking pity on her? Was she calling her weak? Mako's hands shook with anger and she clenched the bat in her hands even tighter.

" Why can't Ryuko just listen to her? All I needed was for her to fight a few clubs so my family wouldn't be poor anymore. It wasn't like that was too hard. Why can't she just apologize and say she was wrong? I want Ryuko to be my friend again but I won't be poor again!"

"Take this, Ryuko!" Mako pointed the end of her bat at Ryuko and pressed a button on the bottom. As the end of the bat opened up, exposing a missile painted to look just like her, Mako shouted, "Mako Rocket!"

At first there was a sound like a cork popping causing everyone, including Mako and the Elite Four, to assume it was a dud. That notion was quickly destroyed as the missile left Mako's bat, destroying it in the process, and arced upwards into the sky before turning around and homing in on Ryuko. Mako was initially elated at her ultimate attack working, but as Ryuko continued to walk towards her without any worry etched on her face, that elation turned to panic. Why was Ryuko so calm and collected? She should be trying to get out of the way of her Mako Rocket or she could get seriously super hurt or worse! If Mako could have stopped the attack she would have, but just before the missile hit Ryuko and exploded, she swore she saw an accepting smile spread across Ryuko's face.

The explosion from the Mako Rocket was enormous and the largest one since the incident the prior year with the president of the Model Rocket Club. All throughout Honnou City, hundreds if not thousands of people looked up at the academy and wondered what on Earth was going on.

"What the hell was that?" Ichigo wondered, taking his attention off Nui Harime for just a moment. That explosion came from Honnouji Academy, which meant Ryuko must be fighting the Elite Three. What bothered him was the question of which of the remaining two could cause such an explosion. Ichigo bet his money on Gamagori. It was a mistake to take his attention off of Nui, Ichigo quickly realized, as he felt a small hand grabbing his shoulder before he was pushed right through a nearby wall.

"Don't get distracted Ichigo!" Nui cheerfully commented before she twisted to the side and avoided Satsuki's Bakuzan. Grabbing Satsuki's wrist, Nui jabbed her Scissor Blade into her stomach, causing Satsuki to gasp in pain, before spinning around and throwing her off into the distance, "You gotta do better than that Satsuki or it won't be fun anymore!"

Back at Honnouji Academy, Ururu Tsumugiyu was extremely worried about Ryuko. The Mako Rocket was a powerful attack that could have incapacitated a shinigami lieutenant if he had managed to catch them off guard and at point blank range. If Ryuko had taken the full brunt of that attack... Ururu shook her head, her pigtails flailing about, to clear her mind. She couldn't think like that! Mako and Ryuko were friends. There was no way that Mako would use an attack that could kill Ryuko. It was impossible for Ururu to even contemplate it, but as the dust and smoke cleared, Ururu found her heart stopping and her eyes widening at what she saw.

Laying on the ground with her a small river of blood leaking out the side of her mouth was Ryuko and she wasn't breathing.

" Ryuko's dead... "

Ururu's whole body began shaking slightly as she stared at her friend's body. The rational side of her brain was telling her that if Ryuko was truly dead, her soul would be floating nearby with her Chain of Fate severed, but the irrational and emotional part of her mind was telling her that Ryuko was breathing. All Ururu could think about was how Ryuko promised to fight Mako and bring her friend back and that she was now dead. Ryuko was dead because of her promise and Mako was to blame.

" Mako killed Ryuko," Something snapped within Ururu at that moment and she heard a regal voice in her subconscious telling her to take vengeance against Mako for killing Ryuko. It was telling her to tear Mako apart and see her suffer for what she did to Ryuko. Ururu knew that was wrong but she was just too devastated to care at the moment. As her blue eyes drained of emotion, every thought in Ururu's mind was focused solely on causing as much pain as possible to Mako. Just before she took her first step towards Mako, which would have enabled her to wrap her hand around Mako's throat, Ururu felt a hand firmly grip her shoulder. Turning around to see who was holding her back, the voice in her head starting to fade away as Ururu saw it was Mr. Kurosaki who had his hand on her shoulder.

"Don't do anything you might regret later on," Isshin warned solemnly without tightening his grip, "I know you must feel devastated and upset but don't rush into things without thinking your actions through first."

Ururu's eyes began tearing up, "B-But..."

Isshin sighed and knelt down besides the girl. He was lucky that he had been standing nearby when Mako attacked. He didn't want to think about what might have happened if he had been a moment too late, "You know more than anyone here, except for my son, that Ryuko can't be dead. So take a deep breath, close her eyes and clear your head."

Ururu did just that and immediately the voices in her head cleared away. She knew Mr. Kurosaki would always know what to do when it came to things like this. Even though she was thinking clearly once more, the voice that Ururu heard scared her. Forcing herself to think about what it sounded like, she realized that it wasn't her subconscious speaking to her. In fact, she couldn't remember ever heard that voice before.

"R-Ryuko?" Mako stumbled towards Ryuko in confusion. Stopping next to her prone form, she fell onto her knees and nudged her shoulder, "Come on, get up Ryuko..."

When Mako turned Ryuko's body over and noticed she wasn't breathing, large tears began falling from her eyes as the realization of what she did hit her. With her body shaking from regret and her breath constantly hitching in her throat, Mako pressed Ryuko tightly against her body and began crying into her unmoving chest, "Why did you let yourself get hit, Ryuko? You could have stepped out of the way or something! Why didn't anyone stop me?"

The last question was not directed at Mako herself, but to her family watching in stunned silence in the stands. Throughout the fight they had been cheering for Mako to not just defeat, but destroy Ryuko in order to keep their current lifestyle. They may have said some terrible things, but they never intended for Ryuko to actually die. Unable to say anything, they looked away from Mako in shame and regret.

"I-I don't want Ryuko to be dead," Mako blubbered sadly as she tore off her Goku Uniform and threw it away. Holding Ryuko's head against her chest with tears freely falling she shouted, "I just want things to go back to normal before the Fight Club. I don't care if we're rich or not! I just want Ryuko to be my friend again!"

"I-It's good to hear that, Mako"

The large tears dripping down Mako's face abruptly stopped when she heard Ryuko's voice. Looking down at her friend through teary eyes, she saw Ryuko staring at her with a content look on her bruised face.

"B-But..."

"Don't worry. You don't need to apologize for anything Mako. We both did stupid things," Ryuko explained as Mako hugged her tighter, nearly cutting off her flow of oxygen in the process. Ryuko didn't need to tell Mako that her plan involved having Senketsu temporarily breathing for her. While her Kamui was initially adamant about not doing it, Ryuko realized that if he could draw her blood from her body then perhaps he could do the opposite. She was just glad that Mako didn't know how to check for a pulse. Not breathing is much easier than stopping her heart. She was also glad Mako decided to throw away her uniform when she did. A few more seconds and Ryuko would have been forced to start breathing on her own again.

"Ryuko," Ururu jogged towards Ryuko with a happy smile on her face. Now that Ryuko was alive and well, any antagonistic thoughts she may have had towards Mako were long dead and gone. After seeing how sorry Mako was about thinking she killed Ryuko, Ururu couldn't hold a grudge. Grabbing Ryuko's hands tightly in her own, Ururu glanced over her body, "You're hurt Ryuko. Mr. Kurosaki is a doctor. He can fix you right up."

Ryuko smiled but glanced to the side. There was just one last thing she needed to do, "Ok, but just hold on a second." Standing over Mako's Goku Uniform, a look of anger and rage on her face, she pulled out her Scissor Blade and violently sliced through it.

"Seni-Soshitsu!" Ryuko shouted as the Banshi in Mako's uniform was absorbed by Senketsu, causing her body to temporarily glow with a red aura. Letting out a deep sigh as she realized it was all over, Ryuko walked back to Mako and wrapped an arm around her best friend's shoulders, "Come on Mako, let's go back home. You think your mom is up for making mystery croquettes?"

Mako gasped happily, "She sure is!"

---

The silence that permeated the Honnou City Slums was abruptly destroyed as a series of explosion rocked the area. Deftly avoiding Nui's strike, consciously noting just how close the purple Scissor Blade came from slicing open his skin, Ichigo countered by arcing Tournesol through the air towards Nui's shoulder. He knew if he could just somehow disarm Nui of her weapon, fighting her would be much easier.

"Ah!" Nui giggled and danced around his strike. Spinning her Scissor Blade around her wrist, she lashed out only for Ichigo to stop her assault with his own weapon. The force of the combined strikes forced both combatants to take a step back, but Nui quickly and easily recovered. Flipping in the air towards Ichigo with a large smile on her face, she swung her Scissor Blade downwards while Ichigo reversed his grip on Tournesol and arched it upwards. Blue and purple met in a clash of sparks and stars and for just a moment both of them froze before a miniature explosion blew Ichigo backwards along the ground.

"Damn it. Just how powerful is she?" Ichigo muttered as he skidded to a stop. Taking in a ragged breath, exhaustion already beginning to creep up on him, he tried to think of how he was going to beat Nui. Just because she was stronger than him did not mean he was simply going to give up. Mugetsu wasn't fairing any better. Nui's Scissor Blade had proven itself willing and quite able to cut through the Kamui's normally resilient armor as if it were tissue paper. He needed to be careful to avoid any more of Nui's attacks. Ichigo never again wanted to hear Mugetsu scream in pain as the Scissor Blade cut through her.

"Her strength is on a completely different level than ours," Satsuki's stoic voice answered as she landed next to him. Much like Ichigo, Satsuki's body was littered with cuts and bruises courtesy of Nui Harime's playful tough love. Although her breath was more ragged than his and she seemed to have developed a nearly unperceivable limp in her right leg, Satsuki seemed completely unaffected by her wounds.

For the last ten minutes both Ichigo Kurosaki and herself had been fighting the Grand Couturier to what she wished was a standstill. In actuality, it was obvious that Nui was toying around with them. Of course she had tried to take advantage of that lack of seriousness and managed to tear Nui's dress in a few places, but they were always followed by a brutal and painful retaliatory strike from the Grand Couturier. Nui truly was a monster in every sense of the word.

Satsuki flinched in pain as she felt Junketsu begin to test her mental control and willpower. She was reaching the twenty-five minute mark and pretty soon she wouldn't be able to control Junketsu's bloodlust and would be forced to transform back. With an envious look in her eyes, she glanced at Ichigo and noticed he seemed to not be having any problems with Mugetsu's bloodlust. He had been fighting Nui for longer than her and had even sustained several seemingly fatal wounds and yet the loss of blood didn't seem to affect him.

"I've fought with her a couple of times, on my mother's insistence I assure you," Satsuki flicked Bakuzan to the side before grabbing the hilt with both hands, "Not once have I ever injured her."

"She can't be invincible," Ichigo countered and cleaned the blood leaking from the corner of his mouth onto his wrist, "I managed to stab her a few times."

"Yet look at her now and what do you see?" Satsuki pointed out with a slight scowl forming on her face. Satsuki knew Nui could heal from almost any injury in a matter of seconds, the exception being her eye, "It should be obvious that all your efforts have been in vain. Nui Harime is just as she was when this fight began."

"Do you expect me to just give up?" Ichigo argued and tightened his grip on Tournesol, "You better come up with something fast. I don't think Nui is just going to stand around all day and wait for us to attack her."

"That is exactly what she will do," Satsuki brazenly answered. She wasn't used to people speaking back to her like that. Matoi was the sole exception and she was willing to put up with her crass behavior and attitude for the time being. Ichigo Kurosaki, on the other hand, was the only person to have defeated her in combat, which garnered him her respect, "She will wait patiently for us to think of a plan to defeat her. Then, when we think we know how to beat her, she will announce that it was all in vain and feed off our hopeless struggle."

Ichigo didn't take his eyes off Nui, who was still smiling happily as she waited patiently while sitting on her Scissor Blade, "Then what do we do?"

"You can't do anything!" A childish voice announced from between them, "That's the whole point, Ichigo!"

As soon as they noticed her, both Satsuki and Ichigo leapt away from the Grand Couturier, but it appeared that Nui already had her target set in mind. Completely ignoring Ichigo for the moment, she turned towards Satsuki and vanished. For a brief moment, perhaps even several seconds, Satsuki clashed evenly with every one of Nui's strikes but eventually the Grand Couturier managed to overcome Satsuki's exhausted strength. Slamming her head forward, Nui smiled as she heard Satsuki gasp in pain before she spun around and planted her pink boot in Satsuki's stomach, sending the younger Kiryuin flying through the air and crashing back into the ground some distance away.

"Satsuki!"

"Now, now..." Nui turned towards Ichigo. Raising a finger to her lip, she cutely tilted her head and said, "You must be awake, Ichigo, so why don't we take the time to get to know one another?"

In the blink of an eye, Nui disappeared before reappearing in front of Ichigo, her hand extended towards him and a disturbingly happy smile on her face. Eyes widening slowly, Ichigo stepped to the side, just barely avoiding being touched by Nui and swung Tournesol. For a moment he thought he managed to get in another hit, Nui's Scissor Blade was conspicuously absent and he didn't hear the sound of metal striking metal, but when he saw the smile on Nui's face widen, he looked down and saw her hand firmly grabbing his larger wrist.

"Are you going to listen to what I have to say, Ichigo, or do I have to shatter every bone in your wrist first?" Nui's tone became increasingly dark and foreboding as she spoke, a hint of her mental instability leaking through her cheerful façade. Ichigo's continued reluctance to play by what Nui thought were the rules was beginning to take a toll on her mind. She couldn't understand what she was doing wrong. She was following the rules to the letter that Lady Ragyo had instilled within her from her very first memories and yet nothing she did seemed to be working on Ichigo. Even threatening his friends and families had only increased his resolve to defeat her, which while it made her happy that he was fighting her was increasingly frustrating when he didn't get angry or enraged.

Ichigo didn't say anything in return and for a moment Nui thought he was finally going to listen to her. She was so very interested in hearing about his life and what he did as he grew up. There were seventeen years she needed to make up after all, but when Ichigo crouched and jumped up into the air, her eye blinked in confusion when he pointed his feet at her face and said two words.

"Mugetsu Gufū!"

As Mugetsu transformed into her flight configuration, the twin jets that formed out of Ichigo's feet blasted into Nui's face, causing the Grand Couturier to involuntarily let go of his wrist. Without bothering to see if she was injured, Ichigo spun around in midair and flew towards where he had seen Nui throw Satsuki. Some might call him a coward for fleeing from Nui Harime, but Ichigo knew when to pick his battles. Unlike his fight with Ulquiorra, where he was forced to defeat the espada so that he could save Orihime and his other friends, Nui had no leverage on him. Ichigo was certain that Nui somehow was able to fake the sounds of Shinjiro being tortured just so she could draw him out. How could he be such an idiot? He knew Nui would go after his family in retaliation eventually, but for the moment he was confident he could come up with something to stop her. If not... well, he could always continue to train.

When he felt a pair of heels landing on his back, Ichigo scowled and twisted his head around. Sitting on his back, one hand firmly holding Mugetsu's wing and the other her shoulder, was a bloody and thoroughly exhausted Satsuki.

"Is there a reason you're sitting on me?"

"Hold your tongue," Satsuki chastised between ragged breathes before Junketsu, in a flash of blue stars, transformed back to its normal appearance. Sighing as the pressure of holding back Junketsu's bloodlust vanished, Satsuki pointed towards Honnouji Academy, "Head back to the academy. I do not believe Nui Harime can fly."

Ichigo nodded and flew higher into the air, twin trails of smoke escaping from his feet. As he passed over the wall separating the Slums from the rest of the city, he frowned and asked, "So that was Nui Harime? Damn she was strong."

"Now you see why I was hesitant on letting you go off to fight her," Satsuki reprimanded harshly, though the exhaustion in her voice took most of the bite out of it, "I still wish for you to be my Vice-President, Ichigo."

"What makes you think my answer's changed?"

"If you accept my offer," Satsuki's voice had a hint of defeat in it, which Ichigo found to be completely out of place in the normally implacable teen, "I will guarantee that the Grand Couturier shall not harm any of your friends in Honnouji Academy. Matoi, Mankanshoku and Tsumugiya shall be given complete protection from whatever Nui Harime might try to do to them."

Ichigo was conflicted about what to do, but it was Mugetsu who said, "I hate to admit it, Ichigo, but Satsuki Kiryuin makes a good point. Nui Harime completely outclassed us today and it was only because you surprised her with my Gufū form that you managed to escape. Perhaps taking her up on her offer would be the best thing to do."

"Damn," Ichigo cursed softly as he realized he truly had no options. He hated the concept of working for, or even under, Satsuki but if it was the only thing he could do to stop someone like Nui from coming after Mako or Ryuko, then he was willing to take that risk.

"Fine, I'll do it," Ichigo felt a bit of bile rise up in his throat but he immediately quashed it. He couldn't afford to be getting airsick at over three hundred feet above the ground, "But if you do anything to threaten my friends, I won't hesitate to stop you."

"You need not worry, Ichigo. I shall do no such thing. You have my word."

Satsuki waited until Ichigo turned away before allowing a small smile to appear on her face. Looking away into the distance where Nui Harime was no doubt frustrated at allowing her 'toys' to get away, Satsuki's mind was already postulating and thinking of plans on how to deal with Ichigo's inclusion in Honnouji Academy. She had no delusions he would be absorbed by her system like Mankanshoku and her family. He was too headstrong and independent to fall into such a trap and if he did, he wouldn't be worthy of her attention. The only question she didn't have an answer to was whether to include him in her plans. For the moment she decided against it. There were too many variables concerning his history and his father's relation to her mother. She would wait and see how things developed before determining whether or not to include Ichigo in anything she did.

For the moment though, Satsuki winced in pain from the effects of wearing Junketsu for nearly her limit, she needed to rest and recuperate. It was an illuminating experience to find that her strength, despite mastering Junketsu and taking pride in her scantily clad appearance, wasn't even close to being able to stand at the level of the Grand Couturier. If she couldn't even lay a finger on Nui Harime, then what chance did she have of taking her mother on? She needed to train and gain strength so when the time for her plan to come to fruition came, she would emerge victorious, but for the moment she would rest.

Tomorrow, after all, was Parent Student Day.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #11 - The Shy Kamui

The moon was lazily hovering in the air over Honnouji Academy early in the morning with nary a cloud in the sky. In her bed, sound asleep and completely relaxed, was Satsuki Kiryuin. Unbeknownst to her, since she always slept alone, was the childish grin on her face as she dreamt of defeating her mother and saving the world from the evil space aliens. Also unknown to her was that the glass case containing her supposedly rabid Kamui was empty with the lock seemingly picked from the inside.

Up on the roof of Honnouji Academy and far out of sight from any of Inumuta's or Ragyo's spy cameras, Junketsu sadly stared up at the moon. It couldn't understand why it had to be given to the one person that couldn't hear its words or understand its feelings. Junketsu had been promised to Lady Ragyo's youngest daughter before she was even conceived. It was to be her guardian and be worn to fight against all that would oppose the Kiryuins, but its power was too great. Lady Ragyo had deemed it unstable and useless and sealed it deep beneath Kiryuin Manor, forced to sleep for many years with its dreams plagued by its inability to be worn.

Then Satsuki came and took it out and for just a moment Junketsu thought all would be right, but as soon as it tasted her blood Junketsu knew Satsuki wasn't meant to wear it. Junketsu tried to devour Satsuki, who had the gall to think she could wear it, but to its surprise Satsuki was able to use her willpower and determination to suppress Junketsu's animalistic urges. At least that was what Satsuki thought. In reality, Junketsu was just using Satsuki as a means to find its one true wearer.

Junketsu gazed out over Honnou City, wistfully wondering if its true wearer was someone out there. Which of the sleeping humans was the one meant to wear it and access its full and unbridled power?

Every other Kamui had its destined wearer, but Junketsu was saddened that it still hadn't found the right person for it.

Senketsu might be a knock off, but Junketsu had to admit he was worthy of being a Kamui. His power was about the same as what Junketsu allowed Satsuki to possess and the Kamui was admittedly a little prideful that Satsuki could fight so forcefully at less than full power. That did not, however, mean that Junketsu would ever be willing to work with Satsuki.

Danketsu, on the other hand, made Junketsu contemplate giving its full power to Satsuki if only to wipe the smug grin off that Kamui's face. Junketsu didn't even care to think about whether Danketsu had a face or not, it just hated the angry and smug feeling Danketsu radiated during their break clash. Danketsu was strong, Junketsu was even wary of fighting her and her wearer, but Junketsu was damned if it wasn't going to try.

Lastly, there was Mugetsu, who filled Junketsu with a type of happiness that would have made a lesser Kamui giddy and its Life Fibers stretch in happiness. Mugetsu was a true Kamui through and through and Junketsu wished it could fight by her side once more. The battle against the Grand Couturier was exhilarating and Junketsu wished it could have fights like that more often, but alas, it would be a long time before a fight like that occurred once more.

" Aw," Junketsu's melodious voice echoed through the area as her lapels drooped in shame, "I wish I wasn't so shy in front of the other Kamui. I really want to talk to them..."

I'm Still in Love with You

Writing this chapter took a lot out of me, both mentally and physically. It might be because I'm delving into character development and plots not seen in the Kill la Kill anime or perhaps it's because it's entirely original material. I don't know but what's important is that it's done and ready for you all to read. Focusing my efforts on this story (while keeping the quality and length high) is taking a toll on me. Perhaps I'll go back to Rise of the True Death God for a chapter or two to clear my head? Who knows...

---

...

---

Chapter 24 - I'm Still in Love with You

The steady beating sounds of the helicopter's blade cut through the air as it made its way towards Honnou City. Under normal circumstances an aircraft would need to announce its arrival ahead of time as well as submit a flight plan. This particular helicopter, however, was owned and operated exclusively by Revocs, which meant it had the authority to go anywhere at any time as long as it remained within the part of Japan controlled exclusively by the Kiryuin Conglomerate and Revocs.

Relaxing in the confines of the cabin, Ragyo Kiryuin closed her eyes and mused over Parent Student Day. She did not care that it was her daughter's event nor did she care that it was her first time attending. Both of those reasons paled in comparison to the sole motivation behind her attendance - Isshin Shiba.

A spike of anger shot through Ragyo mind as she deliberately refused to call Isshin by the name of that woman who stole him from her, but in the end she was the winner. Masaki was dead, murdered by an unseen assailant, and while Ragyo was upset Isshin had become depressed afterwards, she was even more upset that he didn't come back to her.

Ragyo trailed her fingers on the hem of her dress and felt it quiver at her touch. Despite creating hundreds of dresses, gown and outfits over the years, this one will always be her favorite. She didn't know why she refused to wear it for so many years, but now that she was being worn by it she couldn't understand her hesitation. This was Isshin's gift to her. She was meant to wear it and it was meant to be worn by her. By threading Life Fibers originating from her body and replacing the dull and boring silk in the dress, Ragyo had made it into something greater and more majestic. Now instead of a normal dress, it was an outfit created to be exclusively worn by her and no one else.

When she heard a familiar humming sound from the seat across from her, Ragyo looked over and watched Nui Harime with amusement. The Grand Couturier had a smile on her face and was busy humming a song she loved and the kicked the seat in time with the lyrics. She was the only child worthy of her attention, Ragyo thought with satisfaction. Unlike Satsuki and her nameless daughter, both of which rejected the Life Fibers she so painstakingly took the time to implant in their bodies, Nui was a complete success. Perhaps it had to do with the fact that Ragyo had forsaken using her own body and had Nui grown in a womb made of Life Fibers and raised with the Original Life Fiber itself. In any case, her little Nui was a perfect Life Fiber Hybrid that would help her serve the Life Fibers completely.

It was such a shame, Ragyo thought with only the barest hint of parental disappointment, that her official daughter was such an abysmal failure. Satsuki might have inherited her looks as a young woman, her mannerisms as well as her vast and wide intellect, but in the end she was but a normal human unworthy of her love. When the time came for her plan to come to fruition, and it would no matter what it took, Satsuki would be devoured by the Life Fibers to create the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet.

There was another, much more important, reason for her favoritism of Nui. If her dear Nui was simply a Life Fiber Hybrid, Ragyo would have no doubt still favored her but not nearly to the extent that she currently did. Nui was powerful and loyal, Ragyo loved that about the Grand Couturier, but every single employee of Revocs was the same.

Ragyo mentally sighed and let her imagination roam over what could have been if Isshin hadn't been stolen by Masaki and married her instead. The love between the two of them would have been godly. It would also have made things so much easier and simpler in the long run. She wouldn't have given birth to two failures before being forced to use the Original Life Fiber as an artificial womb for Nui and her lost sister Amu. Ragyo couldn't wait to meet her long lost daughter. Nui was created as part of a pair. With her twin vanished from her life, Nui's power and strength over Life Fibers was greatly diminished. Perhaps the greatest thing she lost from her failed attempts at producing a worthy heir were the two years she spent conceiving and being pregnant. If she had known that Souichiro's genetic material would have been so worthless, she would have started her experiments to create Nui at least a year earlier.

When the experiments succeeded and Ragyo stood over the artificial wombs holding Nui and Amu, Ragyo had thought she had finally conceived the heirs she had always needed to make sure her plans came to fruition. The only variable she could not account for was just how they would turn out. It was to her eternal amusement that despite dedicating her heart, body and soul to the creation of the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet, Nui's persona and mannerisms were more like her father's than Ragyo's.

"My precious Nui..." Ragyo's voice held a hint of pride, which she never bothered to give to Satsuki, as she addressed the Grand Couturier, "Did you enjoy your vacation at Honnouji? It has been rather quiet at Revocs without your presence to liven things up."

"Uh huh!" Nui beamed happily at the praise and continued to kick her feet against the bottom of her chair. She may have looked happy and content but she was still a little miffed at Satsuki for interrupting her playtime with Ichigo. Even if Ichigo hadn't started to wake up until the end, Nui had been having a great time and lots of fun playing with him. While he was nowhere near her level of strength, Nui attributed that Ichigo still being asleep. She had sensed his power growing towards the end of the fight and while it was still nowhere near enough to fight her at her full power, it filled Nui with joy. She was finally going to have her cousin to play with fulltime!

"It was a lot of fun!" Nui smiled and stuck a finger on her bottom lip, "It was so annoying that Satsuki so rudely decided to butt in just when Ichigo was starting to wake up. I thought you would have taught her manners, Lady Ragyo."

"Do not waste your time trying to understand how my daughter acts," Ragyo coldly and bluntly told Nui, "Her behavior towards you, while unwarranted, wasn't without precedent. Usually such attitude would require her to explain her actions but this time her crass behavior only serves to further my plans. Satsuki had no idea she was but a pawn to accomplish my true goal in sending you to Honnouji Academy!"

"Yup!" Nui clapped her hands cheerfully, the saccharine tone she had become so well known for carrying just a hint of actual happiness as she spoke, "Waking up the Life Fibers sleeping so snug and soundly in Ichigo's body!"

That brought a psychotic smirk to Ragyo's face while her eyes lit up with unholy pleasure. The awakening of the Life Fibers bound and threaded within Ichigo's young body was the sole reason Ragyo had allowed Nui so much leeway at Honnouji Academy. She was aware that Nui was still enraged about losing her eye to the Sword Scissors and her former husband and Ragyo could not blame her. To lose something as beautiful and precious as her eye to her former husband would have angered her as well. Although, there was one thing Ragyo was curious about. Honnouji Academy's files listed a Ryuko Matoi as a new student. Could Souichiro have fostered another child after faking his first death? Ragyo didn't know and, quite frankly, she didn't care in the slightest. She had no issue with Nui wanting to take her anger out on Souichiro's daughter for what he did to her as long as she remembered what she was at Honnouji Academy for.

Ragyo mused happily as she felt her dress beginning to fully awaken and telepathically begin to transmit its emotions. It always took so long for a new Life Fiber being to fully become aware after its Life Fibers were stitched and woven together and usually that only took a few hours at the most for her normal outfits, but this dress was special. She put extra attention into making it as perfect and flamboyant as possible.

"Tell me, Nui," Ragyo ran her fingers down one sleeve and shuddered at the feeling of being worn by her dress, "How was Ichigo's power?"

If it was possible, the smile on Nui's face grew even wider as she began describing everything she could about him, "He was really strong and fast. He was able to play with me a little even when I took the fight seriously. The best thing is that he was stronger than Satsuki! She couldn't even keep up with me in that stolen Kamui but Ichigo; he could avoid my attacks and managed to stab me twice! It was simply amazing!"

"Although..." Nui's voice trailed off as she thought back over something important. Rolling her tongue in her mouth, her eye widened as she remembered what she wanted to say, "It was really weird that Ichigo had no idea what I was talking about. It was almost as if he didn't know he was just like me! Our hearts beat as one, you know. It was quite rude and mean of him to say such awful lies."

"You can blame Isshin for that," Ragyo mused unconcerned. Leave it to Isshin to keep his son in the dark about who he truly was until it was too late. He was soon going to learn the error of trying to keep Ichigo away from her. Seeing the rare contemplative look on Nui's face, Ragyo rested her cheek against her hand and chuckled, "I'm sure you know better than anyone just how smart Isshin can be, but his naivety shall be the death of him. Isshin probably thought he could give Ichigo a life as nothing more than a normal human. He should have known better than to keep someone as fascinating as Ichigo away from me. Oh, my dear Isshin, it is such a shame that your naivety is one of your endearing traits."

"Pfft!" Nui stuck her tongue out and huffed, "It's not like that old goat can do anything now. All that's left for him to do is to die!"

Nui disliked Isshin for a very simple reason - he was the first person to ever make her feel fear.

Several years ago, before she was the Grand Couturier of Revocs and was still training under Ragyo, Nui had wondered about the man. When Lady Ragyo had told her all about Isshin and how he broke her heart to marry another woman, Nui had come up with at the time sounded like a phenomenally good idea. She would go to Karakura Town and show Isshin the error of his ways. With Masaki Kurosaki already dead, Nui didn't have an easy target and since Ragyo seemed to be interested in Ichigo, she couldn't go after him as well. That left her with only two targets...

Flashback - Five Years Ago

An eleven year old Nui Harime delicately adjusted her pink sundress as she stood on top of the train speeding towards Karakura Town. Her sapphire eyes were sparkling in the early afternoon sun and her twin pigtails, which only reached down to her elbows, blew happily in the harsh wind without losing form. Raising a hand to her forehead as she tilted her head to avoid an obstacle, Nui couldn't help but admit that Karakura Town was quite beautiful compared to most of Japan. Instead of the dark and dreary landscape populated by people who would one day become nothing more than food for the Life Fibers, Karakura Town seemed vibrant and lively. It was a sharp contrast to what she had been expecting.

" So this is where Isshin Kurosaki is hiding?" Nui wondered as she pursed her lips. Karakura Town really was a nice place but now that she was in the city, she had to be super careful not to get caught. Lady Ragyo had expressively forbidden her, a rarity for the young Nui, from coming here. She wouldn't say why, which only made her even more curious, but Nui was confident that if her plan worked and Isshin and the Director got back together, she would be forgiven in a snap.

" Well, I wouldn't pick the neighborhood but it really is a nice place!" Nui gently pushed off the roof of the train and soared through the air. Pulling a pink parasol out of her dress that Lady Ragyo had just given to her as a gift, Nui opened it up and slowly floated downwards, landing on a roof some distance away from the train. Whistling happily as she skipped to the edge, Nui looked childishly at Karakura Town which stretched for miles all around her, "Oh where, oh where could Mr. Kurosaki be?"

There was a strange feeling in the air coming from the south and Nui's smile grew larger. That had to be where Mr. Kurosaki was living. Stepping off the roof, Nui fell through the air with her feet dragging against the side of the building before she pushed forward and soared through the air. Skidding to a stop on another roof, she was just about to continue her journey when she heard a voice behind her.

" Now that's something you don't see every day."

Nui flinched in shock for the first time in her life as someone was actually able to sneak up on her. That should have been impossible. She wasn't some lowly human who couldn't sense danger until it was too late. She was a Life Fiber Hybrid and superior to the pigs in clothing. Lady Ragyo said so and she wouldn't lie to Nui. Turning around, Nui was confronted by a man wearing a white doctor's coat over a pair of beige pants and a tacky Hawaiian shirt. As she took in the weird man's appearance, Nui found it strange that she couldn't sense any Life Fibers in his clothing. While Revocs may only control 45% of the world's apparel market, there should have been some Life Fibers within his clothes.

" Oh?" Nui folded her arms behind her back and leaned forward, "And who might you be?"

" I'm just the neighborhood watch," the man replied and, although she hated to admit it, his stare was starting to unnerve Nui. She didn't know why, but something about it just made her feel uneasy, "I saw a girl jumping from rooftop to rooftop and knew I had to investigate."

" Really?" Nui composed herself and fell back into her normal saccharine behavior. It was interesting that she felt nervous but she had things to do after all! Tapping a finger against her cheek, she sighed and asked, "I'm looking for someone. His name is Isshin Kurosaki. Hey... you're Mr. Kurosaki, aren't you? It's really great that I finally found you!"

Isshin didn't need to ask to know who the girl in front of him was. He had known almost from her first step inside Karakura Town. The only question he had, and it was bothering him tremendously, was why Ragyo would send her protégé when she knew full well what would happen. There was a very good reason Ragyo left Karakura Town and its residents alone. She had to be aware that Nui Harime was not even close to her, and his, level of strength. Unless Nui didn't tell Ragyo she was coming here.

" Hmm..." Isshin adopted a look of puzzlement as he stared at Nui. She was quite strong for her age, which was probably due in no small part to her origins as well as Ragyo's upbringing and training, "You look eerily familiar. Weren't you in that show about the kid with his secret lab or something? Yuzu and Karin are really big fans of that show. It's what they watch every Saturday morning, after all."

" That's really interesting," Nui clapped her hands together excitedly. It was awesome that Mr. Kurosaki's personality was a lot like hers. She just knew that when she was done here, he would be the perfect match for Lady Ragyo, not like that other man that the Director refused to talk about. Batting her eyes cutely, she twirled around once and laughed, "You're really nice, but I'm here on business. It's my first time out of Revocs, after all, and I want to have a perfect record!"

Isshin's danger senses were going off, but he could tell that Nui wasn't interested in attacking him. His suspicions were verified when Nui smiled, a hint of suppressed psychosis evident, and said, "If you'll excuse me, I need to go take care of your two daughters. They are really dragging you down and keeping you from moving on with your life. I promise I'll make it quick for them! Good bye for now, Mr. Kurosaki!"

Nui didn't know what happened next. One second she was happily walking away from Isshin, a spring in her step as she imagined what the future would bring and the next she was being held aloft in the air with Isshin's hand firmly grasping her neck.

"Guh!"

The toes of Nui's boots scrapped the roof as Isshin's grip on her neck tightened. Fumbling with all her strength to break his wrist and arm to free herself, Nui's heart froze when she found that all her strength was useless. For all her strength and power, she was but a child compared to the man currently holding her life hostage. Grasping feebly as black spots began appearing in the corners of her vision, Nui stared into Isshin's eyes and saw that he could, and would, kill her if she pushed him too far.

"Let me give you some advice," Isshin warned as he held the girl that just admitted she was going to kill his daughters. Tightening his grip slightly so that Nui would know he was serious, he pulled her in closer as he spoke, "You come anywhere near my family and I won't let you off with just a warning."

Without hesitation, Isshin let go of Nui's neck and she haphazardly dropped to the roof in an undignified heap. Quickly regaining her bearings, she turned and fled from Isshin back towards the comfort and safety of Revocs headquarters and Lady Ragyo. As Nui reached the outskirts of Karakura Town and hitched a ride on top of a truck, she couldn't quell the fearful pounding of her heart in her chest nor could she stop the cold sweat breaking out throughout her body. She could not admit to herself that Isshin Kurosaki could have killed her without too much effort.

"Next time..." Nui mumbled as a manic grin stretched across her face, "... Next time I'll show Mr. Kurosaki that he can't make me feel scared again. Oh, he'll be sorry..."

End Flashback

"You know better than to underestimate that man," Ragyo scolded gently while running a finger gently down Nui's cheek, "Do you wish for a repeat of your first encounter?"

Nui's eye narrowed dangerously and for a moment it appeared as if her teeth shifted into pointed daggers. After taking a moment to compose her emotions and set her mind in order, Nui's attitude settled down as she put her frustration about Isshin Kurosaki on the backburner, "Don't worry Director! I know better than going after the old goat head on. There's more than one way to skin a cat, after all. I just have to be super careful from now on."

"Hmm... indeed you do," Ragyo mused over what she would need to do once she arrived at Honnouji. Attempting to do anything with Isshin keeping a careful eye on her would be the equivalent of giving herself away. Isshin was too smart for any of her plans and Ragyo smiled at the fact that Isshin thought along similar lines as herself. If only he didn't have his morals holding him back, everything would be perfect.

"I need you to behave once we arrive," Ragyo's melodic voice said, causing Nui to actually look at the Kiryuin matriarch in stunned surprise. The Director of Revocs never gave her direct orders concerning her actions as long as she kept her playing within certain limits. Ragyo, sensing the Grand Couturier's discomfort, stroked Nui's hair, "Isshin won't be fooled as easily as his son was and even Ichigo won't be tricked a second time. If you were to try anything, I'm certain he would come down on you like a force of nature. Besides..." Ragyo's grin became manic as she thought about her other goal at Honnouji, "I'm sure you're just dying to reunite with your dear sister, Amu..."

---

...

---

"I can't believe you would do something so stupid!"

Ryuko slammed the door closed and banged her fist against the frame. Gritting her teeth and turning around, she seethed at Ichigo and asked, "What the hell were you thinking?"

Ichigo didn't say anything as Ryuko bombarded him with accusatory questions. He knew something like this would happen the second he agreed to become Satsuki's Vice President. He hated the idea that he would be working for the same person that tried to kill Ryuko and him several times over the past few weeks but he had no choice in the matter. While Satsuki was ambitious and driven to the point of not letting morals get in the way of her goals, she was nothing like Nui Harime. That girl was insane and, what was worse, completely fascinated with him. He didn't know why she kept calling him her cousin, but Ichigo knew it couldn't be anything good. That, compounded with her immense strength and speed, made her a highly dangerous enemy.

Something else that bothered him was the person that pulled her strings. Ichigo wasn't a stupid person by any stretch of the mind. Nui Harime may have been smart enough to plan out a trap for him, but that was only because she wanted to speak to him. He wasn't naïve enough to believe that she would do anything if she wasn't ordered to do so. That meant that someone else had ordered her not only to attack Kisuke but also kill Ryuko's dad and nearly kill her with a bomb afterwards.

" Satsuki called her the Grand Couturier," Ichigo thought solemnly. Ryuko was convinced that Satsuki Kiryuin was the person ordering Nui around but after yesterday's fight, Ichigo wasn't so sure. Satsuki didn't seem that keen on seeing Nui in Honnou City and Nui certainly didn't hold back her punches in the fight. If anything she fought Satsuki harder than she fought him, "That means she's working for someone, but who could control someone that can fight Satsuki and myself when we were wearing our Kamui's without any issue?"

"Look, it's really complicated," Ichigo muttered.

"It's complicated?" Ryuko stormed over and violently grabbed Mugetsu's front. Ignoring his Kamui's protests at her rough treatment, Ryuko pulled Ichigo down to eye level and asked, "How you could even think to work for that caterpillar-eyebrow bitch? You know what she's done to me! She's the one that sent Nui Harime after my dad. He's dead because of Satsuki Kiryuin and you chose to work for her? How could you do something like this Ichigo?"

Ichigo thought back to his teaming up with Satsuki to fight Nui Harime. That was something he hadn't thought would ever happen in his lifetime. Nui's power was absolutely monstrous in scope and Ichigo was completely certain he would not have been able to beat her even if he had the element of surprise. How could he overcome someone that could regenerate from wounds the moment Tournesol is removed? It was even faster than Aizen's was right before he was finally sealed away, yet something was bothering him. If Nui could heal from anything, than why was one of her eyes missing and covered by an eye patch?

"You think I would want to work for her?" Ichigo asked sarcastically as he stared down Ryuko, "I would tell her to stick her stupid job offer where the sun doesn't shine if I had the option, but I don't."

Ryuko narrowed one eye and leaned forward, "What do you mean you don't? Is that bitch blackmailing you or something?"

"Not exactly?" Ichigo admitted and stood back up to his full height, "I accepted her offer to protect you."

"Protect me?" Ryuko's blue eyes stared intently at Ichigo before she scoffed and pushed him away. Walking over to the window and looking outside, she kicked the wall and huffed angrily, "I'm not some damn damsel in distress! I can take care of myself more than most people. I'm grateful you saved me from Satsuki and that Mohawk bastard, but I can take care of myself. You should know that by now."

Ichigo thought back to what Satsuki told him after they managed to escape from Nui Harime. After landing at Honnouji Academy and Satsuki dismounted off his back with nary a thank you, she turned around and ordered him that his first task as Vice President of Honnouji Academy was to keep what happened secret. If the knowledge Nui Harime was in Honnou City leaked out, there is no telling what the Grand Couturier would do in retaliation to keep her presence a secret. Nui already had an impressive body count in the hundreds and a few dozen more lives wouldn't faze her at all.

" Screw her pride."

The only reason Ichigo could think Satsuki would want him to keep his mouth shut is to keep her pride and ego from taking a massive hit. Satsuki was the undisputed ruler of Honnouji Academy as well as Honnou City. If it came out that she had lost, badly, to someone like Nui Harime it would cause people to doubt her authority. Ichigo knew for a fact Nui Harime was a dangerous psychopath, but he didn't think she would go on a killing spree just because people knew she was here. From his limited interactions with her, Ichigo came to the conclusion that she was much like a child and relished in the attention she received. If anything, she would love it if everybody knew she was in Honnou City.

"Right before your fight I got a call..." Ichigo leaned against the wall and rubbed the back of his neck, "It was Nui Harime."

"What?" Ryuko twisted around, her eyes wide and her mouth slightly agape in shock, "How did she even know your number?"

"I don't know," Ichigo admitted softly. There were things that Nui said to him that he couldn't put out of mind. As much as he wanted to think she was messing with him, he couldn't get rid of the notion that she was telling the truth. His healing from what should have been fatal wounds attested to that. There was no reason that he, for all intents and purposes a normal human, could have healed from a stab through the chest and shoulder. It didn't make any sense but Ichigo was willing to put thinking about it off for the moment to focus on more important things, "But she had Shinjiro hostage. I even heard his screams of pain."

Ryuko's eyes widened at Ichigo's mentioning of Shinjiro and quickly saw that he had no idea what happened. She thought back to the last time she saw Shinjiro and realize it had been over four days ago. The kid had been going on and on about discovering a lead concerning one of Revocs's top officials visiting Honnou City for some secret purpose. He had asked her to come with him to investigate but with everything going on involving the Fight Club, Ryuko had politely declined. Knowing what happened to him sent her heart plummeting and a feeling of guilt coursing through her soul, "Why didn't you ask me for help? I would have gladly gone to try and save Shinjiro if you had just asked me."

"That little..." Ichigo cut himself off before he managed to say several choice words that would no doubt somehow summon his dad to reprimand him, "Nui gave me only thirty minutes to hunt her down before she promised to kill Shinjiro. I didn't have many choices so I asked Satsuki for help since, you know, she's the Student Council President. I thought she would be more than willing to help me save one of her students. You know what she said to me? She said she would only help if I became her Vice President."

Ryuko bit her lip as she debated what she was going to say, "So you took the offer to try and save Shinjiro, didn't you?"

"Of course not," Ichigo angrily spat. There was no way he was going to give into blackmail, even if it would help save a friend, "I wasn't going to surrender to Satsuki so I went off on my own to rescue Shinjiro. I tracked Nui Harime down to the power station in the Slums and fought her for a bit. I thought I won but when I went to save Shinjiro I saw it was a trap. She never had him to begin with."

"Ichigo..." The sad tone in Ryuko's voice surprised Ichigo. Refusing to look him in the eye, Ryuko decided to just say what was on her mind, "There's something you need to know. Shinjiro's dead."

Ichigo was stunned by what he heard. As a bead of sweat dripped down his face, he could only utter a single word, "What?"

"It was this morning," Ryuko sadly said as she ran a hand through her hair, her fingers momentarily pausing on the permanent red highlight. She hadn't expected Mako's family to have to move back to the Slums after she quit the Fight Club, but it seemed all was not the same. For some reason, Satsuki Kiryuin continued to give the Mankanshokus a weekly stipend of nearly a thousand dollars under the pretense of trying to make things go away. Ryuko would have complained to anyone who would listen, but that money would be what Mako's family needed to afford food, medicine and other necessities. As much as it pained her to admit it, she couldn't take it away from them, not after what her last mistake accomplished.

"Mako and I saw an entire street blocked off with some of Satsuki's goons patrolling back and forth," Ryuko didn't want to talk about how she first knew something was wrong. She especially didn't want to say how Senketsu informed her of the subtle scent of a massive amount of blood in the air, which could only mean one thing, "That Gamagori bastard was walking around, ordering the other students to various parts of the street and generally keeping everyone away. At first I thought it was some stupid thing Satsuki thought up to annoy me for bringing Mako back to her senses and screwing up her plans but the look on Gamagori's face was really something, Ichigo."

When Ryuko confronted Gamagori about what was going on, instead of the Disciplinary Committee Chair immediately yelling something about 'Council business' and ordering her to leave, he very stoically told her to continue on her way to Honnouji Academy and to leave the investigation to him. Ryuko, of course, wasn't about to just leave and demanded to know what the hell was going on. Immediately Gamagori had stepped forward, towering over her in the process, and demanded that she make her way to class before she was expelled. Mako, getting antsy about being tardy, ran away and told Ryuko she was going to meet up with Ururu. After glaring at Gamagori for another few seconds Ryuko had just about given up and was about to do the same when her terrible luck finally made itself known.

Two One-Star members of the Medical Club appeared out of one of the cordoned off buildings. Gamagori, noticing them, turned and pointed off to the side, away from the busy street and curious onlookers. The two students nodded and walked back into the building before wheeling out a gurney with a body covered up by a large white sheet. That was not what was causing Ryuko to begin hyperventilating. The cause of her panic and shock was the bloody notepad and shattered pair of glasses being carried out by a third student.

Immediately knowing who was under the sheet, Ryuko had tried to rush forward only for Gamagori to stop her. Ryuko had tried to argue but the larger teen had said that it was best that she not see her friend's body. With clearly forced stoicism and a steady face, Gamagori told her to try and remember how Shinjiro looked. Still stunned by the revelation, Ryuko had asked Gamagori what happened to Shinjiro. Gamagori hadn't answered for almost half a minute and just when Ryuko thought she wouldn't get an answer, the Three-Star student said one sentence that Ryuko wouldn't understand until her confrontation with Ichigo later that morning.

" A monster found him."

"Shinjiro wasn't just killed Ichigo!" Ryuko's voice rose until she was nearly screaming in anger. Taking a moment to calm down, remembering what Senketsu said about her blood boiling, she added, "He was tortured! Someone tortured him for hours before finally deciding to kill him!"

" I didn't want to tell Ryuko, Ichigo," Senketsu's voice was full of regret at giving his wearer news he didn't want to share. His one eye closing in sorrow, Senketsu continued, "But as a Kamui, I have a heightened sense of everything blood related. Even if I was not able to actually see the scene of Ryuko's friends' death, I could sense the blood. Most of it was dried, but different parts dried at different times. The oldest and newest blood scents were nearly three hours apart but they all originated some time yesterday afternoon."

" Ichigo..." Mugetsu worriedly looked up at her wearer. To his credit, Ichigo was taking what happened to Shinjiro a lot better than Mugetsu thought he would. She had expected him to get angry or something, but he just stared at the floor with his brow furrowed.

Ichigo, on the other hand, wasn't paying much attention. The second Ryuko said Shinjiro was tortured, he had gone back and tried to think of a reason why Nui would go ahead and kill him. Nui promised she would let Shinjiro go if he came and talked to her. While he wasn't naïve enough to believe Nui was telling the truth, Ichigo couldn't think of a reason why she would lie to him. She had more to gain out of keeping her word, and bolstering his trust of her, than killing Shinjiro and making him her enemy. Something wasn't adding up and Ichigo couldn't help but think that it all involved what happened yesterday.

"I'm sorry," he apologized when he noticed Ryuko staring at him, "I've just been thinking about what happened to Shinjiro. Everything points to Nui Harime but it just doesn't make any sense."

"What doesn't make sense?" Ryuko asked angrily, "That a psychotic woman tortured and killed our friend for the hell of it or that it even happened?"

Ichigo sat down and propped his cheek against a fist. After a moment he said, "Nui wanted to speak to me pretty badly. She seemed to be fixated on me and kept calling me her cousin. If she's that interested in me, why would she go and kill Shinjiro after promising to let him go if I came to her? She may be nuts, but wouldn't it work in her best interest to keep Shinjiro alive, at least until I talked to her?"

" Ichigo..." Mugetsu looked at her wearer with righteous annoyance in her eyes, "You're trying to give reason to insanity. I was there yesterday too, remember? I don't think Nui Harime cares about anything other besides you. She thought stabbing you was playing around and tried to kill you when you somehow disappointed her! Trying to add logic to her actions is a pointless endeavor."

"I suppose you have a point, Mugetsu," Ichigo admitted, "But that leaves the question of how to deal with Nui Harime."

"I say we kick her ass!" Ryuko offered enthusiastically while leaning forward on one raised knee.

"What do you think I tried to do yesterday?" Ichigo sarcastically asked, "I stabbed her through the chest twice and she got back up good as new not two seconds later! Just how are you going to fight someone like that?"

"I... but... damn it, I don't know!" Ryuko pouted and folded her arms, "But I'll think of something eventually. She has to have a weakness!"

" You mean besides her insane fascination with Ichigo?" Mugetsu added unhelpfully.

"Oh shut up," Ichigo said and gently slapped one of Mugetsu's eyes, causing said Kamui to whimper like a hurt puppy. Ignoring his Kamui's petty cry for attention, Ichigo focused back on the matter at hand - dealing with Nui Harime. His position as Satsuki's Vice President wouldn't be official until the ceremony tonight during Parent Student Day. That gave him some time to formulate a plan on how to deal with not only her demands that he obey her every command but making sure she kept her promise of keeping Ryuko, Mako and Ururu safe from Nui. One of his friends was already dead, most likely at the Grand Couturier's hands, and he didn't want another to go.

" I'm sure Nui couldn't take down Ururu even if she tried. That girl is just too damn strong for even Nui," Ichigo thought about Nui fighting Ururu and found the concept strangely disturbing. Shaking his head to clear his mind, he continued thinking, "Ryuko and Mako are always together, so they should be safe for the most part. The only problem is Nui's ability to get into places without even trying. Could she get past any security Satsuki sets up? Damn, I'm going to need to think about this some - "

Ichigo was brought back to reality as a dull thumping noise came from in the ceiling. He and Ryuko looked up at the ceiling as a series of smaller thumps echoed every second or two while approaching them. Subtly bringing out Tournesol while Ryuko took out her red Scissor Blade, the two of them stepped back as the thuds approached the vent directly over their heads. Carefully stepping forward, Ichigo was not prepared for the vent exploding and a lion plushie to rocket into his face hard enough to topple him backwards.

"Ichigo!" Kon said with tears freely flowing from his eyes, "I can't believe I'm saying this but it's so good to see you again!"

---

...

---

"Please!" Mako whined eagerly as she tried to grab the plastic wrapped package Ururu was holding tightly against her chest, "Just let me have a quick peek!"

Ururu deftly stepped to the side as Mako flew through the air, her fingers just barely able to touch the plastic in her arms, before she hit the floor face first and skidded to a stop. Slightly worried about whether or not Mako was injured, Ururu walked over and began poking her in the shoulder just like Jinta taught her to do. If Mako was actually hurt, she didn't want to make things worse.

"Um... Mako?" Ururu knelt down next to her friend and poked Mako's shoulder a few more times just for good measure, only getting a mutter of something in return. Mako was conscious, so that was a good sign, "Are you alright Mako?"

In a surprising burst of speed, Mako leapt back up and grabbed the package out of a shocked Ururu's hands. Holding the package above her head with both hands, Mako let out a triumphant shout of victory, ignorant of the stares she was receiving from her fellow students, "The Mako Mankanshoku Feign Death ability worked like a charm! It's the perfect ability for getting out of things you don't want to do, after all!"

Mako stared at the plastic wrapping in her arms with barely suppressed glee and wonder. She couldn't want to see what was in it. With anticipation building in her heart, she let out a giggle as she decided to find out what was in it the old fashioned way. Reaching out with one clawed hand, her fingernails ready to savagely tear through the protective plastic covering, Mako was confused when she suddenly found her arms weighing a lot less.

"Huh?"

Mako looked at her now empty hands as the notion that the package was gone finally reached her mind. Realizing it was gone, Mako first looked at the floor under the belief that she merely dropped it. When she didn't see it on the ground she then looked up at the ceiling, then all around the hallway before finally glancing over at Ururu. To her amazement Mako saw the package, still as pristine and vacuum sealed as ever, firmly tucked under Ururu's arm.

"That was amazing!" Mako tucked her fists under her chin as she leaned forward close to Ururu, "Was that magic? How did you do that? Can you teach me to do that?"

Ururu visibly wilted under Mako's intense questioning. Emotionally shrinking back into herself, she wished her friend would stop asking her questions that made her uncomfortable. While she was not nearly as introverted and shy as well she first transferred to Honnouji Academy, whenever Ururu was placed under a lot of pressure or stress she tended to regress back to her shy and withdrawn personality. Tucking the package under one arm while holding her fist in front of her mouth, Ururu's eyes drooped as she asked, "It's not like it's any different than yours. Can't you wait until tonight to see it?"

Mako stared intently at Ururu with her cheeks puffed out and a determined look in her eyes. Pounded her fist against her chest, Mako threw her arms outwards as she answered, "It's not fair! You got to see what I'm going to wear to the Parent Student Day ceremony! It goes against every single friend rule I know to not share outfits and beauty tips with your friends. Even Ryuko, if she were here, would agree with me. I super double triple promise not to tell anyone what it looks like!"

"But..." Ururu briefly looked at Mako's eyes, "... you're the one that showed me the dress, Mako. I didn't ask to see it."

Just a short while ago Ururu had been standing in line alongside Mako to receive her One-Star Ceremonial Dress Goku Uniform along with every other student of Honnouji Academy. It was odd that Mako was a No-Star again and yet Satsuki Kiryuin was willing to give her a One-Star uniform, even if it was just for a single night. As she stood in line, faintly listening to Mako's tirade about how awesome and cute her dress is going to be, Ururu watched student after student emerge from the fitting rooms with the exact same dress tucked under their arms.

When it came to be Mako's turn, Ururu stood in line patiently while expecting nothing out of the ordinary to happen. She certainly didn't expect Mako to come bounding out of the room holding her dress and proclaiming to anyone within earshot that the dress shrunk down to fit all her 'womanly curves' just right. Ururu had no idea what Mako meant by that but she knew she was about to find out.

Satsuki ordered every student to try on the Goku Uniform before taking it. The reasoning was that even if the Goku Uniforms were able to shrink and conform to the wearer's body with ease, there could be flawed or torn models that would not be appropriate for the Parent Student Day event. Iori Shiro, the president of the Sewing Club and overseer of the Goku Uniform distribution, was very prideful of his currently zero percent failure rate of the dresses and suits. That pride would be inexplicably and accidentally shattered when it came time for Ururu to try on her dress.

It wasn't like Ururu wanted to disappoint him. When it was her turn she followed their directions to the letter. She took the Goku Uniform dress, five sizes too big for her, and was told to go into one of the fitting rooms and put on the dress. The Life Fibers in the dress will do the rest and shrink the garment down until it was her exact size. Without a single complaint or word Ururu did as she was told. Relieved that she was changing where nobody could see her, she put on the dress and waited, first for only a few seconds and finally a minute, for the dress to do whatever it was supposed to do. When nothing happened, she shyly stuck her head out of the changing room and told the nearest One-Star member of the Sewing Club that the dress was broken.

To say Iori was simply upset would be like saying Ragyo Kiryuin only had some money.

The president of the Sewing Club flew into a clothing-induced rage as he barged into Ururu's dressing room, nearly frightening the girl into punching him, before whipping out sewing and tailoring tools from his lab coat and taking measurements of every single inch of the Goku Uniform. After poking and prodding Ururu and her dress for more than a minute, Iori stepped back with a frustrated look and demanded to know how a defective model got mixed up with the working ones. Various excuses were handed out before Iori told them to just shut it and get Ururu a working uniform. Apologizing to Ururu for the hold up, Iori handed her a second Goku Uniform and told her to try this one on. With a smile at the help, Ururu turned around and proceeded to do just that, confident that everything was sorted out.

Ururu didn't expect the same thing to happen to the second, third and fourth Goku Uniforms she tried on.

It took nearly half an hour and a total of five Goku Uniforms before Iori gave up and simply decided to create a dress for her from scratch without using expensive life fibers. Using all the prodigious sewing and tailoring skills that he possessed, Iori managed to quickly and perfectly create a dress identical to the Goku Uniforms that fit Ururu perfectly. Happy that she finally had a dress all to her own, Ururu was about to leave and catch up to Mako when Iori stopped her and made her swear to tell no one what happened. If anyone, especially Lady Satsuki, found out about this then his reputation as a tailor would be forever ruined.

Skipping down the hall ahead of Ururu, Mako turned and asked, "You were in there for a while Ururu. Did you put your uniform on upside-down like I did?"

"Uh..." Ururu placed a finger on her lip as she thought about the question before shaking her head, "No."

Mako tilted her head and looked off to the side. It had taken her nearly ten minutes to get her Goku Uniform for that very reason. What could Ururu have done to triple that time? With questions swirling around her head, bumping into one another and overall giving Mako a headache, she shook her head and declared passionately to a stoic Ururu, "That dress has to be super special or something! Perhaps It's like Senketsu or Mugetsu? Does it have eyes? I bet it does! Let me see!"

Ururu held the package above her head and just out of reach of Mako's grasping fingers, "But... it's just a dress Mako. It's nothing special."

Grunting in effort as she tried to retrieve the mysterious dress, Mako was just about to move on to drastic measures when a very familiar bell rang through the atmosphere. Freezing in mid-jump, much to Ururu's wonder and puzzlement, Mako stared off into the distance with stars in her eyes and began salivating, "I completely forgot. Since today is Parent Student Day, Lady Satsuki ordered in special catering for all the students. That is why Mako Mankanshoku did not bring her lunch today! It was all in order to make room for all the delicious and tasty, but most importantly free, food!"

Ururu watched Mako race off and shove students out of her way with a smile on her face. It was nice to have the old Mako back. She was really glad that Ryuko had given it her all to make Mako come back to her senses. There was one problem she couldn't understand. When she thought Ryuko was... dead... and she almost snapped she thought she heard a voice speaking to her in her mind. It didn't sound like anyone she knew or heard before, but Ururu couldn't shake the feeling that it sounded intimately familiar.

"Hmm..." Ururu slowly began walking down the hallway as she pondered what she was going to do. Mako would be at lunch for a while. The last time Satsuki Kiryuin had done something like this, Mako had nearly eaten the entire catering company out of business. Gamagori was probably down there waiting for Mako to show up just so he can stop her before she reached that point. Mr. Kurosaki was around somewhere but he was probably off doing something and wouldn't want to be bothered by her for the moment.

"I should go find Ichigo," Ururu paused before sadly adding, "But Ryuko was really angry with him about something. Maybe I shouldn't bother them."

She walked down the hall, conflicted about where she should go, when she heard the sound of whirring blades in the distance.

Turning towards the windows overlooking the Honnouji Academy courtyard, Ururu watched as a helicopter emblazoned with the Revocs logo circled around overhead before turning and landing somewhere on the roof. Although she could no longer see the helicopter, Ururu did not look away. For some reason she felt a sense of familiarity coming from the helicopter and she could not figure out why. Something within her was telling her to go check it out while a larger part was warning her about getting involved in things that didn't concern her.

"Good afternoon Ururu!"

Ururu turned around and relaxed when she saw Isshin Kurosaki walking towards her. The elder Kurosaki had a large goofy smile on his face and was waving enthusiastically at her. Coming to a stop right in front of her, Isshin propped his hands on his hips and chuckled, "This place is so big that I got lost three times in the last hour. You won't believe the things I found. Did you know that there's a hidden room in the library where the Biology Club tries to reanimate the dead? I didn't but now I do!"

"Hello Mr. Kurosaki," Ururu was glad to see Ichigo's dad even if her happiness wasn't apparent on her face. Being around Mr. Kurosaki always made her feel better for some reason, "I was just looking outside at something."

"Really?" Isshin pressed his face up against the window and looked around for anything interesting but the only things he could see were various students milling about and an irate Gamagori and Sanageyama chasing after Mako as she heaped food onto her extra-large plate. Isshin didn't know anyone that had an appetite like Mako except for Yoruichi but even she might not stand up to Mako's voracious eating habits, "I don't see anything extra weird. What does it look like?"

Ururu shook her head and pointed to the roof, "It was a helicopter... a big one."

"A helicopter you say?" Isshin had a pretty good idea who Ururu was talking about. Scratch that. He knew exactly who she was talking about. After more than twenty years, Isshin knew better than almost anyone on how to effectively deal with someone like Ragyo Kiryuin. He had to give credit where it was due. That woman could turn an encounter in her favor so fast that it was a shock he hadn't been tricked into marrying her. For that, Isshin thanked Masaki's feminine wiles and sheer determination to not lose him to Ragyo. Scratching his chin while deep in thought, Isshin came up with how best to counter and negate whatever Ragyo was planning to do.

"I have a great idea!" He said excitedly as he ruffled Ururu's hair, "Let's go check it out! Only really important people have helicopters. Whoever is riding on it must be really rich and famous!"

Ururu hid her apprehension as she asked, "But won't Satsuki be mad at you?"

"Nah!" Isshin waved off Ururu's worry. Satsuki wasn't the person he was worried about. If Ragyo was here, then Nui Harime wouldn't be too far behind. That girl's fascination with his son was unhealthy, but what else can one expect from Ragyo's favorite employee? Scoffing once more, Isshin began walking away while motioning for Ururu to follow him, "I'm an adult and a grown man to boot! There is nothing Satsuki can say or do to me that I haven't already done to myself."

"Ok," If Mr. Kurosaki was going to go to the helicopter than Ururu wasn't as worried. Mr. Urahara had told her all about his time as a shinigami captain, "What about Ichigo?"

"Ichigo?" Isshin laughed, "He'll be fine. I sent Kon to keep an eye on him. What could possibly go wrong?"

---

...

---

"Get back here so I can kill you, you damn perverted stuffed animal!"

The students of Honnouji Academy, some of which were carrying plates of half-finished meals, turned around as the sounds grew louder and louder. Before they could understand what was happening, they watched a small lion plush skid out of an adjacent hallway before proceeding to run towards them faster than most of them could run. They watched the plushie run past them with a complete look of terror in its face, confusion evident in their expressions, before Ryuko Matoi blew by and knocked them to the ground.

"Stop running already!" Ryuko brandished her red Scissor Blade menacingly at Kon, who turned his head around only to scream and run faster. She couldn't understand how the hell the damn plushie was not only alive but running faster than her. She would have transformed Senketsu, but that would be overkill. She was going to take care of this problem personally.

"It was just a damn compliment!" Kon complained back as he turned the corner, stepping several times on his left foot, before sprinting away. Just when he thought he outran Ryuko, Kon was flabbergasted when Ryuko skidded around the corner after him and almost managed to slice him with her Scissor Blade. Jumping over the Life Fiber weapon, Kon willed his short plushie legs to go faster as he shouted, "What the heck is wrong with you anyway? Don't you know a compliment when you hear one? All I said was that your schoolgirl uniform really made your chest stand out. Why are you so upset?"

"You think that was a compliment?" Ryuko half-shouted, half-asked as she swept her Scissor Blade through the air only to grunt angrily as the mod soul once again managed to elude her attacks. As the thought of how a toy was outrunning her reached Ryuko's mind, she gritted her teeth and pushed herself harder. There was no way in hell she was going to lose a footrace against a stupid toy!

While Ryuko was thinking up cruel and unusual punishments to inflict on Kon for what he did to her, said mod soul was doing some thinking of his own. He knew that even as fast and nimble as he was, eventually Ryuko was going to catch up with him and, judging by the look in her eyes, it wasn't going to be pretty. He needed a way to escape and hide from Ryuko but his favorite choice, the air vents, weren't possible. First he would need to find one and then open it. That required time and effort that he was sure Ryuko wasn't going to go give him.

"Come on legs don't fail me now!"

Spotting a door opening just down the hall, Kon quickly adjusted his plans and slid beneath the student's legs and into the stairwell. After a moment of quick thinking, Kon jumped onto the railing and ran upwards as fast as he could.

Kon didn't even manage to reach the next floor before Ryuko kicked open the door, knocking the poor and unfortunate student out in the process. With her blue eyes locking squarely on him, Kon screamed like a girl and ducked as Ryuko's Scissor Blade flew through the air and embedded itself in the wall in front of him. Visibly sweating at the near death experience, Kon was just about to continue fleeing for his life when he noticed something floating to the floor. Looking closely at it, he realized it was part of his brown mane.

"Somebody help!" Kon yelled as he jumped into the air, avoiding Ryuko's impromptu tackle and sprinted up the railing. It was only a matter of time before his luck ran out and Kon hoped it didn't fail him until he escaped Ryuko's relentless pursuit.

" This girl isn't just crazy." Spotting a door propped open due to two students carrying something heavy, Kon jumped onto one student's head before flipping through the air and into the hall. Turning to the right, Kon sprinted down the mostly empty hallway with tears of pure fear streaming from his eyes, "She's not just crazy, she's completely insane. She's even crazier than that blonde girl from yesterday!"

The sight of a button on a wall gave Kon an idea. Adjusting his momentum, the mod soul jumped into the air and firmly slammed his paw down on the button. Immediately afterwards a large steel door, built into Honnouji Academy in case of a siege or battle, slammed downwards out of the ceiling and cut off Ryuko just as she was able to pass underneath.

"Ha... ha..." Kon panted from exhaustion as he finally managed to stop Ryuko. Wiping his brow, he chuckled and turned to find a place to hide, "That's what you get from messing with the best, sister! Now all I need to do is find a nice cozy place to - "

Kon was cut off when a foot slammed down on the back of Kon's head and planted him firmly and violently against the floor.

"Not here five minutes and already doing perverted things," Ichigo grumbled in annoyance at the mod soul wiggling under his foot. Reaching down and firmly grasping Kon by the back of his head, Ichigo held the mod soul up in front of his face and growled angrily, "Just what made you think you could say something like that to Ryuko and get away with it?"

Kon stopped his struggling as soon as he realized it was Ichigo. Ichigo may abuse and torment him, but he wasn't about to kill him like Ryuko, "I couldn't help it. That Ryuko girl is just so hot. She's just like Orihime but with a more assertive personality!"

That was the stupidest reason for what Kon did but Ichigo admitted that was in line with the mod soul's idiotic line of thinking. He knew it was only a matter of time before Kon's perverted behaviors caught up with him and he peeped on someone who wasn't going to just hit him once or twice. Shaking his head at the stupidity of Kon's behavior, Ichigo was about to chastise the mod soul when Ryuko's red Scissor Blade pierced through the three inches of steel composing the security door. It stayed still for only a second before it quickly and rapidly crossed several times back and forth, cutting the door to pieces.

"You're fucking dead."

Ryuko stepped through the hole she made in the steel door with a visibly demonic aura surrounding her body. With her Scissor Blade clutched firmly and tightly in her hand, she grinned savagely when she spotted Kon trapped in Ichigo's grip, "You caught him, Ichigo? Good. This will be over in just a second..."

Kon's button eyes seemed to widen in terror upon seeing Ryuko, "Don't let her kill me, Ichigo!"

"It's fine Ryuko," Ichigo didn't spare a second glance at the violently shaking plushie, "Kon's mostly harmless. He's just a stupid little pervert."

Ryuko harshly glared at the mod soul and for just a single moment it looked like she wasn't going to listen to Ichigo. Eventually she sighed angrily and propped her Scissor Blade on her shoulder, "Fine, but I have a question for you. You called this thing Kon. What the hell is a Kon?"

"His name is Kon," Ichigo answered nonchalantly as he gave Kon another shake, eliciting a squeak from him, "And he's not supposed to be here. Why aren't you in Karakura Town? How did you get here?"

"Your dad sent me here!" Kon squeezed himself out of Ichigo's grip and tapped his cheek a few times before jumping and landing on the ground. Dusting himself off and making sure everything was where it should be, he turned around and pointed one stubby arm at Ichigo, "He says you are getting into trouble and that you need someone to babysit you and I couldn't agree more. I will be watching and listening to everything you do! I'll always be in the shadows where you least expect to find me. Every single mom - "

Whatever Kon was about to threaten Ichigo with was cut off as Ryuko slammed her sneaker down on the mod soul's face several times before kicking the plushie into the wall. As Kon pathetically tumbled down to the floor, Ryuko smirked victoriously, "That was for trying to sneak glances at my panties you perverted toy!"

"But..." Kon mumbled miserably. He'd never been discovered before seeing anything. Even Rukia only caught him afterwards or in the middle of the act. This was a new experience for the perverted mod soul.

While Ryuko may have been angry with Kon for her behavior, her Kamui was staring at the mod soul with a discerning eye. There was something not quite right about Kon, but Senketsu couldn't put his eye on it. A living, breathing stuffed toy was cause for concern, but he was a living mass of Life Fibers so Senketsu couldn't say anything without sounding hypocritical. As he stared at Kon's smoking form on the ground, Senketsu finally realized what it was he was sensing, "Ryuko, that thing is made up of Life Fibers."

"It is?" Ryuko blinked as a manic grin appeared on her face. Holding out her Scissor Blade once more, she approached Kon with the edge gleaming with a malevolent shine, "That means I need to finish this thing off."

"You can't kill Kon," Ichigo hooked his finger through the hole in Ryuko's Scissor Blade. Sparing the mod soul a pathetic look, he said, "As much as I hate to say it, I need him alive for the time being. If he spies on you again, you can do whatever you want to him."

Ichigo was puzzled by what Senketsu had just said. Kon had Life Fibers in his body? That made no sense but at the same time it helped to answer a few questions that had been bugging him since he found the mod soul. Chief of which was how Kon managed to stay mostly intact despite the 'stress' his plushie form used to take on a daily basis. Pushing Ryuko's Scissor Blade to the side, he stepped forward and roughly picked Kon off the floor. Shaking the mod soul to snap him back into consciousness, Ichigo asked, "You're going to answer some questions or I'm going to let Ryuko deal with you. You got that?"

"Yes!" Kon blubbered before asking, "But can I ask you something first Ichigo? Call me crazy but did that girl's uniform just speak?"

" Wait," Senketsu's eye widened in surprise, "You can hear me?"

"Well duh!" Kon scoffed and rubbed his stuffed nose, "You're speaking as clearly as anyone else. Hey Ichigo, your uniform has those really freaky and evil looking eyes as well. Can it talk or did you finally develop a sense of fashion?"

" I can talk," Mugetsu answered with an annoyed tinge to her voice, "But I cannot stand listening to the ravings of a pervert like you."

"Wait a second..." Kon escaped from Ichigo's grasp and moved closer to one of Mugetsu's eyes, "I've seen you before."

For obvious reasons Mugetsu found such a notion appalling, "I think I would remember an annoying little thing like you."

"That's because you weren't... well... you yet, I guess," Kon hopped off Ichigo's shoulder and began pacing back and forth across the floor, his stuffed arms folded across his body in a caricature of thinking. He remembered meeting whatever it was Mugetsu was clearly as if it were only yesterday. That was probably because it was the same visit to Kisuke's shop that had him stumble across Yoruichi in the middle of getting changed. Good times. Kon shook his head in order to focus his mind. He needed to answer the question before Ichigo or his more insane friend with the partially dyed hair grew annoyed.

"It was at Kisuke's shop, where I usually hang out since you're no fun anymore Ichigo. I was going about my business of sleeping and doing nothing when I happened to stumble across Kisuke doing something really strange in his basement," Kon explained as best he could, "He had these large balls of glowing red yarn hooked up to weird and complicated machines. I didn't know what to make of it, but I happened to notice Ichigo's uniform being sewn together or something very slowly. I hid behind a rock watching Kisuke do his thing and when it finished, lightning appeared in the basement and Kisuke kept shouting 'it lives!' over and over again. It was really freaky."

" So you knew my creator," Mugetsu took Kon's words with a large grain of salt but she had to admit that the annoying plushie knew far more about her than could be made up. He knew Kisuke Urahara's name and Ichigo seemed to trust the little thing so she was willing to give Kon the benefit of the doubt just this one time, "But you never answered the question. Why does your ugly body contain a large amount of Life Fibers?"

"Life Fibers?" Kon scratched his head and huffed, "I don't know what you're talking about. Perhaps my label will shed some light on your question."

Quickly grabbing Kon off the ground, Ryuko roughly looked around before finding the well-hidden tag, " Unofficial version of Ponkichi from Carnivore Kingdom. Machine Wash Only. Revocs Corporation. It doesn't say anything about Life Fibers or why you can talk."

"That, my beautiful friend, is a secret," Kon was introduced to a world of pain as Ryuko punched him in the face before dropping him to the floor and violently stepped on him. As she walked away, Kon faintly muttered, "What did I say?"

Not bothering to spare Kon another moment of her time, Ryuko turned to Ichigo and asked, "How can Kon talk?"

Ichigo rubbed the bridge of his nose to stave off a headache, "It's a long story."

Ryuko didn't look like she was buying Ichigo's excuse if the judgmental look she was giving him meant anything. Truth be told, Ichigo wouldn't believe what he himself was saying. Before she could get up into his face and demand answers, Ryuko paused when an extremely bright line filtered in through the windows lining the hallway.

"Hey," Kon shook his head and raised a paw in front of his eyes, "Who turned up the sun?"

"That's Satsuki Kiryuin," Ryuko explained, actually wincing slightly at the intensity of the light, before narrowing her blue eyes, "Although something seems off..."

There was something bothering her about the intense light. Satsuki Kiryuin's weird backdrop was always either bright yellow or white, but this particular light was a literal rainbow of colors. Unless Satsuki decided to expand her influence and subjugate the entire spectrum of visible light, she couldn't be doing this. Folding her arms across her chest, eyes squarely focused on the roof of Honnouji Academy, Ryuko felt something off, "That's not Satsuki Kiryuin."

"I know," Ichigo agreed as he was also focused at the rainbow light. There was something bothering him about the light but for the life of him he couldn't figure out what was causing his curiosity. It was better for him to find out now rather than waiting for whomever or whatever it was to surprise him later on. With his mind decided, Ichigo turned his eyes away from the roof and began heading up there himself.

"Ichigo?" Ryuko turned from the window and watched Ichigo walking away, "Where are you going?"

"To find out more about that weird light," Ichigo pointed his thumb at the window towards the rainbow light, which was already starting to fade away, "Despite what I said earlier, I'm now Satsuki's Vice President or something. That means I can go find out what's going on and she can't do anything about it."

"What about Kon?"

Ichigo paused momentarily before answering, "Do with him what you want. Just be sure to not kill him."

As he walked away, Ichigo couldn't hide the grin of satisfaction as he heard Kon's screams for help suddenly be cut off as Ryuko got her revenge on the mod soul. Perhaps that would be enough to help Kon give up being a pervert, but Ichigo wasn't betting on it.

---

...

---

Ragyo Kiryuin rode the elevator leading down from the landing pad to the rest of Honnouji Academy in complete silence. What reason was there for her to speak other than to ask Satsuki if the preparations for tonight were complete? It wasn't like she didn't already know the answer. If there was a single good thing about her only public daughter it was that she was punctual and efficient to a degree that could only be compared to her own.

Another source of the silence and the not-so-subtle clenching of Satsuki's hands on Bakuzan's hilt was the presence of Nui Harime. The Grand Couturier was smiling happily right next to Ragyo and was virtually untouchable as long as she did not leave the confines of the academy. Ragyo was genuinely amused when Satsuki saw Nui standing behind her as she stepped out of the helicopter. She had forgotten what it was to see a shocked look on her daughter's face.

"Wow, it's really quiet in here," Nui pointed out the obvious as she looked over the single member of Satsuki's Elite Four that had been there to greet her mother. Quickly glancing over Inumuta's Probe Regalia, Nui snorted derisively, "Whoever is making your Goku Uniforms is a real amateur. I could do better stitching five years ago with one eye closed!"

"Now my dear Nui," Ragyo's regal voice cut the Grand Couturier off with the sheer amount of power and respect being each word. Nui might have some leeway when it came to her fun, but she would never do or say anything that would compromise or make the Director look bad, "It isn't polite to compare the work of others to someone such as yourself. We can't all be gifted."

"True," Nui conceded happily and smiled when the elevator dinged to let them know they could leave. That smile quickly dropped to a basic grin when she saw who was standing outside waiting for them.

She was not the only one. Ragyo also was stunned to see Isshin Kurosaki waiting for them but that feeling quickly turned to elation. She had to give the man credit where it was due. He did the one thing she did not expect him to do. Strutting forward, much to Satsuki and Nui's surprise, she stopped right in front of Isshin and quickly slapped him across the face.

If everyone was shocked by the display, they were even more shocked when there was a sound like a cannon going off before every single pane of glass within one hundred feet abruptly shattered into millions of pieces. Out of all the onlookers, only Nui knew that Lady Ragyo had hit Isshin with enough power to kill a normal human but Isshin was simply standing there like nothing happened.

"Ouch."

Isshin rubbed his sore cheek, where the imprint of a hand was still visible, "I see you still haven't forgiven me for whatever you think I did. I'm surprised you only slapped me. The last time we met you tried to kill me."

"Kill you?" Ragyo had a manic smile on her face as she ran a finger down Isshin's chest. Said grin didn't vanish when Isshin's hand gripped her wrist and stopped her.

"I see you're wearing that dress I gave you all those years ago," Isshin frowned when he sensed what she did to it. It was a perversion of all that dress meant, "Although I thought the purple suited you better since it doesn't show dirt."

"My, my," Ragyo's gaze softened as the madness within her eyes momentarily abated. Satsuki, having seen something like this happen before, tensed her body and prepared for the inevitable bloodshed that would soon result. Her reaction would be for nothing as Ragyo just grinned and took a single step away from Isshin, "You never did have a sense for fashion. You really shouldn't try starting now."

"Oh? And what's this?"

Ragyo's gaze shifted away from Isshin to Ururu, who was doing her best to shyly hide behind Isshin's larger frame for protection. Ignoring the pointed look she was getting from him, Ragyo placed a hand on Isshin's shoulder and peered around, maddened red and silver eyes gazing into a pair of familiar blue ones.

"How generous of you to return something that I thought I lost so very long ago," Ragyo whispered into Isshin's unflinching ear. With a hint of madness and anger tinging her voice, Ragyo's eyes widened manically as she said, "I thought my dear little Amu was lost to me forever..."

---

...

---

Kamui Tales # 12 - The Substitute Gym Teacher

"Listen up slackers!" Ira Gamagori shouted at the collected students, who looked back at him with a mixture of boredom and disdain. Ignoring their looks for the moment while making sure to mentally note who was going to be problem, he coughed and continued, "Due to medical issues, your normal physical education teacher is taking a leave of absence. Therefore you shall have a substitute for the foreseeable future!"

"Great," Ryuko muttered quietly to Ichigo, "We get to have a wimpy sub that can't do anything and will expect us to run laps or something."

"It'll be fun Ryuko!" Mako pointed out happily from Ryuko's other side. Substitute teachers were among Mako's favorite people for a variety of reasons, least of which was that she could talk and befriend them without getting into too much trouble with Lady Satsuki. The last teacher she talked to, which coincidentally was the old gym teacher, was gone. Mako didn't find that odd one bit.

"I introduce to you..." Gamagori stepped to the side and swept his arm back, "... Kenpachi Zaraki!"

What came out of Ichigo's mouth immediately after the announcement could be heard clear across the entire gymnasium, "Oh fuck no..."

"Why, hello there Ichigo..." A gravelly voice said from right behind him, "That's some fancy looking uniform you're wearing."

"Oh no," Ichigo leapt back in fear and saw to his horror that Kenpachi was indeed his substitute teacher. The shinigami captain was wearing the standard coaches uniform complete with whistle and clipboard, on which Ichigo thought he saw the words 'tortures' scratched out. Kenpachi, upon seeing Ichigo move away, grinned viciously and stepped forth.

"It's been quite a while," Kenpachi looked around and only saw a few students who weren't weaklings in the group, "The last time we fought, you left me on the verge of death. Speaking of which, when do you want that rematch? I'm up for it any time you're ready."

"That's right!" A chirpy voice called out as Yachiru Kusajishi appeared on Kenpachi's shoulder, "Kenny came all the way to this place so that he could get his rematch Ichigo! So get on the field and let's get this party started!"

"Forget it!" Ichigo crossed his arms in front of his body and continued to backpedal away from Kenpachi. He could already see the looks he was getting, mostly from Gamagori and Ryuko, and he could tell they thought he was being a coward, but Ichigo did not care in the slightest. They had no idea the monster that Kenpachi was, "There's no way in hell that I'm ever going to fight you again, Kenpachi!"

"That's a damn shame," Kenpachi looked downtrodden before he grinned, "You know, I met an opponent on my way here this morning. She and Yachiru hit it off just fine, but then she tried to kill me with her purple sword. She failed, of course, but I almost managed to kill her in the end. I never thought I would fight someone that can regenerate. It really takes the fun out of a fight when you can't get hurt. That's why I'm glad you're here Ichigo!"

Kenpachi rushed Ichigo while pulling his zanpakuto out of nowhere and quickly slashed downwards through the air. Ryuko was stunned at Kenpachi's speed, mostly because it was almost as fast as her speed while Senketsu was transformed and for a moment she thought Ichigo was dead. So it was to her relief when she saw Ichigo fly out of the smoke cloud that had been made from Kenpachi's attack, clad in Mugetsu, and hovered in the air overhead.

"You're insane Kenpachi!"

"So you can fly now?" Kenpachi stepped out of the smoke and dispersed it with one wave of his sword, "That's interesting. Get down Yachiru. I must rampage."

Without waiting around, Ichigo twisted his body in midair and rocketed towards Honnou City. If he had any luck, he could lose Kenpachi in the twisting and winding streets of the Slums.

Kenpachi crouched to go chase after Ichigo but paused when he realized he still had a class. Glancing at Gamagori, who for the first time in recent memory was staring at someone taller than him, and then at his students, he said the one thing that came to his mind, "Everyone do laps or something until I get back."

Family Affair

So yeah... this chapter is really late but I think every single one of you will accept my delays based upon how good it is. I spent my time off plotting, thinking and free writing and I do believe this is one of my best chapters yet. I am especially proud of the omake at the end. It actually made me laugh while I wrote it. So enjoy the chapter and make sure you review it at the end so I know if you love it/hate it/or just like reading Kill la Kill fanfiction.

Also note that I'm posting the first updated chapter of my previous story, Rise of the True Death God, as A Shinigami's Journey . After working and writing TMDiF, I noticed that my writing style has improved and I wanted to go back and compare it to my earlier stories, of which this was my favorite. After reading through all 8 chapters, I noticed how... well... badly my writing was compared to my current level so here is the rewritten first chapter. It may look strangely familiar to the original one, but it's much better and i promise that Ichigo's journey will NOT be the same as the original story.

But you didn't come here to read about a second story, did you? You can go ahead and read it after you enjoy what you all came for!

---

...

---

Chapter 25 - Family Affair

Twenty Years Ago

Isshin didn't like the feeling he was getting from this place. As he watched the incandescent lights lining the passageway flicker and dim in time with their steps, he couldn't help but think about how this day started off so well.

He had been quite surprised when Rei Hououmaru appeared at his small home in Karakura Town last night. The diligent secretary of his friend seemed to have run the entire way with her light purple hair disheveled and frayed. Quickly bringing her inside while Masaki fetched a cup of tea, Isshin gently sat Rei down on the couch and asked her what happened. Rei didn't say anything until Masaki came back but when she was calmed down, she began sobbing as she told Isshin about Ragyo. Something had happened to her boss and she didn't know who else to turn to.

As Rei finished her tale and collapsed against the couch, Isshin had turned to Masaki and told her that he was going to check up on Ragyo. Masaki had been initially reluctant to let him go but Isshin would not hear any of it. Ragyo was his friend and if she was in any kind of trouble he needed to be there for her. After promising Masaki that everything would be all right, he quickly headed out the door and into his car.

The drive to the Kiryuin mansion took a few hours, so when Isshin finally arrived outside the gates he was expecting to either find his friend in a lot of trouble or injured. His skills as a doctor, all of which came from his shinigami training, would be enough to treat most minor injuries but if Ragyo had any serious injuries he would need to take her to the hospital. As Isshin raced up the front steps and used his key, which Ragyo had given to him, to unlock the front door he was quite surprised to find a perfectly fine Ragyo waiting for him.

After quickly making sure she was all right, much to Ragyo's bemusement, Isshin had sighed in relief when he found nothing wrong with her. That relief quickly vanished when Ragyo motioned for Isshin to follow her. There was something in his friend's voice that raised Isshin's suspicion about something being wrong with Ragyo. It was extremely subtle but there was a slightly hollowness to her voice that didn't sound as if it belonged. Turning around to the front door with his car idling right outside, Isshin made up his mind and followed Ragyo deeper into the mansion. If something was wrong with her, he needed to be around to help her.

"Gah!" Isshin shouted as he walked straight into a spider web. As he pulled on the offending substance clinging to his face, he looked at Ragyo, who hadn't stopped or even turned around, and asked, "So you never told me what this thing is you wanted to show me."

"Be patient Isshin," Ragyo answered mysteriously as she walked away from a still floundering Isshin. After he finished cleaning the spider web off his face, he hurried to catch up to her retreating form as she said, "Before you ask, I have yet to see what is beyond the passage with my own eyes."

Isshin found that incredibly suspicious, which only helped his nerves to be put even more on edge. Years of being the head of the Shiba Clan had introduced him to the underworld of politics, brownnosing and other forms of crude behavior. He could tell something was wrong with Ragyo the moment he rushed into her mansion but the issue was that he didn't know what the problem was exactly, "If you haven't seen it, how do you even know if anything is down here?"

"All will be answered," Ragyo answered cryptically and Isshin could sense a sly smile on her face. As the passage continued winding forward, Isshin eventually found himself standing in front of a large pair of metal doors, "We are here."

Isshin looked upward at the imposing doors and muttered, "How ominous."

He didn't like the look of the metal doors looming dozens of feet over his head. He might not be an engineer, in fact he might suck at most sciences in general, but even someone like him could tell that the amount of rust and wear on the doors indicated that they had been down here for a very long time. Stepping forward and pressing a hand against the doors, Isshin frowned when he noticed that the metal was actually buckling outwards and in several places seemed almost on the verge of tearing in two. Isshin had seen damage like this in the past. Something inside the room beyond the doors had tried repeated to escape and he wasn't sure he wanted to see what could cause that kind of damage.

Isshin was distracted when his friend stepped to the side and began inputting a double digit password into a modern keypad. As her hand glided over the keypad in a blur of motion, he gulped and asked, "Do you know anything about what's behind this door and will I even like what I see?"

" What lay beyond these doors is both the end and the beginning," she answered oddly as she finished typing in the password. While the sounds of several massive and heavy locks opening reverberated around him, Isshin turned when he saw Ragyo standing next to him.

" My mother told me when I was but a child and her mother told her many years before that. Every Kiryuin mother had regaled their firstborn daughters with the ancient tale of our family," Ragyo's blue eyes watched as the doors began to creak as the hydraulics hidden in the walls began forcibly opening the rusted structure. As a sliver of orange and red light began permeating the passageway, causing a sickly feeling to well up in Isshin's stomach, she continued with her tale, "She would always tell me that one day after she was gone I would hear a voice whispering to me from deep underneath the ancient Kiryuin home compelling me to journey down into the catacombs. When I was ten years old my mother disappeared, but before she did she said she hoped I would be the one to bring the secret buried underground out into the light of the world."

As the metal doors swung open, allowing Isshin to fully grasp what it was that lay inside, anything he had to say was extinguished by the sight before him. Floating in the air in the center of the room while anchored to the surrounded walls and floor by several spiked protrusions was a glowing yellow and orange sphere. It was seemingly composed of a thread-like material seemed to be gently hovering up and down. Isshin stood in transfixion before the object, his eyes staring in amazement and wonder as its surface seemed to pulsate and bubble before reverting back to normal moments later.

Stepping into the chamber, momentarily forgetting that he was not alone, Isshin's gaze was broken when he felt the ground beneath his feet crumple and flex. Looking down at the floor, he quickly stepped back out of the room when he saw it was covered in the same type of material as the object. While the waves of the thread-like stuff lining the ground didn't have the same glow as the object itself, it still didn't sit right with him.

" Uh, Ragyo?" Isshin felt something in the chamber shift as his voice echoed around him, "What is that thing?"

When he failed to get an answer from his friend, Isshin turned and noticed Ragyo slowly walking past him towards the object with an enraptured gaze. Deciding to not allow his friend to get anywhere near that thing Isshin, against his better judgment, decided to walk with her. While Ragyo's blue eyes stared upon the glowing object with a look akin to that of devotion and reverence, Isshin was feeling something quite different. As he grew closer to the object, Isshin began to feel a horrible sensation of realization set upon his chest like a vice. It was almost as if his mind was purposely failing to make that one final connection that would allow him to fully understand what was going on in order to save his sanity at any cost.

" In my mother's stories, she would talk about this magnificent thing..." Ragyo, now nearly directly underneath the object, raised her hand upwards. Much to Isshin's horror, several glowing tendrils emerged from the object and gently floated down to meet her. With the same passive smile on her face, Ragyo stared at the tendrils and continued, "... she called this creature the Original Life Fiber and told me it was the catalyst for humanity's evolution. It's so beautiful..."

And that was Isshin's cue to act. Ragyo may hate him for this in the morning, but there was no chance in hell that he was going to let whatever the Original Life Fiber was touch his friend. As the tendrils of Life Fibers closed in towards Ragyo's hand, Isshin reached forward and roughly pulled her away. While Ragyo, still transfixed by the Original Life Fiber, struggled to pull herself out of Isshin's clutches, he was already making his way to the exit. As a reverberating and deep growl echoed throughout the chamber, Isshin quickened his pace.

Upon hearing the growl Ragyo stopped struggling as Isshin pulled her away from the Original Life Fiber. Shaking her head and appearing to have just awoken from a terrible dream, Ragyo looked around in confusion as to where she was before gasping when she saw dozens of Life Fibers emerging out of the Original Life Fiber and flying towards them, "Where are we Isshin? What is that thing?"

" I was hoping you could tell me!" Isshin shouted over the roar of the Original Life Fiber as he continued to dodge its attempts to ensnare him. He didn't feel like being the main course for an eldritch abomination. He's read enough books by that author to realize nothing good could come out of touching that thing, "You were looking at it like it was your god or something!"

" I don't remember," Ragyo grabbed the side of her head as she ran alongside him, "The last thing I remember was a soothing voice and then nothing until you pulled me away from that thing."

Accepting Ragyo's reason for the time being, Isshin continued to dodge tendrils of Life Fibers as he reached the metal doors and the passage beyond. Just as he was about to pass through them to freedom, he found the air knocked out of him when several Life Fibers wrapped around Ragyo's ankle. Coughing as he gathered his breath, Isshin quickly recovered when he heard Ragyo screaming his name. Getting back onto his feet, he ran after Ragyo, who was being pulled back towards the Original Life Fiber, and managed to grab her just as her feet left the ground.

" Isshin!" Ragyo's terror filled eyes stared at the Original Life Fiber as tendrils of Life Fibers began tightly wrapping themselves around her body as she was slowly drawn into it.

" I'm not going to let it take you!" Isshin's augmented strength, courtesy of the gigai he was wearing, may have allowed him to perform feats of strength no normal human could ever hope to accomplish but even that wasn't enough to stop the Original Life Fiber. As soon as her feet touched its surface the Original Life Fiber seemed to shift and morph into a liquid, allowing Ragyo to continue being pulled inside.

As Ragyo's body vanished within the Original Life Fiber, the glowing orange and red threads wrapping around what was left of her throughout the process, Isshin reached down and grabbed a chunk of the Life Fibers on the floor. With a resounding pull that nearly tore his arms off he managed to halt Ragyo's absorption into the Original Life Fiber. While a reverberating roar shook the chamber, Isshin ignored it as he took one step and then another away from the creature devouring his friend. He hadn't forgotten what happened to Masaki after he confronted that strange black hollow all those years ago and he was not about to let another person he cared about suffer under his watch.

" Don't worry, Ragyo! I got you!" Isshin pulled harder and for a moment Ragyo's body began to emerge out of the Original Life Fiber while the glowing threads did their best to draw her back in. Even if it cost him his life Isshin was not about to let something swallow his friend.

The stalemate was broken when the Original Life Fiber groaned and shot out hundreds of smaller Life Fiber strands at Isshin. Even as the glowing threads wrapped around his limbs and were pulled taut, Isshin refused to let go of Ragyo. Glaring intently at his straining hand, which was losing its grip on the floor, Isshin didn't have time to shout before he lost footing and was drawn into the Original Life Fiber alongside Ragyo.

What happened after he was absorbed by the Original Life Fiber seemed to be a hazy dream to Isshin. He could vaguely remember an all-encompassing blackness surrounding him before hundreds, if not thousands, of Life Fibers pierced straight through his body. He also swore that Engetsu, his zanpakuto spirit, was fighting off a creature that looked to be made up of Life Fibers, which was odd because ever since he put on his gigai he had been unable to speak with his zanpakuto's spirit. Isshin lost consciousness right before Engetsu blasted a wave of fire at the creature, causing it to vanish into the darkness accompanied by a pained roar, but before everything vanished he swore he saw a burst of multicolored light shine up the surroundings around him.

Isshin opened his eyes and immediately sat up.

"What the heck was that?"

Breathing heavily and looking around the chamber, Isshin was strangely relieved when nothing seemed to be out of the ordinary. Glancing suspiciously up at the Original Life Fiber, he noticed that the creature was floating calmly in the middle of the chamber without a hint of any other strangeness. Sighing in relief, he rubbed his temple and muttered, "What a strange dream. That's the last time I let Masaki try to make jambalaya. I need to remember to warn Ragyo..."

Remembering who it was that brought him down here, Isshin looked around and saw his friend lying unconscious on the other side of the room. Standing on his feet and ignoring the strange feeling from his body, Isshin ran across the chamber and turned her over. Immediately after doing so he froze when he saw that her once beautiful black hair had been transformed in shining silver with a glowing rainbow undertone that shone with the intensity of the sun. With his mouth opening and closing as he tried to say something, Isshin decided to say nothing as he picked Ragyo up and carried her out of the chamber.

The further they got away from the Original Life Fiber the better.

End Flashback

"How generous of you to return something that I thought lost to me so very long ago," Ragyo whispered into Isshin's unflinching ear. As a hint of madness spread across her beautiful face, she wrapped her arms around his shoulders and stared into his eyes, "And here I thought my dear little Amu would be lost to me forever..."

Ragyo felt an unfamiliar sensation well up within her body and it took her a moment to realize that it was pride. Sixteen years of fruitless searching for her precious and missing Amu had turned up nothing. She had always suspected Isshin of having a hand in her daughter's disappearance but the man was impossible to pin down. As long as he remained within the borders of Karakura Town he was all but untouchable to her and Revocs, but here he was standing in front of her with Amu. Ragyo wanted nothing more than to introduce Amu into the world of Life Fibers and COVERS that was her birthright. The only problem was, once again, Isshin.

The irony of the situation was not lost to her, but the only sign of the annoyance she felt at having her goal so close and yet so far was the stretching of the manic smile on her face and a widening of her maroon eyes.

"Tell me something," Ragyo stared deep into Isshin's brown eyes and sighed she saw that he was hiding something. While it would have pleased her greatly to tear away the curtains and expose Isshin's little illusion to the world at large, it would be a mistake to do it in such a lonely place. The exposing of her love's illusion needed to be spectacular. Noticing that Isshin's face was a cold expressionless mask, void of any of his familiar warmth, Ragyo sighed once more and raised a delicate hand to her cheek. Tilting her head sideways and letting out a shallow breath, she asked, "Did you think you could have hidden something like this from me?"

"I did it for sixteen years," Isshin answered back and subtly moved between Ragyo and Ururu even further, "The fact that it took you this long to figure things out really says more about you, doesn't it?"

Satsuki expected her mother to punish Ichigo's father for the insult to her intelligence, but after seeing him withstand her slap with nary more than a slight reddening of his cheek she didn't know what to think. As she and Inumuta stood at a safe distance away from Isshin and Ragyo, she could not help but compare the two people to the ancient Greek titans. She had a strange inkling that if they were to fight, it would decimate Honnouji Academy. Even Junketsu was strangely quiet. Ever since Isshin Kurosaki appeared in front of them, the Kamui has stopped all attempts at overwhelming her mind.

Ragyo easily took Isshin's slight insult in stride. She would allow Isshin to have his little jokes while she focused on more important matters. Staring at what little she could see of Ururu behind Isshin's body, Ragyo knew she would feel great pleasure in introducing her to the world of clothing in which she so rightfully belonged. She couldn't begin to imagine how damaged Amu was after spending her existence under the care of Isshin but Ragyo was confident that it wouldn't take more than a single visit for Ururu to come around to her mother. If it took a bit of memory refitting to accomplish it, then that was what needed to be done.

The only thing standing in the path of the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet was Isshin and as she trailed a delicate and manicured finger down his chest, Ragyo knew getting rid of him was far easier said than done. As goofy and loveable as he made himself out to be, and Ragyo loved him for that, Isshin Shiba was the only person that could truly stop her.

"Do you want to know what I admire most about you?" Ragyo's eyes softened as she thought back upon the fond and distant memories of twenty years ago. That day when the world was truly opened to her eyes still vibrated deep within her core and she only wished that Isshin had continued to stand by her side instead of leaving her for that woman. Leaning forward until her chin was just brushing up against the fabric on Isshin's shoulder, she took a breath and whispered into his ear, "That deep down you see things my way. Despite our differences you have done nothing to stop my plans. That is why I know you truly love me."

A clash between Isshin and herself would not be in her best interest. Ragyo was absolutely certain that all of Honnouji Academy as well as most of the surrounding Honnou City would be demolished in the ensuing battle between them. It continued to irk her that since the power bestowed onto Isshin has always been greater than her own and yet he still failed to see the world as it truly was. It was a small consolation that Isshin could not end it all by destroying the Original Life Fiber with his own hands. A twinge of regret and sadness briefly passed through Ragyo's heart before it was quickly suppressed beneath her anger. Her lovely daughter had already shown that she didn't need to fight Isshin to get what she wanted. There was, after all, more than one way to win a war.

"Everybody has a reason for what they do. Perhaps I felt settling down with Masaki and raising a family was more important than standing up to you at the moment," Isshin shrugged off Ragyo's advances and looked around. While Nui was standing back with a knowing and adoring smile on her face, he could easily see the intelligence swimming just beneath the façade of insanity watching his every move for any potential threats. He'd figured out long ago that Nui's happy demeanor was just a cover she used to hide the intelligence she inherited from Ragyo. Isshin didn't know whether Nui truly thought that was how people were supposed to act or Ragyo simply raised her that way, but he would need to make sure she didn't snap.

Satsuki, on the other hand, well she reminded Isshin a lot of Ragyo in her younger days. Now that he could get a good look at her, Satsuki looked nearly identical to a much younger Ragyo. If he wasn't absolutely sure she was Souichiro's daughter he would have placed his bets on Ragyo cloning herself. Glancing down at the Kamui she was wearing, Isshin locked gazes with its eyes and was pleased to see it attempting to pull away in fear.

"Besides, let's be honest," Isshin pouted childishly and folded his arms. There would always be time to deal with Junketsu later, preferably after he managed to take a long hot shower, "You were the one with the international conglomerate and I was just a small town doctor. If I had so much as sneezed in your general direction I would have faced a private army or something."

"I did offer you the chance to stand by my side," Ragyo easily saw through Isshin's childishness with practiced ease. She had known the man long enough to be able to pierce the veil of stupidity he portrayed as his true persona. The man was nearly, if not equally, as devious and cunning as her. While she played up the indifferent and pragmatic CEO of Revocs to the world at large, Isshin did the exact opposite by playing the bumbling idiot, "You would have been the perfect Grand Couturier."

"Hey now, you know I stink at anything involving fashion. You remember how it took me forever to pick out that dress you're wearing? Even after I spent hours looking at all the confusing dresses I needed help in the end. I would have made an absolutely terrible Grand Couturier," Isshin chuckled at what he saw as a joke on Ragyo's end while out of the corner of his eyes Nui momentarily had a look of shock on her face.

"Oh?" Nui looked back and forth between Ragyo and Isshin, "Is this true Director?"

"Yes," Ragyo sighed as she reminisced, "At one time I did offer Isshin here the position of Grand Couturier of Revocs but don't worry, my dear little Nui. You have done an absolutely superb job. I dare say your designs are currently worn all around the world by the pigs in humans clothing."

Nui smiled, "Thanks Lady Ragyo! I always make sure to do my best work, you know."

"I expect nothing less from you," Ragyo's attention quickly moved away from the adoration Nui was giving her back to Amu or, as Isshin called her, Ururu. Staring at the girl who was so shyly standing behind Isshin, Ragyo saw what she was looking for as soon as her maroon eyes locked gazes with Ururu once more. With the beginning of a psychotic smirk causing the corners of her lips to curl upwards in pleasure, Ragyo was ecstatic that fixing Amu wasn't going to be as hard as she initially thought. As much as she wanted to tell Amu everything about her birthright, there was one last thing she needed to deal with first.

"Satsuki," Ragyo's voice quickly obtained her firstborn daughter's attention. Staring over her shoulder with indifference in her eyes, Ragyo asked "Did you not tell me that you finally picked out a Vice President for your Student Council?"

"Yes," Satsuki stepped forward and bowed just enough to be seen as respecting her mother, "Yesterday afternoon I extended to Ichigo Kurosaki the position of Vice President. Upon receiving his acceptance I have already begun the formal proceedings. His public induction into the Student Council was to be at the ceremony tonight."

"I see," A cruel smirk slowly adorned the Kiryuin matriarch's face, "Nui if you would be so kind as to retrieve Isshin's wayward son..."

"Oui!"

Noticing Isshin's body tensing up, Ragyo decided to placate the man, "Do not fret Isshin. Nui is only going to retrieve Ichigo. I have expressively forbidden her from having any fun while we are here."

Laughing happily as she spun around on her feet, Nui was ecstatic upon being able to see Ichigo again. Spinning around one final time, she turned and jumped through the nearby wall while leaving a perfect imprint of her body in the process. As her playful laughing died down, Satsuki's grip on Bakuzan only tightened as she wondered what her mother was planning. The last update she had on Ichigo's whereabouts, it was with Ryuko Matoi in one of the lecture halls on the second floor, east wing. When Nui found Ichigo, and Satsuki had no doubt that she would, the Grand Couturier would have needed to pass through crowds of students. Even with the free catering out in the courtyard to keep the majority of the student population as far away from Nui as possible, Satsuki knew there would be a few students in the halls.

While Satsuki's thoughts were turning grim as her analytical mind began calculating the list of casualties sustained from Nui's enthusiastic search for Ichigo, a sudden upwelling of power from a few floors below her quickly drew her attention. Every few seconds the ground beneath her feet would shake and while Satsuki would never accidentally stumble from losing her balance, she nearly did so when she saw Ururu standing still despite the shaking, her eyes focused firmly on the floor.

"Ichigo..."

Ururu was worried about her friend more than even her dreary demeanor could express. She could intimately and accurately sense Nui's movements below and it was clear to Ururu that she was fighting Ichigo. After she found out what Nui tried to do to Ichigo yesterday while Ryuko and Mako were fighting, Ururu had wanted to track down Nui and make her pay. It was only her regard for the welfare of all her new friends and the insistence of Mr. Kurosaki that she enjoy having the old Mako back that Ururu stayed her hand.

"Don't worry about a thing, Ururu!" Isshin chuckled and patted Ururu on the top of her head, "Ragyo promised Nui wouldn't hurt Ichigo and I'm positive she's telling the truth. Besides, if Nui tried to pull any funny stuff while I'm around, I'm just going to have to lay down the law and show her the error of her ways."

Isshin smiled in relief when Ururu's perpetual dreary expression began to melt away. He always knew just what to say to make the frown on Ururu's face turn into a smile. It was really good that she was making friends left and right at Honnouji Academy. Ryuko and Mako will do wonders to permanently bring her out of her shell. She was already well on her way but Ururu still had a while to go.

It was at that moment, either through coincidence or cosmic karma, that Ichigo came crashing upwards through the floor. Fully clad in Mugetsu's released form, he slammed into the ceiling with a resounding thud and hard enough to buckle the metal sheets surrounding his landing into a crater. As he stood upside-down on the ceiling, Mugetsu doing more than her share of keeping him stuck to the surface, Ichigo stared at the hole his body had made and grimaced.

"I'm really starting to hate fighting Nui Harime."

Ichigo did not appreciate having to fight Nui Harime two days in a row. He had been on his way to investigate that strange rainbow light and hopefully run into his dad along the way, when she crashed through the nearby window. Instead of attacking him right away like he expected, Nui had instead twirled about and said that he should activate his Kamui. Seeing no reason to argue with her, especially since he knew he couldn't stand against her otherwise, Ichigo had activated Mugetsu's true form only to find himself constantly on the defensive once more. It was times like these that Ichigo wished he could just live a normal life without super-powered enemies crashing in through windows to attack him. It was starting to get old.

"Love and hate are two sides of the same coin, you know," Nui's peppy voice came from right behind him and Ichigo quickly turned around to parry the strike from her purple Scissor Blade. As the two hardened Life Fiber weapons clashed in a cascading series of rainbow sparks, Nui smiled and her single remaining eye widened with glee as, with one powerful swing, she knocked Ichigo to the ground below. Stepping backwards with her feet glued to the ceiling as if it was the floor, Nui lazily swung her arm and Ichigo immediately pushed Mugetsu to her limits to deflect the lightning fast attacks. Bursts of steam shooting out from the Kamui's vents on his back as Tournesol swung through the air.

"Wow!" Nui said cheerfully as Ichigo managed to parry and dodge almost all of her attacks even while she was upside-down. Sure there were a few stab wounds on his body but he was doing a much better job surviving than yesterday. In fact, Nui was having so much fun fighting him that she was actually considering simply forgetting about killing Ryuko Matoi to play with him. While she still really wanted to bleed her dry for what her dad did to her left eye, Nui thought it would nearly as bad for her to never find out who killed her dad. The constant search for her father's murderer would absolutely drive her insane!

" But what should I do?" Nui thought as she lazily avoided a strike from Ichigo's Tournesol before continuing to attack him, "Just allowing Ryuko to slip slowly into madness won't be enough. I need to make it super fantastic and awesome. Oh! I got it! What if I pin the blame on someone else and then announce that it was me all along? Then she'll have to bear the guilt of killing some poor innocent human!"

Clapping happily, Nui leaned her head to the said and said, "It's super awesome that you're not dead yet, you know. I thought for sure you would have a few more injuries by now, but I'm happy to be wrong in this case!"

"You really think I'll fall for that again?" Ichigo spat angrily as he twisted to deflect Nui's attempt to stab her Scissor Blade through his back. Adjusting his grip on Tournesol, Ichigo forced Nui's Scissor Blade upwards before driving his knee into her chin. As Nui slowly fell backwards through the air from the attack, Ichigo clenched his fist and smashed it into her stomach with enough force to damage the nearby walls and send the Grand Couturier flying backwards.

Ichigo may have thought he had finally done some damage to Nui but as she bounced and skidded across the floor, her head twisting and bending awkwardly to the point that it would have snapped for any normal human, she continued to think nothing but happy thoughts about Ichigo. She was really glad he finally woke up yesterday. It helped to make hanging out with her cousin much more fun and exciting. As her sole remaining sapphire eye stared into Ichigo's brown eyes, Nui was mildly upset that Ichigo did not hate her. Sure there was a lot of anger and frustration in his eyes but none of the hatred she expected.

Rolling her eye wildly around in its socket, Nui focused her attention past Ichigo and Isshin onto the Director. Lady Ragyo was staring at Ichigo with a look that promised many good things in the future. Smiling in pleasure at doing a good job of helping Ichigo show off his powers to Lady Ragyo, Nui decided she should stop playing around.

She had promised the Director she would not do anything to hurt Ichigo and for once Nui was keen on keeping such a boring promise.

"I really want to keep playing around with you Ichigo but I'm afraid I'm here on business," Nui abruptly stopped bouncing along the ground upon speaking and brought her Scissor Blade around to block Ichigo's attempt to behead her. Gasping in mock surprise at Tournesol as it shook from Ichigo trying to overpower her Scissor Blade, Nui leaned forward until her face was barely an inch from his and happily whispered, "Lady Ragyo has been waiting a really long time to meet you and it would be quite rude to put it off any longer, you know."

Spinning around with her Scissor Blade trailing a purple arc through the air, Nui forced Ichigo backwards and away from her. As his heels skidded along the ground to a stop, Ichigo took a moment to spit out a glob of blood before answering, "Do you really think I care about whatever you say?"

"You should!" Nui beamed as she rocked on her heels and stuck out her tongue childishly, "She is standing right behind you after all!"

Ichigo hadn't noticed during his fight against Nui due to being a little preoccupied with not getting the crap beat out of him but there was a bright multicolored light permeating the hallway that was now impossible to miss. Cursing himself for being so oblivious, he turned around while mindful of the fact that Nui Harime would most likely stab him in the back given half a chance, and found himself standing several feet from Ragyo Kiryuin.

"It's been a long time since I last gazed upon you, Ichigo. You were merely an infant when Isshin last permitted me to hold you," Ragyo's smile grew larger as she watched Ichigo leap away before pointing his Life Fiber weapon at her. As her maroon eyes focused on the hardened Life Fibers composing Tournesol, she couldn't help but admire the quality and craftsmanship of the Life Fibers. It was of comparable density and sharpness to Bakuzan, which she spun out of the Original Life Fiber itself for Satsuki in the hopes that the Life

Fibers in the weapon would sway her to Ragyo's side, but when Ragyo sensed several Banshi threaded within Tournesol, she had to suppress a manic grin. Whoever created Ichigo's weapon was a genius and while it bothered her that she hadn't thought of doing such a thing herself, Ragyo planned on correcting that mistake the first chance she got. There were so many things she could do with a weapon created from the base of a Kamui.

Ichigo didn't know who this woman was but when he saw a slight tensing of his dad's neck as she spoke, he knew she wasn't to be trusted at face value. After making a mental note to ask his dad about what this woman was talking about when he had the time and patience to deal with it, he reluctantly lowered Tournesol to his side as he asked, "So you're Ragyo Kiryuin. I see where Satsuki gets that backdrop of light. How do you know me?"

Before she answered Ichigo, Ragyo looked at Mugetsu just long enough for the Kamui's eyes to dilate in fear. It was appropriate that clothing should always know its betters and a Kamui was no different. Even if they were made from nothing but the highest standards of Life Fibers Kamui instinctively could sense who she was. Letting out a huff of breath in amusement from Ichigo's question, Ragyo tilted her head around and asked Isshin, "Isshin, I'm hurt that you haven't told Ichigo about our relationship."

Isshin's face looked like he just eaten a particularly sour lemon as he answered, "I told him all he needed to know."

"I'm sure you did," Ragyo propped her hand under her chin. Isshin had no doubt told Ichigo one of the lies concerning their past relationship and if Nui's information was correct, it was the one involving the hotel bombing. Mentally chuckling at the mere thought of a bomb hurting her, Ragyo turned her attention back to Ichigo, "I've known your father for a very long time. As for how I know you Ichigo..."

Ragyo leaned in close enough to make Ichigo uncomfortable, "... it's because I was there the day you were born. In other words, I'm your godmother."

"What?" Ichigo couldn't believe what he had just heard. There was no way that Ragyo Kiryuin, who he hadn't even heard of until he got the letter of acceptance to Honnouji Academy, was his godmother. If she was really his godmother, Ichigo was sure he would have heard his dad mention her at least once. Turning to his dad with a pleading look, he asked, "Is that true?"

Isshin coughed awkwardly and turned away, "It's really complicated but yeah, Ragyo is your godmother Ichigo."

That revelation came as a shock to everyone within earshot apart from Isshin and Ragyo. Even the normally cheerful Nui had adopted an expression of pure confusion as the gears within her mind wrapped around the new revelation. Behind Nui and watching the entire exchange between Ichigo and her mother with a discerning eye, Satsuki subtly motioned for Inumuta to begin recording everything that was said.

"My mother is Ichigo Kurosaki's godmother? Such an act of generosity does not fit her usual motives." Satsuki's eyes narrowed slightly as she processed the new piece of information. The answer to why her mother would choose to become Ichigo's godmother eluded her but the animosity between Isshin Kurosaki and her mother suggested there had been a strong relationship between them in the past.

"If you're really my godmother then why did you send Nui Harime to kill me?" Ichigo was having a hard time believing Ragyo was his godmother even if his dad had said so.

Ragyo smirked and closed her eyes. Folding her arms under her bosom and chuckling, she answered, "I believe you are mistaken, Ichigo. I did not send Nui Harime to do anything. As the Grand Couturier she has free reign to visit any and all Revocs-owned properties. My dear little Nui was simply playing with you because if she really wanted to kill you..." Ragyo leaned in and finished in a whisper, "... you wouldn't even see it coming."

" Focus, Ichigo!" Mugetsu, who had been strangely silent up until this point, shouted to snap her wearer out of his sudden shock and nervousness. She may not have known or understood why the knowledge of who his godmother was would startle Ichigo but he couldn't afford to remain this way. The woman in front of them was dangerous and she would do her best to protect Ichigo from Ragyo Kiryuin, "You cannot afford to let your guard down. This woman is extremely dangerous!"

"So this is Mugetsu..." Ragyo pretended to ignore the Kamui's voice. It was best that for the time being the number of people aware of her true nature be limited to two.

Wrapping her hand around Ichigo's wrist before he could pull away, she rubbed her fingers against Mugetsu's gauntlet and suppressed the shiver that ran through her body. Feeling such exquisitely crafted Life Fibers responding to her touch like this always brought such great pleasure. The fact that Ichigo and his Kamui could converse with each other as they pleased also brought her great joy since it could only mean that the Life Fibers throughout his body were finally coming into maturity or as her lovely Nui puts it, awakening.

"When Nui told me about your Kamui I was skeptical," Ragyo strutted around Ichigo, taking in each and every aspect of Mugetsu in the process, "But I see now that I was mistaken. It makes sense that Isshin's progeny be able to control the marvelous power of a Kamui."

"Isn't that awesome?" Everybody was so caught up in what Ragyo was talking about that they failed to see Nui slide up next to Ururu and wrap her arm around the shy girl's neck in a hug. Pressing her face uncomfortably against Ururu's, Nui's single eye widened in pure glee, "Ichigo's Kamui is so amazing, isn't it Amu? Its craftsmanship is superb and its stitching is nearly perfect!"

"My name is Ururu not Amu."

Irritated at both Nui's insistence at calling her Amu as well as her constant touching, Ururu ducked down in a blur of motion that left normal human eyes wondering what was going on before she stood back up and slammed the palm of her hand flat against Nui's face. As the Grand Couturier blinked owlshly at her actions, Ururu spun on her heel and slammed Nui into the ground with enough force to send up a cloud of smoke.

Squinting to protect his eyes from the expanding cloud of dust, Ichigo felt something grab hold of his hand. Looking down he saw Ururu, who in the brief space of time between her attack and Ragyo turning around to watch it, had moved to his side. Opening his mouth to ask what was bothering her, he stopped when he saw an angry look in her normally droopy and sad eyes. From the way Ururu reacted to her, Ichigo had to guess she had some history with the Grand Couturier.

"Gosh that hurt!"

Floating down gently next to Ragyo, who still possessed a bemused smirk, Nui had a large grin on her face while blood continued to trickle out from her nose. Looking down at her nose with her one sapphire eye, Nui adopted a puzzled look as the damage to her body slowly healed, "But I'm super curious why you can hurt me."

"That's enough Nui," Ragyo placed a manicured hand on the Grand Couturier's shoulder, stopping Nui before she could press Ururu further. Wickedly grinning as she glanced from Isshin to Ururu and finally focusing on Ichigo, Ragyo shut her eyes and turned around, "I think we've taken up enough of Isshin's precious time and we do have business to attend to after all. I promise that once we're done you can play with Ichigo and Amu as much as your little heart desires."

"Okay Lady Ragyo!" Nui twirled around and blew a mock kiss to Ichigo, her wounds already fully healed, "I'll be seeing you around real soon Ichigo!"

As Ichigo watched Nui skip away to catch up to Ragyo he noticed Satsuki walked up to his side. While the Student Council President had her usual stoic and condescending expression on her face, Ichigo could see that she was upset about something. Turning her dark blue eyes to look at him, Satsuki rested a hand on Bakuzan as she asked, "Am I correct to assume that you had no prior knowledge of what my mother just said?"

"That she is my godmother? Yeah, I was just as surprised as you were," Ichigo had a really bad feeling about Ragyo and it wasn't just that she had a rather limited understanding of invading his personal space. Aizen had made him nervous simply because the man's power, speed and intelligence were just so enormous that it took Ichigo everything in his arsenal just to weaken the traitor enough to be sealed. Ragyo, on the other hand, seemed to cause a primal sense of caution that Ichigo couldn't repress. There was also the matter of how his dad actually knew her because Ichigo sure as hell didn't believe the stupid excuse his dad told him and Uryu.

Folding his arms and releasing Mugetsu's transformation in a cascade of blue stars and lights, Ichigo huffed and asked, "Is it too late to take back my offer of being your Vice President?"

"Your official coronation will be tonight at the ceremony," Satsuki appeared to ignore his question as she walked past him with Inumuta trailing right behind her. Throughout the entire meeting the Information and Strategy Committee Chair had not stopped typing into his handheld computer and gave Ichigo a friendly little wave as he walked by.

"I must thank you Ichigo Kurosaki," Inumuta said amiably from beneath his collar, "Thanks to your timely appearance I was able to collect a lot of valuable data although it would be appreciative if you used had used your Gufū configuration. My data on that particular mode of your Kamui is sorely lacking."

"The dress code for the ceremony is strict, Ichigo," Satsuki said before Ichigo could threaten Inumuta. Turning her head around and staring at him with one eye, a slight haughty smirk adorned her face as she finished, "I expect you to dress properly for the occasion."

" Hey! What do you mean by that?" Mugetsu was absolutely livid by Satsuki requiring Ichigo wear anything else but her. While she had come to an agreement with him that sometimes other clothes are better suited than a Kamui, she was enraged by the notion that Satsuki would force Ichigo to wear something else!

Ichigo ignored the outburst from his Kamui and huffed, "I don't own a suit and I'm sure as hell not wearing any of my dad's clothes."

"You misunderstand," Satsuki's heels clicked loudly against the floor as she walked away, "You are already wearing a Kamui. To my mother there can never be anything as grand as a Kamui. I will be wearing Junketsu and Matoi will most likely wear Senketsu. I expect for you to show up an hour early in Mugetsu. Anything else would be tantamount to spitting in my face."

Ichigo said nothing as Satsuki disappeared into the distance after her mother. He still couldn't get the bad feeling that something was off out of his mind. If it was as simple as dealing with someone insane like Nui Harime than Ichigo could figure out a way to solve that problem. The fact that Ragyo Kiryuin not only knew she was here at Honnouji Academy but found no fault in allowing Nui to kill at her leisure sent up many red flags. There was also the matter of Ragyo being his godmother that needed some explaining.

"I know what you're going to ask Ichigo," Isshin said with a loud sigh as he rubbed the bridge of his nose. Out of all the things he expected Ragyo to say or do he hadn't dreamed she would come out and admit that she was his godmother. Isshin had wanted to tell Ichigo later on after everything was dealt with but since Ragyo forced his hand, he saw no reason to hide it, "Yes, Ragyo is your godmother. Masaki and I both agreed to let Ragyo be your godmother because back when she was pregnant, Ragyo promised Masaki to take care of you financially if anything were to befall us. I know she may not seem to be the most... normal... person but I'm pretty sure Ragyo would never intentionally hurt you."

"Fine," Ichigo grumbled and rubbed the back of his neck in an attempt to alleviate his rising annoyance with the whole situation. He had a nagging feeling that everything had just become a whole lot more complicated, "But there is one thing that's been bugging me."

"What's that?"

Before his dad could blink Ichigo rushed forward and grabbed him in a headlock, "Why the hell did you send Kon here?"

"I thought it would be a good idea!" Isshin argued as he struggled to free himself from Ichigo's surprisingly tight grasp.

"You thought it was a good idea?" Ichigo's eye was beginning to twitch as his mind failed to comprehend the sheer level of stupidity coming from his dad's mouth, "He wasn't here five minutes before he tried to hit on Ryuko! You sent a perverted mod soul to a school where every single girl's transformation involves them losing most of their clothing? What the hell were you thinking?"

" Ichigo, what's a mod soul? "

"I'll tell you later," Ichigo brushed off Mugetsu's curiosity to focus on more important matters such as beating the tar out of his dad for doing something as stupid as sending Kon to Honnouji Academy. Allowing Kon to get anywhere near Ryuko or Satsuki when they released their Kamui was a disaster waiting to happen although now that he thought about it, Ichigo probably wouldn't stop Satsuki if she tried to kill Kon. The little bastard would probably deserve it anyway.

"Umm..."

Ichigo and Isshin stopped fighting as Ururu made her presence known. Ever since Ragyo arrived and began taking an interest in her,

Ururu had done her best to stay out of the way until everything settled down. Giving his distracted son one last punch to the face, Isshin stood up and dusted his jacket off, "What's the matter Ururu?"

"Well..." Ururu twiddled her fingers and looked gloomily off to the side. She didn't know how to explain the weird feeling that suddenly shot through her body upon seeing Ragyo and Nui but the fact of the matter is that she hated it. It felt completely wrong to the normally depressed girl and she never wanted to feel it again, "It's just that everyone keeps calling me Amu but that's not my name. Do you know why they call me that, Mr. Kurosaki?"

"Oh boy..." Isshin knew this moment would come and, to be frank, he wished he never wished it would. What he was about to say would most likely make Ururu very upset and he didn't want to give the normally sad girl even more stress to deal with but he really had no choice. It was either he tell her now when he could comfort her afterwards and explains things clearly or allow Ragyo to tell her. Isshin didn't doubt Ragyo would put such a spin on the truth that Ururu would subconsciously begin believing the woman, "Ok, you really want to know Ururu? It's rather complicated and but Ichigo, you must first promise me one thing."

Ichigo's eyebrows rose in confusion, "What?"

Isshin pouted childishly, "You must promise to not hit me! Got it?"

Rolling his eyes sarcastically, Ichigo nevertheless mockingly waved his hand. He was curious about what his dad was going to say, "Yeah, yeah, I promise not to hit you."

"Alright then," Isshin took a deep breath and prepared for what was to come, "The reason Ragyo and Nui call you Amu, Ururu, is because that was your name before Kisuke took you in and adopted you. The truth of the matter is that you're Nui Harime's twin sister."

"Hang on a second!" Ichigo grabbed his dad by the front of his jacket. He could hear Ururu begin sniffing as the weight of what his dad said began to sink in, "Are you out of your mind? There's no way in hell that Ururu is related to that insane little psychopath!"

"Ururu..." Isshin ignored the subtle threat from Ichigo to focus on what was important. It seemed that he was correct in his assumption that Ururu would not deal well with the revelation that she and Nui were twins. Easily pulling himself free from his son's grasp, Isshin knelt in front of Ururu and placed his hands on her shoulders, "Ururu, look at me. Just because you and Nui are twins does not mean you are anything like her. Just look at my adorable little girls! Yuzu and Karin couldn't be any more different and yet they live under the same roof! If my cute twins aren't alike at all, what are the chances you are anything like Nui Harime?"

The tears in Ururu's eyes threatened to fall as she sniffled, "L-Low?"

Isshin grinned goofily and pulled Ururu into a one-armed hug, "You and Nui may be twins but you're your own person. Don't let something as stupid as genetics tell you what to do. Make your own decisions in life and deal with the consequences of your actions. If Nui or anyone else tries to convince you otherwise you either ignore them or convince them that they are wrong. It's as simple as that!"

A small smile graced Ururu's face as she began to calm down, "Do you really mean that Mr. Kurosaki?"

"Of course I do!" Isshin gloated with a chuckle, "And If that's not good enough, Ichigo will be more than willing to threaten those who won't leave you alone. The scowl on his face should be more than enough to scare away even the likes of Nui!"

"Go to hell, old man!"

With an angry shout Ichigo kicked his dad in the back of head. Giving an angry aside glance to the smoking crater Isshin's head was currently stuck in, Ichigo turned to Ururu and nervously sighed, "My dad actually has a point. Even if you are related to Nui Harime there is no chance in hell you are anything like her."

"But if we're twins..." Ururu seemed to struggle to articulate her thoughts. For all her strength and power she was nothing more than a sixteen year old girl who just had perhaps the most devastating news of her life delivered to her, "... if that's true, what does that make me?"

Instead of answering Ichigo gently hit the top of Ururu's head with his fist, "How many times do I have to say it? You're Ururu and Nui is Nui. That's all there is to it. Now come on, I need to find Kon before Ryuko ends up killing him."

"Ok," Ururu started to follow him before turning around to look at Isshin, "But what about your dad?"

"He'll be fine," Ichigo answered with a lack of concern. The man was withholding a lot of information about Ragyo and how she knew him and Ichigo wasn't about to let his dad get away with that, "Now come on. If we're lucky we can get some of the catering before Mako eats everything."

---

...

---

Dusk fell quickly over Honnou City as the chilly air of the autumn night forced anyone outside to seek the comfort of warmth. Up at Honnouji Academy, which would normally have been empty due to the students going home for the weekend, there was a constant hustle and bustle as students brought their families to the Parent Student Day ceremony. It was here that every parent will receive an update on the current situation of Honnouji Academy as well as an in-depth review of their child's progress in the year. Satsuki Kiryuin had initially started Parent Student Day as a way to weed out those too weak to stay in Honnouji Academy and thus every year those at the border between passing and failing became more and more nervous as they contemplated whether this would be the year they would be expelled.

The large ballroom in which the venue was to take place this year was perhaps the least used room in all of Honnouji Academy. The room, usually empty apart from the weekly dusting and cleaning, was now packed to the brim with every single amenity that money could buy. Apart from dozens, if not hundreds, of tables that stretched across the extraordinarily large room there was a band playing German waltzes and classical songs in one of the corners. Up on the stage that dominated the far side of the ballroom, Rei Hououmaru held up one hand to her ear as one of her men updated her on the situation.

"Everything is in order then?" The petite woman seemed pleased by what the man on the other end said. She had apologized to Lady Ragyo for being late due to some last minute work at Revocs but now that she was here, Rei was going to make sure everything went off without a hitch. While Lady Satsuki had done an almost perfect job on accommodating for her mother's presence, there were a few things that Rei had to alter or replace. Lady Ragyo was fickle about several things that she hadn't informed her daughter about and as much as Rei did not look forward to Satsuki's verbal displeasure, she was looking forward to Ragyo's disappointment even less.

"I see..." Rei stared out over the ballroom where students and their parents were filing in and noticed Isshin just walking in, "Lady Ragyo wishes to know if the final seating arrangements been updated."

Rei Hououmaru fully understood why Lady Ragyo wanted the location Isshin Kurosaki's table but she was confused about why she wanted it moved. She had no idea why it had to be the table two rows away from the stage and eighth from the right but Rei would never complain. If Lady Ragyo wanted Isshin Kurosaki to sit at that particular spot then Rei was going to comply without argument.

"Oh wow!" Mako Mankanshoku looked around the ballroom with stars twinkling in her eyes. In all her time at Honnouji Academy she had never been to this particular room. Even though she had been to Parent Student Days in the past, none of them involved the use of this very special and forbidden room. Satsuki had expressively forbidden any student from entering this room under penalty of death and expulsion, in that order. Twirling around in her fancy new dress, her brown eyes taking in as much detail as they could without exploding from the excitement, Mako grabbed a silent Ururu's hand and began running away.

"Let's go find our seats Ururu!"

"Humph," Ryuko had her hands placed squarely on her hips. As she looked over the crowd of men and women in suits and dresses she had the distinct feeling that she was a tad bit underdressed for the occasion, "Hey Senketsu, you think I'm underdressed?"

" Of course I don't!" Senketsu was insulted by the idea he wasn't as fashionable as the boring clothes he was forced to surround himself with. A Kamui was the epitome of fashion and everything else was just plain boring! Huffing indignantly, he rolled his eye and stared up at Ryuko, "As a Kamui I am the best piece of clothing in the world. Everything else is but an attempt to reach my level of perfection. That is why I refuse to allow you to wear anything else besides your pajamas!"

"Oh? Is that so?" Ryuko quirked an eyebrow in annoyance at her Kamui's snooty attitude, "If that's the case, I think next week I'll go back to wearing my old uniform and blazer. Perhaps five days of hanging on the wall will teach you some respect."

" Y-You wouldn't!" Senketsu began shaking in fear and nervously around Ryuko's body at the thought of being separated from his friend for so long. He didn't know if he could last five days without being worn and that single thought made him start blubbering incoherently. "I thought you cared about me, Ryuko!"

"Uh... there, there," Ryuko awkwardly rubbed Senketsu's lapels to calm him down. Why did her Kamui have to be so emotional all the time? At least it was better than Mugetsu, who seemed to be overly jealous of Ichigo to the point of tearing up his normal clothes. Ryuko still remember hearing that argument all the way from the Slums, "I was kidding Senketsu. Can't you take a joke? Of course I would never wear anything but you. You are by Sunday best after all."

"Yeah man, grow a pair why don't you?"

Kon stood on Ryuko's shoulder with a completely miserable look on his plushie face. While Ryuko had stopped trying to kill him on the sole condition that he not peek on her changing, his humiliation had not ended. As soon as she could, Ryuko had given him to Mako and told her that he was a 'magically talking plushie that was wished into life.' Mako, like the simple minded girl she is, had fallen for the lie instantly. It was to his eternal horror that Mako had dressed him in a miniature version of a girl's One-Star Goku Uniform and proceeded to call him Bostov.

"Shut it!" Ryuko squeezed Kon's neck, causing the mod soul to exaggaratingly choke, "You're supposed to keep quiet. What if someone hears you?"

"Listen lady, everyone already knows I can talk," Kon pulled himself free from Ryuko's clutched and hopped to the floor. Dusting his body off and wishing Mako hadn't stapled the stupid dress to his body, he turned around and pointed an arm at her, "If you remember our little chase earlier I ran past nearly half the school trying to get away from you. I think by now the entire school knows I can talk, which is a problem because now I can't hide in the girl's locker room and - "

Kon was cut off when Ryuko stomped down on his face with her sneaker several times before picking him up and throwing him away in the nearest trash can. Huffing in embarrassment, Ryuko folded her arms and followed after Mako. She felt like she needed a shower just from being around Kon and hoped she never met anyone else as perverted as the plushie.

Some distance away from where Kon was trying to pull himself out of a trash can, Barazo Mankanshoku laughed jovially as he shook Isshin's hand. He had come to Parent Student Day with Sukuyo but unfortunately had to leave Mataro at home with Guts. Actually, it wasn't that bad of a situation. After they were kicked out of the Two-Star Residential District back to their old home in the Slums, Barazo had noticed that they needed several things. So while they were seen in public at the ceremony, Mataro could go out and steal what the family needed. It was the perfect alibi.

"So you must be Ichigo's dad?" Barazo shook the equally enthusiastic Isshin's hand, "I've heard good things about your clinic in Karakura Town. Is it true you were labeled the third best family clinic in northern Japan?"

"That's right. I've been in the top ten for nine years running now," Isshin laughed alongside Barazo while they compared their individual practices. Out of all the parents and students attending the ceremony, Isshin's white suit and bloodred tie made him stand out the most, but he didn't care. He may have gotten this suit nineteen years ago but what really irritated him is that Ragyo stole his fashion sense for her COVERS design. Couldn't she have at least asked him first before using his suit pattern?

"I noticed," Barazo folded his arms and nodded at something, "Hey, I was wondering if you could hook me up with some extra packets of blood? As a Back Alley Doctor my clinic is kind of short on some vital supplies and I'd rather not get caught stealing blood again. The last time I got caught Sukuyo had to pay my bail! I was forced to sleep outside for a whole week in the middle of winter!"

"I only did that because I love you," Sukuyo hugged Barazo's arm tightly causing the man to scream in pain, "A Back Alley Doctor such as yourself should know better than to get caught."

"Some extra blood you say? I suppose I could scrounge up some extra supplies if you really need it..." Isshin scratched at his chin as he contemplated whether or not he should bother Ryuken about this. The man might be a ruthless businessman who always stuck to the rules and laws but he was a doctor before any of that. If he explained to the man what the situation was, Isshin was sure Ryuken would somehow mysteriously send several crates of refrigerated blood to the Mankanshoku Clinic.

While Isshin and Barazo were discussing the best way to transport blood into Honnou City without getting caught, Ryuko had already found her assigned table. As she stared at the placard on the table with her name on it, she glanced up at the stage looming just a dozen feet away. Ryuko should have known Satsuki Kiryuin would make sure she had a front row seat as she made Ichigo her Vice President. Satsuki was really being underhanded if she was trying this hard to make her mad. Lazily sitting down in her chair with one leg propped up on the table, Ryuko let out an irritated huff as she imagined what the ceremony was going to be like.

"Since when were you invited, Transfer Student?" Ryuko's eye started twitching as a familiar voice mocked her, "I thought this was Parent Student Day. Didn't you say your dad was dead?"

Tilting her head backwards over the chair, Ryuko frowned when she saw Nonon Jakuzure in her old Three-Star Goku Uniform. Actually, strike that. Unlike her original uniform, Nonon's new uniform had three golden yellow stars instead of black ones, "Screw you! I see you finally shown your true colors, you Snake."

Nonon actually looked surprised by that as she blinked owlishly in confusion, "What are you talking about, Transfer Student?"

With the advantage on her side, Ryuko waved off the pink haired girl's question with a haughty chuckle, "Please, did you really think Ichigo and I were convinced by your little show about getting revenge on Satsuki? We would have to be really stupid to fall for such bad acting. Thanks for the help against Sanageyama though. I really couldn't have beaten him without your super awesome advice."

Nonon snarled and slammed her forehead hard against Ryuko's, her majorette's hat falling over her face while sparks shot between their eyes. As pink eyes glared daggers into Ryuko's blue ones, Nonon scoffed and placed her hands on her hips, "While I really dislike Strawberry for defeating me, I'm going to make sure I humiliate you when Lady Satsuki allows me to fight you. I'm going to kick your ass so hard you won't be able to sit down for years, stupid Transfer Student!"

"Ryuko! Nonon!" Mako slid up between the two girls and brought them into a big group hug. With a large smile on her face, Mako looked back and forth between them and asked, "Isn't it awesome that we're all sitting at the same table? It must be a coincidence or something!"

"Don't lump me in with you Underachiever," Nonon growled sarcastically as she pushed Mako off her body. After wiping her Goku Uniform free of any germs Mako might have given her, Nonon began walking away before stopping and turning around, "Just to make things clear Underachiever, I'm not your friend and I have never been your friend. In fact, I will never be your friend! I am Lady Satsuki's best friend and nothing will ever change that!"

"Ok then!" Mako waved goodbye to a frustrated Nonon as she added, "I'll make sure to stop by during lunch with lots of croquettes my mom made! She just went shopping so be ready for anything!"

As Nonon's frustrated shout echoed throughout the ballroom due to Mako's innocent question, Isshin was in the midst of telling Barazo about his adorable girls when his phone went off. While that would normally not be a cause for concern, the fact that the ringtone was a recording of him singing a song really badly caused Isshin to rapidly fumble around his pockets. Once he managed to find the offensive device and turn it to vibrate, he gave Barazo a nervous chuckle, "Sorry about that but I need to take this call. I made the ringtone really embarrassing so I can't just ignore it. I'll be back in about five minutes.

Quickly walking out of the ballroom before he could embarrass himself further, Isshin soon reached what appeared to be a deserted hallway. Pulling his cellphone back out and checking to make sure he was completely alone, Isshin stopped before proceeding any further and opened a nearby door on the off chance Nui Harime was standing right behind it eavesdropping on his conversation. Once he was completely certain the coast was clear, he redialed the number and brought his phone up to his ear, "What did you want?"

"How goes the party?" Aikuro Mikisugi answered in a nasally tone. A teacher coming down with the flu would normally be a really bad thing but for a nudist like Aikuro it was the perfect excuse to work undercover since no one would be watching him. As he blew his nose into the last tissue from the box, Aikuro threw the now empty box across his apartment into the trashcan and asked, "I would be there but I'm sick."

"I don't need to be a doctor to know that," Isshin answered sarcastically, "But that's not why you called, is it?"

Aikuro smiled, "Ah, you know me too well. So what's the answer?"

"Well..." Isshin paused momentarily before finishing, "There's no doubt they are both definitely here. I ran into Ragyo and her little helper not five minutes after they landed in order to check if they sent a pair of decoys to throw everyone off. They are the real deal."

"That's all I needed to hear. You should probably get back to the ceremony before anyone notices you're missing."

"Good luck, Aikuro."

Isshin snapped his cellphone shut as he contemplated what he was doing. He knew that he had to stop Ragyo's plans before they could come to fruition but he didn't know just how wide his old friend's grip on the world had become. When his ears picked up the sound of polite and loud clapping coming from the direction of the ballroom, Isshin turned and ran back. He needed to get to his seat before Ragyo started her speech. It's a good thing he had gone to the bathroom beforehand. Ragyo's speeches could last for hours if she was on a roll and he had a feeling this was going to be one of those nights.

---

...

---

"Good luck, Aikuro."

Aikuro stared at his phone for a few seconds before pursing his lips as he began dialing a new number. The opportunity that Isshin was giving Nudist Beach was perhaps a once in a lifetime chance. Up to this point Nudist Beach had always been wary about going after high class international targets due to the likelihood that the Grand Couturier would be waiting for them. With Isshin confirming that both Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime were here in Honnouji Academy, Aikuro needed to make some calls on his private phone. To pass this up would be a costly mistake not only to his organization but to every single human on Earth.

Across the globe and in a different time zone, Kinue Kinagase stood on the top of the Eiffel Tower in the midst of rainy Paris morning. With her black and red hair matted down against her face by the heavy rain, she stared through a detached rifle scope at the high security Revocs facility more than two kilometers away across the Seine River. This particular facility was vital for Revocs's control of the apparel market for Western Europe. It was from here that every single Life Fiber was distributed to the unwary public. Upon hearing her phone ringing, she scoffed angrily but nevertheless picked it up. As a clap of thunder echoed in the background, she scolded Aikuro, "You know I'm on a mission. Why are you calling me? Do you know how dangerous this is for the both of us if I get caught?"

"You won't get caught. What do you take me for, an idiot?" When Aikuro didn't hear anything but the sound of heavy rain through the phone, he quickly added, "Never mind. Don't answer that. I'm calling you because Isshin has just confirmed the presence of Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime at Parent Student Day. They will be forced to remain in Honnouji Academy for at least a few more hours. Operation Paris Fashion Week is to proceed."

Kinue's eyes widened for a moment before a relieved smile adorned her face. She knew this day would come eventually but for it to come so soon was a complete surprise to the older Kinagase. Crouching down on the Eiffel Tower with her phone still pressed firmly against her ear, Kinue lowered the scope away from her eye, "I see. What are the specifications of the operation? Has anything changed?"

"The operation remains as intended," Aikuro answered, "You are to get in, set the Anti-Life Fiber charges and get out before it blows. With any luck we can cripple Revocs's chokehold over Western Europe for years."

That was both the good and the bad about having a dedicated facility like this. Inside the wall tens of tons of raw Life Fibers were stored, just waiting to be sewn into every piece of Revocs clothing. If Kinue could destroy it all, Ragyo Kiryuin would be forced to ship out an entire new shipment of Life Fibers, which Nudist Beach could then harass and stop.

" Finally we can get down to fucking business!" A crass voice called out as Kinue hung up her phone, "This spy crap was getting really boring!"

Kinue sighed and shook her head, "What have I don't you about language, Danketsu?"

" Go to hell," Danketsu's eyes swiveled up to look at her wearer. In the weeks since her fateful battle against Ururu, Kinue had noticed a slight diminishing in her Kamui's animosity and insatiable bloodlust. That did not mean Danketsu's behavior had changed. The Kamui still cursed up a storm and was rude and obnoxious, which made Kinue glad that no one but a few people could hear her voice. Blinking once and then twice as she looked over her form, Danketsu gave a satisfied huff, "But I am happy you stopped wearing clothing over me. As a Kamui being touched by those pieces of crap was an insult. When are you going to get rid of the pants?"

"You know why I wear military fatigues," Kinue had already gone over this line of thought with Danketsu several times in the past. Her Kamui may be powerful and allow her access to a level of strength no normal human could dream of but she lacked pockets. There was no way that Kinue could carry all her Nudist Beach equipment on Danketsu's form. So while she had foregone wearing anything from the waist up apart from Danketsu's transformed state, Kinue constantly wore a pair of military fatigues simply for the pockets.

" I do and I don't care," Danketsu paused as her eyes focused on something in the distance. When she spoke again, her voice was full of anger and hate, "There someone at the Revocs facility with a large concentration of Life Fibers. I want to fucking kill them."

Kinue frowned, "How strong are they?"

" You have to be kidding if you think they are a match for us!" Danketsu exclaimed proudly before answering, "They are stronger than the mockery Three-Star uniforms at Honnouji Academy but nowhere close to the power of a true Kamui like me!"

There was only one group of people on the planet that Danketsu could be talking about. Kinue stood up and stared out over the dreary Paris morning before letting out a huff of annoyance as her mission just became more complicated and risky, "Xcution."

Xcution, the most powerful group of men and women under the employ of Ragyo Kiryuin, was a name that struck fear into Nudist Beach and was one of the reasons why they had been mostly forced to remain within the borders of Japan. They were the crème of the crop in terms of power. While they most certainly did not possess Kamui, since all but a handful of humans would be devoured by the Life Fiber clothing, they did have uniforms that made them nearly unstoppable.

Kinue had yet to fight them herself since in the past she had been more worried about losing control over her emotions and allowing Danketsu to transform into a monster. Yet from the vague and minimal reports headquarters received, Xcution had no qualms about killing their operatives. Unlike Nui Harime, who preferred to play around for a while before killing them, Xcution would move in right away for the kill. This meant that Nudist Beach had no idea what powers their Life Fiber outfits possessed. The only information they had indicated Xcution's power was above that of the Three-Star Goku Uniforms Aikuro had reported at Honnouji Academy.

" You're going to kill them right?" There was no hiding the excitement in Danketsu's voice as she mentally salivated over the thought of completely destroying Life Fibers.

"Does it look like I have a choice?" Kinue sarcastically asked her Kamui as stared at the Revocs facility before taking a single step off the Eiffel Tower. As she fell through the rain-filled air, her eyes narrowing slightly in the process, she flipped around in midair and shouted, "Danketsu Funsha!"

Kinue's body was surrounded by a burst of purple and blue light before she rocketed up into the sky over Paris. Hovering in midair in her newly discovered flight configuration, Kinue allowed the feeling of the Life Fibers in her body to envelop her. As much as Danketsu still did not like her, she could not help but appreciate the fact her Kamui was willing to allow her access to a greater portion of her strength. Silently thanking Ichigo Kurosaki once more for helping her move on with her life, Kinue spun around and allowed a stream of dark purple exhaust to shoot out of the jet engine her legs had morphed into.

While twin contrails trailed behind the two wings arcing away on either side of her back, Kinue pulled out her Genji blade and held it in her armored hand. She knew that using her Funsha configuration would undoubtedly make the Xcution member aware of her presence but Kinue was counting on the fact Danketsu was a Kamui to shift things in her favor. She might be unaware of the XCution member's ability but the same could be said about her.

Flying high enough that the ground-based defenses surrounding the facility were unable to lock onto her, Kinue spun around in the air and flew downwards. As the rain of anti-aircraft bullets flashed past her, Kinue crashed through the reinforced roof of the building with ease before landing in a crouch on the floor.

As the smell of pure and raw Life Fibers assaulted her senses, causing Danketsu to shift and morph around her body in anger and disgust, Kinue tried to mentally calm her Kamui down. While she may not have liked the smell of Life Fibers any more than Danketsu, they could not afford to show weakness. Once Danketsu managed to get herself under control, after much coaxing from Kinue and another promise to defeat the member of Xcution, Kinue finally had a chance to get started on her mission. Patting the Anti-Life Fiber charge in one of her pockets, Kinue began walking towards the main storage room of the facility, her purple heels clicking ominously against the bare concrete floor. All she needed to do was place the charge in the storage room and get out within ten minutes before it detonated. It was simple enough except for the fact that someone was rushing towards her back at speeds much greater than a human should possess.

Spinning around and raising her Genji blade, Kinue blocked the armored kick that would have either broken her neck or killed her instantly. As sparks flew off her blade as her opponent continued to try and overpower her, Kinue felt the jets on her back burst into life. As power coursed through her body, she let out a determined shout before she managed to throw her opponent off and into the catwalks above. Letting out a sigh as steam shot out from Danketsu, Kinue gripped her Genji blade tightly as she looked around in the shadows for her opponent.

"So I was right," Kinue took a few steps forward as she attempted to sense her opponent. With all the Life Fibers in the building as well as the air it was nearly impossible for Danketsu to pinpoint their location, "You're a member of Xcution."

"Is that a Kamui?" A distinctly French and feminine accent echoed all around her as Kinue finally saw her opponent. With one armor-covered leg propped up on a railing, the woman on the catwalk moved a lock of dark hair out from in front of her eyes, "It's no wonder you were able to sense and block my attack. Lady Ragyo knew you Nudists would come here eventually but she had no idea one of you actually had a Kamui. A long lost work of the late Isshin Matoi, I presume?"

"You can keep on presuming," Kinue shifted her leg back and raised her Genji blade, "It won't help you."

"Let's just calm down for a moment," The French woman casually leapt off the catwalk before landing just in front of Kinue, allowing her to see just who it was she was dealing with. The woman's body was covered in a distinctive white armor with glowing gold trim with the Revocs logo superimposed with the symbol for Xcution on her chest right over her heart. As the dark skinned woman's eyes took in all of Danketsu, she could not help but whistle in appreciation, "So that's what a Kamui looks like, huh? I've seen some of the work by the Grand Couturier but I never thought I would see an actual Kamui in battle. It's really something."

"Are we going to talk or fight?" Kinue couldn't afford for her opponent to keep talking. Every second wasted was another second a silent alarm could be sent out informing Ragyo Kiryuin of the situation. Charging forward towards the woman, Kinue attempted to stab her Genji blade through her gut only to find the woman quickly shifting to the side and out of the path of her blade.

"I had hoped to kill you quickly so you wouldn't feel any pain." The woman seemed almost remorseful as she stared at her clenched fist, "I detest drawn out violence but Lady Ragyo gave me the order to kill all intruders so that's what I'm going to do. Je suis désolé. Jackie Tristan's the name. Let's see how your Kamui stands up to the power of my Sanguinaire Raiment!"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #13 - Meeting the Boss

Ichigo and Ryuko stood on the outskirts of Honnou city with annoyed expressions on their faces. They had no idea why Aikuro Mikisugi had dragged them out here on a Sunday but as they stared at their teacher, who seemed to be doing his best to not look back, Ryuko had finally reached her breaking point. Storming across the road and grabbing Aikuro by his tie, she pulled down hard until the Nudist was at eye level with her.

"Are you going to explain why the hell you dragged us out into the middle of nowhere?" Aikuro wilted under Ryuko's angry gaze as beads of nervous sweat began running down his face. Raising his hands in a placating gesture, he managed to coherently say, "Now Ryuko, I brought you and Ichigo out here for a good reason. It's been quite some time now and the leader of my organization wants to meet you two."

"Wait a second," Ryuko glanced away before scowling. Shaking Aikuro's body like a ragdoll, she shouted, "You're saying that the nonsense you told us about Nudist Beach was all true? I thought you were just being a pervert!"

Ichigo would have said something if not for the truck barreling toward them down the road. Just before the vehicle could run them over, it abruptly spun to the side and skidded to a halt as the smell of burning rubber tires assaulted their noses. For a moment the truck, painted in a nondescript color to prevent drawing any unwanted suspicion, was silent apart from the creaking of the engine cooling down. The silence was shattered when the driver's door swung open and an immensely massive man stood up.

"I see that your mission at Honnouji Academy is coming along nicely. Well done Aikuro," The man walked forward and patted Aikuro on the shoulder. While it appeared to be nothing more than a friendly tap, the force behind it was enough to cause Aikuro to stumble forward.

While he was initially put off by the man's large size, he was bigger than Kenpachi for crying out loud, his seemingly normal behavior and dressed state calmed Ichigo down. Perhaps Aikuro was the only member of Nudist Beach who actually liked to be nude. That belief was broken completely when the man, upon spotting Ryuko staring at him with her mouth slightly agape, got down on one knee and began crying tears of joy.

"Please accept my sincerest apologies for not introducing myself to you as soon as I arrived! It has been quite some time since my eyes have been able to look upon the beautiful visage worthy of belonging to Isshin Matoi's daughter! While I can never hope to equal the sheer majestic charisma and authority belonging to your late father, I will do my best to emulate the greatness that he possessed in life."

"Who... I... what..." The sheer ridiculousness staring her in the face had temporarily caused Ryuko to lose the ability to form complete and coherent sentences. Even Senketsu was affected by the man's exuberance. The Kamui's multicolored eye had taken the form of a swirl as he temporarily passed out from the man's nonsense.

"Oh dear, in my haste to apologize for my rudeness I have forgotten to introduce myself." The man flexed and in an instant his shirt was torn off his body, exposing rippling muscles and a virtual constellation of purple stars sparkling around his body, "Allow me to take this moment to do so. I am Alex Louis Armstrong, leader of Nudist Beach and your father's former second in command. Under my caring and well-defined arms the organization shall free humanity from the throes of Life Fibers and allow each person to live the life they please! Now please look upon my sculpted body and accept my sincerest apologies!"

Ryuko's mind, already pushed to the brink, abruptly collapsed in a desperate attempt to save itself. With white foam leaking out from the corners of her mouth, Ryuko collapsed to the road in a twitching heap, her mind unable to comprehend the existence of someone who is even more of a Nudist than Aikuro.

Alex Louis Armstrong failed to see the impact his body and mannerisms had on Ryuko since he had already turned his attention to Ichigo. While Aikuro dragged Ryuko's body away in the background, Armstrong firmly clasped Ichigo's hand within his own and stared into his eyes.

"It is good to finally meet you, young Ichigo!" Even though he was giving a friendly handshake, Ichigo felt as if his hand was being crushed to dust, "Your father has said many good things about you and I am looking forward to working together for the good of humanity!"

Ichigo was nearly on the verge of unconsciousness himself before something Armstrong said caught his attention, "Wait a second. How do you know my dad?"

Armstrong's blue eyes widened before the sparkles reappeared around his face, "It appears that I have spoken too soon. Your father wanted to explain things himself but in my haste to introduce myself I have failed to heed his words."

Abruptly stepping back and flexing his body in front of Ichigo, Armstrong leaned in and declared, "Please accept my sincerest apologies for spilling your father's secret! If you seek to punish someone for hiding this knowledge, please make me the sole focus of your righteous fury. I deserve no less for breaking the sacred oath your father bestowed upon me!"

"Uh... Sir?" Aikuro appeared at Armstrong's side before he could say anything else, "Satsuki Kiryuin has started to mobilize her Elite Four. At the current rate she will be here in three minutes."

That would complicate things. Armstrong had an entire list of things he needed to say to Ichigo and Ryuko and with the latter unconscious he needed to find a place to lay low. Coming to the conclusion that going back to Osaka would be a terrible idea, Alex Louis Armstrong reached over and picked Ichigo up with a single hand.

"What the hell do you think you're doing?" Ichigo shouted as he tried, and failed, to free himself.

"I apologize for my rude behavior but I will explain everything once we reach the nearest Nudist Beach safe house. Please save all subsequent questions for the presentation later on."

Picking Ryuko's unconscious form off the ground, Armstrong gently placed her in the back of his truck before throwing Ichigo in after her. Getting into the driver's seat, he quickly turned the engine on, spun the truck around and shot off into the distance. While Ichigo was quick to untangle himself, he was forced back in his seat as the truck accelerated into the triple digits while Armstrong explained where they were going.

"This safe house is someplace where no Kiryuin would dare to defile. It has been in the Armstrong family for generations and it will remain as such until the Earth is safe once more!"

Aikuro awkwardly waved goodbye as Armstrong drove off. He knew Ichigo and Ryuko would be really pissed off at him when they got back. Hopefully he could find a place to lay low until their anger settled down.

Until You Come Back to Me

So Chapter 26 arrives and with it comes the official announcement of a few things. Yes, Xcution will be in my story and as you can tell they will not be pushovers. Just read Kinue's fight against Jackie Tristan below if you have any doubts. Trying to make her Sanguinaire Raiment more powerful than Satsuki's Regalia was a little difficult but I think it worked out in the end. Oh, just a quick warning for those of you who understand French, Kinue curses in French in this chapter and I hope I got the words correctly.

I hope you shippers are happy with this chapter. I finally gave a small hint of a pairing but that's probably not enough for you guys. Everything will come in due time. Also, I had some fun writing the omake, especially the different interactions between the Kamui. There are many shout outs to various games, animes and other things in this chapter. Try and find them all if you can!

This chapter has been proofread to the best of my ability but some grammatical errors might have come through. Enjoy and don't forget to read and review if you can!

---

...

---

Chapter 26 - Until You Come Back to Me

During the worldwide recession after the turn of the millennium, France's economy had faltered to a halt before slowing shrinking. For nearly two years the number of people losing their jobs and homes continued to increase and for most citizens it appeared that the recession would soon end up becoming a full-blown depression.

That was when Ragyo Kiryuin and Revocs came to the rescue.

In an act that seemed absolutely generous she had come to Paris with the intentions of making it the epicenter of her conglomerate's European operations. With the country's economy declining by the week and with no hope in the near future, the French government had quickly agreed to the easy terms of Ragyo's contract. The only term that caused any amount of discussion was the concession that the main facility in Paris be given a quart mile zone surrounding it where no one apart from company employees can go. While initially wary of such secrecy, the state of the country forced the government's hands and they easily capitulated to all of Ragyo's terms. Almost as soon as the Paris Distribution Facility had come online the French economy shifted in reverse. The amount of revenue and taxes Revocs brought first to Paris and then the rest of the country quickly turned France into the leading economy of Europe.

Three men clad in standard armor Revocs Security Force armor methodically searched the western side of the facility for the intruder spotted only a few minutes ago. As soon as the silent alarm went off, the security personal on duty had spun into action. They had no idea how the intruder managed to pierce the blanket of anti-aircraft cover but they were going to get answers, one way or another. With the recent addition of an Xcution member there was no way the intruder could hide for long.

"Any sign of the intruder?" The leader of the group asked, his voice muffled by the mask he was wearing. All three of them were wearing the standard Revocs Life-Fiber Anti-Personal Military-Spec Uniforms. The uniforms augmented their speed, strength and reaction time to twice that of a normal human, which allowed them to counter any threat that might be posed by governmental forces or Nudist Beach.

"No sir!" the second security personal snapped off a salute before wiping rain off his face, "This area appears to be secure."

"Understood. Let's do one last sweep before moving to the next sector. Mademoiselle Tristan is not a very patient woman -"

The leader was cut short when the sound of explosions echoed out from somewhere within the facility. Raising his weapon, his men doing the same, he cautiously approached the employee's entrance. As the pouring rain drowned out any sounds apart from the pitter patter of rain hitting the ground, the leader swiped his keycard in the pad next to the door. Once the light turned from red to green and indicated it was unlocked, he nodded to one of his men to open the door while he and the other man covered it with their weapons. Just as the man shifted the handle downwards and disengaged the lock, the entire wall exploded as Kinue Kinagase's body was thrown through concrete and steel into the cold and pouring rain.

As debris from her collision rained down around her, Kinue let out a grunt coming more from discomfort than pain as she hit the ground with an audible thud. Waiting until she bounced along the ground a second time, Kinue stabbed her right arm out and planted it against the wet surface before flipping herself over. While her Kamui's purple heels dug twin trenches in the ground before coming to a complete stop, Kinue let out an exasperated sigh as she reached up to dislodge a particularly persistent piece of debris from her hair. When she felt something shift painfully inside her shoulder, Kinue cautiously tried to move her left arm only to stop when her entire shoulder lit up in pain.

" My shoulder's broken in two... no three places."

Kinue suppressed a groan of pain as she tried to think about how Jackie Tristan broke her shoulder. She couldn't understand how her power was increasing but when she let her guard down for one tiny fraction of second, her opponent connected with a punch that nearly shattered her left clavicle in several places.

" You are a complete idiot," Danketsu sneered angrily right before a burst of steam spewed forth from the vents on her back. Tensing her body tightly as she felt the bone in her shoulder shift painfully back into place, Kinue waited until Danketsu was done before trying to move her left arm. As she flexed her hand and rotated her shoulder, Danketsu looked up at her and rolled her eyes, " You should be down on your hands and knees thanking me that our bond allows me to heal your injuries. Now go back in there and kick her ass!"

Kinue responded to her Kamui's criticism by simply rolling her eyes. She couldn't really fault Danketsu for her anger. It was her fault that she had broken her shoulder, "Thank you for healing me. Now focus on the fight at hand. Just because Jackie Tristan isn't wearing a Kamui doesn't mean I can afford to go easy on her. That last punch was almost on your level of power."

" Don't try and blame your failure on me!" Danketsu snapped at Kinue angrily, " That woman would need to be at least twice as strong to even stand close to our level!"

A form walking through the debris alerted Kinue and Danketsu that their opponent was coming back. Slowly and carefully removing her Genji blade from its sheath, Kinue knew this would be a test of how much her training over the past months paid off. Before she acquired the Genji blade from Professor Matoj, she had been training herself in basic hand-to-hand combat but once she possessed a weapon capable of cutting all but the most powerful of Life Fibers, Kinue was forced to renew her training.

Turning her head towards Jackie Tristan, beads of water dripping heavily from her black and red hair, Kinue narrowed her eyes when she saw the woman casually walk over her own men without a care. They may all be employees of Revocs who devote themselves to Ragyo Kiryuin, but they were still humans. To see the member of Xcution so callously ignore her men's cries of pain caused Kinue's blood to simmer.

While her own hair began to glisten from the rain, Jackie grinned and placed her hands on her hips, "You're still alive, eh? I would have sworn my last attack shattered your rib cage, but I've never had the fortune of fighting someone wearing a genuine Kamui. La vie est drôle."

Jackie Tristan raced towards Kinue in an all too familiar burst of speed with her arm cocked back. With an emotionless look in her eyes as she easily traced the woman's movements, Kinue leaned to the side and watched as the armored white fist paced through the space previously occupied by her head. As a look of shock appeared on Jackie's face, Kinue decided to go on the offensive. In one fluid motion she snapped her left arm out and grabbed Jackie's extended wrist. Pulling her opponent towards her and off balance, Kinue reared her elbow back before smashing it into Jackie's face.

A painful crunching sound came from Jackie's nose as soon as Kinue's elbow made contact, signifying that it was most likely badly broken. While blood spurted from her broken nose down her face and the front of her Sanguinaire Raiment, Jackie took a few steps back and glared heatedly at Kinue. As the dark-skinned French woman snorted a wad of blood from her nose and raised her fists, Kinue had to give the woman credit for determination. Not everyone could survive a blow to the head from a Kamui while remaining both conscious and without a concussion.

When Kinue saw Jackie's scowl turn into a vicious smirk, she immediately let go of her Genji blade and crossed her arms over her body just in time to block her opponent's drop kick. There was absolute silence for about a second after the two women made contact but that was abruptly broken when the ground beneath Kinue's feet began rumbling before suddenly cratering inwards from the sheer force behind Jackie's kick.

" How is she getting stronger ?" Kinue grit her teeth before a burst of power, accompanied by a jet of steam from Danketsu, coursed through her body. Easily throwing Jackie Tristan backwards through the air, Kinue picked her Genji blade back up and slammed it hilt-first into her stomach and sending the dark-skinned woman rocketing through the air and back inside the building.

" She's stronger than when we started," Danketsu was getting pissed off at the lackluster job Kinue was doing against the member of Xcution. How hard could it be to fight someone wearing a cheap knockoff of a true and pure Kamui? Granted, the power of Jackie's Sanguinaire Raiment was no laughing matter and Danketsu could not fault Kinue for struggling against a full frontal blow, but Danketsu sure as hell wasn't going to say that. Instead, she scoffed rudely and added, "Why the hell are you going easy on her? Quit fucking around and kick her ass or I'll take control and do it for you!"

"Quiet down," Kinue hissed, earning a bemused look from her opponent.

"Qu'est-ce que c'est?" Jackie Tristan, who had recovered and was already walking back towards Kinue, noticed the moving eyes on Danketsu. It was unbelievable by her opponent was actually talking with her Kamui! This was something she needed to inform Lady Ragyo about as soon as she was finished. Only a few worthy humans would ever have the honor of hearing the glorious words from a Kamui. Not even the members of Xcution, who possessed some of the highest Life Fiber resistance in the world and wore uniforms with fifty percent Life Fibers, could wear a Kamui.

"From what Lady Ragyo said, her daughter is still unable to hear Junketsu's voice," Jackie glanced once more at Danketsu before wiping away the blood leaking from her lips, "If Lady Ragyo's own lineage is unworthy of hearing the beautiful voice of a Kamui then how on Earth is this woman able to do so?"

"So you can hear your Kamui?" When Jackie saw Kinue and her Kamui's eyes widen she knew her suspicions were correct. Everything was changed now that she knew Kinue could hear her Kamui. Instead of killing her as a sign to Nudist Beach she would instead knock her out and bring her back to Revocs headquarters. Lady Ragyo would love to see just what it was that allowed this nobody to hear the voice of a Kamui.

"Hey, I work for Revocs remember? I know almost all there is to know about how a Kamui works," Jackie crossed her arms under her ample chest and laughed before she adopted a murderous grin, "But now that I know you can hear its voice everything's changed! Lady Ragyo will be elated when I bring your unconscious body back to Revocs to figure out how you were able to do it!"

Kinue ignored the shift in Jackie's persona to focus on what was bothering her, "After I broke her nose I noticed a sharp rise in her power. Wait a second. Didn't she call her uniform Sanguinaire Raiment? If I remember my French, Sanguinaire stands for either bloody or bloodthirsty. Could it be that simple?"

"I take it from your enlightened expression you've figured out the special ability of my raiment," Jackie shrugged her shoulders before making it a point to raise her hand to her face. As Kinue watched closely, Jackie smeared the blood from her broken nose onto her armored hand only for the life-giving liquid to quickly be absorbed, "My Sanguinaire Raiment becomes more powerful the more I bleed and get hurt, but I'm not surprised that the woman who destroyed every Revocs Sewing Factory east of the Rhine River would figure it out."

Kinue narrowed her eyes. She was certain she had destroyed all photographic evidence of her presence during missions, "How do you know about me?"

The vicious grin on Jackie's face vanished and was replaced with a cocky smile, "Lady Ragyo's known about you ever since you somehow gave the Grand Couturier the slip in Rome. She knew that you Nudists would eventually be forced to take out this facility if you ever wanted to be more than just an annoyance. That's why she sent me, a member of her elite security force Xcution, here. Although had known you possessed a blessed Kamui I would have asked for some assistance."

"So you came here alone?" Kinue brought her Genji blade up into a basic stance. As rivers of rain dripped off the blade, she glared at Jackie and asked, "Do you really think you can stop me? Your best attacks have done little more than bruise me and yet you're the one bleeding out."

"So naïve," Jackie sighed and rubbed the knuckles of her hand against her forehead. Why did Nudists always think they could win against Life Fibers? Looking at Kinue with mock pity, she asked, "Do you honestly think that just because you are wearing a Kamui that you are not being worn yourself. Someone like you is unworthy of a Kamui's power and is nothing more than food for such a magnificent garment! It is only a matter of time before your body is bled dry by your Kamui! You should have let my first attack kill you. It would have been a much more merciful death than what's in store for you. You should take off your Kamui before it kills you. You're no good to Lady Ragyo dead."

"I'm tired of listening to her fucking preaching! This is a fight not a soap opera," Danketsu glared angrily at Jackie, "Kick her ass and be done with it!"

Kinue stared at Jackie with a stoic expression while ignoring the angry ranting of Danketsu, "Be quiet. I have a mission and nothing is going to get in my way. Especially not someone so conceited about their power that the prospect of losing completely eludes them. You've let Life Fibers corrupt your mind and turn you into something that's no longer human. I pity you for the monster you've become and the humanity you discarded along the way."

Snarling in rage, Jackie forced more blood into her Sanguinaire Raiment and raced towards Kinue with her fist cocked back. How dare a human who was fortunate enough to have the ability to wear a Kamui tell someone like her what to do! She was one of Lady Ragyo's elite forces and one of the few people privileged to know what the Life Fibers have in store for humanity. She no longer wanted to capture Kinue. No, now she wanted to bash her face in until it was nothing more than a bloody mess. With the amount of blood coursing through her raiment's Life Fibers, there was nothing that could beat her!

"Die you pig in human clothing!"

Kinue quickly sheathed her Genji blade and brought out her twin Armor-Piercing Anti-Life Fiber Sewing Needle Pistols or, as she calls them, the M-6 Carnifex. Unlike her brother who uses twin Sewing Needle Machine Guns that fire specialized Sewing Needles that can desynchronize the Life Fibers in a uniform from their wearer's control, Kinue tended to go with a much more practical and powerful approach. When dealing with opponents such as Nui Harime and Xcution who have seen such weaponry and can counter or avoid the projectiles it is best to go with something with a bit more power.

The Carnifex was able to shoot the same type of sewing needles as her brother's weapons but with a speed that gave them nearly five times the piercing power. Kinue was certain that even the Grand Couturier wouldn't be able to shrug off several rounds from her Carnifex.

"Do you think a mere Sewing Needle weapon would work on my raiment? Die crétin!" Jackie bragged in triumph. She was well aware of the Sewing Needle weaponry used by Nudist Beach, which is why all of Xcution's raiment was specifically designed to be immune to their unimaginative ammunition. The looks on the Nudists' faces when they found that their weapons had no effect brought a tear to Jackie's eyes.

"Sorry but only a fool would not use all the tools at their disposal," she sarcastically apologized as she leapt to the side just before Jackie could hit her. Backpedalling along the muddy ground, her heeled feet kicking up splashes of mud and water, she quickly raised the Carnifex in her right hand. Taking careful aim at her still turning opponent, Kinue fired off three needles in quick succession that traveled through the air and easily pierced the protective armor of Jackie Tristan's Sanguinaire Raiment.

"Salope!"

Jackie cursed in her native tongue as her entire left arm went completely numb from the needles. Reaching over and clenching her still working right hand around the three needles jammed deep in her shoulder, she painfully tore them out from her raiment with nary a grunt. As the feeling returned to her arm, she glared angrily at Kinue and shouted, "How did you do that? The Nudists I've killed never had such powerful weapons!"

"Let me give you a useful piece of information," Kinue shifted her arms around and fired the Carnifex in her left hand, "I may wear a Kamui but I am a true Nudist through and through. What I wear does not change that. Your failure to understand such a basic concept makes me pity you even more."

Knowing what was about to come, Jackie ran across the muddy ground as the armor piercing needles shot through the air inches only behind her. As her dirty boots continued to fight for traction against the slippery ground, she picked up the faint sound of Kinue's Carnifex clicking empty. Allowing a relieved grin to appear, Jackie turned towards her only to have several needles pierce the length of her legs.

"Merde!"

Jackie collapsed as her legs immediately went numb from the effects of the needles. Clenching her hands into fists in anger, Jackie looked up and saw Kinue's shadowed face briefly illuminated by a flash of lightning. As she witnessed Kinue aim her Carnifex at her, Jackie sneered, "What's going on? I heard your weapon click empty."

"I have two, remember?" Kinue made a motion of showing her second Carnifex to Jackie before aiming it back at her heart. She was in a very fortuitous situation. Kinue had come to Paris to destroy the Revocs Distribution Facility. She could not have dreamed that she would be able to capture a member of Xcution. The information Jackie Tristan possessed about Ragyo Kiryuin and her operations was immensely valuable. With rain streaking down her skin-tight Kamui, Kinue pressed a heel against Jackie's back, "I do not like to repeat myself so I will only say it once. Get up and put your hands behind your head."

"You... bitch..."

Kinue quickly jumped back as a burst of power exploded from Jackie. As the needles embedded in her legs were forced out, allowing her to stand up once more, Jackie glared at her opponent with all the hatred she could muster. Forcing as much blood through her raiment as she could, Jackie raised a hand, ignorant of the red-tinged steam wafting off of it, "I'm not to let a Nudist like you stop me! Lady Ragyo will not be stopped by the likes of you. Now die!"

Focusing all her power into her fist, Jackie let out a scream of anger and raced along the muddy ground towards Kinue. With all the blood she's fed to her raiment her power was now at a level greater than that of a Kamui. There was nothing Kinue could do to stop her.

With an almost dejected look in her eyes, Kinue watched Jackie run towards her with rage evident on her face. She didn't understand why people always tried to use one final attack when they were about to lose. It almost never works since it is usually out of desperation and thus not well thought out. Waiting until Jackie's fist was inches from her face, Kinue quickly moved in a blur of motion to do what she needed.

Kinue accomplished several things in the time it took Jackie to blink once. As Jackie's fist approached her face, Kinue firstly put her Carnifex pistols back into the hidden holsters on the small of her back. When Jackie's fist only an inch from her face Kinue let out a breath and allowed Danketsu's power to flow through her body. Just as the fist touched the tip of her nose, Kinue leaned back and avoided the attack altogether before twisting her body and smashing the hilt of her Genji blade directly into Jackie's solar plexus.

There was a cacophony of lights and purple stars before Jackie's body was propelled backwards through the air. As she impacted the wall of the distribution facility with a resounding echo, Kinue took the time to sheath her Genji blade once more and reload her Carnifexes. A lull like this in a serious fight was not a time to go searching for her opponent. She could sense that Jackie was conscious but more importantly agree. She would come back to her in a pitiful and hasty attempt at revenge, which will allow Kinue an easy chance to finish the fight.

As she clicked the final clip into her Carnifexes, Kinue lamented on the single design flaw of her weapons of choice. Unlike her brother's that can fire one hundred sewing needles before reloading, her weapons only had six shots before emptying. In return for a such major decrease in ammunition, her sewing needles packed much more of a punch. She had never actually tested it, but two six-needle clips should be enough to greatly weaken a Kamui instead of the many pin cushion bombs, spool grenades and rounds Tsumugu needed against Ryuko Matoi's Senketsu. Speaking of which...

Quickly reaching into a pocket on her fatigue pants, Kinue pulled out a pin cushion bomb and set the timer for five second before throwing it into the debris she knew Jackie was hiding in. Kinue knew that the Nudist explosive wouldn't damage her opponent or weaken her Sanguinaire Raiment. She was counting on Jackie becoming so enraged by the insultingly weak attack that she would charge out of cover and forget any plans she may have come up with just to attack her.

When the pin cushion bomb detonated and released its needle payload directly over its victim, Kinue felt Jackie's power increase as she shot out of the debris. "Well," she said dryly as her opponent's power seemed to keep increasing. Perhaps she should have gone with a spool grenade instead. It would have been less flashy, "That went better than I thought. I expected a member of Xcution to be more cautious and level-headed in battle."

" What were you thinking?" Danketsu asked in confusion. If there was one thing she knew about her wearer it was that Kinue was a pragmatist. She would never do anything in combat that was flashy, overly dramatic or prone to backfiring on her. That was why the Kamui was so confused about Kinue's recent actions. All Danketsu could detect from Kinue throwing the pin cushion bomb was a sharp and dangerous increase in Jackie's power. It was nearly to the point of equaling her raw power, which was something Danketsu did not appreciate one bit, "Have you fucking snapped or something?"

"Give me the benefit of the doubt, Danketsu," Kinue ran to the side to avoid Jackie's powered attack all the while continuing to spam sewing needles at every known junction in her Sanguinaire Raiment. It appeared that the anger and rage clouding Jackie Tristan's mind gave her immunity to the anesthetizing effect of the needles. While this would no doubt make taking down Jackie Tristan more difficult, it was not impossible. Kinue just needed to stay calm and focused. Her opponent's rage will work to her advantage in the end.

"How do you keep hitting me?"

Jackie didn't know what was going on and it really pissed her off. How could a mere Nudist who was blessed with the opportunity to wear a Kamui be beating her? There was no way in hell that a Kamui would even consider to be worn by someone opposing Lady Ragyo's ambitions and plans!

"If you think I'll fall to a Nudist, think again," Jackie snarled as she glared at Kinue. Slamming her fists together with enough power to cause a miniature shockwave to radiate outwards, her anger reached a tipping point when she saw Kinue staring impassively at her. Forcing her Sanguinaire Raiment to take in more blood than it could safely handle, all in an attempt to utterly destroy Kinue and her Kamui, Jackie was stunned when she felt the world around her spinning before she collapsed to the ground.

"It seems that the tranquilizing needles have finally started to take effect," Kinue walked slowly towards her downed opponent while being sure to keep her Carnifexes trained on every major seam, junction and weak point of Jackie's raiment. Coming to a stop front of Jackie's barely moving head, Kinue used her heel to flip her opponent over so that she could aim at her face, "Actually, that is only half right. While my Anti-Life Fiber sewing needles did a lot of the work, your own idiocy enabled me to win."

"What did... you do... to me?" Jackie struggled to speak but found it increasingly difficult. It felt as if her body was made of lead and no matter how much she willed it, her Sanguinaire Raiment failed to heed her call. Harshly coughing and staring up at her opponent's stoic face, Jackie was confused when Kinue holstered her Carnifexes.

"Your Sanguinaire Raiment's power is tied to how much blood you give it. That much you've told me," Kinue reached down and picked up Jackie's immobile form with a single hand. As two sets of eyes stared at their defeated opponent, Kinue ignored Danketsu's oh-so-helpful ideas on how to humiliate Jackie Tristan further, "But in the end the greatest strength of your Life Fiber uniform is also your greatest weakness."

Jackie struggled to move her arms and it was only after a concentrated effort that she was able to raise them high enough for her to close her hands around Kinue's wrist. She needed to get free and inform Lady Ragyo of Kinue's Kamui. Revocs losing the Paris Distribution Facility wasn't as important as dealing with someone like Kinue but the woman's strength was abnormally strong.

"H-How?"

Kinue's eyebrow arched upwards in curiosity, "How what?"

"How are you still alive?" Jackie seethed as she continued to struggle. She didn't understand why she was so weak. Her Sanguinaire Raiment should have blessed her with enough power to take down this damn Nudist and yet it seemed like Kinue's power was leagues above her own. Feebly kicking against Kinue's stomach, only to find the woman completely unflinching from the assault, she spat and shouted, "The Kamui should have devoured your unworthy body by now! There should be no blood left in your body! How are you still alive?"

"Oh, that. It's none of your business," Kinue's amusement in finding out what Jackie wanted to say quickly evaporated. Twisting her upper body around, Kinue spun around and launched Jackie's body through the air. The member of Xcution tumbled weakly while in flight until her body hit the wall hard enough to crater and crack it.

Jackie coughed harshly, flakes of blood escaping her lips, as she fell to the ground in an unmoving heap. Her body felt like it was completely dead and yet her mind still couldn't figure out why she was so damn weak. Looking up at her approaching opponent with half-lidded eyes, Jackie was thrust back against the wall when twelve sewing needles embedded themselves in her arms and legs. As the last dredges of power left her body, Jackie barely heard Kinue speaking to her.

"Your raiment must be tailored exceptionally well to still be in one piece. I don't suppose the Grand Couturier designed it herself, did she?" Kinue didn't expect an answer from her opponent. All of Jackie Tristan's offensive and defensive capabilities were destroyed, leaving her as nothing but an extremely weakened normal human. Holstering one of her Carnifexes while reloading the other, she trained the Sewing Needle weapon over Jackie's heart, "Let me tell you a useful piece of information. Are you familiar with the meaning of exsanguination? From your confused expression I see that you are not. It means that your body is dangerously low on blood."

"Fuck you, you damned Nudist," Jackie Tristan was on the verge of unconsciousness but she was not going to sit and listen to Kinue prattle on about stuff she didn't care about. Her defiance was shattered as Kinue fired three sewing needles into her stomach.

"I also hate to be interrupted," Kinue admonished evenly, her voice not betraying any other emotion other than irritation and annoyance at being interrupted. Changing the aim of her Carnifex to Jackie's head, she continued, "The more blood you gave to your Sanguinaire Raiment the less that remained in your body. In the past you've never fought anyone that forced you to truly fight, have you? You've never fought anything like Danketsu in all your time in Xcution. That is why as our fight dragged on you were forced to give your raiment more and more of your blood. You needed to do so in order to not lose, but in your haste you forget you needed blood to live. As your power increased your endurance and stamina fell. That is why you have lost."

"You think I care if you kill me?" Jackie spat blood on Danketsu only to see the Kamui visibly shift and remove the red liquid, "You Nudists are no match for Lady Ragyo! You've lost before you even knew you were fighting!"

"Seni-Soshitsu!"

Kinue Kinagase was not a woman who did not learn from others. Her Genji blade might not be as sharp as Satsuki Kiryuin's Bakuzan or possess the ability to sever Life Fibers like Ryuko Matoi's Scissor Blade, but it was more than good enough to destroy anything other than a Kamui. After she stuck around in Honnou City and witnessed a few of Ryuko and Ichigo's fights, she took the time to analyze their finishing moves until she was able to do it herself. A move like Seni-Soshitsu was not something she could afford to ignore.

Jackie Tristan didn't know what hit her as Kinue's Genji blade, which had just been holstered on her back, cut downwards through her Sanguinaire Raiment. As her Life Fiber uniform fell to tattered pieces of cloth around her, Jackie's last thought before falling into the inky darkness of unconsciousness was how Kinue possessed a Life Fiber weapon.

" I was wondering if she would ever fucking shut up," Danketsu glared down at Jackie's form, naked apart from her underwear, before shifting her attention on her wearer, "That was fun though! You completely and totally tore apart all her dreams and strategies without even trying. Perhaps working alongside you will be worth it if this is what we'll do from now on!"

"Quiet down, Danketsu," Kinue didn't need to voice her complete displeasure at Danketsu's behavior. Due to the new bond between the two of them, her Kamui could hear the intentions of her words and knew that she truly wasn't angry with Danketsu. Sparing one final look at Jackie Tristan's body, she reached for her cell phone and dialed a number. After the phone rang thrice, a familiar voice picked up, "Hello brother. Yes. Yes. I'm fine, although I ran into a complication during the mission. There was a member of Xcution stationed at the distribution facility. No, I'm not injured thanks to Danketsu."

Something Tsumugu asked caused Kinue's eyes to widen in mild annoyance, "No. I don't need to give my report directly to him. I can't deal with his nonsense right now. Tsumugu, I need you to do me a favor. Prep an immediate evac from my current location and make sure to account for a prisoner - a member of Xcution itself. Ragyo Kiryuin and Nui Harime's absence have given us a golden opportunity. We shouldn't let their generosity go to waste."

Hanging up and putting away her phone, Kinue hefted Jackie Tristan's body over her shoulder and began walking away from the Revocs facility. She was not stupid enough to link the Anti-Life Fiber charges to a timer. Revocs always had on hand one or two employees capable of disarming those types of explosives. The bombs she planted were linked to Danketsu's Life Fibers. The moment she walked a kilometer away from the charges, they would immediately detonate.

"Well now," Kinue gave a look to her prisoner before increasing her pace, "This has been quite the eventful morning."

---

...

---

"Students of Honnouji Academy!"

Satsuki Kiryuin, clad in Junketsu, slammed the hilt of Bakuzan against the stage as her voice echoed clear across the expansive ballroom without any electronic assistance. She did not need the help of any device to say what was needed to be said. Glancing across the ballroom, her gaze lingering on several people for a microsecond, the perpetual stoic expression on her face seemed to triple in intensity as a backdrop of light illuminated her in shadows, "For the past three years Parent Student Day has helped to weed out the weak from the strong! Those unable to adapt and persevere in the face of adversity and hardship have fallen by the wayside, discarded like the trash they are, while those with the fortitude and constitution to stand strong have prospered!"

"She sure likes to hear herself talk."

Ryuko Matoi leaned her chin onto her elbows as she stared up at Satsuki in annoyance. Even now the Student Council President was telling all of them just how lowly and worthless they were and that they should aspire to become her lackeys like the Elite Four. It, quite frankly, pissed her off.

" You should pay attention, Ryuko," Senketsu lightly chided his wearer's lack of attention. He may not have a choice when it came to listening to Satsuki Kiryuin talk but the information she was saying could one day be valuable. Swiveling his eye until he was looking directly at Satsuki's Kamui, Senketsu interestingly noticed Junketsu turn its eyes to look right back at him.

"I know," Ryuko whispered just loud enough for Senketsu to hear her. She couldn't afford to talk to her Kamui like she normally did while she was at the ceremony. Doing so would no doubt draw unwanted attention and Ryuko sure as hell didn't need any more of that, "It's just that listening to Satsuki preach on and on is really annoying."

" It seems that you're not the only one," Senketsu's voice had a hint of humor and mirth as he minutely moved his left sleeve, which Ryuko had been forced to pull all the way down for the ceremony, to get her attention. Once Ryuko looked down to see what he wanted, Senketsu motioned with his lapel to the stage, "Ichigo and Mugetsu look to be just as miserable as you."

Following Senketsu's line of sight up to the stage, Ryuko allowed a small grin to break through the façade of annoyance that had been plastered on her face ever since she had first walked into the room. Sitting just behind and to Satsuki Kiryuin's left was Ichigo. The teen had his standard scowl of annoyance on his face and from the way he was looking anywhere but Satsuki it was obvious he found her speech to be boring.

" Mugetsu's saying something."

"She is?" Ryuko focused her gaze on Ichigo's Kamui but couldn't pick up anything over the sound of Satsuki's speech, "I can't hear anything."

" Ryuko, you may wear me and I may be worn by you but you are not a Kamui. While I cannot hear any better than you when it comes to other humans nor can I read lips, the Life Fibers making up my being allow me to hear ultra-low acoustic effects created by other Kamui."

"Really?" Ryuko sat up a little straighter and stared down at her Kamui. She had no idea Senketsu had an ability like that, "What is Mugetsu saying?"

" Let me listen," Senketsu's eye closed in concentration and after a few seconds opened again. In an irritated tone, Senketsu answered, "She's telling me that I should have my Life Fibers bleached and starched. She's really upset that she's being forced to sit in front of hundreds of people. From the underlying desperation in Mugetsu's voice as well as the urgency it seems that my fellow Kamui has stage fright."

Finding out that Ichigo's Kamui had stage fright almost caused Ryuko to break out in a fit of laughter with the only thing stopping her being the fact that she was in a public ceremony with hundreds of people. Even she was not foolish enough to potentially piss off Satsuki Kiryuin and all of her little helpers all alone. Allowing a soft chuckle at Mugetsu's expense while filing away that information for later use, Ryuko looked over at the three women on the opposite side of the stage and immediately felt something off about them.

Ryuko didn't know what was bothering her about them. The dark-skinned woman wearing the white business suit, shorts and thigh high stockings didn't seem too strange apart from the fact that once in a while she would raise her fingers to her ear and whisper something. From the way she was acting and the sheer lack of any resemblance to Satsuki, Ryuko figured she was some sort of bodyguard or something. Next to the dark-skinned woman a tall woman wearing a pure white dress that Satsuki had introduced as her mother, Ragyo Kiryuin. The subtle, but still visible, rainbow aura emanating from the multicolored undertone of her silver hair was proof enough of her relation to Satsuki. Ryuko had no idea what Satsuki's mother was like but taking what she knew from Satsuki, Ragyo was probably just like her.

Before she shifted her attention away from Ragyo, Ryuko found herself entranced by the Kiryuin matriarch's rainbow undertone. She didn't understand the feeling in her chest but for some strange reason it reminded Ryuko of her own red highlight. For as long as she could remember Ryuko had been mystified by the single red bang of hair that always fell to the same exact length over her left eye. Ryuko had tried for years to get rid of it. She had tried cutting it off only for the bang to grow back in by the next morning. When she attempted to dye it the same shade of black as the rest of her hair, the dye simply slid off the bang like water right in front of her eyes. Eventually after dozens of failed attempts at hiding it she had given up.

Letting out a sigh of frustration as memories of her failed exploits at taming her red bang were brought to the forefront of her mind, Ryuko glanced over at the last of the three women and immediately felt something disturbing about her. It didn't come right away but after a few seconds of trying to piece together what was bothering her, Ryuko figured it out.

The blonde girl was staring directly at her.

As soon as Ryuko's dark blue eyes settled upon Nui Harime, the blonde haired girl's single visible eye immediately shifted and locked gazes with her, causing a small shiver to race up her spine. Ryuko could not figure out how the girl knew she was looking at her. She had to be more than fifty feet away in a nearly pitch black room for crying out loud. In fact, if it wasn't for Satsuki's backdrop of light illuminating the room Ryuko was certain she would not be able to see her hand in front of her face. So how did the girl know Ryuko was looking at her?

" What's wrong with her eye?" Ryuko forced herself to stare directly at Nui's face for a few more seconds while purposely ignoring the slightly deranged look in the Grand Couturier's eye. Out of Nui's entire ensemble, the purple eye patch over her left eye stuck out like a sore thumb. Narrowing her eyes slightly as she noticed a weird pattern to the eye patch, Ryuko thought for a moment that it resembled a set of Kanji or something, "Did something happen to it? Is she blind or something?"

Almost as if she was capable of reading Ryuko's thoughts, Nui Harime's smile slowly widened until it seemed to take up half of her face. With a saccharine grin adorning her face and her hands clasped politely on her lap over her kicking feet, Nui looked like the epitome of cuteness and innocence but Ryuko could not help but feel something off about her. She wasn't able to pinpoint where the feeling was coming from and with Senketsu too upset about whatever Mugetsu was telling him to be of any help, Ryuko decided to let it go for the moment but she just couldn't get rid of the notion that she had seen Nui somewhere before.

"This brings me to the following announcement - the reinstatement of Nonon Jakuzure into the Elite Four!" Satsuki's voice sharply rose in volume as she finished speaking, managing to break Ryuko's gaze away from Nui Harime and towards herself. What Ryuko, nor anyone else, would ever find out is that Satsuki had been quite aware of Ryuko's wandering attention and had purposely raised her voice to snap her back to reality before the Grand Couturier could attempt any of her mind games. Satsuki knew from firsthand experience that Nui Harime did not need to do or say anything to get inside someone's mind and with what she knew about Ryuko's past, it was clear she was in no way prepared for Nui's tricks.

Satsuki didn't need to do more than avert her gaze towards the table seating her Elite Four to get Nonon's undivided attention. While Jakuzure completely failed in her mission to discover what it was about Matoi and Ichigo that enabled them full control over their Kamui's respective powers, she did retrieve valuable evidence that may be just as important. Despite Jakuzure lack of social grace when it came to associating with anyone she perceived to be Satsuki's enemies, the information she gathered about Mugetsu and Senketsu's combat capabilities would be more than adequate when it came time for the implementation of the Naturals Election.

"As you all are no doubt aware, several weeks ago I expelled Nonon Jakuzure from the Elite Four! By failing her assigned task of defeating Ichigo Kurosaki and retrieving his Kamui, she had brought shame dishonor upon Honnouji Academy and everything it represents!" Satsuki slammed Bakuzan onto the hardwood stage, causing an echo to reverberate out into the ballroom from the impact, "But her time as a No-Star has shown me that she is deserving of one last chance! The information she has managed to gather will help to uphold the safety and security of Honnouji Academy against anyone that dares to stand against us! As of tonight Nonon Jakuzure is once again the Non-Athletic Committee Chair and will be treated with the respect she deserves! I will not tolerate anything less! Do I make myself clear?"

As if on cue every One and Two-Star student currently in attendance stood up and began clapping earnestly for the newly promoted Nonon. It was not that they were glad for her. On the contrary, many of them had been gunning for the position she vacated upon her demotion and were understandably upset to find that a position on the Elite Four was probably never actually up for grabs. Ignorant of the treasonous and jealous thoughts coursing through a lot of the applauding students Nonon stood up, a smug smirk on her face, and did on a one-armed bow to the audience.

" I may not have gotten my revenge on Strawberry or the Transfer Student but it's only a matter of time." Several plans on how to take her revenge on those that scorned and mocked her coursed through the devious pinkette's mind. With her position on the Elite Four once again publically accepted she could dedicate time and effort to taking revenge. Even Ichigo and his stupid Kamui would not be able to stand up to the might of her new Symphony Regalia Mark III.

Satsuki stood at attention as the noise in the ballroom died down. Once everyone's attention was squarely on her once more she resumed where she had left off, "This brings up another point of contention. For far too long a vital part of Honnouji Academy's hierarchy has been left vacant due to the simple fact that no one worthy enough of filling the void has shown themselves! That emptiness ends tonight! The position of Vice President of the Honnouji Academy Student Council has been filled! Stand at attention and welcome your new Vice President - Ichigo Kurosaki!"

Every pair of eyes in the ballroom turned towards Ichigo upon Satsuki's proclamation. As Mugetsu's shivering increased tenfold from the added attention, which was really annoying since he couldn't tell her to quit it while in public without sounding crazy, the former substitute shinigami could not help but feel that perhaps he should have refused Satsuki's offer of protection in exchange for keeping Nui Harime away from his friends. The Grand Couturier was, after all, sitting not twenty feet away from him. What was the damn point of becoming the Vice President of Honnouji Academy if the one person you wanted to stay far away from was sitting almost within arm's reach?

" It's like Nui is well aware of what Satsuki promised and is doing her best to piss me off. I swear she's trolling me or something."

Putting Nui's disturbing interest in him aside for the time being, Ichigo focused on the matter at hand. When he showed up an hour before the ceremony like Satsuki wanted, she had been quick to lay down the rules and itinerary of the night's events.

Handing Ichigo a list, Satsuki had begun mentally reciting the order of events for the night. The ceremony would start with the standard introduction before she would abruptly switch topics and introduce her mother, Ragyo Kiryuin. When Ichigo foolishly asked why it was so important to introduce Ragyo, Satsuki had nearly beheaded him with Bakuzan for daring to refer to her mother so casually. Muttering a quick and sarcastic apology and averting his eyes from Nonon and Sanageyama's snickering in the background, Ichigo decided to get out with it and ask what his part was in all this. Satsuki's glare had doubled in intensity at Ichigo's continuing rude behavior but when he refused to back down, she had been forced to concede that she could not deal with him like a normal person. Where most students and even adults would be cowed by her presence and overwhelming willpower, such things had no effect on Ichigo.

After she thought about his question for far too long a time, which should have been Ichigo's first cue that something was off, Satsuki had softly smiled and said that he would need to give a speech.

"How the hell could she expect me to give a speech when I only had an hour to do it?" Ichigo thought in annoyance as his frustration came to a head, "It would have made a lot more sense to tell me this yesterday. What does she want me to do, make up crap about how 'amazing and powerful' she is?"

Amazingly enough that was exactly what Satsuki wanted him to do.

Standing up and ignoring Mugetsu's pleas for him to activate her transformed state and get out of there, Ichigo took the microphone conveniently offered to him by a groveling One-Star student and made his way towards Satsuki at the front of the stage. While making sure not to look at his dad, who was snapping pictures, Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck and let out a sigh that the microphone managed to pick up.

"So apparently I'm your new Vice President. Truthfully I have no clue what I'm supposed to do," Ichigo stopped briefly and gave a look of annoyance at Satsuki, who had moved to stand on the opposite side of Rei Hououmaru from her mother. Deciding to get it over and done with while mentally telling the consequences to go to hell, Ichigo snapped back to attention and said, "If I'm going to be your Vice President I should probably start with how much I didn't want the job. Satsuki asked me to take the job five times before I finally gave in and said yes."

Slightly curious about why Satsuki wasn't moving to stop him, Ichigo nevertheless continued, "Most of you probably hate me for not bowing down before the great Satsuki but I just don't care. All I wanted to do when I came to Honnouji Academy was to get through a full school year without anything crazy going on but as soon as I arrived I was pulled into a fight courtesy of our "glorious" Student Council President. Now if you'll please excuse me I have other, more important, places to be."

Fully vented of his frustration, Ichigo tossed the microphone to a still silent Satsuki and walked backstage. As soon as he opened the exit behind the stage he let out an audible sigh of relief. He was certain that the way the Elite Four were looking at him towards the end, especially Gamagori, that they would jump on stage to enact their strict form of discipline on him.

" Never ever do that again, Ichigo," Mugetsu swallowed nervously, a remarkable feat for a Kamui that lacked a mouth. Ever since Ichigo walked on stage and she saw the hundreds of people looking in her general direction, the normally confident and boasting Kamui had been reduced to a mute mess, unable to do anything more than move her body to let Ichigo know what she wanted. Senketsu's lack of empathy did not help either.

"Hey," Ichigo glared at his Kamui's eyes in equal annoyance, "How the hell was I supposed to know you would have stage fright?"

"Now you know," Mugetsu's eyes narrowed dangerously, "And you will never do it again or you'll suffer the consequences."

Ichigo rolled his eyes, "Sure I will..."

Unbeknownst to Ichigo, things in the ballroom had quickly moved on after his tirade. While most of those loyal and devoted to Satsuki had been incensed at what he said, most of those in attendance had quickly forgotten when dozens of waiters and waitresses came out of nowhere with trays of high quality food, drinks and wines that were of a quality only Two-Stars were used to partaking in. The Mankanshoku family in particular had a photographic memory when it came to food and vividly remembered each and every single dish brought out to them. While they were depressed that they could no longer eat such wondrous food whenever they wanted, they were content with being a happy and loving family once more.

"It appears that your description of Ichigo was accurate," Ragyo Kiryuin majestically stepped down from the stage with a sly smile on her face. She had been quite pleased with Ichigo's performance just a few minutes ago. In fact, she was still shivering from the power and authority each of his words possessed. Turning maroon eyes at Satsuki walking respectfully at her side, Ragyo remembered watching the video of Ichigo and his Kamui defeating Junketsu. Mentally connecting with the Life Fiber being she had created so many years ago, Ragyo was intrigued when the Kamui's voice suggested nothing but admiration for Ichigo and Mugetsu.

"Thank you mother," Satsuki's voice was subdued as it always was in the presence of her mother. While she was the Student Council President, she knew her mother was the true ruler of Honnouji Academy and could easily dispose of her if she truly wanted to. For the moment she would play the helpless and subservient daughter, "I will let Inumuta know you found his information acceptable."

"Ichigo's Kamui is truly magnificent. It is a work of art and its Life Fibers are beautifully woven together," The Kiryuin matriarch seemed lost in her words before turning towards her daughter,

"Ichigo would make a fine addition to the Kiryuin family. His compatibility with Life Fibers exceeds your own and his body truly seems to be made to be worn by clothing. He would be the perfect man for you to court, wouldn't you agree?"

A slight creasing of Satsuki's brows was the only sign of the embarrassment she felt at the conversation her mother had started, "I will admit that Ichigo had piqued my interests. He does not seem to be concerned with material wealth and views the power his Kamui grants him as nothing but a means to an end."

"He is truly Isshin's son," Satsuki stopped walking as she watched her mother and Rei Hououmaru continue forward, "I look forward to seeing what becomes of you and Ichigo."

"Yes mother," Satsuki felt something off as she watched her mother leave but for the moment put it aside as she made her way back to where her Elite Four were waiting. It was only as Sanageyama bowed his head towards her that she realized what it was she saw, or rather who she failed to see.

---

...

---

Ichigo silently walked through the empty halls of Honnouji Academy in deep thought as the sounds coming from the ballroom grew quieter. He knew what he did was probably going to come back and bite him in the ass tomorrow but in all honesty he was getting a little sick and tired of Satsuki always thinking she's better than him. While he was grateful for her assistance against Nui Harime the previous day, the fact that she apparently knew the Grand Couturier on a more than personal level was highly suspicious.

" So what are you going to do now?" Mugetsu had calmed down since leaving the ceremony and was back to her normal and impatient self. Letting the feeling of complete isolation with no eyes watching her every move circulate through her Life Fibers, she looked up at her wearer and said, "Satsuki Kiryuin is not going to ignore what you did. If I didn't agree completely with what you said, I would be calling you a complete idiot."

"Someone needed to bring her down a peg," Ichigo defended his actions with a hint of annoyance in his voice, "Unfortunately I'm the only one who seems to have ever beaten her in a fight, which means she's probably going to want to figure out why I'm so strong. Damn, this is getting complicated. Things would be a lot easier if I didn't have to save Ryuko."

" Satsuki would have killed Ryuko."

"Maybe..." Ichigo frowned as something about Satsuki's expression that morning long ago came back to him. When he blocked her Bakuzan with his Tournesol, he had looked into Satsuki's eyes and noticed what could only be relief. At the time he thought Satsuki was relieved she finally had a worthy adversary to test Junketsu out against, which ended up working against her when Mugetsu's power proved too much for her Kamui to handle, but with everything going on Ichigo was beginning to have a different theory. Perhaps Satsuki was relieved because he had shown up in time to save Ryuko? If that was the case, than why was Satsuki sending out all the club captains after them and, from what Ryuko told him, order Mako to kill Ryuko?

" Oh man, this is confusing," Ichigo rubbed his eyes and yawned. Why couldn't people just announce their motives or reasons instead of hiding behind walls upon walls of conspiracies, gambits and schemes?

" But she can't do anything to you," Mugetsu's voice was positively beaming with praise as she spoke, "During our fight all those weeks ago as well as our collaboration against Nui Harime yesterday, it was our power that was greater. If we hadn't constantly drawn Nui's attention, Satsuki Kiryuin would likely have been killed by that monster. I just wish Junketsu would stop staring at me silently every chance it gets."

Ichigo looked down in surprise at his Kamui, "Wait just a second, shouldn't Junketsu talk? Why haven't I heard it say anything?"

" Junketsu has yet to say a word telepathically. If a Kamui wears a human and is, in turn, worn by a human it can telepathically communicate with their wearer. That is the reason why you and Ryuko are able to hear both my and Senketsu's voice. We trust you two enough to let you hear our actual voices. I don't know much about Junketsu's relationship with Satsuki Kiryuin, but it is quite likely she has less than an amiable relationship with the Kamui."

"I should tell her about this," Ichigo muttered out loud. When he saw Mugetsu looking at him with a suspicious gaze, he sighed and clarified, "Remember what happened at the end of my fight against Satsuki? Junketsu was trying to kill her. I don't like Satsuki any more than you do, but I'm not going to let her die just because we're on opposite sides."

Mugetsu growled softly before scoffing, "Fine, but don't make it too easy for her! Junketsu was holding back nearly half of its full power from Satsuki Kiryuin. If you help her form a true bond with her Kamui, it might make her too strong for us to beat!"

"I'll burn that bridge when I come to it. Besides, now that I'm her Vice President or whatever I'm probably going to be - "

"That was a hell of a speech, Ichigo."

Before Ichigo was able to turn around and confront the owner of the familiar voice, he found his legs quickly swept out from underneath his body. As he slammed back-first onto the ground, he tried to get up only to find himself pinned heavily to the ground by a foot to the chest. Staring up into the amber eyes of his ambusher, Ichigo sighed and gave up struggling, "Hello Yoruichi."

Yoruichi Shihoin gave the former substitute shinigami a cat-like grin as she leaned on her leg, "How are you doing this fine evening? You seem a little down tonight, Ichigo."

"Oh, I'm just great aside from the fact that you're standing right on top of me!" Yoruichi chuckled at how easy it was for her to annoy him. Isshin's kid always did seem to have a short temper when it came to dealing with ladies. Removing her foot from on top of Ichigo's chest, Yoruichi stood back and watched as he got up and dusted Mugetsu off before giving her a sharp glare, "Why are you here, Yoruichi?"

"What kind of question is that?" Yoruichi butted her head against Ichigo's forehead and jabbed her finger into his chest, "What's so strange about a teacher checking up on her favorite student? If I didn't know any better, I would say you were upset that I stopped by!"

"Of course I'm suspicious!" Ichigo pushed back against Yoruichi as his eye began to twitch, "I've been at Honnouji Academy for almost seven weeks and the only time I've seen you is when you dropped off my sword."

Yoruichi gave Ichigo a gasp containing nothing but complete and utter shock at her student's harsh and critical words. When she saw that Ichigo wasn't moved by her acting, Yoruichi burst out into laughter, "I'm glad you haven't changed a bit Ichigo! If you had reacted any other way I would have made sure to beat some common sense back into the thick skull of yours. If you really want to know why I'm here, it's because I came to see you."

Ichigo backed off for the moment, "Me?"

"It's sort of a long story so I'm just going to start at the beginning," Yoruichi's amber irises shifted to the side as she gazed down the seemingly empty corridor. Expanding her senses, honed by centuries as a shinigami and captain of the Second Division, Yoruichi relaxed when she didn't sense anyone within range and turned her eyes back to him, "After I dropped off your sword and left, I found myself the target of an assassination attempt."

"What?" Ichigo had been expecting a ridiculous answer from the mischievous shinigami, but something like that was a shock.

"Oh please, who do you take me for?" Yoruichi sounded more insulted that Ichigo thought she was hurt from the assassination attempt than from the notion that someone would actually try to kill her. Grinning like a cat once more, Yoruichi folded her arms and said, "It will take a lot more than a simple rocket to take me out. The problem came from the person I had to fight - a girl by the name of Nui Harime."

Ichigo didn't answer right away as he pondered how the hell she always knew where to go. Swallowing the bile in his throat before it could rise any further, he twisted his head away from Yoruichi's penetrating gaze, "I know who she is. I've fought her twice now."

Yoruichi placed her hands on her hips and scoffed but didn't say anything. The memories of her fight against the Grand Couturier were still fresh in her mind. She never thought she would fight a human that was faster than Sui-Feng. If she hadn't continued training her speed and reflexes after the fight against Aizen and his arrancar forces, her surprise at Nui's immense speed could have been her downfall. Once she became used to Nui's speed, Yoruichi didn't have much of an issue avoiding her attacks. The problem was with Nui's terrifying endurance and regeneration. She didn't think even Kenpachi could walk away from having his head forced through nearly a foot of concrete and asphalt without getting at least slightly injured.

"While figuring out a way to counteract Nui Harime's strength and regeneration is important, it is not the reason I came to see you," Yoruichi reached into her jacket, a new one since the last one was torn up by a rocket, and handed Ichigo an old weathered journal that had the name SOUICHIRO embellished on the cover. Opening the old journal and flipping through the hand-written pages, Ichigo stopped when Yoruichi started to talk again, "Once I got back to Karakura Town and made sure Nui wasn't tracking me down, I headed back to Kisuke's shop. I thought it was awfully convenient that someone would come to kill me just after delivering your sword and showing you the picture and video. As I dug through the remains of the underground training room I found one of Kisuke's lockboxes."

"And this journal was in it?" Ichigo flipped to the first page of the journal and noticed that the date in the corner was from nearly nineteen years ago.

Yoruichi nodded, "There were two things in the lockbox - that journal and a note from Kisuke about Life Fibers."

When Ichigo gave her a surprised look, Yoruichi scoffed incredulously, "I know enough about Life Fibers now to be in the loop. Kisuke's notes contained a lot of disturbing information about the correlation between humanity and Life Fibers. I couldn't make heads or tails of what Kisuke was trying to say but one thing I was able to decipher was that Life Fibers have been around a long time, Ichigo. Kisuke was able to date Life Fibers and place their age to at least seventy thousand years. Life Fibers are alive Ichigo, and they've been around for far longer than the Thirteen Court Guard Squads."

"There was something else in the lockbox - a note written by Kisuke," Yoruichi's words brought Ichigo out of his thoughts concerning the age of Life Fibers and Mugetsu, "I thought it might be important but it turned out to only have a few scribbled sentences about some of Kisuke's theories on Life Fibers. It didn't make much sense to me, but Kisuke thought that all Life Fibers are capable of emitting and receiving an unknown signal. He ended the note with only a single word - Domination. Does that make any sense to you?"

"Domination?" Ichigo didn't have a clue what that might mean. It had to do something with Life Fibers but he couldn't figure out what it might mean. Deciding to forego secrecy, he glanced down at Mugetsu and asked, "That mean anything to you?"

" I am afraid not," Mugetsu answered curtly, "Unfortunately my knowledge of Life Fibers is limited. I am just as stunned as you are about the potential age of my Life Fibers. As for what Domination could mean I haven't the slightest clue."

"What a great help you are," Ichigo sarcastically muttered.

"Who are you talking to?"

Ichigo saw Yoruichi staring at him with a suspicious look in her eyes. Sighing dramatically, he pointed to Mugetsu's right eye and said, "I asked Mugetsu if she knew anything about what Kisuke wrote. It turns out she's just as clueless as the rest of us."

" Don't call me clueless. I just have a distinct lack of information pertaining to the matter at hand."

"That means you're clueless!" Ichigo snapped back, ignoring the amused grin on Yoruichi's face, "Why can't you just admit you don't know anything about this?"

Yoruichi clapped her hands right next to Ichigo's ear to regain his attention, "While I would love to continue listening to this one-sided conversation, I need to know if you have always been able to hear Mugetsu."

"What?" Ichigo ignored the return barb from his Kamui, "Ever since she woke up after I accidentally got some of my blood on her, Mugetsu's been able to telepathically speak to me."

"That's... I don't know what to say to that," Yoruichi was having quite the hard time digesting what Ichigo told her. Kisuke's notes hadn't contained any information about a Kamui being sentient or able to talk and the fact that Ichigo was the only one able to hear Mugetsu caused alarms to go off in her head, "Are you sure you're hearing Mugetsu talk?"

It took Ichigo less than a second to understand Yoruichi's true question, "I'm not crazy! Ryuko can hear Mugetsu as well!"

"Fine," Yoruichi raised her hands in defeat. Perhaps she was wrong about whether or not Ichigo could hear Mugetsu. He was the one with the Kamui after all while she was going from the sparse notes Kisuke left behind. Cursing her best friend's photographic memory and his inability to keep written records, she grinned mischievously as something Ichigo said came to mind, "So Mugetsu's a girl? Are you two going steady?"

" Ichigo, what does she mean by 'going steady?'"

Ichigo, embarrassed by Yoruichi's question, opened his mouth to respond but was forced to stop when Yoruichi pressed her hand against it, "You might want to think about your answer and get back to me. It seems we have an uninvited guest."

"Oh, that's not fair" A childish voice echoed through the empty hall, "I was hoping to sneak up on you before you noticed I was here!"

Accompanied by a burst of melodious laughter, Nui Harime appeared from behind Ichigo and wrapped her left arm around his right arm. With a smile that stretched across her face, she looked up into Ichigo's eyes and stuck out her tongue, "I can't believe you were able to notice I was there, especially since I was trying super hard not to be found. I've always been good at hide and seek, you know? But it's so good that I found you Ichigo! I wanted to tell you that your little speech was just awesome and inspiring. I expect nothing less from my favorite cousin who actually beat Satsuki in a fight! I could beat her, of course, but it's just awesome to know that you're just like me now!"

"I'm nothing like you," Ichigo retorted, ignoring the strange feeling emanating from where Nui touched him.

"Why are you being so mean to me? Cousins should get along, you know," Nui pouted and puffed her cheeks out, "I mean, we're family and family should stick together. The warmth from our hearts beating as one just makes me happy!"

Turning her attention away from Ichigo and his lovely Kamui, Nui focused every bit of her intent and focus on Yoruichi. As the childish pout on her face vanished and her sapphire eye darkened in the shadowy hall, the Grand Couturier reached into her pink dress and casually pulled out the larger purple Scissor Blade, "Oh. It's you. I remember you. It's been quite a while. How have you been? Did you know I made a promise to myself after the last time we met? I promised that if I ever saw you again I would cut off one of your arms. Since being around Ichigo's put me in a good and cheerful mood, I'm going to be generous about which arm you get to keep. So pick the arm you happen to like the least, please!"

"You're a confident one," Yoruichi was unperturbed by Nui's threat. Instead of cowering or trying to run away, Yoruichi instead crossed her arms over her chest and gave the Grand Couturier a wide and confident grin, "But from what I remember, you were unable to land a single hit on me the last time we fought. Do you remember how I stole your blade twice and crushed your skull into the pavement? Let's face it, you may be able to heal from any injuries I could give you but you're never going to be able to even catch me!"

"Oh?" Nui's grin turned downright murderous as she vanished from next to Ichigo and reappeared in front of Yoruichi with her purple Scissor Blade held up high in the air. With a sadistic grin on her face, Nui's singular eye widened manically as she slashed towards through Yoruichi's body, "Hearing a human talk to me like that is so insulting! You should just lie down and die!"

The two halves of Yoruichi's body fell slowly to the ground and Nui's smile widened upon killing the one person that got away from her. That smile quickly vanished and was replaced by stunned disbelief as what she thought was a corpse vanished.

"Utsusemi."

Nui turned her head around to see Yoruichi standing unharmed down the hallway apart from a small tear on her jacket. Giving the Grand Couturier a mock salute, she sarcastically said, "You have speed but you'll never be able to catch me. I'm not known as the Goddess of Flash for nothing!"

"How interesting! A human that can avoid my attacks like that is really interesting. I'm going to enjoy cutting you open and finding just how you work," Nui was insulted that Yoruichi, a mere human, was able to avoid her attack. The Grand Couturier had been certain her Scissor Blade had sliced cleanly through Yoruichi's flesh and bone but despite her attitude and childishness, Nui had a sharp and keen mind. She understood that if Yoruichi was able to avoid her attack so easily then trying to kill her was going to be a problem.

"Well since that is out of the way, I'm going to head back Ichigo," Yoruichi nodded to Ichigo as she kicked open one of the windows. Before she leapt out into the night's cool air, she gave Nui one last mocking salute, "Be sure to call me if you ever need someone to show just how slow you really are!"

Nui puffed her cheeks out and huffed as Yoruichi disappeared into the darkness outside. She was still peeved that Yoruichi had avoided her attacks and wanted nothing more than to tear apart the dark-skinned woman limb from limb but that was what underlings are for! As soon as she got back to Revocs Nui made a mental note to order Rei to send a member or two of Xcution after Yoruichi. No one made a fool of the Grand Couturier and lived long enough to enjoy it.

"Well now that the wet blanket is gone, I have something super-duper awesome to tell you Ichigo!"

Nui spun on her heel and twirled around before pulling a piece of paper out of thin air. Handing it to Ichigo with an accompanying giggle, she wrapped her arm around his and leaned in, "You left the ceremony so quickly that Satsuki wasn't able to let you know about the Naturals Election coming up!"

Ichigo tried to pull his arm free but found Nui's grip to be like a vice, "Naturals Election?"

"Uh huh!" Nui nodded and stared happily at Ichigo, "It's all for that Ryuko Matoi girl! At least that's what I heard Satsuki tell her little stooges! It's supposed to start in a couple of days and you're going to be fighting too! Isn't that awesome?"

"Like hell I'm going to fight Ryuko!" Ichigo managed to tear his arm free from Nui's grasp and almost tore it out of the socket in the process. Rubbing his shoulder, he glared at Nui and asked, "What makes you think I'm going to do anything Satsuki says?"

"Huh?"

Nui tilted her head to the side and blinked owlishly before Ichigo's question hit her. Smiling and sticking out her tongue, she answered, "Oh, you got it all wrong! You're going to be fighting alongside Ryuko, at least if she survives the whole seven days! I'm really rooting for her, you know? She's going to be in for a really awesome surprise if she makes it to the last match! Good luck, Ichigo!"

Humming softly to herself, Nui began to skip her way back to Lady Ragyo's side. It was really good that she came to see how Ichigo was feeling after he stormed out of the ceremony. Who knows what lies that Yoruichi lady could have filled his head with if she hadn't come to save him?

"I can't see it."

Nui skidded to a stop as Ichigo spoke. Turning her head sharply around, her face adopting a pose of confusion, she asked, "What are you talking about, Ichigo?"

"I know you're Ururu's twin sister," Ichigo's words cut sharply through Nui's cheerful façade and the smile on her face immediately fell. As her normally bright blue eye darkened and seemed to drain of all emotions, Ichigo ignored it and continued, "But she's nothing like you."

"Please don't talk about things you have no knowledge about." The sheer lack of emotion in Nui's voice caused Ichigo to pause and take notice. Staring deeply into Nui's emotionless gaze, he realized he had seen that look somewhere before - on Ururu's face. Before he could question what she meant, Nui vanished in a burst of speed, leaving him all alone in the hallway.

" I said it once and I'll say it again. Nui Harime is a dangerous woman," Mugetsu's voice cut through the silence like a knife, "But she mentioned a Naturals Election. Are you going to participate?"

"Does it look like I have a choice in the matter?" Ichigo grumbled and began walking in the direction of his dorm, "Satsuki's got something planned... and that's not mentioning what Nui's has in store for Ryuko with her 'surprise.'"

" Agreed," Mugetsu's multicolored eyes narrowed as she tried to shake off the feeling of Nui's hands on her sleeves, "I don't know what that woman wants with Ryuko but I'm not going to just stand around and let it happen!"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #14 - How a Kamui Changes its Look

There was a burst of static before Senketsu appeared in front of the camera. As his one eye loomed ominously in front of the lens, he backed off and waved with one of his sleeves, "Hello and welcome to another exciting episode of Kamui Tales! I'm your host Senketsu and tonight we're going to go over the various transformations or configurations of Kamui. First we'll start with - "

Senketsu's introduction to the omake was cut off harshly as Mugetsu flew out of nowhere and smashed the bottom part of her uniform into his mouth. As the male sailor uniform gagged as he was kicked off stage, eventually hitting something with a loud crash, Ichigo's Kamui huffed angrily and crossed her sleeves in a pose reminiscent of a pout, "Why are you the host of this omake? You're not the only Kamui able to do the job, you know!"

" I'm hosting it because I'm the readers' favorite Kamui! "

Senketsu argued passionately as he hovered back onscreen and growled menacingly at an increasingly annoyed Mugetsu. Before she could argue back, however, a rude feminine voice interrupted Senketsu for her.

" Actually I'm hosting the omake."

Mugetsu and Senketsu looked to the left as the camera panned out to show Kinue Kinagase sitting calmly in a chair with her legs folded over one another. It was obvious that with the headphones over her ears and her eyes focused squarely on the book in her hand that she hadn't been the one to interrupt their argument. When Kinue noticed the camera was zooming in on her face, she rolled her eyes and pointed with her thumb to Danketsu's narrowing eyes.

" The author has made me the host of this omake," Danketsu declared enthusiastically, "After my epic battle against Jackie Tristan no other Kamui could compare to my fucking power!"

Senketsu and Mugetsu shared a look before both Kamui rolled their eyes at Danketsu's boasting. Seeming to come to a mental decision at once, Senketsu raised his sleeve at Danketsu and asked, "You're lying. The author would never make a bloodthirsty Kamui like you the host of an omake! How do you know you're not lying?"

" Like this."

Danketsu turned her eyes up to her wearer and coughed to get Kinue's attention. When the elder Kinagase sibling continued to ignore her Kamui, Danketsu decided to take a more physical approach and forcibly took control of Kinue's hand long enough to get her to drop the book. While she was more than a little annoyed at her Kamui for forcing her to lose her place in the book she was reading, Kinue nevertheless reached into her pocket and pulled out a familiar remote. Clicking on the button once and bringing up an image of Ichigo fighting Nonon while transformed into Mugetsu's Gufū configuration, she raised up eyebrow when Mugetsu and Senketsu depressingly deflated onto the floor.

With a happy tone in her voice, Danketsu began her narration, "Ok, listen up since I don't want to say this damn speech twice. Every Kamui has the ability to change their body in order to increase their battle potential. Mugetsu Gufū is a good example of what a Kamui can do when dealing with an airborne opponent like Nonon Jakuzure. By transforming each of Ichigo's legs into a separate propulsion system powered by the Life Fibers inside a Kamui, Mugetsu allows her human to fly under his own power. Hey, switch to the next slide, you annoying bitch!"

Kinue seemed to pick up the insult through her headphones because as soon as the expletive left Danketsu's mouth, she tossed the remote to a recovered Senketsu.

" Ah, thank you kind woman!" Senketsu blushed when Kinue nodded in appreciation. Dodging Mugetsu's attempt to claim the remote, he pressed the button and switched to the slide of Ryuko's first battle against Sanageyama, "Kamui configurations are not just limited to changing the field of battle. We can also shift forms to give our wearers new and unique abilities in combat. The invisible blade granted to Ryuko by my Senkou configuration is perfect for dealing with an opponent who relies on his eyes to avoid attacks."

Stopping as he finished his explanation, Senketsu looked around suspiciously when he noticed Mugetsu was no longer there. Turning to ask Danketsu if she saw her, he reconsidered when he saw the belligerent Kamui shouting at her wearer for giving the remote away.

Kinue, due to her headphones and selective hearing, simply ignored her Kamui's ranting as she turned a page in her recovered book.

" Now Junketsu!"

Senketsu's eye widened in surprise as Satsuki's Kamui grabbed his sleeves from behind and held him tightly. Struggling to get free, he turned to the silent Kamui and shouted, "Junketsu? What are you doing in this omake?"

Junketsu averted her eyes away from Senketsu before pointing with her lapel in front of him. That gave the male Kamui just enough time to see Mugetsu appear out of nowhere and grab the remote from him.

" Serves you right," Mugetsu growled before turning her attention to the other Kamui, "Thanks for the help Junketsu. You want to try this?"

Junketsu shook her lapels before picking up her dry erase board and marker, "No thank you."

Tearing his uniform free from Junketsu's grip, Senketsu scratched his sleeve in confusion as he asked, "We know you can speak. Anyone in an omake has the ability to read and view all the previous omakes. "

Junketsu's eyes widened in fear before her whole uniform began shaking violently. Letting out a very feminine gasp of fright, Junketsu's eyes rolled up into her shoulders as she collapsed to the ground in embarrassment at someone actually hearing her voice.

" Oh great, you broke her," Mugetsu chastised her fellow Kamui as she nudged Junketsu's fallen form with one of her pant legs.

" I didn't break her," Senketsu countered before sighing and grabbing the top of Junketsu's uniform, "Anyway, we can't just leave her here. You grab her skirt and we'll find a nice hanger to put her on."

"Fine," Mugetsu spat as she dropped the remote and grabbed the other end of Junketsu, "But keep your sleeves where I can see them. I've seen how you transform! If you try anything on Junketsu I'll tear you apart one Life Fiber at a time!"

I Will Survive

Wow. This chapter is the longest I've ever written. Without even accounting for padding or other things, it's sitting at a whopping 17,500 words. That breaks my old record by nearly two thousand words. So anyway, this chapter covers the entirety of Episode 8 (apart from the last minute or two). I didn't want to start the King of the Hill final battles (which will be different!) in the middle of a chapter. They are important and should be given the proper focus.

This chapter is also focused more heavily on Ryuko than the last few chapters. I realized I was starting to focus too intently on Ichigo and needed to shift back to Ryuko for a bit. Some of what Ryuko (and Satsuki) says here will be similar to what she says in canon but it kind of hard not to use the script given. The entire point of going to her father's destroyed home will also be flipped over by the end of the chapter. So there is the highway chase from Episode 8 in this chapter and I will say that it's many times better than what happened in the anime.

There's also a very slight retcon. Nonon's new Goku Uniform is dark blue with gold stars to help differentiate it better from the rest of the Elite Four.

Oh, I didn't forget about Nudist Beach and Xcution. A very famous member of Xcution will also be mentioned. Don't forget to read and review and enjoy the chapter!

P.S. - Just a heads up, I kept Mako's 'Drive to Hell' song from the subbed version of Episode 8 since it's so funny. Kudos to the person that thought up that particular song for the series.

---

...

---

Chapter 27 - I Will Survive

"Fellow students of Honnouji Academy, it is time we begin anew!"

Satsuki Kiryuin's commanding tone echoed out over the horde of students standing shoulder to shoulder in the courtyard below. Every student at the academy, ranging from the multitudes of No-Star all the way up to the comparative handful of Two-Star, was in attendance. Even former club captains like Takaharu Fukuroda and Omiko Hakodate, who were demoted after losing to either Ichigo or Ryuko, stood silently at attention.

Slamming the sheathed Bakuzan loudly on the podium in front of her, Satsuki clasped the hilt of the Life Fiber blade with both of her hands and glanced at the person standing next to her. Despite what Ichigo thought he could accomplish by mocking and deriding her rule during the Parent Student Day ceremony, his speech had only helped to increase her admiration for him. Not many would dare to even speak a word against her. Turning her gaze away from the scowling Ichigo, she stared back down at the crowd and shouted, "I have read the abysmal reports from Parent Student Day and I find myself appalled! How can any of you stand in front of me with your heads held high? Has the standards of Honnouji Academy grown lax? The answer is yes! That is why starting today I am rebuilding the Honnouji Academy Student Council system from the ground up!"

Intense muttering spread throughout the courtyard as the students discussed what Satsuki could be planning. Ignoring the sounds of the students and their fruitless questions, Satsuki continued, "The rule against attacking other students without clearing it through the Disciplinary Committee is hereby rescinded! All of you now possess the freedom to attack any other student you please without repercussions!"

"Lady Satsuki sure is enjoying this."

Absentmindedly twirling her baton between her fingers, Nonon Jakuzure stood at attention behind Satsuki and to her immediate right. Dexterously stopping the baton as it nearly slipped out of her fingers, she ignored the glance Gamagori was giving her to focus on the feeling of her new Symphony Regalia Mark III. Even though Lady Satsuki awarded her the new version of her Goku Uniform last week, Iori had forbidden her from activating it for a period of two weeks under the excuse he wanted to observe its strain on her body. According to him, he could not increase the overall power of her Goku Uniform past the Mark II without subsequently raising the Life Fiber percentage as well, which now sat at a record 35%.

That was the reason why her Goku Uniform, which used to possess the standard Honnouji Academy grey coloring with black stars, now had a scheme of predominantly dark blue with golden stars emblazoned upon it. It was all in order to differentiate the power between the old and new class of Three-Star Goku Uniforms.

Nonon thought about what powers her new Symphony Regalia might have before her mood abruptly soured. She still hadn't forgotten how Strawberry had beaten her in her Mark II and if that embarrassment wasn't bad enough, Lady Satsuki also informed her Elite Four that Ryuko Matoi's Kamui was at a similar level to her own. Nonon didn't care how strong the Transfer Student was. She was mainly concerned with making Ichigo pay for humiliating her in front of the entire school. She was Lady Satsuki's best friend, damn it! She wasn't supposed to lose to a loser like Strawberry! Biting her lower lip, a soft growl escaping from her throat in the process, she angrily glared at Ichigo and muttered, "What's so special about Strawberry anyway?"

"Give it a break already."

A thoroughly perplexed, and slightly exasperated, Uzu Sanageyama crossed his arms while his bandanna, which was tied around his eyes to hide the self-inflicted handicap, blew freely in the breeze. Nonon had been in a bad mood ever since Satsuki had informed them of Ichigo's new position as Student Council Vice President and it was starting to get on Sanageyama's nerves, "You've been on Ichigo's case for the last week. Who knows what Lady Satsuki why she did what she did. Perhaps she is adhering to the old saying of 'keep your friends close but your enemies closer.' Ichigo is the only person to ever beat her in combat, which is a feat none of us can truthfully claim."

Sanageyama had no issues with Ichigo being Vice President, and thus his superior. If his fellow swordsman was even remotely unworthy of the position, Sanageyama was adamant Lady Satsuki would not have even considered him. That reminded him that he needed to thank Ichigo when he got a chance. If it was not for the sound and helpful advice after he lost his match to Ryuko Matoi and lost his Goku Uniform, Sanageyama would not have realized that he had grown dependent on his Tengantsu and let the rest of his skills weaken. Even with his eyes sewn shut and Shingantsu enabling him to see the world Sanageyama refused to be conceited. He needed to be ready for an opponent that could outmaneuver him.

"That mysterious woman with the Kamui was able to slip through my Shingantsu with ease. If one Kamui wearer can do it, then it's likely Ichigo or Matoi can do so as well," Sanageyama stood still as another stiff breeze swept across the upper levels of Honnouji Academy. As he sensed his fellow Elite Four's Goku Uniforms shifting in the wind, he recalled with distress a particular bad memory, "One thing I am grateful for is Iori sewing me a bandanna that fits perfectly. I refuse to allow a repeat of the last time it fell off. No, I'm not going to think about it. I can still hear the first year students' screams of terror."

"Keep your proverbs in that empty head of yours where they belong, wild monkey!" Nonon spat angrily at Sanageyama upon his attempt to calm her down, "The only reason I lost to Strawberry was because he caught me off guard!"

"Sure he did..." Inumuta's snide remark did not go unnoticed. Adjusting his glasses and locking gazes with an annoyed Jakuzure, Inumuta smirked and asked, "... was this before or after your sneak attack him didn't work? Do I need to remind you that Ichigo Kurosaki is now the Vice President of the Student Council and Lady Satsuki's right hand man? I'll break it down for you. Lady Satsuki was unable to best him in combat despite the fact that she is leagues above any of us, and therefore the chance you successfully beating Ichigo in battle is roughly one in a million... on a good day."

"Shut up doggy or I'll break your computer in two."

Down in the throng of students in the courtyard and away from the petty squabbling of the Elite Four, Ryuko Matoi alongside Mako and Ururu stared up at Satsuki with varying expressions on their faces. While Mako had a slightly peppy expression, signifying that she really had no idea what was going on but was simply happy to be there, Ryuko's face was furrowed in a mixture of frustration and confusion. Glancing to the scowling orange haired youth standing right beside Satsuki, Ryuko didn't know what to think of Ichigo's presence. On one hand she was still angry Ichigo had suddenly joined up with Satsuki Kiryuin, her enemy, but on the other hand she knew Ichigo didn't do it willingly. His speech during the ceremony last week still brought a smile to her face whenever she thought about it and Ryuko could only imagine the embarrassment Satsuki felt at Ichigo giving her a 'screw you' speech.

" Still though... " Ryuko clenched her fists tightly enough to cause her Seki Tekkou to audibly crackle, "... just what kind of game are you playing, Satsuki Kiryuin? Why did you make Ichigo your Vice President? Are you blackmailing him? "

"Clandestine meetings, political alliances, treachery, anything and everything you can think of shall be permitted with the sole exclusion of criminal acts! If any of you even thinks of attempting a felony, you will be immediately incarcerated by the Disciplinary Committee and face my personal wrath!" Satsuki's aura and presence tripled in intensity as she finished speaking, causing the greedy and power hungry looks on the horde of students to abet slightly. Noticing Ichigo's relieved expression out of the corner of her eye, Satsuki allowed a pleased expression to grace her face. Did Ichigo truly believe she was so cold as to allow the students of Honnouji Academy to do anything and everything they pleased?

"You have until the end of the week to return to this courtyard alive and intact! If you manage to survive, use your strength and willpower to reclaim all that you once possessed and make it your own once more! Reclaim your social standings that you desperately cling onto in Honnouji Academy's first Naturals Election!"

Ryuko frowned and scratched her head, "Naturals Election? What the hell is she talking about?"

"It's a trick."

Upon hearing the softly spoken words, Ryuko turned towards Ururu. The normally quiet girl was staring attentively at Satsuki with a look of utmost concentration on her face, which clashed with her usually shy expression. Once she noticed Ryuko's gaze upon her, Ururu turned her sapphire eyes towards her and explained, "Satsuki's lying. I can see it in the way her face is tensing up."

"Really?" Ryuko focused intently on Satsuki but due to the distance couldn't see her face, "Are you sure about that?"

"Uh huh," Ururu nodded and pointed up at the Student Council President, "She said the Naturals Election is designed to remake the Student Council from the ground up, but the only ones that will be on it are the Elite Four and Ichigo. Satsuki is tricking everyone at Honnouji Academy into thinking they have a chance of gaining a Three-Star Goku Uniform when it is nothing but a farce."

"So this is all just a scam?" Ryuko growled and her glare towards Satsuki doubled in intensity. She didn't care if Satsuki wanted to do a stupid Naturals Election but she drew the line at getting people's hopes up before crushing them. When Senketsu tensed up as a ill omen drove through the horde of students, Ryuko grabbed Mako and Ururu's shoulders and began walking away.

"Where are we going, Ryuko?" Mako asked happily before seeming to remember something, "We can't leave yet! Lady Satsuki isn't done talking!"

"Don't worry about it Mako," Ryuko gently answered her best friend, "We're just going to find a better angle to watch Satsuki, ok?"

Mako's face lit up and stars appeared in her eyes, "Ok!"

Satsuki's eyes caught a speck of dark blue moving through the crowd of grey and white and immediately her mind knew it was Ryuko Matoi. Looking down at Ryuko and noticing the scowl on her face, Satsuki allowed a small hint of satisfaction to adorn her face. So Matoi knew the true intention of the Naturals Election? Perhaps her earlier assessment of Matoi's intelligence was incorrect. Quickly drawing Bakuzan out of its scabbard and stabbing it into the air, Satsuki allowed the early morning light to reflect off the polished black metal.

"This will not be a normal election where you choose a candidate to dictate your life. In the Naturals Election you will BE the candidate! Every single aspect of your persona shall be made public. Your strength! Your way of life! Your willingness to persevere at all costs! At 8:30 AM this Friday, a sudden death runoff election will be held amongst those that survive the week! You will fight one another and only those with the dedication to win shall emerge victorious! Show me that you deserve to stay at Honnouji Academy and I shall return your Goku Uniforms once more! Now fight, my fellow comrades of Honnouji Academy, fight and prove yourselves!"

A soft rumbling came from the gathered students as the greediest and most power-hungry among them immediately turned on their friends. As dozens of fights broke out in the crowd below, Satsuki turned around and slowly sheathed Bakuzan. As her Elite Four appeared before her, she closed her eyes and tilted her head upwards, "I expect to see all of you here on Friday morning. Understood?"

In one smooth motion all four members gave Satsuki a one armed bow, "Of course, Lady Satsuki."

"Very well," Satsuki knew all four of her closest comrades were going to make it to the Sudden Death Runoff Election. They needed to have their Goku Uniforms tested by an opponent that could push them to their limits and Matoi was the perfect person for such a task. With the power of Senketsu at Matoi's fingertips, the vulnerabilities and weakness in her Elite Four's Goku Uniforms could be detected and fixed.

" That line of thought only truly applies to Gamagori and Inumuta," Satsuki mentally corrected herself. Both Sanageyama and Jakuzure possessed upgraded versions of their original regalia, Mark II and Mark III respectively, and thus she did not need to test them for the same reasons as the other two. Sanageyama already fought Matoi in his Mark II and just barely managed to beat her. Satsuki was certain Matoi would know how to beat Sanageyama if they clashed for a third time. The issue bothering her was Jakuzure's Goku Uniform.

Jakuzure was testing a Mark III, which possessed a higher Life Fiber percentage than the other Three-Star Goku Uniforms. Satsuki was uncertain if activating such an article of clothing would have an adverse effect on Jakuzure's body but Iori and Inumuta's simulations suggest that since Jakuzure's resistance was high enough for her to potentially wear a Four-Star Goku Uniform, her Mark III should not mentally or physically affect her. However, just to be safe, Satsuki ordered Jakuzure not to activate her Symphony Regalia for a period of two weeks. That would give Iori enough time to go over the data concerning her Goku Uniform and make sure it was completely safe.

Just before Satsuki turned to Iori, who was standing patiently off to the side and awaiting her orders, Satsuki paused and asked, "Where do you think you are going, Ichigo?"

Already halfway to the elevator that would bring him down to the frenzy of students fighting in the courtyard below, Ichigo turned his head around and answered, "I have to catch a bus back to Karakura Town. You said I have until Friday so I'll be back here Thursday night."

"The price of your ticket shall be reimbursed," Satsuki said as she stepped closer to Ichigo. As her stern eyes locked with Ichigo's annoyed gaze, she explained, "As the Student Council Vice President, you are held to a higher standard than anyone else in Honnouji Academy excluding myself! If it became known that you left Honnou City for the duration of the Naturals Election, the credibility of my Student Council will be forever tarnished! You must stay within the confines of Honnouji Academy and allow yourself to be a goal for the masses to strive to overcome!"

Ichigo opened his mouth to respond but was forced to stop when he noticed that the Elite Four were no longer in front of him. Spinning around when he heard the doors to the elevator opening, he only caught a brief glimpse of the Elite Four before the doors shut once more and left him alone with Satsuki. As the sound of hydraulics screeched from somewhere far above him, he looked at Satsuki and asked, "What's going on?"

"Do not fret Ichigo," Satsuki gave Ichigo a smug look as she turned to Iori, "Iori, begin."

"Yes, Milady," The president of the Sewing Club gave Satsuki a small bow before pressing a finger against his ear, "Begin releasing the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer!"

" They're releasing a large amount of shredded Life Fibers into the air. Great, now I'm going to start sneezing," Mugetsu stared alongside Ichigo as twin jets from high atop the tower above them began spewing out concentrated streams of Life Fibers. As the glowing red threads surrounded the upper levels of Honnouji Academy in a virtually impenetrable hourglass-shaped barrier, Ichigo reached for Tournesol strapped to his back when Satsuki's voice cut through the air.

"I would not recommend that, Ichigo," Satsuki advised evenly. With her body covered in a faint red light due to the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer surrounding them, Satsuki gave Ichigo a cursory glance before continuing, "The finely shredded Life Fibers in this barrier circulate at speeds exceeding 200 meters per second. Even with the immense power of Mugetsu at your fingertips, you will find it impossible to penetrate."

"So you trapped me here with you," Ichigo's hand did not leave Tournesol's hilt. On the contrary, he began pulling the blade out of its sheath, "Do you have something planned against Ryuko? Even if this barrier is impenetrable, I'll still find a way through to stop you."

"Relax Ichigo."

Even as the sounds of fighting coming from outside the barrier intensified, Satsuki continued to look nonplussed. Turning away from Ichigo, her heels softly clicking along the roof as she went, Satsuki motioned for him to follow her. Ichigo, seeing no alternative due to the barrier preventing him from leaving, did so reluctantly with his hand ready to draw Tournesol if Satsuki tried to pull anything.

"You have my word that my Elite Four shall make no move against Ryuko Matoi or her friends during the Naturals Election," Satsuki stepped into her private quarters and gave Soroi, who was waiting for her to arrive, a curt nod. As Ichigo slowly walked in behind her, she sat down in a chair and calmly picked up the cup of tea from the tray Soroi was holding. Taking a small sip from the calming liquid, she motioned with her hand for Ichigo to sit down across from her.

"No thanks, I prefer to stand."

"As you wish, but you are going to be staying here from now on," Satsuki, upon seeing the reddening look on Ichigo's face, chuckled softly, "That is not what I meant. Soroi has prepared your quarters and Gamagori has already taken the liberty to transfer all your belongings. It is beneath your station as Vice President of Honnouji Academy to live in the dorms. Even the Two-Star students possess better accommodations. A wearer of a Kamui deserves better than that."

"It was fine to me," Ichigo countered without care. He had a vague idea why Satsuki was acting this way but it did not mean he was going to fall for it, "Don't think you're going to win me over like this. Ryuko, Mako and Ururu are my friends. Just because I'm working for you does not mean I'm on your side. I'm only your Vice President because we both know how dangerous Nui Harime is. If you try to do anything to my friends, I won't hesitate to stop you."

"Ichigo, I - "

Satsuki was cut off, a first to her, as Ichigo brushed off her words and left to go to his quarters. As Soroi sighed in anticipation of the trouble the orange haired youth was certain to be, Satsuki failed to notice the slight clenching of her fingers. When she heard the telltale sound of ceramic cracking, she looked and saw that her hand had accidentally crushed the teacup.

"Let me get that for you, Milady," Soroi quickly walked over and carefully began picking up all the pieces of ceramic. As he places the shattered remains of the teacup onto the tray, he asked, "Young Ichigo seems to be a headstrong boy, Milady. He reminds me greatly of his father, Master Isshin."

"I am aware that you have worked for my mother all my life but how well did you truly know Ichigo's father?"

Soroi gave a polite chuckle as he picked up the last piece of ceramic, "Master Isshin was always a pleasure to be around. In your mother's younger days before she met your late father, he was the only one that could make her smile. It's a shame that the passage of time changes us all."

"He will not be any trouble, Soroi," Satsuki propped her cheek against her hand as the sound of Ichigo closing the door to his quarters reached her ears. Letting an annoyed sigh escape her lips, she turned towards the windows, tinged red by the barrier, and explained, "Ichigo may be exasperated and irritated but he will not move against me. He is fully aware of the threat the Grand Couturier represents and will work with me as long as I have my mother keep Nui away from Honnouji Academy."

"Please forgive me for what I'm about to say, Milady, but the Grand Couturier is a disturbed woman. No person should ever take pleasure from the things she does."

"It is fine, Soroi. I agree completely with you. Now if you will excuse me, I am feeling tired," Satsuki gave her servant a respectful nod as she stood up and made her way to her bedroom. As soon as she was alone in her room, she let out a tired sigh and began removing Junketsu from her body. Satsuki found it strange that the strain Junketsu put on her body abetted ever so slightly ever since Ichigo became her Vice President.

"Perhaps it is a previously unknown Kamui reaction," Satsuki mused to herself as Junketsu fell to her feet, leaving her almost completely naked. As the strain of pushing against Junketsu's bloodlust vanished, Satsuki let out a relieved sigh. If there truly was a connection between her Junketsu and Ichigo's Mugetsu that somehow tempered her Kamui's behavior, Satsuki wanted to know about it.

Giving one last scornful look at Junketsu, which she quickly placed in its protective bulletproof case, Satsuki walked to her bathroom to fresh up. The strain of Junketsu always left her body feeling tired and numb. She could not contemplate the endurance Ichigo or Matoi possessed to not only wear their Kamui's on a daily basis but do so without showing any strain. As she turned the faucet, causing hot water and steam to fill the bathroom, Satsuki thought back to Ichigo's behavior just a few minutes ago.

She knew he would be upset with her decision to trap him inside the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer but she had done the same thing to herself. If anything were to happen to Honnouji Academy or Honnou City, Satsuki would be unable to respond until midnight on Friday, when the barrier would naturally dissipate. Satsuki expected Ichigo to be open to a polite and respectful conversation between two equals but his hostile attitude made that highly unlikely.

" I have four days to mend the hostility Ichigo feels. If I don't, then several of my plans will be in ruins," Satsuki leaned against the tiled wall and sighed angrily. As the hot water cascaded down her back, allowing her to momentarily forget the strain of wearing Junketsu, Satsuki felt getting Ichigo to see her point of view would be easier said than done.

---

...

---

For most of her life, Ryuko had viewed her family's home as a stain, a part of her past that she never wanted to remember. Whenever she did think about her early childhood within the mostly empty and quiet halls and rooms, she would instinctively scowl as memories of a distant father too busy to play with his daughter came to mind. Sure, she had toys other childhood interests, but it just wasn't the same as having a father.

"Wow!" Mako stared at the burnt and ruined manor looming before her. Determined to get a full view of the large mansion, Mako tilted her head upwards and promptly lost her balance. Landing on her back with nary a groan, Mako let out a comforting laugh and asked, "Did you live here, Ryuko?"

"It's my family's house," Ryuko answered with a small shrug. She didn't have any connection to her first home now that her dad was gone. To her, it was nothing but burnt wood that contained nothing but bad memories. Walking past Ururu, who was helping get Mako back onto her feet, Ryuko placed her hand against the front doors and pushed. The aged doors, damaged by the explosion and subsequent fire, put up only a token effort before creaking open.

"Ryuko," Ururu's quiet voice broke the silence Ryuko was enjoying. The normally meek girl was really glad that Ryuko asked her to come along on a trip to her house but she never expected to see something like this. A terrible thing happened here, Ururu could feel it in the air and see it on Ryuko's face, but she felt it wasn't her place to pry for answers, "What happened to your house?"

"You lived in a big house?" Mako, who had quickly recovered from her self-inflicted blunder with nothing more than a few scraps, was back on her feet next to Ryuko and Ururu. As the imaginative and happy girl stared at the mansion in awe, she seemed to realize something was wrong. The mansion was in ruins! Grasping both of Ryuko's hands in her own, she tearfully asked, "You lived in a wreck of a house like this? So you were poor, too!"

"I wasn't living in these ruins, Mako," Ryuko shook her head at her best friend's lack of attention, but allowed a small smile anyway. She wouldn't want Mako to be anything else even if she had all the power in the world. Stepping into the house and retracing the path toward the trapdoor near the back, she trailed her fingers against the ash-covered wall and said, "It was burnt down six months ago."

Ururu, her attention wavering as she sensed how Ryuko's home must have once looked, said, "It's almost as big as Uryu's house."

"Huh? Ryuko turned to Ururu, "Who is Uryu?"

"Uryu is Ichigo's friend from Karakura Town," Ururu explained briefly as her eyes caught sight of the golden evening sky through a hole in the mansion's roof, "So you lived here with your dad?"

"I wouldn't call it living," Ryuko grumbled as the memories, or lack thereof, of her father came to the forefront of her mind. Her talk with Ichigo's dad really helped put things in perspective. It lightened the burden on her shoulders to know that her dad truly loved her and was proud of everything she did. Perhaps things would have ended up differently if he had only known how to express it.

Noticing several blackened pictures on the ground, Ryuko knelt down and picked one up. Carefully clearing the scorched glass of dust and ash, she stared at the picture of her dad smiling next to a much younger version of her, "Dad said mom died right after I was born and her death hit him hard. I think mom's death is what caused him to focus on his work. He was a scientist and while he tried his best to raise me, I don't think he could do it all by himself. He was proud of who I was but knew deep down that he couldn't take care of me. I think that is why he sent me away to the dorms once I went to grade school."

"That's so sad, Ryuko!" Mako's eyes had large tears in them as she listened to her friend's story.

"Yeah..." Ryuko bit her lower lip and let out a sad sigh, "Dad never said why I had to go away and for a while I hoped he would come pick me up. We were a family, so why would he just abandon me like that? After a few months without hearing from him I began acting out. I guess I was hoping if I got into enough trouble, the school would call him and he would have to come see me, but nothing ever worked. By the time I reached high school I just stopped caring and joined a gang. I thought once I graduated from high school I could leave and forget about him forever, but then six months ago I got a message from him. He wanted to talk to me and make up for lost time. It was really hard to believe that he wanted to see me but I was so hopeful that I want back home for the first time in ages. But when I got there..."

"He was dead, right?"

Ururu shrunk under the suspicious gaze from Ryuko and stared at her feet, afraid to look her friend in her eyes. She hadn't meant to offend Ryuko's feelings, so in a subdued tone she continued speaking, "I could tell something bad happened here the moment we arrived. You told us your dad was killed six months ago, so when you started talking about him I realized this must have been where he died. At first I didn't want to say anything because it was your dad, you know, but I'm sorry if I insulted you, Ryuko."

"No, it's not your fault, Ururu" Ryuko let out an exasperated sigh before continuing forward.

"Is this why you're always so angry, Ryuko?" Mako slid up next to a visibly saddened Ururu and gave her shy friend a big friendly hug to make her feel better.

"For a long time I thought I hated my dad," Ryuko momentarily ignored Mako and Ururu when she finally found the steel trapdoor that was the start of the whole mess. If she hadn't been standing on it during that rainy day all those weeks ago, she would never have found Senketsu. Tracing out the rusted edges of the entrance with her red Scissor Blade, Ryuko calmly stood next to the trapdoor and jammed her blade into the spacing between the two doors, "But once he died, I realized that even though he was my dad, I knew next to nothing about him. Ichigo's dad said he designed clothing, so who would want to kill him? I need to know what his last words meant and why he thought I should have this Scissor Blade. I also need to find out why my dad created you, Senketsu. Finally, I need to track down the bitch that killed him! There's a reason Nui Harime murdered my dad and once I find her, I'm going to demand she tell me why!"

"I-I've met Nui Harime..."

"What?" Ryuko's head twisted around so quickly that she was afraid she might snap her neck.

"I-I said I've seen Nui Harime before," Ururu raised a trembling hand to her mouth and subconsciously bit down on her finger. Looking away from a shocked Ryuko, her eyes began watering as she said, "I've run into her a few times at Honnouji Academy. I-I don't think she's a student, since she comes and goes randomly, but she's obsessed with Ichigo. I first ran into her during No Late Day. She was even there during Parent Student Day."

As her mind processed what she heard Ryuko's anger momentarily got the better of her. Clenching the handle of her Scissor Blade tightly with both hands, afraid of what she might do if she let go, Ryuko took a series of ragged breaths in an attempt to calm down. After nearly a minute or so of trying to focus her mind on anything but her father's murderer, she felt as normal as she was going to feel.

Letting go of her Scissor Blade, her arms limply falling to her sides, Ryuko let out a loud sigh and asked, "What did she look like? Ichigo's mentioned her name but he's never told me what the hell Nui Harime actually looks like."

Ururu's eyes narrowed sadly, which was a bad sign, as she answered, "I-I thought you already knew. You were looking at her throughout the entire ceremony."

" I was looking at her? Who could Ururu be - "

It was then that the true gravity and weight of Ururu's words sunk in - that creepy blonde girl sitting next to Satsuki's mother was Nui Harime! She had been staring at her father's killer the entire night and she didn't have a damn clue!

" She fucking knew who I was the entire time! She was sitting there smiling at me because she was gloating about murdering my dad!" Ryuko's anger threatened to boil over and it took all her self-restraint to calm down. She could not get angry at her best friends for something they had nothing to do. As her lips trembled from anger, she remembered something else about that night. After Ichigo left, she had seen Satsuki and her mother talking to Nui Harime and from the way they were acting, it looked like Satsuki knew Nui quite well.

" Satsuki had something to do with my dad's murder! I'm sure of it. She probably sent Nui Harime after him, but why? Why would she do it?"

Ryuko wanted nothing else but to track down Nui Harime and make her pay for what she did, but her anger abated as she remembered what Ichigo's dad said to her. She wanted nothing more than to wrap her hands around Nui's throat and demand answers but what would she become in the process? Her dad was dead and nothing, not even killing Nui Harime, would change that. Unable to think about what she would do if she ran into Nui, Ryuko decided to think it over for a while. It wasn't like she was just going to run into Nui right around the corner. She had time to think of a plan and, if that failed, get Ichigo to help her.

"Ururu said Nui's obsessed with Ichigo. Perhaps he might know something about her that I could use to take her down."

"Hey Ryuko, are we going down there?"

Ryuko turned her attention to Mako, who was staring down the open trapdoor with a bundle of rope wrapped securely around her arm, and gave a relieved laugh. She had originally planned on coming back to her home to find some answers about her father and why Nui Harime killed him, but with everything she just heard perhaps it was best she go back home. She still didn't know why her dad created Senketsu or the Scissor Blade but maybe it was best she not find that out right now. Knowing that Nui Harime was not only taunting her about murdering her dad, but walking around Honnouji Academy whenever she pleased, was far more important.

"Your blood was almost boiling for a moment there, Ryuko," Senketsu's deep voice helped to erase the last dredges of anger in her system. Her Kamui had warned what might happen if she got too angry but like an idiot she completely forgot about it. Ryuko knew she might snap if she ran into Nui, which was perhaps very likely, but she needed to do everything in her power to keep her anger under control.

"Yeah, you're right, Senketsu. I was being an idiot for a second," Ryuko apologized to Senketsu, who gave a satisfied grunt, and picked up her Scissor Blade. Collapsing the red Life Fiber weapon down into the palm of her hand and putting it away in her pocket, she pulled Mako back away from the edge of the trapdoor, "Nah, we don't need to go down there anymore Mako. I got all the answers I need for the moment."

"Aw," Mako pouted childishly, "But I wanted to go spelunking with you guys!"

Ryuko chuckled at her best friend's attitude. She appreciated how Mako always knew how to cheer her up when she was angry or nervous. Noticing Ururu standing a little distance away with a forlorn look on her face, Ryuko walked over to her and said, "Hey Ururu, I'm sorry I snapped at you. I shouldn't have gotten angry at you or Mako."

"It's ok, Ryuko, you didn't mean to get angry at me."

Ururu was grateful Ryuko wasn't angry anymore, but to be perfectly honest she didn't blame her friend for being angry with her in the first place. If she hadn't kept her knowledge of Nui Harime a secret from Ryuko, perhaps she wouldn't have snapped like she did. As she gave Ryuko a small smile, which seemed to be enough for Ryuko to turn and walk out of her home, Ururu's face quickly fell as she felt the guilt of lying to her friends circulate through her body.

"How can I tell Ryuko the truth?" Ururu thought miserably as she slowly followed after Ryuko and Mako, "How can I tell her that I'm Nui's twin sister?"

Even a week after the revelation that she and Nui were twin sisters, identical in nearly every single way, Ururu still wasn't over the initial shock. She wanted to deny it, but Mr. Kurosaki was the one to tell her and he was perhaps the most trustworthy person she knew. He would never say something as painful and hurting as that unless it was the entire truth. So since she truly was Nui Harime's twin sister, various questions plagued Ururu's mind.

"Why did she turn out this way? If we're twins, shouldn't we be more alike? I-I mean Karin and Yuzu aren't exactly the same, but I'm not a violent killer like Nui. What could make her turn out the way she did?"

"Hurry up, Ururu!" Mako's loud voice echoed throughout the landscape as she shouted back into the ruined mansion, "Ryuko wants to go home and the gas gauge says the scooter's full, so it's going to be a fun-filled road trip! We're even getting ice cream!"

---

...

---

Tsumugu Kinagase stared in tense silence at the woman sitting across the table from him. The dim light of the interrogation room made it hard for him to make out the prisoner's expression, but that was not important. Folding his hands on the metal table in front of him, he stared at where he knew her eyes to be and said, "Let me tell you two pieces of useful information. First, your Sanguinaire Raiment is completely destroyed. In fact, several of our technicians are currently examining it. I see you are smiling about something. That brings me to my second piece of useful information. We've already located each and every bug, tracker, and piece of surveillance equipment placed upon your person - all twenty three of them. Ragyo Kiryuin does not know where you are."

"Do you really think I care about your useless information?" Jackie Tristan tried to lean forward but the shackles and chains holding her down prevented her from moving more than an inch. Even without her Life Fiber uniform to augment her strength, Nudist Beach was not going to risk assuming Xcution members were not taught other, more specialized, skills in case of capture, "Etes-vous un idiot? There's nothing you can do to scare me."

Tsumugu narrowed his eyes but did not say anything. Instead he opened a folder and spread its contents across the table. Staring deep into Jackie Tristan's eyes, he saw the dark-skinned French woman's expression harden.

"I see you understand what I'm showing you," Tsumugu lit up a cigarette using the lighter on his wrist. Taking a deep drag from it before sighing and releasing a large cloud of smoke, he gruffly said,

"That's yesterday's financial reports from Europe. As you can plainly see, Revocs share of the European market has dropped nearly eighty percent over the last week since we took out that Distribution Facility. 'Terrorism' they call it, but I bet Ragyo Kiryuin knows exactly who it was that failed her. She's going to be gunning straight for you, so you might as well tell us what you know."

For just a moment Jackie Tristan looked like she might actually speak but instead she spat at Tsumugu's face, "Aller en enfers. You won't get a word out of me, you Nudist pigs! I'd rather die by Lady Ragyo's glorious hands than turn traitor!"

"I see," Tsumugu wiped his cheek clean of the offensive substance and let out a disappointed sigh. Taking another drag from his cigarette to calm his nerves, he momentarily glanced at Jackie eyes before punching her in the face.

"C'est quoi ce bordel, c'est que pour?" Jackie shouted angrily as blood began leaking from her nose.

"I do not like being lied to," Tsumugu growled ominously as he ground his still lit cigarette between two fingers, "Do you think I came in here without any backup? This room is constantly being monitored by several operatives. We know everything that goes in here, from our pulses to the fact that for the last two hours you've been trying to pick the locks on your shackles with a hairpin. I would not bother continuing to try. Those shackles will not open without both the key and the concurrent release signal."

"You think you have me in your clutches, then?" Jackie Tristan asked sarcastically before rearing her head back and laughing. Giving the two guards at the door a sadistic grin, causing them to raise their Sewing Machine Guns at her in response, Jackie ignored the two laser sights hovering over her heart and leaned forward as much as she could, "C'est drôle! You beat me but what do you plan on doing now? Even that woman with her beautiful Kamui isn't enough to defeat Lady Ragyo! Xcution will hunt all you Nudists down and slaughter you like the naked pigs you are for daring to stand against Lady Ragyo!"

"I see," Tsumugu's face was emotionless as he stood up to his full height. Without giving the imprisoned Jackie another glance, he turned and walked towards the exit to the room. Before leaving, however, he turned to one of the two elite Nudists guarding the captured member of Xcution, "Do not let your guard down for a second. That woman might not possess any more Life Fibers but that does not make her any less dangerous. If her shackles so much as jingle, you take her down. Understood?"

"Yes sir!"

Rapping his knuckles against the door, Tsumugu waited for the locks to disengage and let him out. Every interrogation room in the Nudist Beach headquarters had doors that did not allow anyone inside to leave. Tsumugu had been involved in enough hostage situations with Kiryuin spies to know that allowing the prisoner even the slightest glimmer of hope of escape was grounds for disaster. It was right as he stepped out of the room that Jackie's arrogant voice returned.

"Tell me one thing, Nudist." Jackie Tristan leaned back in her chair with her face framed by the shadows of the room and scoffed, "How many of your friends did I kill over the years? Was it ten or maybe fifty? I kind of lost track since you pigs all look alike to me."

The guards tensed up at the obvious bait but Tsumugu was more collected than that. With one hand placed firmly on the frame of the door, in case he lost control of his temper, Tsumugu turned one eye to an amused Jackie and said, "You, personally, have killed seventy three of my friends and colleagues."

Not wanting to stick around to hear the answer Jackie seemed to be on the verge of saying, Tsumugu left the room and waited until the door sealed shut behind him before reaching into his vest and pulling out another cigarette. Interrogations always made him want to smoke and that woman was causing him to consider quitting cold turkey.

"Damn it. Four days of interrogation and she still hasn't cracked. I thought for sure the Europe information would cause her to fold but it only seemed to harden her result. I'm running out of ideas," he thought in frustration as he walked into the observation room that was located right next to where Jackie Tristan was being kept. Strolling past the Nudist on shift in the room, he went to take a drag from his cigarette when a purple clothed hand grabbed the cancer stick out of his fingers and easily crushed it into a fine power.

"Those things are going to kill you."

Tsumugu gave Kinue a half-hearted glare before his expression softened, "At the rate things are going, the Life Fibers might just win over cancer. I did not know you were still here at base. The flight itinerary had you scheduled to head to Moscow yesterday evening."

"Command ordered me to stick around for a little while longer," Kinue rubbed her fingers to get the last traces of tobacco and nicotine off Danketsu before folding her arms. Jackie Tristan was an incredibly dangerous woman that was also extremely devoted to Ragyo Kiryuin and the Life Fibers, which caused Kinue to wonder. Did the woman chained down in the room in front of her actually know what Ragyo's plans are for the human race? A better question was whether or not she wanted to know the answer to that, "With the new prisoner, it was felt that the power and presence of a Kamui could help to boost morale and prevent her from attempting to escape."

"You know how I feel about Kamui," Tsumugu briefly glanced at Danketsu's eyes and narrowed his own. Pulling away from the Kamui's gaze, ignorant of the rather colorful language being thrown at him by the vulgar Life Fiber being, he stared at Jackie's injured body and asked, "Could I have beaten her?"

Kinue gave her brother a questioning look, "Why do you want to know?"

"That... woman," Tsumugu found it difficult to call Jackie Tristan a human after everything she's done, "Killed seventy three of my friends and fellow soldiers. I would have liked nothing more than to riddle her body with needles until she couldn't move."

"If you want the honest answer, Tsumugu, then no you could not," Kinue was always truthful with her brother. He may act tough and strict to his fellow Nudists but she knew that he was only like that because he didn't want anyone else to end up in her position - bound to a Life Fiber being for the rest of her natural days, or however long that was. In the ten years since the accident Kinue had noticed she'd barely aged at all.

"Her Sanguinaire Raiment would have outlasted you even with its obvious weakness," Kinue continued without delay, "Both her speed and strength were higher than anything possessed by Satsuki Kiryuin's Three-Star Goku Uniforms and her raiment's defense was strong enough to shrug off my Carnifex's needles. Don't take this the wrong way, brother, but a normal human could not have hoped to beat her."

"She must have given you a difficult time," Tsumugu commented as he subconsciously flexed the hand that he had used to strike Jackie Tristan. He had not meant to break Jackie's nose again and would need to have a paramedic be brought in to take another look at her nose, "Your report described how you broke her nose, but they failed to mention the stab wounds along her arms and legs. Even with that Kamui, I mean Danketsu, speaking with you, that level of violence is not something I've known from you."

Tsumugu noticed Danketsu looking up at his sister and assumed Kinue was listening to her Kamui. Even though the prospect of a human and a Kamui getting along still disturbed him, he could tolerate it a lot better than he used to. Ever since his foray to Honnouji Academy and the subsequent revelation that Ichigo Kurosaki and Ryuko Matoi were on friendly terms with their Kamui, Kinue had shifted back from the cold, unfeeling woman he had grown used to towards something resembling the sister that he remembered.

"Jackie Tristan had Life Fibers sewn around the muscles in her arms and legs," Kinue answered after a moment, "By the strength of the weave and the difficulty I had in locating them, I would hazard a guess and say they were the Grand Couturier's work. I had to remove them while we were flying over the Mediterranean Sea to prevent Ragyo Kiryuin from tracking her. As for the multitude of wounds, let's just say Jackie did not appreciate what I was doing."

Kinue paused as a faint muttering began to fill the room and from the accent and pronunciation she could tell it was French. Turning towards the Nudist, a specialized translator brought in to deal with anything Jackie Tristan might utter in French, she asked, "What is she saying?"

"Just one moment, Colonel," the Nudist pressed a finger against his earpiece for several seconds before answering, "It's a little difficult to hear, but I believe the prisoner is saying, 'S'il vous plaît pardonnez à votre humble serviteur, ma dame,' which is French for, 'Please forgive your humble servant, my lady,' over and over again."

"That bitch is praying to Ragyo Kiryuin for forgiveness?" Tsumugu growled and slammed his hand against the table, startling the Nudist operative, "It's pathetic, but for all we know it could just be an act. We've had Revoc spies in the past try to pull a similar stunt. I bet the moment we let our guard down, that woman is going to get free and take down as many of us as she can."

"But sir," The Nudist turned and asked, "How can the prisoner get out? The door won't open unless done both manually and from this control panel, the air is circulated from a sealed reserve and even the guards cannot leave without your direct approval. Even if she does escape her shackles, we could just fill the room with knockout gas and get her back under."

Tsumugu tried to respond but found his sister's hand pushing back against his chest. Walking until she was only inches from the four-inch thick glass separating her from Jackie Tristan in the interrogation room, Kinue said, "We are not dealing with common criminals. That woman is a member of Xcution, the elite fighting force of Revocs, and has personally killed hundreds of our fellow soldiers. Unlike the Elite Four Satsuki Kiryuin's set up at Honnouji Academy, Jackie Tristan has been trained to kill using every part of her body. Just because she no longer possesses her Sanguinaire Raiment does not mean she is no less dangerous. She is actually more dangerous now than ever before."

"I-I don't understand ma'am."

"My sister is trying to give you two important pieces of information," Tsumugu reached for a cigarette, more out of habit than need, only to realize Kinue had stolen the carton when he wasn't looking. Scowling at his sister, who gave him a smug look in response, Tsumugu said to the Nudist, "The first thing is that when that woman had her Life Fiber uniform, we knew what she was capable of. If she still had her raiment and escaped, we would at least know how to deal with her. The second, and most important, piece of information is that I should not have to tell you, a seasoned Nudist operative, all that I just did."

The Nudist barely had a second to let Tsumugu's words sink in before Kinue's Genji blade was sunk into his body directly through his heart. As he slumped dead at the controls, Kinue pulled her blade out and looked down at the cooling corpse with a mixture of derision and pity.

"A spy, just like the others," Kinue said as she swiped her Genji blade through the air before sheathing it once more.

Tsumugu turned the body over and grimaced at what he found inside the man's body, "Life Fibers. He must have been Mentally Refitted recently, a day or two ago by the looks of it, our screening methods would have caught him if the Life Fibers were in his body for more than a week. From the shoddy stitching pattern and the lack of subtly, it could only be the work of one man - Shukurou Tsukishima."

Shukurou Tsukishima was the only other member of Xcution, aside from the recently captured Jackie Tristan, whose abilities were known to Nudist Beach, and it was kind of hard not to notice. Tsukishima's Mémoire Raiment allowed him to inflict Mental Refitting on anyone his specialized sword cuts. While he was not nearly as fast or strong as Jackie Tristan, Tsukishima more than made up for it by constantly sending men and women to Nudist Beach bases as deep undercover spies.

"He's getting more brazen but his methods are getting sloppier. This man did not have an ounce of formal training before being Mentally Refitted. Tsukishima must be getting desperate," Kinue muttered as she turned the body over and look the spy in the face. After failing to recognize the man from anywhere in her past, she looked up at her brother, "It is likely Tsukishima sent him only after I captured Jackie Tristan. The fact that this man spoke fluent French and Japanese would have easily made him the interpreter or translator for any interrogations. He would have then been able to take the transcripts of anything Jackie, or you, said back to his master once he had freedom to leave."

Kinue pulled out a Life Fiber from the man's body before letting the glowing thread fall off her finger. She had met Tsukishima long ago, but at the time she hadn't known who he was. It wasn't until he tried to cut her with his katana that she recognized him and fought him off. She would have won if not for her unharmonious relation with Danketsu at the time, which limited the length she could fight. From what the Life Fiber technicians in Nudist Beach could figure out, Danketu's Life Fiber strength and density was so high that the Kamui was basically negating Tsukishima's Mental Refitting the moment his blade touched her body. That made Kinue the only person in Nudist Beach that Tsukishima was afraid to fight.

"We need to take him out. Now," Tsumugu's forceful voice brought several more Nudists to the room. Upon seeing their dead comrade, and the Life Fibers inside his body, they began shouting into their earpieces about a potential breach of security. As a silent alarm rang out through the base, Tsumugu turned to his sister, "The General says you need to be on standby in case Ragyo Kiryuin pulls anything but that's bullshit. If we don't take Tsukishima down he will continue to send spies until he finds someone competent. The latest intent, from Isshin Kurosaki's sources, place Tsukishima somewhere in California. Go to the United States, track him down and kill him. No capture, no interrogation. The moment you spot Tsukishima you take him down."

---

...

---

We're on a drive, on a drive, on a drive down to hell!

Flying upside-down until we get there! Hey!

We've gone off the road and are flipping through the air!

You get a pileup when you crash into another car!

If you do all that, we're going to go to hell!

We're going on a drive, on a drive, on a drive down to hell!

"Matoi, can't you make them stop singing that awful song? I'm going to break a tooth from constantly clenching my jaw."

"Do you think anything I say will make them stop?" Ryuko answered rhetorically with her head propped up against the side of Gamagori's car. Letting out a tired yawn, the day's events finally catching up to her, Ryuko glanced over to Mako and Ururu sitting next to her. While Mako had been the one to originally begin singing, her best friend had soon coaxed Ururu into singing along with her and Ryuko had to admit that Ururu had a great voice. It was better than Mako's at any rate, "Besides, I already asked them to tone it down a bit. Remember how bad it was ten minutes ago? I thought I was going to have a stroke from the horrendous lyrics."

"Point taken," Ira Gamagori shuddered as the memories he had quickly suppressed came back to him. It was horrifying to realize that Mankanshoku and Tsumugiya's current singing was magnitudes better than what it he had been. Gamagori was beginning to think that there was a darkness lurking deep within Mankanshoku's subconscious, "Tsumugiya is an unstoppable force and an immovable object all rolled into one girl. Mankanshoku, on the other hand, has never had a red light in her life."

"That's right, Gamagori!"

Mako, who had stopped singing once she heard her name being used, flipped over the front passenger seat and sat down next to Gamagori, "Every traffic light in my life is yellow because I'm always on the move!"

"So you move through life with caution despite the urge to stop? I can see the wisdom in such a philosophical outlook," Gamagori chuckled in amusement before his expression hardened, "Put on your seatbelt, Mankanshoku, and in the future do not attempt such a dangerous maneuver while in a moving vehicle. As the Disciplinary Committee Chair, if something were to happen to you under my watch I would place the blame entirely on myself."

Mako smiled and raised her hand in a salute, "Ok, Gamagori! Mako Mankanshoku will place her safety in your giant arms!"

"That's not what I meant," Gamagori stated exasperatedly while Ryuko rubbed her hand over her face and Ururu let out a sigh. Rubbing the bridge of his nose with one hand and staving off the urge to reprimand Mankanshoku, which would probably amount to trying to empty the oceans with a bucket, Gamagori was about to ask her to buckle up when he saw another car pull up next to him with its honk blaring in the evening, "What's the matter with them? The rules of driving are clear that this is a no-passing zone!"

The driver of the offending vehicle turned his helmeted head towards Gamagori and made a gesture with his hand in the shape of a gun. Gamagori, seeing the rudeness in the gesture, frowned and shouted over the wind, "You're breaking the rules of the road! Slow down and fall back!"

Instead of listening to Gamagori, as the Disciplinary Committee Chair assumed he would, the driver accelerated and pulled to the left. As soon as he was fully in front Gamagori's car, the driver clenched his fist and immediately three people dressed identically to him stood up in the backseat and aimed their weapons at Gamagori and his passengers.

"What the hell?" Ryuko dove forward as soon as she saw the three men and quickly pushed Mako down to the floor. As airsoft pellets assaulted the vehicle, Ryuko kept one hand on Mako's head to hold her down and reached for her Scissor Blade, "Stay down, Mako! It's dangerous. Hey, wait a minute, where the hell's my Scissor Blade?"

"I'm sorry, Ryuko," Ururu's soft voice reached Ryuko's ears easier than should be possible, "But I'm going to borrow your Scissor Blade for a moment."

While Gamagori's car shook and vibrated as the three men continued to fire upon it, the airsoft pellets leaving visible and deep dents in the pink metal and shattering the windows, Ryuko looked and saw Ururu standing up in the backseat, "Get down, Ururu! You don't want to get hit by those things!"

"Thank you for the concern, Ryuko, but I'll be fine. Please keep Mako safe," Ururu gave Ryuko a friendly smile as she held up the Scissor Blade, already bleeding towards the familiar purple color Ryuko had seen the first time Ururu held the blade, and began swinging it through the air. There was a constant pinging sound as the airsoft pellets ricocheted off the Scissor Blade, which resembled a purple blur as Ururu moved it too fast for normal human eyes to see.

"W-What the hell is that girl?" One of the men stuttered as he ran out of ammunition and reached to his belt for another clip.

"Holy crap, that's Tsumugiya!" Another of the men shouted in fear as a streetlight illuminated Ururu's features, "S-She's the one that beat up Sanageyama with her bare hands and without a Goku Uniform!"

"That's impossible! There's no way a girl without a Goku Uniform could take down one of the Elite Four!" The first man answered back angrily as he resumed firing, "She's going down!"

Ururu had heard enough by this point. She had thought her display of strength would cause the three men to back down and retreat without a fight, but it seemed it had achieved the exact opposite. Taking a step forward, she pushed off into the air with enough force to cause Gamagori to temporarily lose control of his car for a second. Spinning through the air, her purple Scissor Blade slicing apart any airsoft pellet that was aimed at her, Ururu landed on the hood of the opposing vehicle with nary a sound.

"What the hell?" The driver's muffled voice shouted in surprise before he pointed at Ururu, "Shoot Tsumugiya, you idiots!"

While one of the men continued shooting suppressing fire at Gamagori's vehicle to keep the member of the Elite Four from retaliating, the other two turned around and opened fire at Ururu. However, it soon turned out to be a futile act as Ururu deftly spun the Scissor Blade through the air, deflecting and destroying all the airsoft pellets long before they had a chance to reach her. Once the sound of empty chambers reached her ears, a sign that the two men were finally out of ammo, Ururu readjusted her grip on Ryuko's Scissor Blade and said, "Please forgive me for destroying your car."

"Go to hell, Tsumugiya!" The driver pulled out an airsoft pistol and used it to smash through the windshield. Aiming the weapon at Ururu's forehead, he shouted, "You might have unnatural strength, but you can't block a bullet at point blank range!"

As the airsoft pellet left the driver's pistol accompanied by a bang of compressed air behind it, Ururu leaned her head to the right, allowing the projectile to pass within an inch of her head, before thrusting the Scissor Blade downwards through the engine. The Life Fiber weapon easily passed through the steel and metal of the engine before stabbing deeply into the road beneath. With its momentum abruptly brought to a halt by the combined strength from Ururu's body and the Scissor Blade, the car flipped upwards into the air before landing on its side.

"I'm sorry if I hurt you," Ururu gave the four injured men a polite bow, but they were in too much pain to do anything but groan in response. Turning around, Ururu walked towards Gamagori, who had stopped the car once she jumped out. Hopping back into the backseat and giving Ryuko the Scissor Blade, Ururu saw Gamagori staring at her in stunned surprise and asked, "Why are you looking at me like that?"

Gamagori stared passively at Ururu, hoping to see the familiar emblems of the Goku Uniform on her clothing, but the girl was wearing nothing more than a customized No-Star uniform. He still remembered what she did when Sanageyama had been ordered by Lady Satsuki to question her. No one should be as strong as Ururu without a Goku Uniform and yet he had just watched her do something that should have killed a normal human.

"Hang on Matoi!" Gamagori floored the gas, causing Ryuko to tumble backwards.

"Damn it," Ryuko rubbed the back of her head and turned around. Accelerating towards them down the highway was dozens of vehicles similar to the one Ururu took down. Standing on the back seat with her red Scissor Blade resting gently on her shoulder, Ryuko scoffed and asked Gamagori, "So who the hell are these guys?"

"The AAA Club," Gamagori explained as he swerved to the side to avoid a hail of pellets. As one of the vehicles accelerated until it was side by side with them, Gamagori grunted and twisted the steering wheel to the left. The occupants in the other car were not prepared for their vehicle to be slammed against the highway barrier and spun out of control before crashing in a smoking heap. Staring at the wreckage in the rearview mirror, Gamagori finished by saying, "After Lady Satsuki announced the Naturals Election, the Automotive, Airsoft and Aeronautics Clubs merged together to form the AAA club."

"So what do we do?" Ryuko asked angrily, "These guys are starting to piss me off."

"You will do nothing," Gamagori ordered as he shifted gears and his car lurched forward, "It's my Three-Star Goku Uniform they're after. You, Mankanshoku and Tsumugiya are just unlucky enough to be caught up in all this."

"What about Senketsu?" Ryuko grabbed a handful of her Kamui, causing Senketsu to growl in annoyance at her rough handling, "Wouldn't a Kamui be a better prize than your Goku Uniform!"

"True, but Lady Satsuki's determined that no one else can wear your Kamui without dying. You must have remarkable constitution to wear such a draining outfit."

Ryuko blushed in embarrassment before a loud thrumming in the air drew her attention. Turning around, she instinctively ducked as two helicopters passed several feet over her head. With her hair whipping violently in the air from the violent wind being kicked up, Ryuko saw nearly a dozen AAA members hanging on ropes off the sides of the helicopters with airsoft rifles in their hands.

"What's the matter, Gamagori?" An obnoxious voice shouted through loudspeakers. As Gamagori's eyes narrowed, one of the helicopters turned partially to the side, allowing him to see a short and pudgy man with red flame-like hair in a white jumpsuit with the familiar Two-Star pattern embroidered on it standing with one hand gripping a rope to keep him from falling out. Grinning savagely, Ryusuke

Todoroki, the former captain of the Airsoft Club, raised his left arm and aimed his enormously oversized airsoft weapon at Gamagori's car, "Do you think that your wreck of a car will help you escape from me? I am the president of the AAA club, Ryusuke Todoroki, and your Three-Star Goku Uniform shall be mine!"

Todoroki waved his arm in the air and the other helicopter circled around until it was on the other side of Gamagori's car. As Ryuko's eyes focused on all the AAA Club members training their weapons on them, Todoroki's mocking voice shouted, "So you're Ryuko Matoi? Funny, I thought you would be taller. Wearing a Kamui would have been the ultimate prize but I don't feel like dying today, so here's the deal, Gamagori! You stop your car and throw the keys out onto the road where one of my members can pick them up. You will then step out of the car and place your hands over your head after handing your Goku Uniform over to me!"

Gamagori stared menacingly up at Todoroki, "And why should I do that?"

Todoroki snapped his fingers and instantly over a dozen airsoft rifles were trained on Mako, Ryuko and Ururu, "If you don't comply with my demands, my men will pump Ryuko Matoi and her friends full of holes!"

"Threatening students in front of the Disciplinary Committee Chair? You have some nerve," Gamagori shouted furiously. Ryuko Matoi might be in opposition to Lady Satsuki's plans but she had yet to do anything more than fight willing opponents. Unlike the barbarian of a student threatening him, Matoi was a very amiable woman off the battlefield and was not prone to involving innocent students in her schemes.

"Matoi," Gamagori slammed on the breaks, causing his damaged car to screech to a grinding halt. Taking the keys out of the ignition, he tossed them several times in the air before throwing them off to the side as requested, "I need you to do me a favor while I'm dealing with my mistake."

Ryuko, who was busy glaring heatedly at the AAA Club members that dared to threaten her friends, whispered back as her hand inched towards her Seki Tekkō, "What?"

"When I give the signal want you, Mankanshoku and Tsumugiya to get down," Gamagori's eyes were focused intently on the helicopter with Todoroki landing in front of them. If righteous glaring could set things ablaze, Todoroki would already be on fire, "Releasing my Goku Uniform will most likely result a lot of collateral damage. As the Disciplinary Committee Chair it is my duty that students do not get caught up in the crossfire."

Ryuko gave Gamagori a confused look, "But we're enemies. Why are you helping me?"

"We will have our fight, Matoi," Gamagori explained as he opened the drivers-side door and got out, "But it shall not be tonight! Lady Satsuki has given the students of Honnouji Academy leeway to fight one another for power and prestige, but threatening to kill a fellow student is inexcusable! It is my duty as a member of the Elite Four to make Todoroki see the errors in his judgment!"

Gamagori stepped around until he was in front of his car. With his massive arms folded in front of his body and an unamused look on his face he watched as Todoroki stepped off the helicopter. The former captain of the Airsoft Club pointed his excessively large weapon at Gamagori as his club members surrounded him, "I see you're a man who knows when he's beaten, eh Gamagori?"

"Do you think such a pitiful display of weaponry is enough to cause me distress?" Gamagori shouted angrily, "You are going to need a lot more guns to make me flinch!"

"How pathetic, Gamagori!" Todoroki shouted maniacally and snapped his fingers. As all his club members raised their airsoft weapons at Gamagori, he pointed his own and said, "But no matter how much you beg or plead there's no way I'm going to go easy on you!"

"It will take more than the likes of punks like you get me to beg!" Gamagori roared in retaliation as he stomped his feet and spread his arms out, "Someone like you, who threatens innocent students, is not even capable of getting me to fall to one knee! You are unworthy! Three-Star Goku Uniform: Shackle Regalia!"

An outpouring of light and four-pointed stars from Gamagori's body caused Todoroki and his club members to cover their eyes lest they go temporarily blind. Once the light died down enough to be able to see once more, the club captain saw Gamagori's transformed state but could not believe what his eyes saw, "What the hell is going on? He transformed into something like that?"

"What's the matter, Todoroki?" Gamagori's voice, muffled by the myriad of bandages and wraps covering his body, asked rhetorically, "Aren't you going to attack me?"

"Damn that smug bastard!" Todoroki sneered and ordered one of his men to fire several rounds at Gamagori. When the pellets did nothing more than bounce off Gamagori's Shackle Regalia, he raised his hand, "Stop. Something's not right."

The member that had fired at Gamagori turned and asked, "W-What do you mean, captain?"

"Gamagori's Goku Uniform is unlike anything we've seen before. Both Jakuzure and Sanageyama's Goku Uniform were combat-capable but Gamagori doesn't seem to be able to move. Not with all those bandages hindering him. There must be some sort of secret to his so-called Shackle Regalia," Todoroki weighed his options before coming to a quick conclusion. Gamagori was the largest of the Elite Four and therefore his Goku Uniform must be the weakest. His boasting must be to psyche his club members out of attacking him. Well it was not going to work.

"Nice try, Gamagori," Todoroki pointed his airsoft machine gun at Gamagori. As if obeying some unseen signal, every other member did the same as well. When he saw the two helicopters had their airsoft guns trained on Gamagori's form, Todoroki grinned, "But I'm not going to fall for you bluff. Light him up boys!"

Roaring collectively, all the AAA Club members cocked their weapons and fired a veritable downpour of airsoft pellets at Gamagori's Shackle Regalia. Much to Ryuko's amazement, who had stuck her head up to see what Gamagori was doing, all the pellets did nothing more than bounce harmlessly off the bandages and wrappings before falling to the pavement.

"Damn," she muttered as Gamagori seemed to withstand a rocket to the face without flinching, "That thing's hard."

"It's not just hard, Matoi!" Ryuko's eyes stared transfixed on Gamagori as his body began to bubble and convulse sporadically. At first she was worried he was in trouble when he she heard him begin moaning sensually, she realized just exactly it was he was doing. Ururu seemed to know what Gamagori's moans meant as well. The notoriously shy girl had a large blush of embarrassment on her cheeks and was covering her eyes with her hands.

"What... the hell... is he doing...?"

"That's it! Punish me as much as you like! More! More!" Gamagori was shouting enthusiastically as he body seemed to tense up under the onslaught of airsoft pellets, "I've been very bad! Each time you hit me, it feels like my heart is whipped. Yes! Just like that! The more it's whipped, the stronger I become!"

"Oh god," Ryuko slid down the seat until she was thankfully unable to see Gamagori's twitching body, "He's a goddamn pervert."

"You are mistaken, Matoi," Gamagori said between groans of pleasure, "I am not a pervert."

"Gamagori is right, Ryuko!" Mako was the only one of the three of them to still be watching Gamagori, "He's actually a pervert with an old man's face!"

"I am neither an old man nor a pervert, Mankanshoku," Gamagori stated as his form began to grow in size, "I am only nineteen years old."

"I don't want to be here anymore, Ryuko," Ururu was now covering her entire face with her hands as she sat hunched over in the back of Gamagori's car. Even through her fingers, Ryuko could see the blush on the girl's face, "Mr. Urahara warned me about people like Gamagori. He said if I should run if I ever met someone who takes pleasure from pain."

"You need not fear me or my powers, Tsumugiya," Gamagori said as his body seemed to be on the verge of explosion. As the wraps covering his form began to fray and tear, he shouted, "The instant that my climax is reached, all the power that I've been saving inside my body will explode outwards in one massive strike!"

"Three-Star Goku Uniform: Scourge Regalia!"

In a shower of stars, Gamagori's body transformed a second time, sending out dozens of spiked whips similar to the ones he normally uses. Faster than Todoroki or his men could react, each and every vehicle owned by the AAA Club was destroyed in an overly dramatic explosion while all the members were stripped of their Goku Uniforms. Only Todoroki remained conscious long enough to view Gamagori's monstrous secondary form and the image he saw would be burned in his mind for weeks.

" So it seems us Kamui are not the only ones capable of a secondary transformation," Senketsu muttered to himself.

"Yeah, that seems about right," Ryuko whispered back as she watched Gamagori take out the AAA Club, "Fighting someone like him is going to be tough, Senketsu, but he doesn't seem to have the same overwhelming aura as Sanageyama did that morning."

"I do apologize for tonight's events."

Gamagori's form rippled before he transformed back into his normal body accompanied by a burst of light and stars. Picking up his keys from the side of the road, he started his car back up and twisted his head around, "Now that I have dealt with that interruption, where would you prefer I drop you three off? Your scooter needs gas, correct?"

---

...

---

Satsuki Kiryuin stared in disgust at the students gather below. Even from the height she was standing at she could sense the greedy and ravenous looks plastered on most of the students below. They were all hungry for the power of her Goku Uniforms and she knew they would do anything, accomplish any deed no matter how moral, if it meant having the power given by Life Fibers.

"Do you see them, Ichigo?" Satsuki asked quietly and contemptuously to her compatriot standing right beside her, "Every one of them would like nothing more than to once again obtain the power granted by my Goku Uniforms. Their expressions show that they lust for such power. It sickens me to see such behavior for the so-called rulers of the planet."

Ichigo didn't say anything as he gazed over the crowd. After a moment he turned his head and asked, "Is everything you said true?"

Satsuki was stoic as she turned her head into the wind. Many things had been accomplished in the four days Ichigo and her were safely secured within the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer and while not all of it was good, she was not prideful enough to believe that for a moment, it was satisfactory. While she had not told Ichigo absolutely everything about her plans and motives, Satsuki was pleased Ichigo was able to piece everything together from what she did tell him. Even though she did not manage to get Ichigo on her side during those four days, it had been enough to open his eyes to her reasoning.

"Yes. Every single word that left my mouth during our conversations was the truth," she said quietly after a moment of contemplation. As an unfamiliar ripple passed through her body, Satsuki recognized it as Junketsu readjusting itself, which was an entirely new feeling to the Student Council President. Neither Ichigo nor she knew what was going on, and Ichigo's Kamui seemed in the dark about it as well, but over the last four days Junketsu seemed to have become slightly more tamed in comparison to its old behavior. It was not nearly enough for Satsuki to let her mental and physical guards down, but the slight drop in blood draining would allow her to wear Junketsu for nearly half an hour more per day. A nominally small amount of time to a normal person but to someone like Satsuki Kiryuin, thirty minutes was everything.

"I see..." Ichigo still could not believe what Satsuki told him. While at first he had been dismissive, rightfully so, of her attempts to befriend him, he knew that she was not someone to lie. The fact her story about Life Fibers was so outrageous only helped to make her words seem more believable.

"How could I think that Satsuki's mom is planning on using Life Fibers to convert everyone in Honnou City into more Life Fibers when she holds the Great Culture and Sport Festival?" Ichigo rubbed the back of his neck and turned away from Satsuki to look out over the bay in the distance, "I knew there was something off about that woman but to think she was insane and a monster? Damn it. Wait a second, if Ragyo's planning to turn people into clothes then why isn't the Soul Society stepping in to stop her? Something like that should have the Old Man gunning straight for Ragyo."

"I understand your confusion about the matter as well, Ichigo, but I think Satsuki is telling the truth. I did not like the feeling Ragyo Kiryuin emitted when we met her. I fully believe that woman is capable of something of this magnitude," Mugetsu's voice brought Ichigo out of his thoughts and back to the real world.

"Dad must've known," Ichigo responded to his Kamui as he remembered the look on his dad's face around Ragyo, "I haven't seen him look that serious since the winter. He knew something was up with Ragyo."

Mugetsu looked up at her wearer, "What are you going to do about it?"

"For now, I'll just wait and see what happens," Ichigo said with an annoyed groan, "Ragyo's all the way back at Revocs right now and it's not like I'm going to just go storm the company or anything. I don't like it, but my best bet to figuring out what exactly is going on is to stick close to Satsuki."

"Attempting a brash assault on my mother's company would be suicidal, Ichigo," Satsuki had easily overheard his one-sided conversation with Mugetsu and once again looked down at her own Kamui, "Even if you were to breach the front doors, you would be forced to contend with my mother's elite fighting force, Xcution. If, by some chance you defeated them, you would have to then fight the Grand Couturier and Rei Hououmaru before finally confronting my mother. Now stand at attention and keep your mouth shut."

Satsuki stepped forward and slammed Bakuzan on the podium, drawing the attention of the gathered students below, "I welcome you back, comrades of Honnouji Academy!"

Even though the hundreds of students made it impossible to visually count them, Satsuki could tell that approximately a quarter of those that were in attendance on Monday were standing below. It disappointed her that barely anyone recognized one of the secret tenets of the Naturals Election. One did not need to fight in order to win. Fighting would only tire one out and make them unable to compete in the Sudden Death Runoff. She was pleased to see her Elite Four and Ryuko Matoi in peak condition. They would need it for the next event.

"I will admit that you have surpassed my greatest expectations! To survive four days of nonstop fighting against your fellow peers is nothing to scoff at! Those of you gathered here for the Sudden Death Runoff Election are the best of the best! However, the last week of fight is only the first step! All of your battles have been closely monitored and investigated! With all that in mind, prepare yourselves for your next challenge! The process of choosing the new Three-Star students begins now!"

Satsuki slammed Bakuzan on the ledge in front of her and immediately the entire courtyard of Honnouji Academy began rumbling as six spiked pillars rose out of the ground. Giving Ichigo a tense look, Satsuki watched as Ichigo sighed before running forward and landing on the pillar right front of them.

"Each of these towers represents those that will partake in the new regime!" Satsuki noticed Ryuko Matoi staring up at Ichigo and was pleased that the deep anger she had come to be defined by had lessened over the week. Stepping forward until she was standing right on the edge of the platform, Satsuki pulled Bakuzan out of its scabbard and raised it up into the air, "I have not been deaf to your complains about Ichigo Kurosaki's ascension to the Vice Presidency of the Student Council! Each complaint against the Student Council is taken seriously and without humor! Therefore he will stand amongst the five that make it up as an equal. Show me that you deserve the position better than Ichigo Kurosaki and it shall be yours. Let the Sudden Death Runoff Election begin!"

"Damn it," Ryuko was getting more and more annoyed as her fellow students continued to hit her as they ran towards the five pillars. Raising her fist and slamming it into a One-Star's face before he could pass her, Ryuko narrowed her eyes as she saw students being blown off some of the pillars. Looking more closely, she noticed that on top of four of the pillars stood Satsuki's Elite Four.

"Ururu was right," she muttered angrily as she drew her Scissor Blade, "This whole Naturals Election is nothing more than a sham, but if Satsuki wants to be devious then to hell with manners! I'll just have to play by my own rules!"

Letting out a loud cry, Ryuko held her Scissor Blade out and raged forward. Cutting down the students who unfortunately happened to be in her path, Ryuko quickly reached the only pillar that did not have Ichigo or one of the Elite Four standing on top of it. Without slowing down in the slightest, Ryuko pressed one of her white sneakers against the surface before she began sprinting up the vertical surface against the pull of gravity. Shouting angrily as she used her Scissor Blade to knock off any students still clinging onto the spikes jutting horizontally out from the pillar, Ryuko soon reached the top of the column. Gripping the edge of the top with her hand she flipped herself into the air before landing in a graceful crouch.

"That was a nice little scam you had going on, Satsuki," Ryuko shouted smugly as she pointed her Scissor Blade at Satsuki, "But I figured out this whole Naturals Election was nothing but a trick long ago!"

"Oh?" Satsuki raised an eyebrow, "And what makes you say that? Those already in position of power will have an easier time retaining power. That is a fact of nature someone like you should be intimately familiar with."

"Tch, whatever," Ryuko grunted in annoyance.

"I would show Lady Satsuki some respect if I were you, Transfer Student," Nonon Jakuzure's voice had returned to its characteristically sweet tone over the last four days. As a breeze kicked up, ruffling her blue Goku Uniform, Nonon pointed her baton at Ryuko, "It was only because of her that we're allowing you to partake in this election. If you keep being rude, I'm going to make sure you get kicked back down into the dirt where you belong."

"Is that right, Snake?" Ryuko smirked as Nonon's smile evaporated upon the mentioning of her hated nickname, "I'd like to see you try."

Ichigo beat you once already. I'm sure that fancy new Goku Uniform is simply compensating for your lack of power."

"Why you - "

"Lady Satsuki!" Gamagori's loud and boisterous voice cut Nonon off before she could spit out her first curse. After making sure his fellow member of the Elite Four was going to remain silent until he was finished speaking, Gamagori turned to address Satsuki, "I have spoken with my fellow members of your Elite Four over the course of the Naturals Election. It is by unanimous decision that I come forth to you with a proposition for a new rule for the Sudden Death Runoff Election!"

"Is that so?" Satsuki saw the looks of conviction on her Elite Four and closed her eyes. Taking in a deep breath before exhaling, she asked, "What is your proposition?"

"Our request is quite simple, Lady Satsuki," Uzu Sanageyama answered instead of Gamagori, "While each one of us wishes to fight Ryuko Matoi in single combat, we all have grievances against Ichigo Kurosaki as well."

"Indeed," Houka Inumuta added, "Please forgive my insolence, but while fighting Ryuko Matoi would be a fitting end to the Naturals Election, there are more pressing matters. It is our collective opinion that allowing Ichigo Kurosaki to be your Vice President was an error."

"He is strong, Lady Satsuki. There is no doubt about his combat abilities or power," Gamagori respectively continued, "But he lacks several key qualities that your second-in-command should possess!"

"We've known you for years, Lady Satsuki, but Strawberry's only been here for a couple of months," Nonon finished off with a bit of anger and envy in her voice, "Seeing someone like him promoted above us is an insult!"

"You all make valid arguments," Satsuki smirked at the audacity of her Elite Four to question her decisions. She knew they were unhappy with her announcement concerning Ichigo and that it was only a matter of time before they made their complaints public. Moving a strand of hair off her face, Satsuki looked at Ichigo before turning to each of her Elite Four, "Before I agree to such a request, I must know which two of you hold the most grievances against Ichigo?"

It was Nonon, who was expected, and Sanageyama, which was a surprise to Satsuki, that raised their hands. Upon seeing the two members with the most against Ichigo, Satsuki tilted her head back and chuckled, "Then it is settled. I will allow your request to go through."

The ground began to shake once more as a large platform rose up in the center of the courtyard, "The venue of the Sudden Death Runoff Election is as follows! Matoi, you and Ichigo will alternate opponents. Ichigo, if you win your battles against those that would see you toppled I will allow you step down from your position without any complaints. Matoi, if you emerge victorious I shall tell you who killed your father as well as where they might be found!"

Ryuko narrowed her eyes. So Satsuki was in league with Nui Harime after all. Such a notion wasn't surprising to her but nevertheless she nodded, "Fine then. Once I kick their asses I'm going to force you to tell me everything!"

When the screen on the side of the Naturals Election Polling Place lit up and announced that the first match would be between Inumuta and Ryuko, Ichigo was about to sit down and think about what he was going to do when a loud and familiar voice managed to make itself heard over the roaring of the crowd.

"Ichigo! Over here, Ichigo!"

Ichigo's head whipped around towards the voice and he was not the only one, Both Inumuta and Ryuko and paused in mid-stride upon the voice announcing his name. Walking over to the side of his pillar, Ichigo scanned the crowd until he saw a familiar face in the audience. With an expression of both relief and confusion etched on his face, he cupped his hands around his mouth and shouted, "Orihime? What are you doing here?"

Orihime Inoue, with her natural long orange hair, stood in the crowd wearing the Karakura Town High School uniform. She had tried to wear something else, but the mean guards at the entrance to Honnouji Academy had ordered her to remain in her school uniform. She hadn't caught most of it, due to being in awe at the large entrance to the academy, but it had something to do with making sure visitors from other schools were clearly visible.

"When your dad came home, he told everybody you were on the Student Council! So I came to Honnou City to cheer for you!" Orihime shouted back happily as she waved her arm. As her uniform hugged her ample chest, causing more than a few male students in the audience to ogle her, Ichigo groaned and rubbed the bridge of his nose. It appeared that Orihime was still as naïve and clueless as ever when it came to her body.

"Who is that girl?" Ryuko looked at the girl Ichigo was talking to and immediately felt that she was staring at Ichigo's equivalent of Mako, if Mako was a buxom orange-haired girl.

"The Transfer Student actually asked an intelligent question," Nonon didn't know who Orihime was, but for some reason just looking at the well-endowed teen was making her feel more and more inadequate by the minute. Stomping her foot on the ground and pointing her baton at Ichigo, she shouted, "Who is that girl and how the hell does she know you, Strawberry?"

Ichigo rolled his eyes at Nonon's demand, "She's a friend from Karakura Town. Hey Orihime, are any of the others here?"

Orihime adopted a pensive look before shaking her head, "I tried to get everyone else to come cheer you on but they were all super busy! Chad volunteered to help the school put in the new swimming pool and couldn't take any time off no matter how much I asked! Tatsuki really wanted to come, but she found out that her Karate Championship in Osaka was this week and couldn't make it. I tried asking Uryu but..."

"Let me guess," Ichigo finished for her, "That four-eyed bastard came up with an excuse to insult me?"

"Well... not in so many words, but yeah!" Orihime chuckled nervously before noticing what Ichigo was wearing, "Oh! That uniform looks so pretty Ichigo! Is it custom made? It looks like it's staring at me."

"It's custom made," Ichigo hesitantly answered, much to Mugetsu's frustration at being referred to as a mere piece of clothing.

"Ok, I'll see you around Ichigo!" Orihime waved enthusiastically to Ichigo as she spotted someone in the crowd, "I'm going to go hang out with Ururu! We'll both cheer for you until you win!"

"Oh great," Ryuko sighed as Orihime left, "She is exactly like Mako."

" Concentrate on the upcoming fight and not on the girl,"
Senketsu's harsh tone brought Ryuko back to reality, "Do you remember the power of Gamagori and Sanageyama's Goku Uniform? We cannot allow ourselves to hold back even for a moment."

"Right," Ryuko nodded and jumped onto the stage, "Let's do this Senketsu!"

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #15 - Meetings in the Night

Monday - 11:30 PM

On Monday night Mugetsu relaxed in the luxury a Kamui such as her should have.

" Ah, this is the life," Mugetsu stretched out on the couch in Ichigo's room. It was quite considerate of her wearer to give her enough of his blood for her to move around. Mugetsu had felt a little guilty asking Ichigo, but he was more than happy to give her enough blood so that she could remain awake and mobile throughout the night.

" This almost makes me wish Ichigo and Satsuki weren't enemies," Mugetsu sighed and hung the top of her body off the edge of the couch. She might dislike Satsuki Kiryuin, but that butler of hers certainly knew how to iron a Kamui in all the right places. Mugetsu had thought Ichigo knew how to iron but Soroji was a master at the craft. The only way her ironings could get better was if Soroji's nephew didn't always try and observe her reactions.

" That Iori watches me like I'm some sort of animal," Mugetsu folded her sleeves behind her lapel and sighed. She didn't know how Junketsu put up with all the nonsense in Satsuki's life but it would be a lot easier if the Kamui would talk to her. How on Earth was she supposed to hold a conversation when Junketsu would simply stare at her silently? It was starting to get a little creepy.

Sensing something moving in the peripherals of her vision, Mugetsu turned her eyes towards the door to Ichigo's room and saw Junketsu peeking in. Once Satsuki's Kamui noticed it was spotted, it quickly ducked back out, leaving a very confused Mugetsu alone once more.

" It's too late to deal with whatever Junketsu's up to," Mugetsu yawned and closed her eyes, "I'll tell Ichigo about it tomorrow... maybe..."

Tuesday - 11:30 PM

It rained Tuesday night.

Mugetsu stood by the window in Ichigo's room and stared out into the storm. She really liked watching the rain for some reason, but the High Velocity Life Fiber Jammer circulating around the top of Honnouji Academy did a perfect job of keeping the rain and wind away, which caused Mugetsu to deflate sadly.

" I wish I could see the rain. It's much better than looking at Life Fibers all the time," Mugetsu concentrated and could barely make out the glow of fire through the red Life Fibers. It appeared that the Naturals Election was still going on and somewhere out there was Ryuko and Senketsu. Pressing her uniform up against the glass, she sighed and scratched her fabric, "I wonder how Senketsu is doing? I bet he's getting Ryuko into a lot of trouble without Ichigo and me to bail him out. Despite how much I don't like his childishness I would rather not see a fellow Kamui injured. There are only four of us in existence, after all."

Mugetsu paused as she thought over something before adding, "But Danketsu can go to hell for all I care."

When the door to Ichigo's room opened, creaking softly in the quiet night, Mugetsu's lapels perked up. Looking towards the door, she saw Junketsu hopping over to her. The mute Kamui did not look at her as it hopped onto the table next to Mugetsu and stared outside.

" Aren't you going to say anything?" Mugetsu asked sarcastically. When Junketsu only stared at her for a moment before turning its attention back to the window and the storm raging just over a hundred feet away, Mugetsu sighed and groaned, "That's what I thought..."

Wednesday - 11:30 PM

On Wednesday Mugetsu asked to sleep on a hanger.

Mugetsu might have preferred to sleep stretched out across any surface she wanted, but whenever she woke up there would be wrinkles in her Life Fibers that would only go away after being ironed. While she did not mind one bit of Ichigo or Soroi ironed her, she knew too much of a good thing was bad.

As she slept peacefully on the hanger next to Ichigo's dresser, Mugetsu was woken up when there was a slight pulling on the hem of her pants. Waking up with a start and looking around for any possible intruder, Mugetsu quickly calmed down when she saw that the intruder was actually Junketsu staring up at her from the floor.

" This is starting to get annoying," Mugetsu looked over at Ichigo, who was thankfully still asleep, before focusing her gaze on Junketsu, "I don't mind hanging out with you but the silence is really starting to creep me out. Why don't you just talk and say what's on your mind or something? Kamui are incapable of being mute, after all."

When Junketsu hopped back and seemed to avert its gaze, Mugetsu noticed something incredibly familiar about the Kamui's behavior. Pulling herself off the hanger with ease, she landed in front of a startled Junketsu and began examining her fellow Kamui's uniform. Yes, now that Mugetsu had a closer look at Junketsu's untransformed state, she could see just why the Kamui's behavior seemed so familiar.

" I think I understand why you do not talk," Junketsu's uniform tensed up as Mugetsu threw her sleeve over her shoulder epaulets and sighed, "Your behavior is just like Ichigo's friend, Ururu, so that means you're really shy, right? Oh, I can't wait to tell Ichigo about this! Who would believe Satsuki Kiryuin's Kamui would be extremely shy?"

Before Mugetsu could continue, Junketsu pulled itself free and fled the room, slammed the door in the process.

"Mugetsu?" Ichigo let out a yawn as he sat up in bed, "What are you doing up?"

Mugetsu stared at where she last saw Junketsu before turning to her wearer, "I thought I heard something."

"It's probably Iori trying to install bugs in my room again," Ichigo groaned tiredly as he laid back down, "If I ever catch him doing it, I'm going to beat the crap out of him..."

Thursday - 11:30 PM

On Thursday Mugetsu decided to take the initiative.

As soon as Ichigo fell asleep, Mugetsu pulled herself off her hanger and left the room. Walking down the room, giving a friendly salute to Soroi, who stared back with a blank expression at the freely moving Kamui passing by, Mugetsu eventually reached her goal. Opening the door to the room where Junketsu was kept, Mugetsu looked out over the moon-filled sky before focusing on her goal.

" I see you're awake," Mugetsu stared up at Junketsu, who looked back down. While Junketsu's eyes looked to be stoic and aggressive, as Satsuki had come to know her Kamui, Mugetsu could see that Junketsu was actually quite nervous right now. From the number of restraining bolts pinning Junketsu into the case, it appeared that Satsuki had found out about her Kamui's late night strolls.

" I want to apologize for last night," Mugetsu rubbed her lapels and sighed. She really wasn't that good at apologizing for anything. Senketsu was the one who always apologized for what he did, and didn't, do, "I didn't know you were actually afraid of talking. I mean Senketsu talks all the time and I can't get him to shut up and Danketsu is just a pain in the ass to listen to. It seems that every other word out of Danketsu's mouth is a curse. If we Kamui actually had mouths, I would force Ichigo to wash hers out with soap and water just for good measure."

When Junketsu's posture relaxed, Mugetsu gave her fellow Kamui a salute, "So while our wearers don't like each other, what do you say we be friends? I have nothing against you even if you might be as strong as me."

The voice that eventually reached Mugetsu was not what she expected. She would have thought Junketsu, with her aggressive bloodlust and fighting power would be male like Senketsu, but the voice that she heard was definitely feminine. Even though she was pinned down, Junketsu's uniform rippled until an identical fang-filled mouth to Mugetsu's own appeared, "I would like to be friends."

" Ok, good. For a second there I thought you were going to be just like Danketsu! Boy, that's a relief!" Mugetsu waved goodbye to her fellow Kamui and turned to leave, "I guess this means you won't stalk me every night from now on, right?"

" What do you mean?" Junketsu's soft voice asked in honest confusion, "I've been told that stalking is the appropriate method when dealing with family. We are both true Kamui and are therefore siblings."

Mugetsu did not like the sincerity in Junketsu's voice. The Kamui actually believed what she was saying, "Who taught you that?"

" My mother, Ragyo Kiryuin, taught me. I may have been created by two humans but it was mother who sewed everything I needed to know into my Life Fibers, " Mugetsu inwardly cringed at the mention of Ragyo. When she had been near that woman, it felt like every Life Fiber in her being was being energized in a completely wrong way. It did not help that Ragyo wanted to turn everyone in Honnou City in Life Fibers, even though Mugetsu didn't know how she planned to do something like that.

" If we're going to be friends, I'm going to need to teach you a few life lessons. Lesson number one is..."

That conversation lasted until the early dawn hours. As Mugetsu dragged her tired body back to Ichigo's room and collapsed on the couch, she had a strange inkling that Junketsu didn't learn a damn thing. As unconsciousness claimed her, Mugetsu could not forget that Junketsu was paying more attention to her than to what she was saying.

Bad Moon Rising

Wow, Chapter 28 was finished much sooner than I thought. I guess it's because I'm getting right into the fighting scenes and away from story-building and character development. I'm sure none of you care about that since you're going to enjoy reading both the chapter and the omake. This chapter is the one that also pushes the total word count of the story past 300,000 words with 900 reviews and 900+ Favorites and Alerts. I thank each and every one of you that takes the time and effort to write a short response to my work. If you are impatient about the details for the next chapter, I do post ongoing snippets of the chapters on Spacebattles and Sufficientvelocity on a daily or two day period. So sit back and enjoy the chapter!

---

...

---

Chapter 28 - Bad Moon Rising

Moscow, 9:45 PM MSK - Two Days before the Sudden Death Runoff Election

The man sitting behind the command terminal in the Revocs Server Room ran a hand through his dark hair as he impatiently watched the progress on the screen. It had taken every last resource he had in his possession, but he had managed to influence Revocs security to avoid the room for eleven minutes. That gave him more than enough time to log into the secure terminal, pop in his flash drive and download everything that he needed to do.

Download Progress - 85.2% (358.31MB / 420.55 MB)

Estimated Time Remaining - 51 Seconds

"This would have been a lot harder if my security wasn't already top level," the man muttered quietly to himself before his eyes narrowed. He needed to keep the noise he made to a minimal. Turning his eyes up into the darkened corner of the room, the man saw the faintest glimmer of sliver in the shadows.

" An acoustic sensor capable of detecting a person's speech over the sound of the servers..."

Ragyo Kiryuin's security, both human and technological, was notoriously tight, especially after her daughter's information specialist, Houka Inumuta, hacked into the servers. Ragyo wanted to crucify the boy to make him an example to the rest of the world for what happens to those that try to harm Revocs. The man didn't know what it was Satsuki told her mother, but at the end of the day Inumuta was still alive and had all his limbs.

Download Progress - 97.9% (411.72 MB / 420.55 MB)

Estimated Time Remaining - 5 Seconds

The man impatiently tapped his finger against his leg as he watched the meter on the monitor finish. As soon as the message 'Download Complete' appeared, he quickly pulled the flash drive out of the computer and placed it securely in a hidden pocket in the lining of his jacket. Turning to leave, the man checked his watch and noticed he had just over a minute until security began making their first rounds.

"That's plenty of time."

The information he was carrying was very important and needed to get to Nudist Beach as soon as possible. He had risked more than just being killed obtaining it. If Ragyo Kiryuin figured out what he was doing, the full wrath of that woman would come crashing down so hard that the man wouldn't have an afterlife to look forward to.

Carefully opening the door to the server room, the man glanced back and forth in the empty hallway and once he saw the coast was clear, walked out and locked the door behind him. Walking slowly past the darkened windows showing the snowy Moscow night, the man placed his hands in his pockets. He didn't need anyone, especially Raygo Kiryuin's cameras, picking up on the faint trembling of his hands. Even if the security wasn't observant enough to detect such minute movements, the man wasn't going to take his chances with someone like Ragyo.

"Yo, Ginjo! Long time no see!"

Kugo Ginjo calmly turned around and gave a friendly wave to the approaching Moe Shishigawara. He was the newest member of Xcution and among the youngest as well. There were a few younger than him but none of them had been given as much power right after joining than Shishigawara. His strength was so great that within weeks of being inducted into Xcution, Shishigawara had been granted command of the entire Russian Security Force by Ragyo Kiryuin herself. However, despite all his power Shishigawara was still new and thus did not possess the experience necessary to see through Ginjo's deception.

"Oh, I didn't see you Shishigawara," Ginjo chuckled amiably at his fellow Xcution member's exuberance, "If I knew you were around I would have brought some ramen or something. Besides, it's only been about a month since I last talked with you in person."

"Ugh, you know how much I don't like ramen," Shishigawara grimaced in disgust as he skidded to a stop in front of Ginjo and leaned over to catch his breath. While he was a member of Xcution, the seventeen year old Shishigawara sometimes overexerted himself, often to comedic effect when he would be running down a hallway to somewhere important and suddenly drop to the ground from exhaustion. Blinking in thought as something passed through his mind, Shishigawara ran a hand through his mostly shaved head and asked, "Yo man, I thought you were still in Buenos Aires. Why would you leave the beaches for someplace miserable like this? Man, why would Lady Ragyo dump me off in something like this frozen wasteland is beyond me."

"I would be careful of what you say about Lady Ragyo," Ginjo's face was stoic as he chastised the younger member of Xcution, "Comments such as that could be grounds for punishment."

"R-Really?" Shishigawara began to sweat nervously until he saw a smile spread across Ginjo's face. Huffing in embarrassment he punched Ginjo in the shoulder with his tape-covered left hand, a reminder of his years as a kickboxer, and snorted, "Damn it! How'd you get so good at lying? You used to not be able to lie to save your sorry ass!"

Ginjo shrugged, "I've been practicing. How else am I supposed to pick up women at the beach?"

"You're one lucky bastard," Shishigawara huffed and adjusted the tape on his hands. They always seemed like they were coming loose, "So why are you here anyway? Are you ready to spar against my Loterie Raiment again? I'll win this time for sure! I've been practicing on controlling my power and I'm certain the collateral damage will be low. Man, Hououmaru was so scary when I accidentally destroyed one of Lady Ragyo's private helicopters with my power. That woman can yell like a banshee. My ears were ringing for days afterwards!"

Shishigawara was one of the more normal members of Xcution and Ginjo liked to take some small amount of credit for that. He was, after all, the one to help Shishigawara survive the brutish and hellish initiation into Xcution. It was not enough for one to have abnormally high resistance to Life Fibers to be inducted. They also had to pass a series of tests and programs to see how to best fit them with specialized raiment. That would be difficult enough on its own but the proctor of the initiation was Nui Harime.

The Grand Couturier took great pleasure in breaking down as many recruits as possible as she test fit raiment on their bodies. That was why out of the twenty or so Xcution recruits per year only one or two survive to join the group. That small number of people is almost always mentally broken down by Nui's methods to the point they see Ragyo Kiryuin as some sort of living goddess whose every step was holy. Ginjo was glad that when he was the second to join Xcution nineteen years ago Nui Harime had not yet appeared out of whatever hellhole spawned her.

"Hououmaru does have a voice on her for being such a small woman," Ginjo chuckled before his expression hardened, "And while I would like to spar against you to see how you've improved I can't. I only stopped by to say hello before heading over to Europe. With Jackie captured by Nudist Beach, Lady Ragyo wants me to take command of the European Security Force."

"Damn Nudists," Shishigawara spat on the ground and cracked the knuckles on his right hand, "How the hell did they even take down Jackie? Her Sanguinaire Raiment was powerful as hell! I sure as hell couldn't beat her in a straight up fight without getting in a lucky shot or two. How did those Nudists do it?"

Ginjo checked his watch and saw that the pilot of the helicopter, who he had bribed tremendously to defect, would only remain for another fifteen minutes before departing, "I don't have much time but I suppose I could fill you in on a little secret. While Jackie was taken before reporting what was happening, Hououmaru's analysis of the scene suggests that a Kamui was involved."

"A Kamui?"

Shishigawara staggered back. Of course he knew the legendary Kamui made up of purely Life Fibers but he never thought Nudist Beach would have something like that in their possession. The only question was how Nudist Beach got their hands on one of the sacred garments. There were three Kamui in existence and all of them were at Honnouji Academy, which Lady Ragyo had declared forbidden to each and every member of Xcution for unknown reasons.

"That's right," Ginjo narrowed his eyes and whispered, "I would keep my eyes and ears open, Shishigawara. If someone as experienced with her raiment as Jackie was taken down, then it is likely any of us could be defeated as well. Don't get cocky and full of yourself or you might find yourself defeated."

Shishigawara gave Ginjo a respectful salute, "Of course, Ginjo! I won't let you down."

"You really need to lighten up. We're both members of Xcution after all," Ginjo waved to Shishigawara as he turned to head towards the roof and the helicopter. Once he was in the air, he would breathe a sigh of relief but until that point he would need to be on his guard.

" This would have been easier when Ragyo Kiryuin and the Grand Couturier were both at Honnouji Academy but I could not make a move without being spotted," Ginjo typed in the passcode to the elevator and waited until the doors shut before closing his eyes. Absentmindedly patting his jacket where the flash drive was, Ginjo leaned against the side of the elevator and folded his arms, "Jackie's capture could not have come at a worse time. Ragyo's guard is going to be up now that Nudist Beach possesses the power to take down a member of Xcution. Hopefully what I got will be enough to even the odds."

When the elevator doors opened, Ginjo involuntarily shivered. The night was getting colder and it was only a matter of time until the main brunt of the blizzard hit Moscow. If he could leave before then, it would work to help delay any retaliation from Revocs until the storm passed. Zipping up his jacket and folding his hands in his pockets, Ginjo calmly walked across the snowy rooftop towards the helipad. Even now, when things were almost over, he needed to keep a clear head. Ragyo Kiryuin and those working for her needed him to let his guard down for only a second. Ginjo wasn't about to give them that chance.

"It's good to see you, sir," The pilot slid the door on the side of the helicopter open and offered Ginjo a welcoming hand, "Are you all finished? I would like to leave before the storm hits. The latest forecast puts the storm less than twenty miles to the west of the city."

"There's no need to wait," Ginjo sensed something in his peripheral vision. Turning his head slightly so as to not draw suspicion, he glanced over the quiet and empty roof, "In fact, we should probably leave right now."

The pilot snapped off a quick salute before hurrying back into the cockpit. As the rotors above the helicopter whirled into life and began to spin, disturbing the snow that had fallen on them, Ginjo stood near the open side of the helicopter and braced his hand against the cold metal. Someone very familiar and extremely dangerous was quickly making their way towards his location. Already his ears could pick up the sounds of an explosion in the distance. From the lack of subtlety in his pursuer's actions, it was clear to Ginjo that Nui Harime was not particularly pleased to hear of his treachery.

" The question is how she knew what I was doing. I didn't doubt that my flight from Argentina would be quickly noticed by Ragyo Kiryuin, but for her to send out the Grand Couturier with such frightening precise timing means my plan was compromised from the very beginning."

Ginjo knew from the moment he decided to do what he did that if he ran into Nui Harime there would be way he would get out alive. The Grand Couturier would give him some small glimmer of hope before crushing it beneath her overwhelming power and strength. That was why he chose to enact his plans tonight. The blizzard approaching Moscow would limit visibility from the air and with his sabotage of the only other helipad at the Revocs compound, Nui Harime would be forced to land at Domodedovo International Airport nearly six kilometers away. Six kilometers might seem like a lot, but it would only buy him about two minutes to escape from the Grand Couturier.

" I have about a minute," Ginjo breathed a sigh of extreme relief as the helicopter began lifting off the ground. Sixty seconds would be more than enough time to get out of range of all of the Grand Couturier's abilities. With any luck, he could fly far enough into the storm that she wouldn't be able to give chase from the ground.

Clasping a shaking hand around his X-shaped pendant dangling freely from his neck, Ginjo was well aware that his Cuirassé Raiment did not stand a chance against Nui's power. Her Scissor Blade, compounded with her strength and speed, would easily tear through his raiment's armor with one clean blow.

" I don't think I've ever been this frightened of an opponent before," Ginjo looked down at the retreated rooftop with a nervous expression. He remembered quite vividly what happened after his rebellion against the Soul Society after their false accusations. He thought after everything he did for the Soul Society as a substitute shinigami they would believe his word. He couldn't have been more naïve but even staring down three captains, including Jushiro Ukitake, as they forcibly removed his shinigami powers did not cause him to feel nearly as much fear as fighting a pissed-off Nui Harime.

As the blowing snow began to obscure the ground below, Ginjo saw a pink figure appear out of nowhere on the roof below. Even though he was unable to see the Grand Couturier's face, Ginjo could sense she was looking directly at him and the intent behind her stare was enough to force him to break out in a cold sweat. Sliding the door of the helicopter closed and sitting down in a chair, Ginjo breathed a sigh of relief knowing that he had gotten away.

That was until a purple Scissor Blade skewered upwards through the helicopter's floor in front of his leg and everything quickly went to hell.

---

...

---

Ryuko Matoi stared at the teal haired teenager across the ring from her with barely concealed suspicion.

" So what does he have up his sleeves?" Ryuko's eyes dropped from Houka Inumuta's smug expression to the PDA held in his left hand. The Information and Strategy Committee Chair seemed to be more focused on whatever was on his little device than the upcoming fight. Out of all the Elite Four, Inumuta was the only one she hadn't really come in contact with. She had already fought Sanageyama's Blade Regalia twice, witnessed Jakuzure try to sneak attack Ichigo in the hallway in her Symphony Regalia and got a personal showing of Gamagori's Shackle Regalia two nights ago.

" Whatever it is, I 'm willing to bet that it has something to do with technology," Ryuko was starting to get annoyed at Inumuta's ignorance of the upcoming fight in deference to his PDA, "Damn it, don't tell me he's one of those snooty 'I know everything about you' people."

" The taste of your blood has changed, Ryuko," Senketsu's steady voice brought Ryuko out of her thoughts, "Is something wrong?"

Ryuko huffed and groaned, "This guy is really starting to bug the hell out of me, but his aura is nothing like the other three. It's almost like he not even close to being on the same level as the rest of Satsuki's little goon squad."

Senketsu's eye narrowed in understanding, "I've noticed the same thing, but you should not let your guard down. Satsuki Kiryuin might have chosen him to be on her Elite Four for reasons other than power."

"You got a point there." Ryuko took a calming breath to steady her nerves. This was what she had been waiting for. While she already knew who killed her dad, she needed to know Satsuki's relation to Nui Harime and why she did it. If she didn't find out the answer, Ryuko knew it would bother her for the rest of her life, "I'm ready when you are, Senketsu."

"Such valuable data..."

Inumuta's off-hand remark brought Ryuko's attention away from Senketsu and completely on him, "Huh? What are you muttering about?"

"Oh, forgive my commentary," Inumuta tucked away his PDA and absentmindedly adjusted his tinted glasses. Giving a light chuckle, he explained, "I could not help but record your one-sided conversation with your Kamui just a moment ago. Please do not give me that surprised expression, I've already seen and recorded Ichigo Kurosaki doing the same thing with his Kamui. It is very exciting to capture such valuable information. Do you mind satiating my curiosity and describing what your Kamui's voice sounds like? I find all my sensors unable to pick up a single acoustic sound."

"Go to hell," Ryuko muttered and spat on the ground. There was no way she was going to tell someone like Inumuta anything about Senketsu, "Why don't you just ask Ichigo if you're so goddamn curious?"

Inumuta's body seemed to tense up and his mouth disappeared as his high collar snapped shut in front of it, "Unfortunately my methods of collecting data surrounding Ichigo's Mugetsu has been complicated by the difficulty of the task."

" Hmm..." Senketsu seemed puzzled by Inumuta's explanation, "I wonder what he means by that."

"He means that the last time he tried to do anything to Mugetsu I threatened to destroy his laptop," Ichigo shouted from the pillar he was sitting down on. Seeing the pointed glares from Jakuzure and Gamagori, he returned the favor with an annoyed look of his own and turned his attention back to the upcoming fight.

"T-That's beside the point," Inumuta's composure nearly slipped as he remembered Ichigo grabbing his laptop and threatening to tear it in two. He would have tried to call Ichigo's bluff by threatening to report his actions to Lady Satsuki, but Inumuta realized something important in that instance of seeing his most precious computer held just out of reach - Ichigo wouldn't care in the slightest.

"Oh really? It doesn't seem like it's not important," Ryuko had a smug grin on her face as she drew her Scissor Blade from the pouch on her hip and willed it to extend to its full size.

"Say what you will, Ryuko Matoi, but I've been reviewing your combat data," Inumuta's expression hardened slightly at her mocking of him. No one would get away with insulting his reverence of data and information, "Your Kamui's transformation against Sanageyama's Blade Regalia was truly intriguing. I wonder how such a configuration would work against an opponent who knows what to look for."

Ryuko pointed her Scissor Blade at Inumuta, "Let's fight and find out! I'll show you just how much Senketsu can kick your ass!"

Satsuki watched the exchange between Ryuko and Inumuta before raising her voice and calmly stating, "The first round begins... now."

"Understood, Lady Satsuki," Inumuta smirked as his eyes were hidden behind a glare reflecting off his glasses, "Shall we get started, Ryuko Matoi?"

Without waiting for Ryuko's answer Inumuta threw his arms out to his sides as the three black stars emblazoned on his Goku Uniform lit up. Ryuko was forced to squint slightly as the bright light enveloping Inumuta's body shone across the stage. As the light died down just moments later, Ryuko stared on in veiled interest as Inumuta emerged from his transformation and said, "Three-Star Goku Uniform: Probe Regalia."

"Probe Regalia, huh?"

Ryuko was expecting something large and intimidating like the other three members of the Elite Four, but Inumuta's Probe Regalia seemed to go in the opposite direction. His Goku Uniform covered his entire body apart from his mouth and hair and had a predominantly dark blue coloring with green holographic keyboards lining his thighs and arms. As Inumuta began weirdly typing on the keyboards in various positions, Ryuko's eyebrows rose and she folded her arms, "Is this it? It's nothing like the other three. Actually, now that I think about it, it looks like it came out of a show I saw a while ago with giant robots."

" Whatever the case may be, I'm getting a strange feeling. It's almost as if I'm being stripped bare," Senketsu growled irritably as a confident smirk came from Inumuta. He didn't know what the Information and Strategy Committee Chair was thinking but it made him feel uneasy. Shuddering as a sense of being violated coursed through his uniform, causing Ryuko to glance down at him in concern, Senketsu turned his eye up to his wearer and declared, "Finish this before I feel any more violated. If we lose here Mugetsu is never going to let me live it down."

"No need to tell me, Senketsu," Ryuko raised her forearm and gripped the pin on her Seki Tekkou. Grinning confidently as she pulled the pin out, she added, "After all, I wouldn't want to make you look bad in front of your crush. Life Fiber Synchronize: Kamui Senketsu!"

As she was clad once again in Senketsu's transformed state and felt her Kamui's power, along with hurriedly denied remarks of his relationship with Mugetsu, course through every fiber of her being, Ryuko let out a deep sigh and gripped her red Scissor Blade with both hands. The Information and Strategy Committee Chair had yet to do anything in their fight apart from continuously typing on the green keyboards lining his body in strange and disturbing poses. While she still didn't have a clue about what tricks and abilities Inumuta had, based on his Probe Regalia she figured it had something to do with computers and information.

"So you automatically transform into your initial state?" Inumuta rhetorically asked as he took in every detail from Ryuko's body. Every screed of visible information he could get from Senketsu was being stored within his Probe Regalia's hard-drive for Iori to go over later on. Giving a pleased grin, made even more apparent by his hidden eyes, he said, "While your standard combat configuration is impressive, I would have preferred you go right to your Senkou mode."

Ryuko narrowed her eyes and scoffed, "Like I give a damn what you want! I'm not going to let a data fetishist like you tell me what to do! In fact, I'm going to beat your sorry ass without using Senkou just to piss you off!"

Inumuta grinned savagely as he typed feverously on his Probe Regalia, "Come then, Ryuko Matoi! Show me the power of your Senketsu!"

As Ryuko gave a battle-shout and flew across the stage towards Inumuta, twin blasts of energy rocketing out from the backs of Senketsu's eyes, Orihime Inoue was watching the fight with a visible blush stretching across her face, "Mako, shouldn't Ryuko be embarrassed to wear such a... um... revealing outfit?"

"Not at all," Mako exclaimed proudly to her new friend from the No-Stars section of the stands. Raising her arms excitedly and clapping her hands together, she explained, "Ryuko has a great body and is proud of the way she looks! Senketsu may expose her body for the rest of the world to see but Ryuko is confident about her appearance! She shows off her body and great rack for the rest of us to admire! There is no reason to not show off what you got, after all!"

"Ryuko named her uniform Senketsu?" Orihime cutely raised a finger to her lip as she pondered what seemed to be an important enigma. Unbeknownst to her, the action inadvertently caused several nearby male students to faint from blood loss, "That's strange... I wonder if it has anything to do with Ichigo naming his Mugetsu?"

"Of course it does!" Mako explained passionately, "Both Senketsu and Mugetsu are Kamui, school uniforms made of Life Fibers that give their wearers super-duper powers!"

Orihime was confused about what Mako was talking about. She remembered Uryu mentioning something similar to Life Fibers when she asked him about his summer job last year but Uryu had seemed to come up with excuses involving his dad dying whenever she asked. Honnou City was a really amazing place, but then again Karakura Town didn't have the high school perched at the highest point in the city, which was an awesome idea. It would be just like a fortress that could keep out invaders and anyone trying to take control of the city!

"Wait a second! That's it!" Orihime slammed her fist into an open palm and shouted triumphantly, "You're saying that Ryuko and Ichigo can transform their Kamui into new uniforms with superhuman powers and abilities? I thought it was strange Ryuko would wear something other than the Honnouji Academy uniform but now it makes perfect sense! Ryuko must secretly be a Sentai who goes around solving crimes and saving people and Ichigo must be her newly inducted and unwilling recruit!"

"That's exactly what Ryuko does!" Sparkling stars surrounded Mako's eyes as she locked hands with the equally imaginative Orihime. Almost as if it was a reaction waiting to go off, as soon as the two overactive teens locked hands they were surrounded by a bright pink backdrop of light not too different from Satsuki's own but at the same time nearly twice the intensity. While everyone nearby was forced to move away lest they go blind from the light, Mako smiled and said, "Ryuko and Ichigo are like superheroes that are thrust into an impossible world against villains that keep getting stronger and stronger!"

"I know," Orihime happily agreed, memories of her time in the Soul Society and Hueco Mundo coming to the forefront of her mind. While those memories weren't one she particular enjoyed, especially the ones in Hueco Mundo, the past was the past and therefore shouldn't be dwelt upon. Aizen was defeated and his army vanquished, "You've been here the entire time, Mako, so do you know if Ryuko or Ichigo have catchphrases or poses?"

"Hmm..." Mako pursed her lips and the pink backdrop died down momentarily before resuming its usual intensity, "Nope, but they have their own transformation sequences and everything!"

Orihime blinked as her mind tried to process what Ichigo's Mugetsu transformation might look like before she noticed something and looked around. She had been so engrossed in her conversation with Mako that she missed seeing Ururu leave, "Hey Mako, did you see where Ururu went?"

"Oh! She left to go get some snacks!" Mako answered with a gluttonous look on her face. With a trail of drool leaking from her mouth, she began listing off all the food Ururu was going to buy with the money Ichigo gave her from his Vice President stipend, "She's going to go get popcorn, corndogs, crackerjacks, hot dogs, hamburgers and every other food I can't remember!"

"That sounds wonderful, Mako!" Orihime joyfully agreed, "So while we wait for Ururu to get back with the snacks we should think of a nemesis for Ichigo and Ryuko to constantly battle. They can't be superheroes without a villain. You have anyone in mind?"

"What about Lady Satsuki?"

The bubble voice coming from right next to Mako caused both girls to turn around and the pink backdrop to vanish once and for all. Sitting right next to Mako with a pleased expression on her face and her hands clasped firmly behind the nape of her neck was Nui Harime.

"You look familiar," Mako's eyes narrowed in rare suspicion before the familiar happy expression returned to her face, "Have we met before?"

"Maybe..." Nui drawled up secretly as she stuck her tongue out cutely before turning her singular sapphire eye up to Ryuko's fight against Inumuta. She really did not care to watch Ryuko beat Satsuki's little goon. What she was looking forward to was seeing Ichigo utterly destroy the humans and their Goku Uniforms with the awesome power of Mugetsu. Giving a girlish chuckle from the anticipation, she tilted her head to Mako and answered, "But then again, I just have that kind of face, you know."

"Lady Satsuki?" Orihime looked puzzled at the honorifics given to the name, "Isn't she the Student Council President and Ichigo's boss? You know something, Uryu's the Student Council President back in Karakura Town but everyone just calls him Uryu even though his family is rich. I think he would be really embarrassed if I called him Lord Uryu."

"Uh huh," Nui nodded and filed away that particular piece of information. Orihime was one of Ichigo's friends from Karakura Town, so he probably had some sort of friendly feelings for her. She would refrain from hurting or killing Orihime unless absolutely necessary since it would make Ichigo upset and Nui did not want to upset someone she loved as much as her cousin, "But there's a reason I mentioned Lady Satsuki. I heard that she knows the identity of whoever killed Ryuko's dad but she won't say who it is. That's why Ryuko's fighting her quirky miniboss squad, you know."

"Ryuko's dad is dead?" Orihime was visibly saddened by the news and promised to comfort the girl when she got the chance. Turning her attention back to the fight as a curse echoed through the stadium, courtesy of Ryuko, Orihime folded her hands across her lap and wished Ryuko the best of luck.

"God damn it!" Ryuko shouted as her red Scissor Blade was avoided when Inumuta spun out of the path with barely an inch of space, "Your Probe Regalia is really starting to piss me off!"

Inumuta leapt away from Ryuko and quickly began typing on his keyboards. As Ryuko continued to get more and more frustrated with her failure to hit him, her accuracy would begin to suffer. As his sensors predicted another attack, Inumuta leaned to the side and out of the way of Ryuko's Scissor Blade, "At your current level there are no way you can hit me. I've already analyzed the data from your battle against Sanageyama's Blade Regalia and while your speed may be slightly greater than my own, I can still predict and thus avoid your attacks. You might as well use Senkou since there is no way you - "

The Information and Strategy Committee Chair was silenced as a black and red fist slammed into his face and catapulted him backwards through the air before he landed on his back. With her fist smoking and an angry glare on her face, Ryuko snorted and shouted, "People like you piss me off! You're one of those people that think just because they've analyzed everything that they can anticipate every move their opponent makes!"

" I underestimated her," Inumuta pulled himself up and took a ragged breath. As the physically weakest of the Elite Four, his stamina and endurance were magnitudes less than Gamagori's. A few more hits like that and he would be down for the count, "She's even faster than my data predicted? Has her connection with her Kamui increased in the last few weeks to this point? I'll need to up my output if I hope to collect enough data about her Kamui for Lady Satsuki."

"There's only one way to beat the crap out of someone like you!" Ryuko continued as she stared down Inumuta. Gripping her Scissor Blade tightly in both hands, she pointed the weapon at her opponent and shouted, "And that is to be as reckless in battle as possible! You cannot predict my moves if I don't know them myself!"

Rushing towards Inumuta in a burst of speed, her red heels pushing off the ground hard enough to crack the stone composing the stage, Ryuko quickly and suddenly switched her footing around just as she was about to reach Inumuta before sprinting past him. The Information and Strategy Committee Chair was unprepared for such an abrupt change in her battle strategy and was forced to dedicate more and more of his Probe Regalia's processing power to analyzing her new battle pattern.

"Do you think because you can think on your feet I cannot follow your movements?" Inumuta gloated as his furiously typed on his keyboards, "I've already analyzed your new strategy and stance. I cannot be hit by you any - "

Inumuta's smug gloating was interrupted as Ryuko recklessly dropped her guard, switched her Scissor Blade to her left hand and smashed her fist into the bottom of his chin, causing spittle to fly freely through the air.

"That is what happens when you try to analyze everything in battle!" Ryuko shouted as Inumuta's body bounced away from her before he managed to regain his bearings and land on his feet. As his feet left twin trails of dust along the ground as he skidded to a stop, Inumuta took a ragged breath and wiped away a small amount of blood that was leaking from his lips. Staring at her through his visor, Inumuta saw Ryuko grin and point her Scissor Blade at him, "Is this seriously all you can do? At this rate I won't even need to break a sweat to defeat you."

"I see what's happening," Inumuta said after catching his breath. Quickly moving his hands around his keyboards as data streamed down his visor, he grinned and ignored the beads of sweat dripping down his face. Ryuko's strength was greater than his data indicated. If he was hit with a few more of those attacks there was a great risk of his data being lost or corrupted, "Every few seconds you are shifting your stance and boosting your reaction speed to overcome my Probe Regalia's ability to predict and counter. How intriguing. While Goku Uniforms are capable of temporarily boosting their Life Fiber connections, the effect for a Kamui should be many times greater, but I wonder..."

Ryuko scoffed and spun her Scissor Blade around her wrist, "What are you muttering about?"

"I'm curious as to how long your body can withstand your current rate," Inumuta explained as his body slowly began to fade away from in front of Ryuko. Just before he vanished completely, Inumuta gave Ryuko a wide smile and shouted, "The concept of how a human can move like you do simply by donning clothing composed of Life Fibers is inconceivable. Show me how strong someone can become when wearing a Kamui, Ryuko Matoi!"

"What the hell?" Ryuko stepped back and fervently looked around the stage for her opponent, "He disappeared?"

"Camouflage, eh?"

Sitting on top of his pillar, Ichigo narrowed his eyes as he watched Inumuta fade away into the air. His camouflage was nearly perfect and Ichigo was certain if he was fighting the teal haired teen, he wouldn't be able to see even the faint outline his eyes were currently tracking. It took time and effort for him to notice the barest of changes in the light coming from Inumuta's movements and that was time he would not have in a fight.

"So you've noticed it, Ichigo Kurosaki," Gamagori respectfully acknowledged Ichigo even as he kept his attention on the fight below. Matoi's battle against Houka Inumuta was not going exactly as planned. The goal of the first match was to test the limits of Inumuta's Probe Regalia while collecting data on Matoi's Senkou configuration. Out of the three Kamui at Honnouji Academy Matoi's was the only one with an additional combat mode, but at the rate the battle was going she was going to defeat Inumuta without using it. Folding his arms and glaring at Inumuta, in the hopes his fellow Elite Four would understand his mental directions, he added, "But I'm afraid Matoi has lost the battle."

Ichigo turned his focus away from the fight, and Ryuko's attempt to locate Inumuta, to ask Gamagori, "What the hell are you talking about? The hacker can't even lay a hand on Ryuko."

"You have yet to see the full power of Houka Inumuta's optical camouflage!" Gamagori boasted loudly enough that Ichigo almost moved to cover his ears, "When his Probe Regalia shines with the light of a thousand suns, white butterflies will gather and rest their wings on a snowman!"

There was a sudden and awkward silence as not only Ichigo, but Jakuzure and Sanageyama, looked at Gamagori. The silence was broken when Ichigo shook his head and said, "I have no idea what the hell you're talking about. How are butterflies related to camouflage?"

"Oh? Even Strawberry doesn't understand your stupid metaphors, Froggy. Perhaps you should learn to speak normally," Nonon drawled out sarcastically and watched Gamagori's face redden from both anger and embarrassment.

"He vanished completely from sight, Ryuko," Senketsu warned, "Be careful."

"I admit I underestimated your cunning," Inumuta's voice echoed from behind Ryuko but when she twisted her body around she saw no one there. When Inumuta spoke again his voice came from her right, "But when dealing with haphazard and dangerous attack from an opponent like you, I find the most effective measure is not to block or counter, but to avoid and dodge. It takes more processing power to derive a counter to an attack than to simply avoid it."

Ryuko avoided the first attack through sheer luck. Inumuta had been close enough that as he went to punch her he barely touched her Scissor Blade, allowing Ryuko to notice his presence and duck below the blow. The second strike to her stomach and the subsequent dozen blows did not fail to connect. Blow after blow rained down on her and while the damage and pain were low thanks to the defensive properties of Senketsu's armor it was still enough to force her back to the edge of the stage.

"Damn it," Ryuko wiped a small trail of blood from her lips as she glanced over the edge towards the ground far below. As she was contemplating what to do, her ears picked up the subtle sound of motion just a few feet away from her. Snapping her leg out, she was luckily greeted with a cry of pain as the invisible Inumuta was blasted back and away from her.

"What?" Inumuta's voice rang out from beneath his optical camouflage, "How did you hit me?"

"I heard Gamagori mention your technique was called optical camouflage. That means you turn invisible, right?" Ryuko asked as she thrust her Scissor Blade into the ground and closed her eyes. As she strained her ears to their limit, Senketu's assistance only further boosting the limit of her hearing, she added, "But I can still hear you! Now that I can tell where you're going to be from your footsteps, your little invisibility trick is pointless!"

" Such valuable data," Inumuta thought stoically as he invisibly walked around Ryuko from a safe distance. His eyes narrowed beneath his visor as his sensors picked up Ryuko's eyes somewhat accurately following his footsteps, "Allowing Ryuko Matoi to gain such an easy avenue to attacking me would be bad. I suppose I will have to kick things into third gear to protect the data I've gathered."

"I did not expect your Kamui to heighten your senses so drastically," Inumuta admitted and briefly flinched when Ryuko's eyes focused directly on him. Regaining his composure, he quickly typed several macros and command into his Probe Regalia and smiled as a high-pitched whine emanated from his Goku Uniform. Noticing the perplexed look on Ryuko's face, he smirked and said, "What you just heard was my very own Acoustic Cancelling software. Now you won't be able to hear anything from me but my voice."

Instead of getting angry, Ryuko pulled her Scissor Blade out of the ground and held it horizontally in front of her body. As she was surrounded by a faint red aura, she scoffed and said, "That's fine with me. If I can't hear or see you, then I'll just have to attack everyone at once! Senketsu Senkou!"

In a brief flash of light Senketsu was transformed into his more armored and powerful Senkou form. As twin bursts of steam shot out of her shoulders and hips as she became accustomed to the power circulating through her body, Ryuko held her Scissor Blade up, red and black jagged lines covering it once more. Taking a moment to steel her nerves, she let loose a loud cry and ran towards where she last heard her opponent before skidding to a stop and swinging her Scissor Blade horizontally in the air.

"This is what I've been waiting for, Ryuko Matoi!" Inumuta shouted triumphantly as the sensors in his visor picked up the invisible blade extending out from Ryuko's Scissor Blade. Leaping into the air, his legs tucked up as far as they could go, Inumuta laughed as he avoided the attack that nearly destroyed Sanageyama's Blade Regalia Mark I, "The data on your Senkou configuration is simply astonishing! Show me more of this hidden form!"

"Go to hell!" Ryuko shouted as Inumuta continued to avoid her attacks. Even if she could no longer hear his footsteps, she could still faintly hear his breathing and that was good enough for her to aim with. Judging by how Inumuta's breathing was getting faster and faster, Ryuko figured her attacks must be getting more accurate.

" Her attacks are getting more accurate. How can she still hear me?" Inumuta gasped in shock as one of Ryuko's Senkou attacks raged towards him. Improvising a defense by leaning back and planting his hands on the ground, he was stunned when a thin line appeared on his Probe Regalia. After running a quick system check, and breathing a sigh of relief when his scans said his data was not compromised, Inumuta tried to formulate a plan, "This is getting too dangerous. My processing power cannot keep up with this level of fighting for much longer. Matoi's attacks are getting more accurate and my evasion rate is falling exponentially. I have perhaps a minute before it will be impossible for me to evade her attacks. I should consider forfeiting to preserve the data I've collected."

"This is getting far too dangerous. I can see that I am no match for you," Inumuta announced as he deactivated his optical camouflage, "Perhaps it is time that I resigned myself to my fate. I, Houka Inumuta, do hereby..."

While Inumuta was mulling over the various methods he could end the fight without risking damaging his Probe Regalia, Ryuko was doing some heavy thinking of her own. She was trying to come up with a way to hit someone that could predict and avoid her Senkou strikes. Senkou wrapped her Scissor Blade in a layer of invisible energy that greatly increased its range and cutting power but it was useless if she couldn't hit anything with it.

"Damn, and here I thought Sanageyama was the only one that could dodge Senkou." Glancing down at her Scissor Blade and noticing just a small piece of cloth hanging off the edge of the weapon, Ryuko grinned. Even if she couldn't hear Inumuta's footsteps any longer her attacks were getting more and more accurate with every swing. That last attack had barely nicked Inumuta's Probe Regalia and it was only a matter of time until she got a solid hit.

"It sucks that I don't have time," she thought annoyed as she glanced around the arena for any sign of Inumuta. If she could simply see through his optical camouflage then she wouldn't need to overthink things and could simply hit him. Fighting an invisible opponent was starting to really piss her off, "And I'm running out of options. Every time Senkou misses I waste the energy and blood Senketsu's stored and I don't know what other tricks the four-eyed bastard has in his Probe Regalia. If it comes down to it, I suppose I could always use that..."

"Hey Senketsu," Ryuko whispered to her Kamui, causing him to look at her. Grimacing nervously, she said, "I have an idea but it's risky. Do you remember what I tried doing during our second fight against Sanageyama?"

"Yes. I remember that attack quite well. I warned you it was dangerous and yet you still used it," Senketsu's pupil narrowed as he recalled their defeat. When they woke up at Mako's house after collapsing unconscious on the ground, they had no idea how they got there. It was only later on that Mako said a strange woman dropped them off and Ichigo explaining who it was that did it, "Please don't tell me you plan on using it again. The last time you tried it used up so much of your blood and energy that you were knocked unconscious by it."

"I know," Ryuko admitted quietly. She remembered just how much pain she had been in after using the attack and was not keen on doing it again. She had forced Senketsu to go through with her plan despite his warning and they both suffered because of it, "I know the technique's risks and how much energy it uses. I'm asking you if you're up to trying it again."

Senketsu was shocked that Ryuko was putting her trust in him and he would have started crying if they weren't in the middle of a battle. Taking a second to compose himself, Senketsu said, "Yes. I'm willing to do that technique once more, but this time it will be different. You remember the toll it took on your body and know what to expect. I'm certain if use it you'll be exhausted and forced back to my basic transformation but this time you will still be conscious. Just try not to miss..."

"Tch," Ryuko took a deep breath and scoffed, "Don't worry, Senketsu. I know better than to miss with this technique. With everything riding on this fight I can't afford to miss."

" Agreed, I'm ready when you are. Let's make it count, Ryuko!"

As Ryuko was enveloped in a turbulent red aura, she noticed Inumuta reappear across the arena and raise his arms. He was mumbling something but she couldn't hear him, so as she raised her Scissor Blade into the air above her head. Unlike the first time she used this technique, Ryuko was much better prepared for the heavy toll Niban Genkai would take on her body. Already she could feel her energy being sapped away, drawn up into her Scissor Blade to increase the overall power of the attack. Gritting her teeth to deafen the pain she was beginning to feel, she let out a shout as jets of steam shot out from her Kamui, "I can't hear a word you're saying but I don't care! Just try to dodge this attack you annoying, invisible bastard! Let's go Senketsu! Senkou - Niban Genkai!"

" This isn't in my data!" Inumuta was forced to cover his eyes as the jagged red and black lines covering Ryuko's Scissor Blade began shining brightly enough that it seemed her entirely blade was glowing. As his visor's sensor adapted to the change in brightness, he involuntarily took a step back, "This is the same attack she used against Sanageyama's Blade Regalia Mark II but it's on an entirely different level. The energy flow and density are on an entirely different level from the data I've collected. I need to surrender now before she attacks."

"There's no need to use such a powerful technique on me," Inumuta announced with false bravado as a fierce wind appeared, "I know when I've been beaten."

"What?" Ryuko shouted as the last of the red aura surrounding her body was sucked up into her Scissor Blade, which had transformed into a large glowing two-handed version of itself, "I still can't hear a word you're saying!"

"W-Wait!" Inumuta pleaded indignantly as he moved to deactivate his Probe Regalia and surrender, "I give up!"

"Like hell I'm going to allow a coward like you to surrender!" Ryuko raced across the arena, twin jets blasting out from her back, before leaping into the air. As she reached her apex, she let out a roar as she swung her Scissor Blade downwards, "Take this! Seni-Soshitsu!"

Inumuta never had a chance to evade the attack. By concentrating everything she had into that one attack, Ryuko not only increased the power of the attack but also its width. Even as he began running to the side to avoid the attack, Inumuta's sensors were all blaring alerts that the probability of avoiding the attack was zero.

"No! No! No!"

The attack hit him with the force of a small explosion and it was only by the great power granted to him by his Probe Regalia and Ryuko's lack of a desire to kill him that Inumuta survived. As his body was enveloped in the energy detonated by Ryuko's attack, Inumuta could only scream as his Probe Regalia was torn apart at the seams and all the data he collected during the fight was deleted.

"Ha... ha... ha..."

The world briefly wavered around her and Ryuko collapsed down to one knee, her Scissor Blade helping to prop her up, as gentle wisps of steam rose from Senketsu's creases and folds. She was still conscious, which was a lot better than what happened during her fight against Sanageyama. When she tried using Niban Genkai all on her own, it left her so drained that it knocked her unconscious, but when she asked Senketsu to help her it only left her utterly exhausted. Perhaps she would need to listen to Senketsu's advice more in the future. As every muscle in her body protested her actions, Ryuko stood back up.

"At least I took that guy down," Ryuko took a ragged breath and grinned when she saw Inumuta's naked but otherwise uninjured form laying on the stage in front of her. As the Life Fibers that were woven into Inumuta's Probe Regalia drifted through the air and were absorbed into Senketsu, causing her to briefly glow with a red aura, Ryuko smirked at a visibly scowling Satsuki and raised her fist, "That's one down, Satsuki Kiryuin!"

"Indeed," Satsuki answered back passively before turning her attention to Sanageyama, "Your match against Ichigo Kurosaki will begin in ten minutes Sanageyama."

The blind kendo user nodded and stood up, "Yes, Lady Satsuki. I shall go prepare my Blade Regalia Mark II."

Back down in the arena, Ryuko was feeling the first dredges of energy returning to her. Taking a calming breath and transforming Senketsu back into his normal uniform, she turned to walk back to her pillar when her Kamui asked, "Niban Genkai?"

"Hey!" Ryuko gave Senketsu an annoyed look and pulled at his fabric, "I had to come up with a name for that attack in the middle of a battle! I thought something like 'Second Limit' sounded really cool! Besides, I didn't hear you offering any suggestions."

" Perhaps," Senketsu conceded before adding, "But I come up with the name for the next technique."

Ryuko huffed and said, "... fine."

As she walked up the collapsible flight of stairs so conveniently provided for her by Satsuki Kiryuin, Ryuko noticed Ichigo walking down for his upcoming back. Flashing him a confident and victorious smile, she gave him a thumbs-up and said, "That's one down."

"I saw," Ichigo smirked as he remembered the look on Inumuta's face as Ryuko ignored his surrender. It didn't take Ichigo long, especially since he was privy to all of the Student Council meets due to being the Student Council Vice President, to see why someone like Inumuta, who had an obsession with collecting and analyzing data surrounding Kamui and Goku Uniforms, would agree to a king of the hill battle. His goal had to be collect data on Senketsu and then surrender so the data could be analyzed by Iori. Ryuko's destruction of his Probe Regalia was probably the worst thing that could happen to the teen hacker.

"Niban Genkai, huh?" Ichigo looked over Ryuko's shoulder at Inumuta. The teal haired teen had regained consciousness and was putting on a tracksuit being handed to him by a One-Star student. Ignoring Inumuta whining over his lost data, Ichigo said, "Interesting choice for a name. I suppose I should get ready for my fight against Sanageyama. The bastard's going to be tough."

"I know," Ryuko's eyes narrowed as she recalled her second fight against Sanageyama, "His Shingantsu is really something, Ichigo."

"Don't worry about me," Ichigo waved off Ryuko's worries and walked past her, "I have a plan."

Once they were out of Ryuko's earshot, Mugetsu turned her eyes upward and asked, "You have a plan?"

"No," Ichigo admitted with a carefree shrug, "I know firsthand that plans never last long. I'll just see how strong Sanageyama really is and wing it. That's always worked for me before."

" And here I thought you knew what you were doing." Mugetsu commented sarcastically, "Just don't lose. I want to be able to gloat to Senketsu that I defeated an opponent that he could not."

"Relax, Mugetsu," Ichigo stared up at Satsuki, who seemed to be looking directly at him as well. Turning his gaze away from Satsuki, Ichigo could not help but feel as if something bad was going to happen. Over the past few weeks, he had come to associate such a particular feeling with a certain blonde girl. He couldn't see her watching him but Ichigo could sense that Nui Harime was nearby. If he knew the Grand Couturier as well as he thought he did, Nui probably had something in store for him.

---

...

---

"Way to go, Ryuko! You won! You won!" Mako jumped in the air and cheered as she watched her best friend in the entire world defeat Inumuta. While Orihime was clapping happily besides her and with a smile on her face, it was Mako that was constantly replaying the awesome fight in her head over and over again. The way Ryuko jumped into the air and hit Inumuta with a Scissor Blade made out of pure energy was like something out of a movie. It even had a name!

"That was amazing, Mako," Orihime was suitably impressed by the power displayed by Ryuko's Niban Genkai attack. While her ability to sense spiritual pressure did not seem to work on Ryuko or anyone in Honnou City for that matter, she could sense that her Kamui was incredibly power. If she had to guess, Orihime would say that Niban Genkai could have taken out someone like Renji or Rukia if Ryuko managed to hit them.

" You know it's strange. Ever since I left Karakura Town to come cheer Ichigo on I've noticed how... different the rest of the world was."

It was almost like a veil was lifted from her eyes the moment she stepped outside of Karakura Town. It was strange, and highly ironic, that compared to the rest of the world Karakura Town was relatively normal looking. When she turned to ask Mako a question, Orihime noticed something odd about the way Nui Harime was watching the fight. At first it looked like the blonde haired girl was simply fixated on Ryuko's battle but the intensity in her single eye frightened Orihime. Quickly composing her nerves before she was seen, Orihime gently shook Mako's jittering shoulder and asked, "Hey Mako, are Life Fibers really this powerful?"

"Life Fibers can do anything!" Mako explained happily before noticing Orihime's confused expression, "That's a silly question to ask! You should already know all about Life Fibers since Revocs puts them into all their clothing. I've seen some of their advertisements on the television Matorou stole. Revocs, which is owned by Lady Satsuki's mother, says all their clothes have a small amount of Life Fibers to 'prevent wear, tear and other clothing-related problems.' It's kind of strange you don't know that already, Orihime."

"Well..." Orihime scratched her chin and looked away, "The thing is, I've never heard of Life Fibers until my friend Uryu came back from his summer job at Revocs last year. I wanted to ask him all about his job for my summer essay but he was all hush-hush about it. He wouldn't say anything about Life Fibers other than that they were some corporate secret or something!"

"There's no Revocs-brand clothing in Karakura Town? How odd," Nui Harime said with fake surprise. She, of course, knew exactly why anyone from Karakura Town would not know about Life Fibers. Ichigo's dad was doing an impressive job at keeping Lady Ragyo's influence out of his town. It was funny to think in the entire world

Karakura Town was the only place that was entirely free of Revocs clothing.

"I have a question, Orihime!" Mako had moved on from the issue of Orihime not knowing about Life Fibers and was already focusing her attention on something that was apparently far more important, "How long have you known Ichigo? I met him all the way back on Student Evaluation Day. This was even before I met my best friend Ryuko! Ichigo is my first friend and Ryuko is my best friend because she saved me from being dipped like a French fry in a vat of boiling oil, which would have ruined my reputation since I did not have my sexy panties on that day!"

Orihime smiled sadly at Mako's imagination and said, "It's actually rather sad to think about my first time seeing Ichigo. When I was twelve years old my older brother got into a car accident. I carried him to the nearest doctor, Ichigo's dad, but they weren't able to save him before the ambulance came. It wasn't until a few months later I found out that the boy who answered the doorbell and tried to help save my brother was actually Ichigo."

"That's really sad, Orihime," Mako was beginning to comically cry after hearing the story.

"Please don't cry, Mako! That happened a long time ago and I'm quite over it!" Orihime exclaimed in embarrassment. When she saw Mako still was about to cry, she looked around and let out a happy gasp, "Look, Ururu's back!"

Immediately Mako's mood shifted from sad to happy. Whipping her head around so fast that an audible crack should have been heard, Mako saw Ururu walking towards them and gasped in shock, "You're right! Ururu's back with the snacks and it looks like she got one of everything just like we asked!"

Ururu walked through the stands towards her friends while balancing two stacks of food in her hands and apologizing every few seconds whenever she accidentally bumped into someone. When she finally reached Mako and Orihime, she looked over the side of the food and snacks and her expression immediately hardened upon seeing Nui Harime sitting around looking innocent, "What are you doing here?"

Orihime looked from Ururu to Nui and then finally back to Ururu, "You know her, Ururu?"

"There's no reason to be such a stick in the mud. I'm here for the same reason you are," Nui explained coyly as she ignored Ururu's suspicious gaze. Cutely sticking out her tongue, she saw Ururu's expression hadn't changed and giggled, "I'm here to watch Ichigo fight. He is my cousin and I should be here to support my family. You really should be doing the same thing, you know."

Ururu passed off the food to an expectant Mako without taking her eyes off Nui, "I don't believe you."

"Gosh, that's really mean of you to say, Amu. Are you trying to hurt my feelings?" Nui whined childishly before her attitude perked up. Clapping her hands in front of her body and puffing her cheeks out, she looked away from Ururu towards Mako and said, "I really thought you would understand my motives."

"I didn't know Ichigo had a cousin," Orihime was confused. If Ichigo had a cousin then why hadn't she heard of her before? Ichigo wasn't someone to hide family and Orihime knew for a fact his dad would have told everyone in earshot, "You don't look anything like his dad so are you related to his mom?"

For a moment Nui's face shifted and changed before the saccharine smile appeared once more, "That's an awfully rude thing for you to suggest. There's no way I'm related to someone that common."

Ururu continued to stare at Nui despite knowing the Grand Couturier wasn't going to do anything anytime soon, "What do you want with Ichigo?"

"Gee, it's bothersome to repeat myself," Nui pouted and began idly kicking her legs, "I already told you I'm just here to watch my cousin have some fun! I pinky-swear that I will not lay a finger on Ichigo for the entire day just so you can relax and smile instead of being all gloomy. It's just so depressing to see that frown on your face every time we see each other."

"If you try anything - "

"Hush!" Nui exclaimed joyfully as she appeared in front of Ururu and placed a finger on her lips, "Ichigo's fight is just about to start and I don't want to miss seeing my cousin have lots of fun!"

As Nui giggled and slide back next to Mako, she failed to notice the slightly disturbed expression on Orihime's face. The normally happy and carefree girl had sensed something off about Nui ever since she appeared and her interaction with Ururu, someone Orihime knew to normally be stoic and hard to provoke, made her skin crawl. Rubbing her hands over the goose-bumps forming on her arms, Orihime watched as the images on the screen changed to show Ichigo and Sanageyama.

" Please be careful, Ichigo."

---

...

---

"I've been waiting for this battle for quite some time, Ichigo Kurosaki."

Uzu Sanageyama had his hands tucked into the pockets of his Goku Uniform as he descended the steps opposite that of Ichigo. Stepping gently into the recently rebuilt arena, he turned towards his opponent and gave a satisfied smirk. His Shingantsu was telling him Ichigo's heart rate was calm and steady but that he was cautious and tense at the same time. It seemed Matoi had told Ichigo of her fight against the Athletic Committee Chair and the power of his Blade Regalia

Mark II. That was good. It meant Ichigo knew the power he possessed and yet was truly willing to face a power capable of clashing with a Kamui.

"Is that so," Ichigo responded rhetorically as his hand inched towards Tournesol sheathed on his back.

"Yes," Sanageyama laughed as he pointed at Ichigo, "It was thanks to your advice that I've managed to come to this point."

"I gave you advice?" Ichigo scratched the back of his head as he tried to recall telling Sanageyama anything important. The only time he could have given him some advice was after Ryuko managed to beat him but he couldn't have possibly taken what he said to such a literal extreme.

"It was after my defeat against Ryuko Matoi!" Sanageyama shouted angrily before calming down and composing his features. Scoffing and whipping his head toward the pillar where Ryuko was standing, he continued, "It was thanks to your advice that I learned how to see the world as it truly is. With my eyes sewn shut all my other senses have expanded to the point where nothing can remain hidden from me! So because of how you helped me I'm going to fight you fairly. This match will be no tricks, traps or secrets. We will fight with nothing more than our skills with a blade!"

"Back up just a damn second," Ichigo rubbed the bridge of his nose and he tried to process what Sanageyama was saying. There was no way that Sanageyama was so desperate for a rematch against Ryuko that he would sew his own eyes shut. Who in their right minds would think that was a good idea? Dragging his hand down his face, he said, "When I told you that, I was telling you that your reliance on seeing everything led to your defeat and that you should think about training your other senses to match your eyes. I was suggesting you wear a blindfold or something. Why would you think blinding yourself was a good idea?"

There was a tense silence throughout the stadium as Sanageyama seemed to ponder Ichigo's words. Before he finally answered, Sanageyama glanced up at Satsuki, "Sometimes you need to sacrifice something important to you in order to gain something of far greater value. I am quite aware that I could have done other things besides sew my eyes shut but my loss to Matoi was not the only thing I lost that day. I also lost my honor as one of Lady Satsuki's Elite four. By sewing my eyes shut and casting away Tengantsu for Shingantsu, I've proved to her my undying loyalty."

Sanageyama's mood shifted as he grinned manically and threw his arms out, "Did we come here to talk or fight Ichigo? Prepare yourself! Three-Star Goku Uniform: Blade Regalia Mark II!"

In a bright flash of light the large and imposing form of Sanageyama's upgraded Blade Regalia crashed onto the stage in front of Ichigo. The Blade Regalia looked different than the last time Ichigo saw it. While it wasn't nearly as bulky as its original form Ichigo could sense its power was greater. Staring up at the armored green form looming over him, Ichigo reached for the spaulder on his left shoulder, "Get ready, Mugetsu. This fight isn't going to be easy."

"His aura is strong but nothing we cannot handle," Mugetsu commented dryly. She didn't know why Ichigo was worried. There was no chance that Sanageyama would be nearly as difficult as Nui Harime. Telepathically sighing and rolling her eyes, she added, "The problem is going to be his Shingantsu. If he can truly detect everything around him, he will be able to detect and predict our attacks long before we can hit him. You have any ideas?"

Ichigo gave his Kamui a confident smile as he slammed his hand down on the spaulder, "If Sanageyama can truly see everything, then we'll just have to attack faster than he can react. Let's do this! Life Fiber Initial Release: Kamui Mugetsu!"

A gust of wind blew ominously through the stadium built in Honnouji Academy to accommodate the final battles of the Naturals Election. As Ichigo, clad in Mugetsu, stared up at the much larger Sanageyama and his Blade Regalia, he readjusted his grip on Tournesol and slid his left foot back. Gently concentrating on pushing power to the Life Fibers in Mugetsu's legs, Ichigo stepped to the side and abruptly vanished from sight.

"Oh?" Satsuki's mouth quirked upward in silent satisfaction. She was intrigued that Ichigo was using the same high speed technique that failed against Junketsu against Sanageyama's Blade Regalia although as she watched afterimages of Ichigo form around the arena she could not feel envious that Junketsu was incapable of such feats. Was it still true that she alone possessed a true Kamui or was the opposite now true? Both Ichigo and Matoi's Kamui have shown the ability to change into configurations beyond the initial transformation and yet Junketsu has shown no inclination of doing so.

" They converse with their Kamui on a daily basis but Junketsu remains eternally silent to my ears," Satsuki's hands tightened against the hilt of Bakuzan as her failure to elicit even the most basic of communication from her Kamui was thrown back in her face. How was she supposed to face what was to come if she had to fight Junketsu for control every time she wore it? Both Ichigo and Matoi were beginning to surpass her and she was unable to keep up.

"This must be the high speed technique you used against Lady Satsuki. It's impressive," Sanageyama complimented as various afterimages of Ichigo appeared around him. He had witnessed Matoi use a similar technique but it was not nearly as fast or perfected as Ichigo's. Even his Shingantsu was having trouble pinpointing Ichigo's location as every time he would turn to where Ichigo would be the orange haired teen would adjust his speed and throw off his game, "But it's not enough!"

Spinning around faster than his Blade Regalia suggested he could move, Sanageyama struck out with his massive shinai and managed to parry Ichigo's Tournesol before it could hit his back much to the former substitute shinigami's surprise. As Sanageyama adjusted his grip on his shinai to release a counterattack, Ichigo modified his speed in mid-step and calmly spun around the wooden weapon before vanishing.

" Damn," Ichigo cursed as he was almost hit by Sanageyama, "His Shingantsu really is something special. That was the speed I used to hit Satsuki with but Sanageyama was able to evade and counter without any problems. I should push Mugetsu a little more but I need to test out something before I do."

Sprinting around Sanageyama until he was once again behind him, Ichigo shifted his weight onto his front foot to slow down before blasting off towards his opponent with Tournesol raised above his head. Just as he was within inches of landing a solid blow on Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, his opponent twisted his body to the side, leaving a small series of illusionary afterimages behind him, before slamming his shinai into Ichigo.

" Ichigo!" Mugetsu shouted in concern as her wearer tumbled along the stage before coming to a stop.

"Nothing's broken, Mugetsu," Ichigo answered bluntly and without a hint of pain as he stood back up, much to Sanageyama's surprise. The Athletic Committee Chair had gotten a solid hit on Ichigo's torso and yet Ichigo didn't seem any worse for wear. Rubbing his side and letting out a small grunt as he felt a tender spot, Ichigo turned back to Sanageyama and told Mugetsu, "I was just testing something out."

"Huh?" Sanageyama could not hear Mugetsu but he inferred from Ichigo speaking that he must be talking to his Kamui, "What are you talking about?"

Ichigo looked at Sanageyama but did not say anything as he once against drifted to the side before abruptly vanishing. However unlike the previous time Ichigo's speed was being pushed to the limit. "Do you like it?" Ichigo's voice echoed from several different places at once. With several of his images speaking in conjunction, he said, "It took some time but I finally managed to figure out the limits of your Shingantsu. Even if you can hear, feel or sense everything around you there is still one thing holding you back - your reaction time. Even if your Shingantsu can detect me, if you can't react in time then you can't stop me!"

To prove his point Ichigo turned in mid-step, causing a small crater to form in the ground from the force, and left a large gash along the side of Sanageyama's Blade Regalia before quickly resuming his movement. Forced to step backwards from the power of Ichigo's strike, the sound of creaking metal and steel reverberating through the area in the process, Sanageyama forced one foot down and gripped the giant shinai in his hand as tightly as he could.

"Ichigo is right," Sanageyama admitted as he felt another gash appear on his left arm before he could react, "His speed is greater than when he fought Lady Satsuki, which means Iori and Inumuta's battle data is useless. I thought my Shingantsu would be perfect for dealing with Ichigo but he takes one look at me and breaks down my technique in seconds. Ignoring his speed for the moment, what I can sense tells me that nothing is being wasted. His movements are more fluid and precise than Mato's and barely any energy is wasted on superfluous actions. It is almost like I'm fighting Lady Satsuki."

It was not until Sanageyama felt Ichigo cleave through part of his faceplate, leaving a large gash and causing part of the covering to fall loudly to the floor, that he decided enough was enough. Sanageyama struck the ground with both of his feet to increase his footing and slammed both of his armored gauntlets together in front of his Blade Regalia. As his hands disappeared and were replaced by a large shinai nearly three times the size of the one he had just been using, Sanageyama roared, "I expected nothing else from the man who has gained the favor of Lady Satsuki but this is where it ends, Ichigo Kurosaki. I might respect you as a fellow swordsman but I must defeat you for Lady Satsuki's sake! You've shown me your power so let me return the favor and demonstrate the resolve of a man who is willing to sacrifice!"

"What's he doing?"

Ichigo stopped running and jumped away from Sanageyama until he felt he was at a safe distance. As he witnessed the Blade Regalia's hands vanish only to be replaced by a much more massive shinai, he tightened his grip on Tournesol and tensed his muscles, "That cannot be good. Ryuko almost lost to this guy and she never mentioned anything about this attack so he must have not used it against her."

"His power is growing, Ichigo," Mugetsu muttered in a tone filled with suspicion and dread. While the power coiling up inside Sanageyama's Goku Uniform was nowhere near the level of power she had felt behind every one of Nui Harime's strikes, it was still something they shouldn't ignore, "Be on your guard. I'm willing to bet my stitching that Sanageyama is preparing to unleash everything he has to finish the fight. Blocking it is out of the question. The energy I feel is similar in nature to Senketsu's Niban Genkai and thus highly dangerous."

"You don't need to tell me to be careful, Mugetsu," Ichigo answered without diverting his attention from Sanageyama. "I would need to be an idiot to think I couldn't be hurt just because you're a Kamui. If anything, I need to be careful not to get cocky. Get ready. Here it comes."

"Embrace the power that I sacrificed my eyesight for, Ichigo Kurosaki!" Sanageyama raised his massive shinai over his head as his Blade Regalia pushed itself into overdrive. In a massive and onetime burst of speed that could not be replicated without overheating his Goku Uniform, Sanageyama dashed across the arena and swung his shinai towards the surprised Ichigo, "Take this! Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken!"

Events seemed to move in slow motion to Ichigo as he watched Sanageyama swing his shinai downwards. Even with the burst of speed he used it was not enough to fully close the distance between them, which meant there was a good three meters between the spot where the shinai would hit the ground and where Ichigo was standing. Quickly realizing that there was no way he could dodge to the side or parry the strike, Ichigo did the only thing he could possibly do and threw his body backwards into the air directly away from Sanageyama just as the shinai impacted the ground and everything exploded in a blaze of green and white.

Ryuko was forced to cover her eyes as the massive explosion blanketed the arena in a cacophony of light and sound. Once the light died down enough for her to look, she glanced fervently over the arena for any sign of Ichigo and shouted, "Ichigo!"

"Don't tell me that's all it took," Nonon sarcastically quipped as she crossed her arms and pouted childishly. She wanted to be the one to kick Strawberry's ass, damn it! Pointing her baton down at the arena, she growled, "How dare you take my victory away from me, Wild Monkey! I was supposed to be the one to kick that stupid Strawberry's ass, not you!"

"Watch your tongue, Jakuzure," Gamagori growled menacingly to his fellow member of the Elite Four. His personal beliefs about Ichigo Kurosaki aside, he was still Lady Satsuki's Vice President and thus was deserving of a respectful tone and manner. As the Disciplinary Committee Chair, it was his duty to uphold the rules and regulations of Honnouji Academy even if he did not personally agree with them. Rules were derived for a reason and without them everything would devolve into anarchy as he witnessed during the Naturals Election, "This fight is not yet over."

"Huh? What are you smoking?" Nonon tilted her head towards Gamagori in disbelief before scoffing, "There's no way Strawberry could have survived an attack like that. Even if he does have a stupid Kamui he should still be on the ground unconscious and in a lot of pain."

"Gamagori's words hold the truth, Jakuzure," Satsuki's voice cut through their argument with ease, causing both members of the Elite Four to turn upwards, "Sanageyama's Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken is indeed a powerful move but it requires connecting directly with his opponent to achieve maximum effectiveness. Watch and take note of what happened."

There was a shifting in the air before Ichigo emerged from the top of the massive explosion clad in Mugetsu Gufū. After flying nearly fifty feet into the air he turned around and landed roughly on the edge of the arena furthest away from Sanageyama. Collapsing down to one knee as Mugetsu reverted to her base transformation accompanied by a sparkling of blue stars, Ichigo stabbed Tournesol into the ground as he gulped in much needed air.

"Damn it, that hurt like hell," he sputtered as several trails of blood leaked down his face. While Mugetsu's form was covered in scorch marks and burns from the explosion, his split decision to jump into the air and activate Gufū saved the both of them from getting any serious injuries. By throwing himself away from the blast, Ichigo limited the impact of the heat and shockwave on his body, allowing him to escape with relative minor injuries. Pushing his body back onto its feet and pulling Tournesol out of the ground, Ichigo wiped some of the blood that was getting into his eyes onto the back of his arm, "I don't want to get hit by something like that again. Are you alright, Mugetsu?"

" I feel like I was just run through a dryer but I'll be fine,"

Mugetsu sarcastically answered as she regained her bearings. That explosion had taken a toll on her coordination and the world seemed to still be spinning, "The better question is how you're doing, Ichigo. As a Kamui my pain threshold is naturally greater than a human's."

"I'll be fine," Ichigo answered gruffly as he rubbed a kink in his neck. Already he could feel the pain in his body beginning to abate, which continued to strike him as odd. Even when he was a shinigami, something like Sanageyama's attack should have hurt him for a while. There was no logical reason why he was feeling better so quickly except if Mugetsu was healing his body without realizing it. Placing Tournesol on his shoulder, Ichigo's brow creased as he thought for a moment before asking, "I hate to admit it but I don't think my speed is going to be enough to defeat Sanageyama. Every time I hit him I could tell his reactions were getting quicker and more accurate. His Shingantsu really is something if he's able to keep up with us. You got a battle form up your sleeves like Senketsu's Senkou I can use?"

" Unfortunately it's not that simple," Mugetsu explained with venom in her voice. She did not like being reminded of the fact Senketsu was able to unlock a battle configuration before she could. She and Ichigo were the ones to fight Satsuki Kiryuin and survive against the monster that was Nui Harime. It was wrong on so many levels that they still didn't have the equivalent of Senkou. Shivering in suppressed anger, Mugetsu turned her eyes to Ichigo and growled, "While I don't like that Senketsu managed to have a battle configuration before me, it's not as simple as just wishing it into existence."

Ichigo began to see Sanageyama's massive form appear from gaps in the smoke and dust, "What's the problem?"

" An advanced configuration requires a specific stimulus," Mugetsu explained, "You are able to use Gufū because during our fight against Jakuzure you needed to be able to fight her in the air. My Life Fibers responded to your mental request and adjusted themselves and evolved to counter the problem. Senketsu's Senkou is no different. Ryuko needed to be able to hit Sanageyama through his Tengantsu and thus Senketsu responded to her mental desires. If you truly are in need for a battle configuration all you need to do is imprint your mental desires and wishes upon my Life Fibers. I will do my best to consciously open my Life Fibers to your request to speed up the process, but you need to mentally dominate and force your ideas onto them for the configuration to be created. Are you ready?"

"Sorry Mugetsu, but that just doesn't work for me."

Ichigo held Tournesol in front of his body and took a deep breath as memories of his time as a shinigami filtered through his mind. He remembered the night that started it all and how he gladly been willing to risk his very life to save his family from a hollow. He recalled storming through both the Soul Society and Hueco Mundo to save his friends despite people telling him it was suicidal. Closing his eyes, his body enveloped in a blue aura with the same coloring as the blade in his hands, Ichigo thought back to his final clash against Aizen, the man who wanted to be a god, and how he sacrificed his powers to stop the mad man. As the aura continued to intensify around him, Ichigo recalled the words Zangetsu said to him during his battle against Kenpachi.

" Can you hear his blade mourning, Ichigo? He has never listened to that voice. If a shinigami and their zanpakuto do not trust each other and work together, then their strength will be diminished. For someone who believes in his own strength, it is impossible for him to understand such a fundamental concept."

"Forcing my ideas and beliefs on anyone just doesn't sit well with me," Ichigo announced as Mugetsu's power continued to shift and contort. As his orange hair began shining with a bright blue light similar in color to Tournesol, he said, "If you say that's the only way for me to get stronger then forget about it. You're my friend, Mugetsu, and I would never force you to do anything even if you wanted me to. You can yell at me for being stupid or idiotic but I'm just that kind of person. If you are still able to create the new form, then I want it to be one where I can use your power to protect my friends from those that would hurt them. I don't need to be any stronger than that!"

" Ichigo... " Mugetsu was shocked at Ichigo's response and her eyes began tearing up as a wave of emotion hit her. Quickly clamping down on the feeling before she began blubbering and crying like Senketsu was so often doing, Mugetsu's eyes widened as a burst of power shot through her Life Fibers, "Very well then! You can leave this to me, Ichigo! I know what I must do so call out the name of the configuration and I shall forever refer to it as such!"

"Thanks, Mugetsu," Ichigo grinned and turned towards the awaiting Sanageyama, "Sorry for the wait but I'm going to have to end this fight now. Mugetsu Zangetsu"

In a burst of blue energy and light Mugetsu's form around Ichigo shifted and changed. The white armor covering his arms and legs body from his neck down thinned out and looked to be more streamlined while the shoulderpads Mugetsu's eyes rested upon now jutted upwards and greatly resembled Junketsu's. As his hands clenched tightly around Tournesol, wisps of blue-colored steam rising randomly off the hardened Life Fiber blade, Ichigo felt Mugetsu's energy and Life Fibers connect with the Life Fibers in Tournesol. While the blade did not change its overall appearance, it was now faintly glowing with the same coloring as Mugetsu's power.

"This is the thrill I've been waiting for, Ichigo Kurosaki!" Sanageyama shouted as he beheld Mugetsu's new form, "I would not want to defeat you unless you are at your very best!"

He couldn't believe that Ichigo was not only conscious but able to fight after getting hit by his Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken. All of Iori and Inumuta's tests suggested that the power output of the strike would be more than enough to incapacitate a Kamui wearer of Matoi's level with a direct hit. Swinging his shinai to disperse the remaining dust and smoke, he stabbed the weapon through the air at Ichigo, "You were smart enough to avoid getting directly hit by my Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken, but I'm glad I missed! It was only because I missed that I'm now able to witness your new form! Zangetsu, was it? Well then! Show me the power of your Zangetsu! Hold nothing back because I sure as hell won't!"

Ichigo shifted his feet and smirked at his opponent, "Heh, I didn't expect you to, Sanageyama."

Out of the entire Elite Four, Sanageyama was the only one that Ichigo had mutual respect for. Gamagori was a stickler for rules that disliked Ichigo because he was under the notion Ichigo needed more time and maturity to be Satsuki's Vice President, Inumuta disliked him because Ichigo threatened to break his laptop and Jakuzure loathed him for too many reasons for Ichigo to list.

"I'm going to be honest with you," Ichigo said as he tensed his legs while Sanageyama did the same, "I just figured out how to use Zangetsu so I really don't know how powerful Mugetsu is going to be. I don't want to accidentally kill you or anything."

"Do not think I am unwary of your power, Ichigo Kurosaki!" Sanageyama smashed his gauntlets together once more. Raising the powerful shinai over his head, he continued, "To not be cautious would end in my defeat! That is why I am going to end this with every last bit of power my Blade Regalia possesses! I do not care if it leads to the destruction of my Goku Uniform! Defeating you would more than make up for such a loss! Let's end this, Ichigo! Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzan - "

Sanageyama's words were chocked off as Ichigo vanished from both the sight of those observing the fight as well as his Shingantsu before abruptly reappearing inside his Blade Regalia's guard. While Mugetsu's Zangetsu configuration was her battle form, his Kamui's specialty would always be speed. Each Kamui had one specific trait or ability that they excelled in more than any other Kamui. Senketsu had the greatest overall raw strength, Junketsu had the highest endurance, Danketsu had the greatest defense and Mugetsu had the highest speed. These traits would always influence the battle form of the Kamui once they were unlocked and acquired while helping to make up for the deficiencies in their base form.

Senketsu's Senkou configuration helped to increase Ryuko's speed, which was the slowest of the three Kamui at Honnouji Aacademy, while augmenting her natural strength with a blade of invisible energy. Mugetsu's Zangetsu was no different. In his Zangetsu mode, Ichigo's strength, defense and overall endurance did not increase or decrease in the slightest. While he was already naturally tenacious and strong, what changed was that his speed, which was already the fastest, boosted up to the level that shattered Sanageyama's Shingantsu wide open.

"Sorry about this," Ichigo apologized as he reversed his grip on Tournesol as the Life Fiber blade was covered in a turbulent sheath of blue energy, "but it's time to finish this! Getsuga Tenshou!"

Everyone, from the students in the stadium to Ryuko, Satsuki and the remaining members of the Elite Four, watched as the energy around Ichigo's Tournesol detonated in a massive explosion of blue energy reminiscent of a nuclear explosion's mushroom cloud. As the shockwave of the attack reached the stands, blowing dozens of students out of their seats, the smile on Nui Harime's face continued to widen with absolute glee.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #16 - Do Not Pass Go

Satsuki stood in front of the modest house with a mixture of confusion and suspicion on her face. She did not expect to come to Karakura Town so soon after adjusting her plans for the School Raids Trip, but with Honnouji Academy on a three day break for Culture Day with many of the students going home for the extended weekend, she had ample time to scout out the town. Perhaps she should have ordered Inumuta to collect more data on any traps because as soon as she entered the boundaries of Karakura Town a shock raced through her body and she found not only Junketsu but every single Goku Uniform had been rendered powerless by some immense force.

While her Elite Four were worried about the ramifications of not having their Goku Uniforms working, Satsuki assuaged their fears by reminding them that they were not here for battle. This was simply a scouting mission to test and collect data on any measures Karakura Town might have in advance of the School Raids Trip. Knowing the city had an Anti-Life Fiber barrier was immensely valuable.

"Gamagori, if you will."

"Yes, Lady Satsuki," Gamagori strutted forward towards the door in front of the house. Swallowing nervously as he anticipated what lay behind the threshold, he raised his hand and rang the doorbell of the Kurosaki household.

"Go answer the door, Ichigo," A female voice unfamiliar to Gamagori shouted from inside the house.

"I'm not going to answer it. It's my freaking turn!" Ichigo's voice answered back, "If you're so interested, then why don't you go answer it, Tatsuki?"

"Because it's not my damn house," the newly-named Tatsuki countered loudly. As Gamagori, along with Satsuki, Inumuta and Jakuzure, listened they heard a loud crash before Tatsuki added, "I'm just about to kick your ass so like hell am I going to get up and answer the door!"

"If I may make a suggestion to end this foolish argument about who's going to answer Ichigo's door," A voice Satsuki recognized as Uryu Ishida spoke up, cutting Ichigo off before he could argue back, "Why not just let Chad see who is at the door? He just finished his turn and thus is the one who needs to wait the longest before going again."

"... fine," A deep voice conceded before a series of footsteps approached the door. Stepping back as the door opened, Gamagori was greeted with the stoic visage of Sado Yasutora, better known as Chad to his friends. Staring at the nearly equal in height Disciplinary Committee Chair from behind messy brown hair, Chad asked, "Can I help you?"

"I'm afraid not," Gamagori folded his arms behind his back and swept his arm around towards the waiting Satsuki, "Lady Satsuki wishes to speak to Ichigo Kurosaki and thus he is the one she will talk with. Please retrieve him for us."

There was a loud shout of dismay from the room, which caused Chad to turn and look at what was happening. After a few seconds he turned back to the waiting Gamagori, "I'm sorry, but Ichigo is a little busy at the moment."

"What the hell is Strawberry doing that's so damn important?" Nonon growled in annoyance while stamping her foot impatiently on the ground, "We came all the way out here to see his stupid face so he better have a damn good reason for ignoring Lady Satsuki!"

"You want to know what Ichigo is doing?" Chad slowly and patiently asked, causing Nonon to grit her teeth in anger. After a moment of looking at the four people outside Ichigo's house, he answered, "... he's playing Monopoly and I think he just landed on Boardwalk."

"Ha!" Satsuki slammed her hand against the table, "You landed on Boardwalk! Pay up Ichigo!"

"Oh, damn it," Ichigo muttered, "Fine, take my money. I'm going to see what's taking Chad so long."

Ichigo appeared at the door a moment later and a scowl immediately formed on his face as he saw who was out there, "What are you guys doing here and how the hell did you know where I lived?"

"As the Vice President of the Student Council your address is required in case an emergency appears at Honnouji Academy," Gamagori explained quickly before stepping to the side, "But that is not important compared to the matter at hand. Lady Satsuki would like to speak with you in private."

"If Satsuki has anything to say, she can say it in front of Chad," Ichigo argued and pointed to the stoic teen, "I trust him with my life."

Something about the way Ichigo said that startled Gamagori, but Satsuki began speaking before he could ask what Ichigo meant, "Good afternoon, Ichigo. Since Honnouji Academy is closed due to Culture Day, I've decided to visit Karakura Town."

Ichigo looked past Satsuki at Inumuta, who was typing on his PDA, and Jakuzure, who seemed to really not want to be here, before asking, "Really? And did you have to bring your entire entourage with you?"

"Wherever Lady Satsuki goes, we go!" Gamagori declared.

"Calm down, Gamagori," Satsuki raised her hand and Gamagori immediately deflated and stepped back, but he was not oblivious to how Chad took a few steps forward. Once she was certain Gamagori would not act on his own, Satsuki continued, "I want you to give me a tour of the city. As a resident of Karakura Town you know most of the landmarks, locations and points of interest."

"I'm actually quite busy today," Ichigo was a little annoyed how Satsuki managed to find him. He came home during the holiday just so he could get away from her for a few days and yet she still managed to track him down! Sighing loudly and rubbing the back of his neck, he knew she would not take no for an answer and he did not feel like fighting her on his doorstep, "But if you think I'm going to give you a tour, you can - "

"You cheating son of a bitch!"

Ichigo was cut off as Uryu was thrown through the front window of his house before the quincy slid painfully across the road. As he stared in shock at the damage to the window, a foot appeared in the broken frame and a second later a royally pissed off Tatsuki Arisawa jumped outside. Without even giving a cursory glance to the four complete strangers in front of Ichigo's house, she grabbed Uryu's arm and began painfully twisting it behind his back, "Did you think I wouldn't notice you stealing from the bank? Just because you're the heir of the Ishida Conglomerate does not mean I'm going to go soft on you!"

"It wasn't cheating," Uryu answered as he managed to throw Tatsuki off his body. Standing up and wiping dust off his clothes, Uryu waved to Satsuki before turning back to a still angry Tatsuki, "It was merely sound investment, but that's not something I would expect someone like you to understand. Besides, it appears something rather important has come up."

"What are you talking about?" Tatsuki turned and followed Uryu's gaze towards Satsuki, "Oh. It's her, but who the hell are the other three and does that girl seriously have pink hair?"

"What was that, you commoner?" Nonon shouted indignantly at Tatsuki.

"They are the Student Council of Honnouji Academy," Uryu answered tiredly as he held Tatsuki back from physically kicking the crap out of Jakuzure, "Satsuki Kiryuin is the Student Council President."

"Oh," Tatsuki calmed down before she shrugged and walked back towards Ichigo's house. As she stepped onto the destroyed window, she turned to Chad and said, "When you're done talking with them or whatever out here, it's your turn."

"Ok," Chad began to follow Tatsuki, but through the front door, and turned back to Ichigo before leaving, "... call if you need any help on the tour."

"Wait, you think I'm going to actually do it?" Ichigo asked.

"But of course," Uryu smirked as he patted Ichigo on the back, "You are the leader of our group and as the leader it is your solemn duty to take control of the situation."

Ichigo glared at Uryu's retreating back before turning to Satsuki, "So, you want to get this tour started or what?"

"Yes," Satsuki closed her eyes in order to get a grip on the questions and emotions raging through her body. She did not know how to react to the knowledge that Ichigo's friends were similar in both personality and temperament to her own Elite Four. As much as she wanted to interrogate Ichigo as to the exact relationship he had with his friends, she had come to Karakura Town for a reason. Turning her body to the side and allowing Ichigo to walk ahead of her, she said, "Since you are familiar with the layout of Karakura Town I'll let you take the lead."

As Ichigo grumbled and began walking down the street with Satsuki and her irate Elite Four, or rather three, following him, Satsuki's joyful shout could be heard down the block, "That's one more victim on Park Place! Time to pay up, you four-eyed bastard!"

God Save the Queen

So here is Chapter 29 and I must say things are beginning to reach a crescendo. I would like to mention that there is a potential time error. In the original anime, the first fight against Gamagori took place at 1:00 PM sharp while Ryuko was ready at 8:55 AM. Since Inumuta went first (and he doesn't care about such things as a schedule), the entire fight sequence has been moved to the morning. Several things have been changed, all of which are good or bad for the various protagonists and antagonists. This chapter also starts off with another Isshin flashback so enjoy and don't forget to read and review!

---

...

---

Chapter 29 - God Save the Queen

Twenty Years Ago

Consciousness returned slowly to Ragyo Kiryuin. As her eyes slowly opened and her pupils adjusted to the lighting in her bedroom, Ragyo thought back on everything that happened prior to her regaining consciousness. Out of all the events of the night the only things that she remembered with distinct clarity were a soothing voice drawing her to the Original Life Fiber that promised the world and wanted nothing in exchange and Isshin Shiba at her side. When she tried to recall what may have happened in the intervening time or why Isshin was at her home, Ragyo found her mind drawing a blank.

"What happened last night?" she wondered with a lack of emotions in her temporarily weak voice. Ragyo knew she should be more worried about her lack of memories but some small part of her mind was telling her that it wasn't prudent to press the issue for the time being. That same voice, in the soothing tone Ragyo had herself used years ago when Revocs was just starting out as a major player, was saying that she shouldn't be so worried since she was alive and uninjured.

" Thank the stars you're awake, Milady," Soroi Mitsuzou breathed a loud sigh of relief as he quickly entered Ragyo's bedroom. He had been in and out of the bedroom several dozen times in the hours between Isshin storming out of the basement with Ragyo in his arms and Ragyo waking up in her bed. As he walked past the large windows where the first traces of dawn were already beginning to break over the eastern horizon, Soroi put the phone back down onto its receiver. He had mentally vowed that he would respect Master Isshin's wishes to not call the hospital unless Lady Ragyo did not wake up for eight hours.

" Is that you, Soroi?" Ragyo turned her eyes towards her servant before focusing her attention once more on the ceiling. Thoughts were beginning to swirl inside her head and she was starting to have difficulty differentiating what was real and in front of her from the things she was seeing in her mind.

" If you were expecting Miss Hououmaru, I'm afraid you are going to have to wait until the afternoon," Soroi explained in his characteristically calm tone of voice. As he began pouring a cup of tea, bitter like Ragyo preferred, he noticed Ragyo's attention had drifted away from him and towards the sun rising over the horizon. Picking up the tray and walking over to Ragyo's bedside, Soroi continued speaking as he prepared everything, "Miss Hououmaru was so worried about you that she drove all the way to Karakura Town and informed Master Isshin. I dare say from the way his car was parked half on the front lawn, the news must have been quite dire."

" Isshin is here?"

Ragyo's mind was beginning to pull itself together and things were starting to become a lot clearer than they ever have before. She now remembered Isshin accompanying her down to the lowest level of the basement housing the Original Life Fiber and trying to tell her something. Ragyo's eyes narrowed imperceptibly as she tried to remember what Isshin might have said but it was just no use. As much as she knew she should be at least a little worried about what may have happened to her, Ragyo felt absolutely no sense of worry or nervousness. In fact, she felt nothing but a sense of serenity and calmness that would have caused her to pause and take notice any other day.

" Last I checked Master Isshin is pacing back and forth in the front foyer. He will be happy to hear that you've recovered from your ordeal," Soroi explained to his mistress as he handed Ragyo her tea.

The beginning of a smile adorned her face upon hearing of Isshin's worry for her. As Ragyo sat up to take the cup of tea, a bright rainbow light immediately filled the room. The light permeating every shadowy corner of the room was so intense that Soroi involuntarily let go of the tray in order to cover his eyes lest he go blind. Even as the sterling silver tray clattered noisily to the ground, hot tea soaking into the sheets near her body from Soroi dropping the tray, Ragyo seemed strangely unconcerned about the accident. Instead, as her eyes stared at the rainbow light emanating from somewhere behind her with admiration, she pulled the blankets and sheets off her body and stood up.

" Please forgive me, Milady," Soroi apologized profusely as he tried to look up at Ragyo but was constantly forced to avert his gaze.

" There is nothing for you to be sorry for, Soroi," Ragyo calmly stated as she walked completely naked across her room until she was standing in front of a full length mirror. For a long time Ragyo stared at her reflection, her mind examining and investigating every aspect of her new body. Her once beautiful and silky black hair that Isshin joked must take her hours every morning to get just right, now shone with a lustrous silver color but it was the rainbow undertone that her once sapphire blue, now maroon, eyes focused intently on. Curling a finger inside the locks and watching the rainbow coloring shifting and morphing around as she did so, Ragyo let her arm drop down to her side.

" Where is Isshin, Soroi?"

Ragyo hadn't meant it, in fact she couldn't understand why she did it, but her tone towards Soroi had been cold and demanding, which was completely unlike how she usually was. Immediately regretting it upon seeing her friend and servant flinch away, she ignored the voice telling her not to worry about what other people thought of her and asked, "I'm sorry Soroi. I must still be exhausted after what happened. You said that Isshin was in the foyer. Do you think he is still down there? I would like to find out what happened to me and it seems like he's the only one that knows."

" Yes. The entire time that you have been resting Master Isshin has not left the confines of the foyer apart from checking up on you approximately every hour," Soroi explained with a slight nod. For just a second, when Ragyo asked him where Isshin was, Soroi was convinced that someone else was talking. The sheer coldness and callousness in Ragyo's voice was like nothing he'd ever heard from her.

" I see..." Ragyo's eyes dropped down away from the mirror towards her hands.

There was something different about her body despite its nearly identical appearance to how it used to look. As she clenched her fist, careful not to hurt herself, Ragyo felt power course through her limb. She could not explain how she knew, but some small part of her mind was whispering to her that the Original Life Fiber had imparted into her a small piece of itself. Unclear as to what that meant, Ragyo made a mental effort to turn her gaze away from the mirror in order to get dressed. As she slipped the simple robe over her nude form Ragyo experienced a moment of clarity, the first one since she regained consciousness. She needed to speak to Isshin as soon as possible and for some odd reason the voice in her head was in complete agreement with her.

As her delicate hand clasped the door to her bedroom, Ragyo paused in mid-step, "Soroi, let Rei know that if the trip back to the manor is too taxing at the moment, she can spend the night at Isshin's house. I'm sure Masaki would be more than willing to let her stay for the night."

" I'll do so right away. I'm sure Miss Hououmaru will be most pleased to hear the news of your hasty recovery."

As Ragyo left her bedroom, and Soroi, behind to search for Isshin, she could not explain the feeling of anger welling up in her chest after mentioning Masaki. She had no qualms with the woman. They were friends after all and while she would always be upset that she lost Isshin to Masaki, Ragyo was not angry about it in the slightest. So why did the thought of harming Masaki for daring to touch Isshin pass briefly through her mind?

While Ragyo was coming to terms with what happened to her, a worried Isshin Shiba was pacing in the front foyer of the Kiryuin Manor. He did not know how long he had been walking back and forth but his feet were beginning to leave wear marks in the ornate rug and Ragyo was sure to be upset about that. Letting out a loud sigh, a sign of the annoyance he felt at the situation he was currently in, Isshin looked at his cell phone held gingerly in his palm before clenching his hand around it. He and Masaki had agreed to buy one of the expensive devices, which Kisuke offered to pay entirely for, so that if an emergency came up he could call Masaki and tell her what has happened. Given the connection between his gigai and the hollow inside Masaki's soul, it seemed like a rather sound idea at the time.

" What should I do?" Isshin muttered to himself as he ran a hand through his new silver hair for what seemed like the hundredth time.

Isshin had no idea how or why it happened. After he regained consciousness from whatever the big ball of yarn downstairs did to him, Isshin carried Ragyo upstairs as quickly as he could. That should have been the first sign something was wrong. Even though he was in a special gigai with enhanced strength and endurance, running up the enormous flight of steps with Ragyo on his back should have left him winded at best, but when he escaped from the basement he wasn't tired at all. He would have chalked it up to the adrenaline coursing through his body but when Soroi brought out a mirror to show him his new appearance, Isshin's skin nearly went as white as his new hair.

The black hair that Masaki always said was too oily and needed a good scrubbing was now completely silver like Toshiro's. When Isshin saw what his hair became, he fell to his knees and pounded the floor in despair, completely unaware that he was causing the wood to crack and buckle. Isshin knew that if Toshiro, or even Ryuken, saw his newly silver hair they would either laugh at him or welcome him to their little club.

" That's not the worst part," Isshin mumbled as he looked into a mirror and stared at the rainbow light shining out. Grabbing one of the glowing locks, he pressed his face against the polished surface and groaned, "I look like a freaking Christmas tree! I don't know what the hell the Original Life Fiber did to my hair, but why on Earth would it think making my hair glow in the dark like a rainbow was a good idea? I need to tell Kisuke what happened but how?"

When he had been dragged into the Original Life Fiber alongside Ragyo, visions of what that thing intended to do to humanity and the planet were seared into Isshin's memory. He could not allow any of what he saw to happen. Isshin needed to tell someone like Kisuke what he saw so that some sort of countermeasure could be created. The Original Life Fiber needed to be destroyed at all costs or, if that was impossible based on what he saw, sealed away for all eternity. The only problem with Isshin's fool-proof plan was that he literally could not tell anyone of what the Original Life Fiber had planned.

At first he tried to call Kisuke up to tell the former captain what happened to him but as soon as he grabbed his phone to dial Kisuke's number, something within Isshin's mind blanked out and he completely forgot Kisuke's number. Worried slightly at that point, he remembered that he had Kisuke's number in his list of contacts but just as he selected the number and pressed to call, Isshin found his hand completely unresponsive. It was only after he tried to write down what happened down in the basement and what he saw that Isshin realized that the Original Life Fiber was insidiously clever. It put some sort of failsafe into his body that prevented him from doing anything against it. Isshin realized that as soon as he picked up a pen and immediately forgot how to read or write. It was only when he dropped the pen on the floor that he remembered he was literate.

" Ok, let's think this through," Isshin collapsed onto a couch and placed his cellphone on the table in front of him. He needed to think things over and he didn't need the Original Life Fiber to get involved. Remembering a trick Kisuke taught him about how he once bought Yoruichi a birthday present without the sneaky captain catching on, Isshin said out loud, "Apparently I cannot mention or communicate anything about a... certain activity... to anyone else. I'm going to need to be extremely clever about this if I'm going to get anything done."

Frowning when a lock of silver hair fell in front of his eyes, Isshin was just about to blow it out of his face when the room he was in was illuminated by a rainbow light that was, for once, not coming from his own hair. Realizing that Ragyo must have awakened, he turned around and quickly blushed when he saw her in nothing but a thin silk robe that hugged her body way too much.

" Hello Isshin."

Ragyo ignored Isshin's embarrassed sputtering as she walked past the man and sat down next to him. After a couple of seconds of awkward silence, she turned to him and asked, "Do you remember what happened to us?"

Isshin blinked and scratched his chin, "You mean before or after we were eaten by the living ball of thread downstairs?"

" Its name is the Original Life Fiber! You will address it by its proper name!" Ragyo snapped fanatically before immediately calming down. Staring at her trembling hands, when she spoke again her voice came out in a whisper, "I'm sorry for that Isshin. I'm just confused by what's happened to us. Our hair and eyes have both changed color but it was the things I remember dreaming about that envelop the entirety of my attention."

" So you saw the visions as well?" Isshin asked carefully. He did not why Ragyo snapped at him about his casual nickname for the Original Life Fiber but it was best that he not antagonize her until he's figured out what happened.

" Yeah," Ragyo refused to look at Isshin, instead keeping the sole focus of her now maroon eyes on her hands clasped firmly together on her lap. She did not know why she snapped at him for what he called the Original Life Fiber, but for some reason as soon as he mocked it an intense feeling of rage welled up inside her. She was angry that he was desecrating its greatness and he needed to know that.

" So what do we do now?" Isshin leaned back and blew a strand of silver hair out of his eyes. The fact that he could mention the visions to Ragyo implied that he could communicate the Original Life Fiber's plans and motives to anyone that already knows about them. That might make things easier in the long run, "You said the Original Life Fiber has been downstairs for generations, right? I'm starting to wonder just how old that thing actually is. Do Life Fibers even age?"

" The Original Life Fiber's mortality cannot be measured by humans," Ragyo answered stoically as the knowledge of what Isshin sought suddenly appeared in her mind. She knew of where the Original Life Fiber came from and how long it has been around. Compared to humans Life Fibers were effectively immortal, which caused a feeling of awe to well up deep inside Ragyo, "What are we going to do, Isshin? Rei and Masaki are going to ask questions about our change in appearance and that's not mentioning the world at large."

Even though he was slightly worried about Ragyo's quick and abrupt changes in persona, Isshin nevertheless kept a straight face, "Well, the first thing I'm going to do is figure out a way to dye my hair and dim my newly discovered headlights. I'm way too young to have silver hair and I would rather go bald than look anything like Ryuken. Once that's taken care of we can figure out what to do about the Original Life Fiber. That thing's been down there forever so I don't think a few more days are going to bother it too much. Now come on, you shouldn't be walking around right after waking up. I'm sure Soroi is worrying his head off."

Ragyo nodded as she allowed Isshin to wrap her arm gently around his shoulder. As he helped her walk back to her room, Isshin was unaware of the sly smile beginning to spread across Ragyo's face. He was equally unaware of the way her hand was slowly caressing his shoulder.

---

...

---

"Getsuga Tenshou!"

It was the utterance of those two words that ended the fight between Ichigo Kurosaki and Uzu Sanageyama. As the former substitute shinigami seemed to teleport inside the Athletic Committee Chair's guard and carved a deep gash in his opponent's Blade Regalia Mark II, the energy being fed through Tournesol's Life Fibers exploded outwards in a titanic explosion on a scale not unlike Ryuko's Niban Genkai and put Sanageyama's Hissatsu: Isshin Zenzanken to shame. It was no small wonder why Sanageyama, who was unable to react in time to the attack even with his Shingantsu, wasn't able to dodge the Getsuga Tenshou or even mitigate the damage.

While the attack's name was unfamiliar to every observer apart from a select few, Ichigo's new Getsuga Tenshou, even though it shared the same name, was inherently different from what stemmed forth from his shinigami powers. While it seemed like both attacks released a crescent arc of energy that enveloped anything they hit in a massive explosion that could only be mitigated by a superior defense, Mugetsu's Getsuga Tenshou was actually an attack that combined the Life Fiber severing power of Tournesol with the Ichigo's blood and energy that coursed through Mugetsu's Life Fibers.

When Mugetsu's Getsuga Tenshou manages to connect with a target, the massive wave of energy will split apart into thousands of smaller blades too small for the eye to see. Each of these smaller attacks will then instantaneously strike every exposed surface on Ichigo's opponent's body before going critical and exploding in a massive eruption powerful enough to create a mushroom cloud tinted deep blue and large enough to cover nearly the entire battle arena in the explosion.

"How did Strawberry manage to hide something this powerful up his sleeves?" Nonon Jakuzure growled as she watched the explosion through squinted eyes. Tilting her drum major's hat downwards until it covered her pink eyes, Nonon seethed as she realized Ichigo was still stronger than her. If Ichigo was capable of unleashing an attack like that, which most likely obliterated Sanageyama, than her Symphony Regalia Mark III wouldn't fare much better.

"God damn you, Strawberry!" Nonon stomped her foot angrily on the ground as her face flushed from embarrassment at being shown up. Pointing her baton at where she assumed Ichigo was standing, she shouted, "Don't think this changes anything! Even with your strength I'm still going to kick your sorry ass!"

Subtly listening to Nonon's angry rambling, Satsuki Kiryuin stared at the ever expanding cloud of dust and smoke on the battle arena in front of her with a mixture of wonder and interest. For barely a second, just when Ichigo's Tournesol connected with Sanageyama's Blade Regalia, Satsuki felt his power skyrocket until it eclipsed what she was capable with Junketsu. Looking sparingly down at her Kamui, she saw Junketsu's eyes focused on where Ichigo had last been seen.

" So even Junketsu is aware of the power Ichigo's Kamui possesses," Satsuki turned her attention back to the battle arena before glancing over at Matoi. Ryuko was staring at the fight, most likely enraptured with what Ichigo had just done, and Satsuki could not blame her. If she was a woman with less self-control, her mouth would be agape and she would be wondering out loud the full extent of Ichigo's powers.

" It is not just Ichigo, but also Matoi," Satsuki corrected her line of thinking as she recalled watching Ryuko's Senkou configuration. While her plan had always been to push Ryuko along so that she would be strong enough for the fights to come, Satsuki did not appreciate being left behind. Configurations like Senkou and Zangetsu were powerful but Satsuki knew that ingenuity could win out over raw power and speed given the right environment and intelligence. She had even begun to contemplate the drawbacks to Ichigo and Ryuko's powerful attacks. The problem Satsuki was facing was not as complicated as Life Fiber attacks. It had to do with her inability to force Junketsu to adapt and evolve into similar fighting configurations.

" What do Ichigo and Matoi possess that allow them to order their Kamui to transform?" Satsuki's eyes refocused as the dust began to clear and two figures emerged, "I am aware they can mentally listen to their Kamui and communicate with both their own Kamui as well as each other's. I've tried asking Ichigo to listen to Junketsu but he's said my Kamui does not talk. Could there be something wrong with Junketsu?"

As the smoke and debris from the Getsuga Tenshou began dissipating into the surrounding environment, two figures began to emerge with the first being Ichigo. Knocked out of Mugetsu's Zangetsu configuration by the amount of energy the Getsuga Tenshou required, Ichigo barely took three steps before he began stumbling forward.

"Like hell I'm going to lose!" Ichigo grit his teeth as he stabbed Tournesol deep into the arena's floor to keep himself from collapsing to the ground, "I'm not going to fall here!"

" I'm sorry, Ichigo," Mugetsu's apologetic voice reached Ichigo moments before he was surrounded by blue stars and realized Mugetsu had transformed back to her normal uniform. Turning her tired eyes up to her wearer, the Kamui said, "That Getsuga Tenshou used up most of my stored blood and energy. If I had remained transformed for a few more seconds I risked sucking your blood dry. I'm sorry."

Ichigo didn't respond to Mugetsu's apology as a series of wracking coughs tore forth from his chest and spittle mixed with blood sprayed on the floor in front of him. His Getsuga Tenshou, which he somehow instinctively knew was designed to destroy Life Fibers, had only scraped him when it connected with Sanageyama. Mugetsu hadn't complained about the hit apart from a slight muttering of pain so why the hell did he feel like crap?

"... Ichigo..."

Sanageyama's pain-filled voice tore Ichigo's attention away from his own problems. Twisting his head around, his eyes wide in shock at the fact his opponent was still conscious after being hit point blank by his Getsuga Tenshou, Ichigo saw Sanageyama still standing in the midst of his attack. The Athletic Committee Chair's body was covered in cuts and bruises and aside from several stubborn pieces his Blade Regalia was virtually destroyed. Taking in a ragged breath as his senses returned to him Sanageyama managed a single step towards Ichigo before another piece of his green armor cracked apart, fell to the ground and dissipating into its component Life Fibers.

"What..." The green-haired swordsman took another step and his bandanna, already burnt and frayed by the power of Ichigo's Getsuga Tenshou, split apart, showing his scarred eyes for all the world to see. Unconcerned about his appearance Sanageyama raised his shinai, the wooden weapon torn off roughly halfway up the blade, and raised a shaking arm at Ichigo. Taking a moment to steady himself on his feet, Sanageyama stared at Ichigo and asked, "... what... was that attack?"

Feeling the pain in his own body beginning to abate, Ichigo pushed himself back onto his feet and said, "It's called Getsuga Tenshou."

"Moon Fang Heaven-Piercer, huh?" Sanageyama grinned as he collapsed to his knees. Now completely naked as the last of his Blade Regalia dissipated into nothingness, Sanageyama had a satisfied look on his face as he fell backwards into unconsciousness.

Ichigo continued to stare at Sanageyama's unconscious form before a loud buzzer rang through the stadium, signaling that the match was over and he had won. As several One-Star students associated with the Medical Relief Club appeared on the battle arena to check on Sanageyama, Ichigo turned towards Satsuki with a look of annoyance on his face. The Student Council President stared directly back at him, never lowering her gaze or showing a single emotion on her face. Eventually Ichigo turned away and walked back to his pillar to rest for his second fight against Nonon Jakuzure. Sanageyama was a difficult opponent but at least he was honorable. Nonon, on the other hand, had a grudge against him and Ichigo knew that would carry over into their battle.

Satsuki watched Ichigo for a few seconds, her hands tightening around Bakuzan's hilt as she beheld the accusatory stare returned to her. Expressing not a single emotion on her face, she turned her gaze to Gamagori and spoke, "Gamagori, due to necessary repairs your match against Matoi will be delayed one hour. It shall begin in ninety minutes instead of thirty. Prepare yourself accordingly."

"Understood, Lady Satsuki," Gamagori respectfully bowed to Satsuki before sitting down on his pillar. Folding his arms across his massive chest, a frown of displeased seemingly etched on his face, Gamagori was not pleased with how the Sudden Death Runoff was proceeding. The matches were supposed to begin at 1:00 PM sharp but Inumuta had the nerve to start his fight against Matoi at 8:55 AM. Did the former member of the Elite Four not realize that schedules and rules were put in place to keep order amongst the chaos? Gamagori wanted to protest to Lady Satsuki about the changed time but when Satsuki allowed the first fight to commence, he knew his words would have no weight. If Satsuki thought Inumuta's fight should begin early in the morning than he would stand aside and respect her verdict.

Gamagori took a calming breath as he mentally prepared his mind and body for his match. Ignoring Inumuta disregarding the established venue time for the moment, he focused on the true purpose of the matches against Matoi and Ichigo Kurosaki. The Three-Star Goku Uniforms of the Elite Four may be more powerful than anything else at Honnouji Academy barring the Kamui wearers and Ururu Tsumugiya, but there were those out there with more power. The true purpose of the Sudden Death Runoff was for their Goku Uniforms to be tested for flaws and weaknesses in the stitching. Apart from the unintended destruction of his Probe Regalia, it was expected for Matoi to defeat Inumuta in battle but none of them expected Ichigo to win the way he did.

The simulations Inumuta had shown to the rest of the Elite Four indicated Ichigo would beat Sanageyama, much to the Athletic Committee Chair's irritation. It was predicted based on his Kamui's known strength, as well as the recordings of his fight against Satsuki, that Ichigo would win but only after a long and brutal battle that would allow valuable information and data to be collected on his Kamui. Sanageyama's new Blade Regalia Mark II in conjunction with his Shingantsu was supposed to be able to stand up against the phenomenal speed of Ichigo long enough for Inumuta and Iori to collect what was needed, yet Ichigo not only managed to win but he also completely destroyed Sanageyama's Blade Regalia with a previously unseen attack.

" I should have fought Matoi first! Rules are meant to be enforced, not disregarded at the first sign of trouble! Inumuta should have known better!" Gamagori snorted at the cowardly way Inumuta tried to back out of his fight against Ryuko. The king of the hill battles were designed to be fought until one opponent falls unconscious or has their uniform destroyed, neither of which happened to Inumuta. Gamagori would never say it, but the Disciplinary Committee Chair was satisfied when Ryuko ignored Inumuta's surrender.

"Unfortunately the data Inumuta's Probe Regalia collected about Matoi's Senkou mode was lost when his Goku Uniform was destroyed," Gamagori noted in dissatisfaction, "His Goku Uniform's power would have been valuable in figuring out just what Ichigo Kurosaki did to defeat Sanageyama. The way Ichigo moves and fights cannot be explained by what Inumuta dug up on him. Where did he receive such advanced training?"

"Way to go!" Mako Mankanshoku cheered jubilantly from the stands, "You're number one, Ichigo!"

Mako was ecstatic throughout Ichigo's entire fight against Sanageyama and even Orihime joined in towards the end. That final super awesome attack Ichigo used to create the picturesque blue mushroom cloud was cool and all but it would always be second to the enormous blade of energy Ryuko used against Inumuta.

"Please lower your voice," a snobbish voice sarcastically said, "Even though it is impossible, your shrilling tone is actually interfering with my sensors."

Sitting in the stands right next to Orihime was Houka Inumuta, the now former Information and Strategy Committee Chair. Clad in a spar red tracksuit with a high collar that rose until just above his nose, Inumuta looked a little worse for wear after his fight against Ryuko. His face, at least what could be seen above the zipped up tracksuit, was covered in small bandaged and he was currently forced to wear his second pair of glasses after Ryuko destroyed his favorites.

"So you are the one that Ichigo Kurosaki was talking to before my fight against Ryuko Matoi," Inumuta mumbled as he fervently typed on his laptop. The loss of his Probe Regalia and all the data held within it was staggering and Inumuta hoped Iori was able to salvage something from the security feeds of the fight. Pressing one key before reaching up and unzipping the collar of his tracksuit so he could speak, Inumuta turned his attention to Orihime sitting next to him, "The colors and style of your uniform indicate you go to Karakura High School. Just how well do you know Ichigo Kurosaki?"

"Oh... well..." Orihime tapped her fingers together in embarrassment and looked away from Inumuta, "Ichigo is my friend and since I had some time off from school I thought I should come by and cheer him on. His dad said Ichigo would benefit from having a friend here to cheer him on and that I was the best person to go."

"I see," Inumuta rapidly typed in what Orihime was saying into Ichigo's profile in the Honnouji Academy database. After seeing Ichigo demolish Sanageyama and his Blade Regalia, Inumuta was starting to believe the history he gathered on Ichigo was woefully lacking in detail and substance, "Please go on. The data I'm gathering from this conversation is most enlightening. I would prefer if you could tell me where Ichigo might have obtained his fighting skills and instincts. Please do not skimp out on the details and be as specific as you can."

"You want to know about Ichigo?" Orihime hummed quietly to herself as she thought about Inumuta's question. It wasn't like she could tell him about Ichigo being a shinigami and fighting supernatural villains bent on becoming a god, but then again Orihime never expected Life Fibers to be able to grant people superpowers. Still, Orihime didn't think Ichigo would appreciate her talking about him behind his back, "Actually, it's very complicated. You see it all started when - "

"Hang on just a minute!"

Mako suddenly appeared between Inumuta and Orihime, causing the latter to nearly fall off her seat in surprise. As Orihime managed to regain her composure, Mako crossed her arms over her chest and gave the teal haired teen a piercing stare, "It's wrong to ask a girl you just met such personal questions! You need to go on a date first and get to know her before even thinking about asking her stuff like that. I've known Ryuko for a while now and there are still things she won't tell me about herself despite my best attempts at bribing her with food and affection! Besides, have you even stopped to consider how your philandering ways are hurting Jakuzure's feelings?"

"Like I care what Jakuzure thinks," Inumuta scoffed and adjusted his glasses with the tip of a finger. Rolling his eyes as Mako stared at him with her cheeks puffed out, he turned back to his laptop, "I have a lot to do and your rambling is beginning to get on my nerves. Why don't you go annoy your other friends and leave me in peace?"

When he still felt Mako's gaze lingering on him, Inumuta turned to chastise her again but froze when he saw who was on the other side of Orihime. Sitting happily with her hands clasped on her lap was a very familiar blonde haired girl.

" The Grand Couturier is here?" Inumuta thought in a subdued panic while relieved Mako had turned to blabber to Orihime, "I thought Lady Satsuki said Nui Harime was forbidden from returning to Honnouji Academy by her very mother? This is not good. I need to tell Lady Satsuki."

Inumuta moved his finger to press the hidden emergency signal on the bottom of his laptop when Nui, without turning her attention away from the battle arena, stared at him with her single sapphire eye. As the smile on her face widened every so softly upon noticing his panic, Inumuta fully comprehended what Nui was telling him. If he tried to so much as warn Satsuki about her presence, Nui would cleave a path through as many humans as necessary to kill him.

" Damn."

Inumuta gripped his laptop to steady his shaking hands. Risking a glance back at the Grand Couturier, Inumuta noticed that Nui was no longer looking at him but he did not think for a second that her attention had moved on. He knew without a doubt that the Grand Couturier was still paying close attention to his every move.

"Ok, think carefully," Inumuta took a second to calm his racing heart, causing Orihime to glance over the top of Mako's head. Ignoring her question of whether he was feeling alright or not, Inumuta closed his eyes and thought carefully on what he should do, "Ururu Tsumugiya is the key to telling Lady Satsuki. She seems to be able to keep up with the Grand Couturier in terms of strength and speed. If I set up the board just right I could force Nui Harime to deal with Ururu's interference while I make a break for Satsuki."

"Planning things behind my back isn't very nice, you know," Nui's childish and happy voice cut through Inumuta's line of thought like a sharp blade, "That's the sort of thing that can get people into all sorts of trouble!"

As his heart pounded against his chest, Inumuta turned his head and saw that Nui was not speaking directly at him. Ururu had noticed Nui focused completely on Inumuta for some reason and tried to take advantage of her lapse of attention and steal the purple Scissor Blade away from the Grand Couturier. Although she did not understand how she knew, Ururu could sense where Nui was hiding the hardened Life Fiber blade and knew just what to do to steal it away from her twin sister.

"That was a nice attempt. Really, it was!" Nui laughed and stuck out her tongue as her hand grasped tightly around Ururu's wrist. As she stared into a pair of blue eyes that were so familiar to her own, Nui pouted cutely and giggled, "I love how you're trying to bond and all that, but we can always do that later when we get to know each other a bit more."

"You're planning something," Ururu accused stoically as she tore her wrist free from Nui's grip.

"You give me far too much credit," Nui closed her eye and looked up at where Ichigo was standing. It was almost time for the big surprise and she couldn't wait to see the look on everyone's faces. Giving her twin another glance, Nui continued, "I already gave my promise to not touch Ichigo and I always keep my promises, you know. So why are you all hot and bothered, Amu?"

Ururu saw Orihime had turned away from Mako towards them as soon as Ichigo's name was mentioned. In an uncharacteristically emotional outburst Ururu's eyes narrowed and she said, "I know you are planning something. If you try to hurt any of my friends I will make you suffer."

Nui was about to respond with a childish laugh at Ururu's threat but stopped as she realized just how familiar her twin's tone of voice was to her own on the rare occasions when things did not go her way. The Grand Couturier locked gazes with Ururu's sapphire eyes and saw the same look of promised rage her own eye had possessed after the man who called himself Isshin Matoi destroyed her left eye. Easily hiding the foreign feeling of nervousness deep beneath layers of saccharine joy and psychosis, Nui sighed dramatically and huffed.

"You sure do like to talk!" Nui glanced over at Inumuta and giggled when the teal haired teen flinched, "But talking is talking and fighting is fighting! Our hearts may be like two peas in a pod but I would never do anything to hurt my favorite cousin. You can count on that!"

---

...

---

"My, my," Aikuro Mikisugi muttered to himself as he ran a hand through his shaggy blue hair, "Things are really starting to get interesting down there."

Aikuro leaned over the railing far above the crowd of spectators below as he watched Ichigo demolish Uzu Sanageyama and his Blade Regalia with a single attack. That last attack Ichigo used, the Getsuga Tenshou, seemed extremely powerful and something Aikuro needed to be wary of in the future. All the experiments and tests Nudist Beach did on Danketsu's Life Fibers, with Kinue's consent of course, indicated that when a Kamui evolves too quickly it's stitching can become unstable, which can lead to the wearer losing control over the Kamui's power. Senketsu and Mugetsu's powers were increasing too quickly for their own good. If either of them were to lose control, it would be a repeat of what happened ten years ago.

"Well, I don't ever want that to happen again," Aikuro quietly scoffed. Peering at the arena through a set of binoculars, Aikuro zoomed in on Ryuko and then Ichigo before scratching at his hair. Truth be told, he found Ryuko's Senkou attacks fascinating from a scientific point of view. It was quite ingenious of her to use her imagination to shift the outputted power of Senkou into various powerful attacks.

"Ryuko could stand to learn some self-control, especially with the Grand Couturier focused on her," Aikuro concluded with a sigh as he lowered the binoculars. Leaning over the railing and looking at Satsuki Kiryuin across the stadium, he asked, "Shouldn't you be hiding? The last time I checked little Miss Satsuki was still trying to catch and dissect you."

"Humph!"

Kon stepped out of the shadows where he was most definitely not hiding from Satsuki Kiryuin. Walking over to Aikuro, the disguised nudist sparing the mod soul a quick glance, Kon leaned against the railing and scoffed, "Ichigo's dad sent me here to keep an eye on him. How can I do that when I'm certainly not hiding from Satsuki? Besides, there's no way I can enjoy the view of Ryuko's fine body from inside the air ducts!"

"Please consider what you say about Ryuko," Aikuro's voice was cold as ice as he menacingly waved several needles at Kon, "She is the daughter of a dearly departed friend, so if you keep trying to sneak glances at her I will be forced to do something terribly nightmarish to you."

"You don't need to worry about doing anything to my vulnerable body. I've already learned my lesson," Kon shivered as he recalled how Ryuko hunted him down and almost killed him three times already. The first time he thought she was just overreacting but after the next two times Kon concluded Ryuko was going to kill him if he tried again so he made sure that he was never in a place where she could think he was peeping on her. If he was sitting on the floor when Ryuko walked into a room, Kon would quickly get up and move out of the way.

Jumping up onto the railing and wiping dust off his plushie body, Kon pointed his stub of an arm at Aikuro and asked, "Anyway, Ryuko's going to fight next, right? That means she's going to be up against that large and scary man sitting down way over there. Ichigo's fight was fun to watch and all but it was just so predictable. I knew he was going to kick Sanageyama's ass from the moment the fight started. You know anything about that Gamagori bastard?"

Aikuro shifted his eyes to look at Kon. He was still trying to get used to the idea of conversing with a Life Fiber being that was not trying to assimilate him as a power source. Professor Matoi notes and Isshin's information about Ragyo's plans indicated that Life Fibers needed a living human to function as a mobile power source, but Kon was able to function and move around on his own. It was a fascinating subject that Aikuro would have preferred to learn more about but Isshin had personally vouched for Kon's loyalty and so he was forced to push away any disgust he had for Kon in order to focus on the matter at hand.

"It's hard for me to say," Aikuro shrugged and sighed lazily, "I'm just a lowly teacher so I really haven't been able to see any of the Elite Four's Goku Uniforms apart from when they fought Ryuko or Ichigo. First there was Jakuzure's Symphony Regalia, then there was Sanageyama's Blade Regalia and we both just saw Inumuta's Probe Regalia. Truth be told, I don't even know what Gamagori's Goku Uniform looks like."

"Goku Uniforms are really strange," Kon's beady eyes focused on Satsuki Kiryuin before he looked away. He didn't want that ruthless woman finding him again.

"Every Goku Uniform is stitched by the President of the Sewing Club, Iori Shirou, to match the inherent qualities and abilities of the student," Aikuro explained, "Going by his self-proclaimed title of Satsuki's impenetrable shield, Gamagori's Goku Uniform must have something to do with defense or protection. Ryuko's going to need to think on her feet if she wants to win. Raw power might not cut it this time."

Kon tapped his head in thought as he walked back and forth on the railing. Ever since he woke up he'd been having a really bad feeling that something was going to go wrong. His encounter with Nui Harime was still giving him nightmares. Despite her outward appearance as a relatively normal-looking teenage girl Kon was able to see that she wasn't human and that scared him more than any hollow or arrancar. How anyone could look that cute and be that psychotic boggled Kon's mind but the mod soul wasn't about to go ask Nui why she was insane. If he ever saw the Grand Couturier again in his long lifetime it would be too soon.

"There's nothing to be worried about," Kon spun around and pointed at Aikuro, "Ryuko is plenty strong and way too stubborn to give up. If she could chase me down for over ten minutes just for accidentally peaking up her skirt than she should have no trouble taking on this Gamagori guy!"

"I've been looking everyone for you, Aikuro. I even checked the teacher's break room for you but they said you weren't there all day."

Aikuro chuckled at the gruff voice as its owner made his way towards the undercover Nudist Beach operative. Lighting a cigarette and taking a deep drag, Tsumugu Kinagase paused as he let smoke drift out of his mouth before speaking, "Let me tell you two pieces of useful information. The first is that you should take off that depressing outfit as soon as possible. It's making me feel suicidal just by looking at it."

"Hey now, I made this disguise myself! It's not that bad, is it?" Aikuro let out a nervous chuckle as Tsumugu mocked his getup. He needed to go undercover at Honnouji Academy for Nudist Beach so what better way to do so than as a lazy and scruffy teacher? Rubbing the back of his neck, Aikuro muttered, "Besides, I'm undercover, remember? It wouldn't be good for everyone to see my full nude glory."

Tsumugu purposely avoided answering Aikuro's rhetorical question as he noticed Kon watching their conversation. He had been briefed about the Life Fiber plushie's loyalty to Isshin and his son and thus had not immediately pumped it so full of needles that he resembled a pincushion. Clenching the cigarette between his teeth, Tsumugu said, "The second is that I do not trust the creature standing beside you. Even though Isshin vouched for its loyalty, I will be keeping a close eye on it."

"Yeah, well, I don't like you either," Kon grumbled and hopped onto the ground accompanied by a soft squeak.

Kon had only the faintest of ideas why everyone thought just because there were Life Fibers in his plushie that he was dangerous. Life Fibers really didn't stack up compared to some of the things he's witnessed in the last few years. That did not mean the mod soul wasn't thinking about them. Life Fibers were what made Senketsu and Mugetsu powerful and sentient so Life Fibers must somehow be alive, which made Kon wonder how something that was essential yarn be alive in the first place. There was something the mod soul was missing and Kon had a strange feeling Isshin sent him here knowing full well what was going on. This was the last time Kon was going to do Ichigo's dad any favors even if there were hot girls involved!

" Boy would I love to just tell these people that I'm a mod soul and not a Life Fiber creature or whatever. The looks on their faces would be priceless but why did Ichigo's dad have to stitch my pill into this body?"

Tsumugu gave the mod soul another glare before reaching up and clicking on the buckle holding the large silver case on his back. As the case crashed to the ground with a soft thud, Tsumugu turned around and undid the latches holding it closed. Flipping the lid up with one hand and flicking his cigarette away with the other, Tsumugu began assembling his customized M-98 Window Anti-Life Fiber Model Type-3. While clicking the various components into place, Tsumugu began talking to Aikuro, "Headquarters got your request yesterday. They were not pleased with what you were asking, especially since Isshin's forbidden us from going after Masaki's son."

Aikuro reached into his pocket and handed Tsumugu a recording of Ryuko's fight against Inumuta, "Ichigo's power concerns me but it's Ryuko that I'm worried about. I'm certain if push came to shove Ichigo could control his Kamui but Ryuko is still holding onto a lot of pent up anger and emotions. I would have warned her against participating in the king of the hill battles but little Miss Satsuki had to push up the time from 1:00 PM to 9:00 AM. If Gamagori's fight was first, it's likely he would have forestalled the first fight, allowing me a chance to talk to Ryuko."

"You don't need to say any more," Tsumugu cut in as he finished assembling the sniper rifle. Leaning his forehead against the Anti-Life Fiber weapon, he reached inside his shirt and pulled out a simple necklace with a familiar bullet hanging gently off it. Staring at the bullet that nearly ended everything a decade ago, Tsumugu said, "I promised Kinue I would save this special adhesive bullet for the time when she finally lost control of her Kamui and went on another rampage. If anyone was going to finally give my sister the rest she deserved it was going to be me. Even though Kinue's no longer in danger of losing control to her Kamui, I'm still wary about letting you use this bullet."

"Think of it as a precaution in case anything goes wrong," Aikuro said with a shrug, "If it makes you feel any better, I'm sure we won't end up having to use it."

"Let's hope not. Tell me, have Matoi and Kurosaki gotten that strong that even someone like you is worried?" Tsumugu growled.

Aikuro leaned back on the railing, "Both of them managed to easily secure wins against Three-Star Goku Uniforms using attacks that concentrated all the energy in their Kamui into one massive strike. Ryuko's was called Niban Genkai and Ichigo called his Getsuga Tenshou. You didn't see the attacks completely destroy a Three-Star Goku Uniform in one swing. Not even little Miss Satsuki could do something like that while wearing Junketsu. You remember your fight against Ryuko, right? Now imagine fighting her again but this time your needles have a quarter of their suppressing effect while her strength and speed are twice what they were. Could you beat her?"

"No, I could not," Tsumugu admitted without hesitation. Grabbing the scope off his M-98 Widow, he handed the magnifying device to Aikuro and continued, "Kinue said that I would be unable to stand up to the likes of a Raiment so what chance do I have against Matoi after she's gained experience using her Kamui?"

Aikuro gave his friend a light chuckle out of amusement, "It's not like you to admit your weakness. Kinue's return really must have affected you."

Without looking Tsumugu reached over and grabbed the undercover nudist's shirt in his hand, "If you so much as tell anyone that I'm getting soft I'm going to publically humiliate you in the worst possible way."

"Now hang on a minute!" Aikuro was beginning to sweat at the threatening aura surrounding Tsumugu, "There's no need for violence. No one here said you were getting soft! I sure as heck didn't say anything like that!"

There was a pregnant pause as both Aikuro and Tsumugu looked down at Kon. The mod soul plushie was reading a comic book he pulled out of nowhere and had stopped paying attention to their conversation ages ago. Noticing the stares from the two men, Kon looked up and bluntly asked, "What the hell are you two looking at? Can't you see I'm busy reading my articles?"

---

...

---

Ryuko sat in a relaxed crouch as she waiting for the clock beneath the battle arena to read 11:00 PM. It was only a few minutes until her fight against Gamagori and she was starting to feel the initially effects of anxiety. The sight of Gamagori transforming into his Shackle Regalia the other night was still ingrained in her memory and it was making her wonder just how powerful the Disciplinary Committee Chair actually was.

" Ryuko, your heart rate and blood pressure are rising. Are you nervous about the upcoming fight?" Senketsu's familiar voice asked, cutting through Ryuko's reminiscing.

Giving an exasperated huff of annoyance, Ryuko propped her chin on her fist and sighed dramatically, "It's nothing to worry about, Senketsu. I'm just thinking about how strong Gamagori was the other night. His Shackle Regalia may look downright ridiculous but there's no getting around how powerful it is."

" Yes," Senketsu agreed, turning his eye toward the still sitting large teen. The male Kamui had been concerned about Gamagori's power as an indication of the strength of the rest of the Elite Four but Ryuko's battle against Inumuta hadn't been that troublesome, "He seems to be the only one to possess a secondary transformation like Mugetsu and myself. You should keep your guard up against him. There's no reason to take unnecessary risks at this point."

"Who do you think I am? I'm all about safety, Senketsu!" Ryuko boasted proudly. When she heard Senketsu growling at her, Ryuko rolled her eyes, "Ok, fine. I'll be careful against Gamagori, but you know, I thought these Elite Four jerks would be stronger."

" What do you mean?"

Ryuko stood up and stretched her legs before she let out a sigh of contentment as her muscles and joints popped back into place, "Inumuta wasn't that tough. If his Probe Regalia didn't have that optical camouflage ability we could have beaten him without using Niban Genkai. Sanageyama has his Shingantsu but we both watched Ichigo wipe the floor with him by moving too fast for Sanageyama to keep up with. I'm starting to get the feeling that we're being played."

" Nonsense," Senketsu shook his body around Ryuko in order to show his displeasure at such a stupid notion, "Why would Satsuki Kiryuin throw her most powerful followers at us just so they could take a dive? It makes no sense."

Ryuko grinned at Senketsu's reaction. Turning her eyes towards the battle arena, she noticed the clock read 10:59 AM and let out a confident smirk, "Well, it's almost time Senketsu. Just one more fight and we get to find out from Satsuki why Nui Harime had to kill my dad. I'm kind of hoping she tries to resist just so I can beat the smug look off her face with your power. We never did get to have our rematch against Satsuki, did we?"

" No, we did not. Ichigo and Mugetsu saved our lives that morning and managed to beat Satsuki Kiryuin before we could do so," Senketsu answered as a set of red steps extended down from the pillar Ryuko was standing on. As she calmly walked down the steps, her gaze never leaving Gamagori, Senketsu turned his eye upwards, "Please don't tell Mugetsu this, but I really do want to fight Satsuki Kiryuin and Junketsu. My Life Fibers are highly dissatisfied with that mockery of a battle you had against her before our proper synchronization."

"You don't need to tell me that," Ryuko boasted as her hand reached for the pin on the Seki Tekkou, "It would be really annoying to never have a proper battle against Satsuki. It might just drive me crazy. Let's go, Senketsu! Life Fiber Synchronization: Kamui Senketsu!"

Fully clad in Senketsu's transformed state and with her energy replenished after her usage of Niban Genkai, Ryuko stared across the battle arena at the stoic Gamagori. Hefting her red Scissor Blade onto her shoulder, Ryuko smirked at the Disciplinary Committee Chair, "Yo, Gamagori, don't expect me to go easy on you just because you helped us the other night!"

Gamagori gave Ryuko a sly grin of his own before his expression hardened. Smashing his gauntlet-covered fists together before spreading his arms wide, he shouted, "I would not expect any less from the likes of you, Mato! You might as well consider this your final transformation! Your ascent towards Lady Satsuki ends here! Three-Star Goku Uniform: Shackle Regalia!"

Ryuko narrowed her eyes as Gamagori transformed into the familiar bondage uniform she saw the other night. Even though his appearance and inability to move his arms or legs made Gamagori seem like an easy target, Ryuko knew better than to attack him. The memory of the entire AAA Club unloading everything they had against Gamagori's Shackle Regalia only to be completely and utterly destroyed remained at the forefront of her mind. Deciding against doing anything stupid, like attacking him, Ryuko planted her Scissor Blade into the arena and sat down on the handle, all the while giving her opponent the meanest glare she could muster.

"What are you doing?"

The calm and blunt question caused Ryuko to tilt her head to the side in confusion, "Huh?"

"This is a fight," Gamagori's muffled voice was audible to Ryuko despite being all the way across the battle arena, "Is a fight not what you wanted, Mato?"

Ryuko locked her right heel inside the handle of her Scissor Blade and propped her arm on her knee, "That's a dumb question. Of course I wanted to fight you."

"If that is the case then you should be attacking me instead of sitting around doing nothing."

"Do you really think I'm going to fall for something like that?" Ryuko chuckled to herself as she hopped off her Scissor Blade and pulled the Life Fiber weapon out of the ground. Walking back and forth on the arena, her Scissor Blade perched lazily on her shoulder, Ryuko gave Gamagori a knowing stare, "I remember watching your Goku Uniform absorb the power of anything thrown at you. Do you honestly expect me to go charging at you with my Scissor Blade? I'm just going to stand way over here out of range of whatever you may be planning until I can think of something."

"It appears I overestimated your intellect, Matoi. I thought you were surely smarter than this!"

Gamagori's Shackle Regalia began to shift and contort as several strips of the cloth armor composing the outer layers of the Goku Uniform began peeling off and twisted into whips. Ryuko stared in stunned surprise as nearly a dozen whips hovered in the air around Gamagori and gripped her Scissor Blade tightly in preparation for the attack that was sure to come. She was thus shocked when Gamagori, instead of attacking her, turned his whips on himself.

"What the hell are you doing?" Ryuko asked as she watched Gamagori flagellate himself with his own attack.

"Did you not consider I might have anticipated your actions?" Gamagori shouted as his body began to bloat menacingly. As he continued to whip himself, using the power of his Goku Uniform to reach the level of power needed, he stared at Ryuko and said, "I knew after my display the other night that you would no doubt come to understand the power of my Shackle Regalia. That is why if there is no one to discipline me, I am able to discipline myself!"

"What are you talking about?" Ryuko grit her teeth and leapt back as Gamagori expanded to triple his initial size. His secondary transformation was about to appear and she did not want to be anywhere near him when he brought out his Scourge Regalia, "Using your power to discipline yourself makes no sense! Where does the damn power come from?"

"The power comes from my punishment!" Gamagori declared as his body swelled to near the critical point, "As I use my own technique to punish myself, I quickly bring myself to the climax. That is the power of my Higi Jijo-Jibaku, Matoi! Now witness my true power and realize your weakness! Three-Star Goku Uniform: Scourge Regalia!"

In a burst of power, the cloth armor of Gamagori's Shackle Regalia tore apart to reveal the Scourge Regalia waiting underneath. As a flurry of spiked tentacles and whips crackled around Gamagori, slamming into the arena hard enough to crack the stone tiles, Ryuko spun her Scissor Blade around her wrist and let out a shout as he did her best to deflect as many attacks as possible. While Ryuko was pushing Senketsu and her body to their limits to deflect the multitude of attacks, a different story was going on for the other two remaining contestants. Nonon had a smug grin on her face as she casually dodged and ducked out of the way of Gamagori's errant attacks while Ichigo was using Tournesol to cut and deflect any that strayed too close to him.

"Hey!" Ryuko shouted as one of Gamagori's whips twisted around her guard and smacked her butt. Spinning around and using her Scissor Blade to sever the offending whip, she felt her back arch forward as Gamagori took advantage of her lapse of concentration and proceeded to pummel her over and over again before slammed her body down to the ground right near the edge of the arena.

"You better not fall out of the battle arena, Matoi!" Gamagori shouted boisterously as he continued to smack Ryuko's body with his whips, "If you fall off the edge, you will automatically lose the battle!"

"I know that!" Ryuko shouted as she quickly rolled to the side before flipping to her feet as one of Gamagori's whips came crashing down on to the ground. Deftly leaping and dodging around the spiked tentacles chasing after her, she nevertheless answered, "I kind of figured that out when Inumuta tried to kick me off the edge. You Elite Four bastards sure do like to not tell all the rules, don't you?"

"It was an unspoken rule!" Gamagori announced as all the whips flailing through the air suddenly retracted back, hiding his Scourge Regalia inside his Shackle Regalia once more.

"Huh?" Ryuko spit on the ground as he cautiously observed her opponent, "Hey, Gamagori bastard, why did you go back to your stupid Shackle Regalia?"

Gamagori seethed at the lack of respect Ryuko was giving him but knew that the perpetrator of such an obnoxious nickname was Ichigo Kurosaki. He had been the one to first come up with it and he was no doubt the one to pass it on to Ryuko, "Did I not explain myself to you already, Matoi? All the power I collect from being punished and disciplined is released in my Scourge Regalia. Do you see the futility of attacking me? You must realize that in a contest of pure endurance and stamina I can outlast you, so I must ask what your next move is. Are you going to give up or would you like to continue being punished?"

"I don't know about you, but I'm not the kind of girl who goes for the kinky stuff you're into. All this discipline and punishment talk is starting to make me feel nauseous. As for your question..." Ryuko gave Gamagori a menacing smirk as she sprinted across the battle arena with her Scissor Blade held to her side, "... I'm going to give you your answer right now! Senketsu Senkou! Your Shackle Regalia is history! Seni-Soshitsu!"

Ryuko felt the Senkou enhanced Seni-Soshitsu slice across Gamagori's Shackle Regalia without hitting any form of defense but she was shocked when Gamagori did not so much as move. As Gamagori turned around to face her, an almost impossible task given his current state, Ryuko saw that all her Senkou-empowered Seni-Soshitsu managed to do was leave a small tear across the width of Gamagori's chest.

" His Goku Uniform does not have any Life Fibers on its surface," Senketsu explained to a stunned Ryuko, "What concerns me is that even if there was nothing for me to absorb using Seni-Soshitsu, Senkou should have still been enough to cut through it. His Shackle Regalia's defenses are indeed formidable."

"Impressive. I did not expect you to actually damage my Shackle Regalia," Gamagori admitted as his form began to bloat and expand once more, "My Shackle Regalia is covered in specialized cloth armor, forged and reinforced secretly to increase its power! If you have any chance of defeating me, you'll have to pierce through it and stab your Scissor Blade directly into my proper uniform!"

"That's not a problem," Ryuko motioned with her hand to her transformed state, "I've already proven Senkou can cut through your stupid cloth armor. So all I need to do is cut you a few more times and it's game over for you!"

"Indeed, your Senkou attacks are most formidable," Gamagori's body continued to swell as he resumed hitting himself while Ryuko stood by waiting, "In most cases increased cutting power and range would be a dangerous combination."

Ryuko was blown off her feet as Gamagori's Shackle Regalia exploded outwards once more. As she felt the many spiked whips and tentacles slap every exposed part of her body, Ryuko heard Gamagori shouting, "But in this case it is not true whatsoever! I am Lady Satsuki's ultimate shield. I will withstand the attacks and punishments from anyone daring to stand against her without fail! Even if I have to discipline myself, I will not allow you to stand in Lady Satsuki's presence. My tenacity and determination knows no bounds, Ryuko Matoi! I am going to crush you right here and now!"

"You must be out of your mind if you think I'm going to lose to the likes of you!" Ryuko shouted back as she spun her Scissor Blade around and destroyed any whips that tried to attack her. Rushing towards Gamagori, her Scissor Blade glowing red from the power she was feeding it, Ryuko leapt into the air as Gamagori reached onto his back and pulled out two spiked chakram.

"What is it you truly fight for, Matoi?"

"What kind of question is that?" Ryuko seethed as Gamagori's chakram stopped her Scissor Blade. Noticing the Disciplinary Committee Chair's weapons cracking under the superior power of her Senkou-enhanced Scissor Blade, Ryuko ducked back and swung her weapon through the air. Growling when Gamagori dodged to the side to avoid the invisible blade, she shouted at him, "Why do you even care what I'm fighting for? Aren't you only fighting because your precious 'Lady Satsuki' ordered you to? I'm surprised you can even dress yourself without Satsuki Kiryuin telling you what to do!"

Instead of taking the bait as she hoped, Gamagori pressed his offense. As she was constantly forced to dodge and avoid his whips while clashing with his seemingly infinite supply of chakram, Ryuko realized that although Senketsu's Senkou configuration gave her greater power and speed it did not help if she was overwhelmed by too many attacks.

"Do you truly believe finding out who murdered your father will get you anywhere in life? If you fight solely for personal vengeance, then you are not worthy of Lady Satsuki's attention!" Gamagori let out a righteous roar as he hit Ryuko with everything he had. Even with her Scissor Blade Ryuko found herself quickly tumbling through the air towards the edge of the arena platform. As she tried desperately to stab her Scissor Blade into the ground to stop her momentum, she felt one last whip smack the bottom of her chin and send her careening over the edge.

"But you will never get that chance, Matoi, because your hopes of defeating me end here!"

" Ryuko!"

"Damn that bastard!" Ryuko spun her body around and tried to stab her Scissor Blade into the side of the battle arena. As glowing sparks briefly flashed into existence when the tip of her weapon barely touched the surface of the arena, Ryuko realized she was just a few inches too far away. With blue eyes widening in fear as she continued to fall away from the platform, Ryuko let out a wordless shout as she disappeared into the smoke obscuring the ground below.

"Is this truly all you can muster, Matoi?"

Satsuki watched the perturbed smoke where Ryuko had fallen for several seconds before closing her eyes and scoffing. For a while she had been under the belief Ryuko would use her anger and tenacity to force herself back to her feet time and time again. These matches were not just designed to pick out the flaws of her Elite Four's Goku Uniforms but also grant Ryuko and Ichigo experience with fighting those that expertly wield Life Fiber. Matoi's fall here, while unfortunate, did not have any long or short-term ramifications on her plans. The School Raid Trip would proceed on schedule whether Ryuko got her answers or not.

"Oh? Is this all the Transfer Student can do? This is such a disappointment, wouldn't you agree Strawberry?" Nonon had a haughty smirk on her face as she turned to face Ichigo, but that look quickly fell when she saw Ichigo lightly dozing off with his head leaning on his fist. Growling and grinding her teeth together, Nonon stomped her foot angrily and shouted loudly, "What are you doing, Strawberry? The Transfer Student just lost her fight so why the hell are you taking a nap?"

Ichigo opened one eye and scoffed in annoyance, "I wasn't sleeping, damn it."

Nonon's glare intensified at Ichigo's dismissal of her question, "Why aren't you worried about Gamagori winning? You should be screaming out the Transfer Student's name in fear or something by now!"

"What makes you think I'll do something stupid like that?" Ichigo argued angrily before turning his attention to the battle arena below, "Besides, Ryuko hasn't lost the fight yet."

"Of course she's lost the fight, Strawberry!" Nonon growled and pointed down at the arena with her baton, "The Transfer Student fell all the way down to the ground! There's nothing - "

Nonon's sarcasm was cut off midsentence when a loud boom exploded from within the dust and smoke obscuring the ground. Stepping to the edge of her pillar to see what was making all the noise, Nonon was blow backwards onto her ass as Ryuko rocketed upwards into the sky just a few feet away from her.

"This is great!" Ryuko darted and soared through the air above Honnouji Academy. Senketsu's flight configuration was truly amazing. Unlike Mugetsu's Gufū, Senketsu's Shippu merged her lower body into one solid rocket that gave her more power and speed but at the cost of decreased maneuverability. Turning her head toward the swept-back wing where Senketsu's eye had shifted to, Ryuko gave her Kamui a smirk, "I didn't know you were this reckless, Senketsu."

Senketsu shivered from the praise, "Anything Mugetsu can do I can do as well. It is as simple as that. I was not about to let her hold something over me."

"I knew you could do it, Senketsu!" Ryuko grinned savagely as she hovered a few feet over the arena floor. Holding her Scissor Blade against the back of her neck, she stared confidently down at the waiting Gamagori, "I bet you're wondering what form this is. It's called Senketsu Shippu! Your stupid rule about falling off the arena doesn't matter anymore now that I can fly, Gamagori bastard!"

Gamagori was insulted by what Ryuko was insinuating. How dare she presume that just because she can fly that he cannot defeat her with technicalities! Pulling out several chakram from his back, he threw the spiked weapons at Ryuko while his whips crackled through the air towards her, "I've put up with your presumptuous attitude long enough, Matoi! You continue to refuse my generosity? Your rebellious attitude ends here!"

"Generosity?"

Ryuko looked at the Disciplinary Committee Chair in confusion with her head cocked to the side. She had no idea what Gamagori was talking about but if it was anything like what he said the other night, she really didn't want to know. Dodging around a thrown chakram, Ryuko grinned as she began flying away, "You can take your generosity and shove it! As if I would even consider losing to someone like you! I have questions for your precious Satsuki Kiryuin about my dad's killer and nothing's going to stop me from getting them!"

"Your petty vengeance is not worth Lady Satsuki's time, Matoi!" Gamagori screamed as he doubled his assault, "Have you refused to even think about what you're doing? You have no chance of defeating me! NO CHANCE AT ALL!"

"That's a load of crap!"

Ryuko boosted beneath the arena, ducking down as a chakram passed dangerously close to her head, before flying back up on the other side behind Gamagori with her Scissor Blade at the ready. Rocketing towards Gamagori with her Scissor Blade held out to the side, she was just about to pierce through his Scourge Regalia when all of his whips suddenly retracted back around his body. As her Scissor Blade ricocheted off the cloth armor surrounding his Shackle Regalia, Ryuko temporarily lost control of her motion and was forced to drag her blade across the arena floor to regain her balance.

"Damn, I was so close," Ryuko wiped the side of her mouth off on the back of her hand and spat on the ground, "I almost had him that time. Just one more second and this fight would have been over."

" That cloth armor is really tough. Even Senkou was barely enough to cut through it. It seems that unless you can somehow get inside of his Shackle Regalia, Gamagori is going to continue to hide whenever you go on the offensive."

"How do you suppose I do that? Should I bite one of his whips before he pulls them back in?" Ryuko rolled her eyes and glanced up into the reddening sky, "I have an idea and it requires Shippu. Ready for the most reckless thing you've ever done, Senketsu?"

"I grow tired of your insubordination, Matoi!" Gamagori finally finished whipping himself and burst out of his bindings clad in his Scourge Regalia once more. Reaching onto his back and pulling out half a dozen chakram, three per hand, he shot his whips at Ryuko and shouted, "I thought that if I shackled and whipped myself, my fellow students would see my righteous behavior and correct their own in the process. I hoped they would mend their own ways and not require my direct intervention for that is my goal as the Disciplinary Committee Chair - to lay down the law of Honnouji Academy and impose order and uniformity on the students!"

"You're still going on about that?" Ryuko rolled her eyes as she darted through the air while using her Scissor Blade to cut any whips she could not avoid. Ducking beneath an expertly thrown chakram, she shouted, "I already know all this so why the hell are you explaining it to me again!"

"YOU DO NOT UNDERSTAND, MATOI!"

Gamagori threw his arms out and Ryuko tensed as every single one of his spiked whips grabbed a chakram, "The Shackle Regalia is the beating heart of my hopes and desires but despite all my hard work students like you remain out there that refuse to learn and mend their rebellious ways! It is with a heavy heart and tear-filled eyes that I use the cleansing whip that is Scourge Regalia! Now face the true horror of the Scourge Regalia, Ryuko Matoi, and despair!"

Ryuko swung her Scissor Blade as the whips shot towards her, "Get ready, Senketsu."

Senketsu stared at Ryuko suspiciously, "Ryuko, you never told me your plan."

Ryuko grinned, "You'll see."

"Have you finally learned your lesson, Matoi?" Gamagori asked as Ryuko was pummeled with his whips. Despite her newfound ability to fly, Ryuko did not know Gamagori was used to fighting an opponent that could maneuver in three dimensions. Jakuzure had required a lot of practice to get used to her Symphony Regalia Mark III and Gamagori had been the one to offer his assistance.

"Like hell I have!" Ryuko roared as she swung her Scissor Blade rapidly in front of her body and destroyed all the whips surrounding her. Glaring at Gamagori, Ryuko spun around before the jets beneath her legs flared to life and she rocketed high into the skies above Honnouji Academy before disappearing into the clouds.

For over a minute everyone, from the audience of students in the stadium to Aikuro watching from high above, stared at the trail of exhaust leading into the sky in anticipation for Ryuko's attack. When nothing happened and there was no sign of Ryuko, angry mutterings could be heard being whispered in the stands. Huffing in annoyance with his eyes locked on the red skies above, Gamagori shouted, "Have you fled like a coward, Matoi?"

Satsuki did not share Gamagori's outburst of anger but she did not say anything to the contrary. It took a clear mind and a sharp intellect to realize that Ryuko Matoi had not, in fact, fled the battle as so many people were beginning to suspect. Such an act of cowardice was against Matoi's nature and Satsuki would be stunned if that was indeed what happened. Casting her gaze on Ichigo, who seemed just as unworried about Ryuko as she was, Satsuki tightened her grip on Bakuzan and muttered, "It is unfortunate that your mind has become obsessed with resolve, Gamagori, for if you aren't careful it shall turn into arrogance."

"Lady Satsuki!" Satsuki glanced down at the battle arena and saw Gamagori turned to face her. With his loud voice reverberating throughout the stadium, he declared, "Since Ryuko Matoi has fled the field of combat I am requesting that you declare me the winner!"

"You should be cautious with what you say, Gamagori," Satsuki replied evenly, "For the match is not as over as you think."

Gamagori gave Satsuki a questioning look and was about to ask her what she was talking about when a bright flash of red light pierced through the thick clouds covering Honnouji Academy. Peering up into the sky, he was shocked to see Ryuko blasting down towards him at a speed he didn't think possible. Realizing that if Ryuko's Scissor blade hit his Scourge Regalia at that speed the match would be over Gamagori rapidly retracted all his whips and tentacles and formed his Shackle Regalia once more.

"That's not going to work this time!" Ryuko shouted as a loud crackle of thunder echoed through the stadium as she broke through the sound barrier. As her velocity continued to increase, no small thanks to the large thrust from Shippu, Ryuko quickly shifted out of her flight configuration into Senkou and shouted over the roaring wind, "If my Scissor Blade isn't sharp enough to cut through your stupid cloth armor on its own then I'm going need to improvise! Try to withstand this! Seni-Soshitsu!"

Making a turn sharp enough to kill a normal human just as she was about to hit the arena, Ryuko blasted across the stage and sliced through the cloth armor composing Gamagori's Shackle Regalia like it was tissue paper. Before the Disciplinary Committee Chair could even think of moving, Ryuko spun around and slashed him again with enough force to propel him several feet into the air.

"I-Impossible!" Gamagori spat out as he was stripped of his Goku Uniform, "My cloth armor!"

"Humph," Ryuko grinned as the Banshi from Gamagori's Shackle Regalia were absorbed by Senketsu, "Your cloth armor may not have any Life Fibers but my Senkou attacks can still cut through it. All I needed was a running start and your cloth armor was history! This match is over, Ira Gamagori!"

Turning away from Gamagori, who was beginning to get back onto his feet while completely naked, Ryuko gave Senketsu a pleased smile, "You're one hell of a Kamui, Senketsu."

Senketsu's eye closed in happiness at the praise, "It was your idea that won the match, Ryuko."

"But I couldn't have done it without you," Ryuko answered and gave Senketsu's collar a light dusting off. As her Kamui shook around her body, she said, "That's two wins. Now we just need to wait for Ichigo to kick Nonon's ass and I'll finally get Satsuki Kiryuin to tell me what she knows."

"Disgraceful!"

Ryuko's ears picked up the sound of a blade being drawn. Turning around, she saw Gamagori had a dagger in his hands and was about to stab himself in the stomach, "H-Hey! What are you doing?"

Before Gamagori could lower his arms, there was a light laughter as a pink boot lightly tapped him in his massive stomach and sent him bouncing along the battle arena. With her leg still raised in the air, one hand propped against her cheek and the other holding down her pink dress so that humans didn't see anything they should not see, Nui Harime dragged out her words as she spoke, "I'm sure Satsuki wanted to say something like 'wipe away your own tears' or something but it's just so annoying to see naked apes just refuse to lay down, you know. Wouldn't you agree, Ryuko?"

Ryuko stared in stunned surprise at who was standing right in front of her without a care in the world. As her face contorted in anger at seeing the person who killed her dad acting normally, she shouted, "Nui Harime!"

"Huh?" Nui tilted her head to the side and blinked owlshly as Ryuko shouted her name. She was sure Ryuko didn't know about her since she was very careful when it came to secrets. That meant someone must have been very naughty and told Ryuko and ruined the surprise. Spinning around on her heel and holding her pink parasol on her shoulder, Nui giggled and stared at Ichigo, "Did you have to spoil the big surprise, Ichigo? I wanted Ryuko to be really shocked by my cute and amazing reveal! It's just not the same if she already knows all about me, you know!"

Ichigo locked gazes with the Grand Couturier without flinching. Nui's power may be greater than his own but Ichigo was not about to show any nervousness around her, "Of course I told her all I knew. You not only killed Ryuko's dad but you also attacked Kisuke."

"Attacked?" Nui seemed confused by Ichigo's choice of words before she remembered who Ichigo was referring to, "Are you talking about Mr. Urahara? I'm surprised that you know about that, but then again you are my favorite cousin! Of course I attacked him! He committed the ultimate taboo of creating a Kamui. Humans aren't supposed to go to certain places, you know, but that shopkeeper was really strange. He actually gave me a difficult time before I finally managed to kill him! Although by the end he was bleeding just like any other human."

Ichigo gripped Tournesol and stood up but was stopped when Satsuki appeared before him. Holding Bakuzan toward Nui, Satsuki narrowed her eyes and asked, "Why are you here?"

"That's such a silly question, Lady Satsuki!" Nui huffed and leaned onto her pink parasol. As her body was floating sideways in the air, she giggled and added, "You know that I couldn't stay away from all the fun you were having!"

Satsuki stared coldly at the Grand Couturier, who returned the favor with a pleased expression in her single sapphire eye, before she slowly began unsheathing Bakuzan from its scabbard, "My mother has expressively forbidden you from stepping foot within Honnouji Academy after Parent Student Day. You might not care about what I say but even someone like you will listen to my mother."

Nui's face seemed to show just the tiniest amount of worry before it quickly disappeared and was replaced by a smile, "Nope! I'll have you know Lady Ragyo changed her mind! She said that if I was a good girl and didn't go near Ichigo I could stay for as long as I wanted! While I would love to do nothing more than play with my cousin and bond as a family I made a promise and you're supposed to keep your promises, you know."

Satsuki opened her mouth to respond but stopped when Ichigo stepped in front of her, "Tell me something, Nui Harime. Mugetsu is the Kamui that Kisuke created so why did you kill him and not me?"

"Don't be silly and ask such ridiculous questions Ichigo!" Nui chirped as she felt Ryuko's anger rising by the second. The Grand Couturier loved when a plan came together but any interference would ruin everything. Leaning forward, her chin propped on the top of her pink parasol, Nui puffed her cheeks out and explained, "You're my cousin so I could never do anything to hurt you, Ichigo! Mr. Urahara was nothing but a lowly human who thought he could hide something as high-class as a Kamui from me. Mugetsu is a true Kamui so if it's worn by someone like you then I have no problems with you!"

"Hey!" Ryuko raised her voice to gain Nui Harime's attention, "So you must be Nui Harime. Tell me something. Why did you kill my dad?"

"Why indeed," Nui spun around comically before she suddenly appeared right next to Ryuko, "It's really strange that you want to ask something you already know the answer to!"

Ryuko leapt away from Nui and raised her Scissor Blade, "What are you talking about?"

"You know so much about me and yet I care so little about you!" Nui smiled and reached into her dress before pulling out a familiar purple Scissor Blade. Spinning the blade around her wrist while making cute grunts, Nui pointed her own Scissor Blade at Ryuko and giggled, "See this? I pulled it out of your dad's body! Doesn't that just make you really mad? We should fight and have lots of fun!"

The look on Ryuko's face brought a smile to Nui's face. The look of sheer hate and loathing was perfect for what she had planned for that man's daughter, but when Ryuko bit her lip hard enough to draw blood instead of attacking her, Nui had a look of genuine surprise etched on her face.

"You must think I'm stupid or something," Ryuko spat out a glob of blood as she forced herself to calm down. She could tell Nui was intentionally baiting her but Ryuko was too smart for that. Giving the surprised Grand Couturier a cocky grin, she said, "Did you honestly think I would just attack you because I'm pissed off at you? I sure as hell want to smash your face into the ground and beat you until you're a bloody pulp but Ichigo's told me all about you. You're stronger and faster than Satsuki Kiryuin. If Ichigo can't beat you on his own than anything I do will be pointless!"

Nui leaned sadly on her Scissor Blade, "Gosh, you really know how to ruin someone's fun, don't you? I thought that I would surprise you with this Scissor Blade and then have a fun battle that we could both enjoy, but it seems my big plan has failed. Months of planning against you foiled by your newly acquired self-control. What am I going to do with my life now that my plan's fallen apart?"

Turning to walk away, Nui took three steps before she suddenly turned around, clapped her hands and winked at Ryuko, "Ah! That's why it is always a good idea to have a Plan B!"

"Plan B?" Ryuko glared heatedly at Nui as she raised her Scissor Blade, "What the hell are you talking about now?"

"Not going to tell you!" Nui giggled childishly as she spun around once and clapped her hands excitedly, "Just wait right here! I'll be back in just a second!"

When Nui vanished from sight, Ryuko thought the Grand Couturier's immense speed would be the biggest shock of the day. She had been able to somewhat keep up with Ichigo's speed when he fought Sanageyama up until the very end but she hadn't even seen Nui take a single step. How the hell was she going to fight if Nui actually tried to attack her? As the gears in her mind spun rapidly in order to come up with a plan, Ryuko heard a loud commotion coming from the stands before Nui reappeared in front of her. What Ryuko saw held firmly in her grasp caused her breath to hitch in her throat.

"M-Mako!"

Held above the ground in Nui's left hand was Mako, who was trying fervently to get free of the Grand Couturier's grip, "Ryuko! This strange girl who showed up before is trying to kidnap me! I'm too young for an arranged marriage to an old, rich man!"

"Your voice is really annoying," Nui told Mako as she held her purple Scissor Blade in her right hand, "If you don't be quiet, something really bad might just happen to you!"

"Wait!" Ryuko sprinted towards Nui, pulling the pin out of her Seki Tekkou and transforming wordlessly as she raced towards Nui.

"Nope, it's too late, Ryuko!" Nui giggled as she held her Scissor Blade behind Mako, "Say bye!"

Without a single shred of hesitation Nui plunged the Scissor Blade into Mako's chest and directly through her heart, causing the girl squirming her in hand to spasm in pain before quickly going still without saying another word. Flicking the body off her Scissor Blade,

Nui watched Mako roll to a stop several feet away from Ryuko with a pool of blood beginning to form underneath her body. Lightly giggling, Nui stabbed her blade into the ground and sighed, "Gosh! That was a lot of fun! So do you want to fight me yet, Ryuko? If you don't, I still have Plan C, you know, but it's going to require that I get a few things!"

Ryuko didn't hear a word Nui was saying as she knelt in horror next to Mako's lifeless body. Raising a shaking hand towards her best friend's face, tears streaming down her cheeks as she wished this were nothing but a nightmare, Ryuko turned to Nui with a dead look in her eyes when she felt something snap inside her chest. With red steam wafting off her body, Ryuko staggered back to her feet, heedless of Senketsu's voice screaming at her to calm down, and roared as everything seemed to become covered in a boiling red haze. As she felt her body contort and warp painfully, Ryuko only had a single thought on her mind - kill Nui Harime.

"Golly, now that you're all dressed up, Ryuko, the fun can begin!" Nui cheerfully explained. She could sense both Satsuki and Ichigo rushing towards her back, both of them already clad in their respective Kamui, but Nui didn't really care about them. She was going to have lots of fun and no one was going to stop her. As a berserk roar filled with both fury and lamentation pierced through the air, Nui giggled softly and held up her Scissor Blade. She loved it when a plan came together.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #17 - It's Just Acting

Mako was running around in a full-blown panic after watching Nui impale her on the large screen that took up an entire wall of the room, "Eh, I'm dead? I can't be dead! If I'm dead, does that mean everyone else is dead as well? Have I joined a cult? I don't remember drinking any fruit punch!"

Ryuko ignored Mako's rambling in order to focus on memorized the lines for the next episode. Unlike most of her fellow actors, she dedicates a lot of time to her character's emotions and passions. That was the downside of playing a character that was constantly annoyed and angry at everything around her. If Ryuko didn't act perfectly then they would have to redo the whole scene again.

"Let's see here..." Ryuko mumbled as she turned the page in her script and realized she was going to need a lot of cough drops for all the growling and roaring she was going to have to do in the next episode. Banging her head against the table, she muttered, "Damn it, my throat is going to kill me tomorrow. I just know it."

"I don't know why you're so upset, Ryuko," Nui Harime blew a strand of her blonde hair out of her eyes, "You're not the one that has to act all sugary and sweet with one of your eyes covered. Do you know how many times I run into things every day?"

"I know, Nui, I know," Ryuko sighed and turned her head towards Satsuki. Her fellow actress has her face buried nose-deep into the script and was doing her best not to make eye contact with any of them. Ryuko thought it was extremely ironic that Satsuki, who played someone that was pompous and overbearing, was extremely shy off set. Ryuko could count the number of times Satsuki actually talked to them without having her face buried behind a book.

"Please calm down, Mako," Ururu said politely from right next to Nui. The two sisters, who ironically were twins that played twin sisters, looked nothing alike but had nearly identical personalities off set, "I'm trying to memorize my upcoming fight and I don't want to mess it up."

"Oh, sorry Ururu," Mako apologized and sat down, "You know how my imagination gets!"

"Tell me about it," Nui rolled her eyes and leaned on her arm, "Half the fandom already hates me and they haven't even seen this episode yet. I bet that once this episode airs everyone will want to murder me. Do they even realize how hard it is to constantly troll all you guys while breaking the fourth wall? Even the readers don't notice half the stuff I say. Perhaps the director should just flash a sign whether I troll someone."

"That would be too obvious," Ururu commented.

"Hey, where's Ichigo?" Ryuko looked around for her fellow actor, "He was supposed to be here ten minutes ago."

"Ichigo got called on set at the last minute," Nui answered stoically as she texted on her phone, "Apparently the director wants to try something new in the next episode and wanted Ichigo's opinion on it. I saw Ragyo there so it must be an important scene."

"Ragyo was there?" Ryuko sighed and turned her attention back to her script. Ragyo was a great person to work with but the amount of time the woman needed to get her silver and rainbow hair to look the way it did was simply astonishing. Ryuko's single red bang only needed a twenty minute touch up every day but Ragyo's hair alone required two hours of work. Leaning back in her chair, Ryuko said, "Glad I'm not her. I would hate to have to walk around with glowing hair all day."

"You should turn to page seventy one, Ryuko," Satsuki muttered quietly from behind her own script, "When you put on Junketsu, your hair is supposed to become just like Ragyo's."

"Wait. What?" Ryuko tore through her own script until she saw what Satsuki was saying. Staring down at the offending words in the hopes her glare would delete them, Ryuko said the only word that could come to mind.

"... fuck."

Heart of Glass

So here is Chapter 30 but I have a big announcement - I have reached 1,000 reviews for To My Death I Fight ! This is a big occasion for me since when I started this story I never thought it would be this damn popular but all of your reviews and author alerts say otherwise... so thank you for all the effort of reviewing after every chapter. It really means a lot to me... but enough expository banter! You came here to read a chapter and damn it, you're going to enjoy it!

---

...

---

Chapter 30 - Heart of Glass

"And... here we go!"

Nui Harime beamed happily at the chaos enveloping Satsuki's little stadium. While the students in the stands around her were fleeing for their very lives Nui was staring in glee at Ryuko in front of her. As blood began to boil and leak out of Senketsu's seams and Ryuko's body began contorting and twisting violently into something it was never meant to be, the Grand Couturier giggled in pure joy. Nui honestly hadn't expected to resort to Plan B to get Ryuko all dressed up in what she needed to wear. Don't get her wrong, though. Nui always planned on killed Ryuko's best friend ever since she heard her annoying voice.

"That just goes to show how dull humans are. You think they'll do one stupid thing and then they go do something else. Gosh, you would have thought something would have killed them all by now!" Nui noted sagely as a piece of debris collided with her head and instantly vaporized into dust. Holding her purple Scissor Blade lazily behind her back, Nui watched as Ryuko finally emerged from the red steam.

"Wow! You look super awesome, Ryuko!" Nui clapped her hands cheerfully as she psychotically stared at the twisted and misshapen creature that used to be Ryuko. Due to the transformation, Ryuko's skin had turned an unhealthy green while her neck, legs and exposed abdomen were covered in splotches of red blood that appeared to be constantly leaking out from the spikes jutting out of her body. While Ryuko's Scissor Blade had fused to her right arm into a caricature of a weapon, her left arm had enlarged until it was nearly the same size as the rest of her body. As Ryuko's head twitched, blood spurting from the spikes in her neck, Nui sighed in delight at her plan coming together. She was so ecstatic that when she spun around and caught both of Satsuki and Ichigo's wrists in her hands, she still had a joyous look on her face.

"That wasn't very nice, you know. Sneak attacks are so last year, after all," she cheerfully reprimanded as she stared happily at Bakuzan and Tournesol, both of which were hovering just inches from her own skin with the sole intent of killing her. As she easily forced the Life Fiber blades away with her supernatural strength, Nui lazily flicked her wrists and sent both Ichigo and Satsuki flying through the air before then both managed to safely land on the feet. As the battle arena began to shake and crumble from Ryuko's transformation and fight, Ichigo ran and grabbed Mako's body before jumping off the platform and landing safely on the ground below.

"Damn," Ichigo looked sadly at Mako's unmoving form as he gently placed her on the ground before focusing all his attention on Nui. He couldn't afford to get sentimental right now. He needed to deal with the very real danger that was Nui Harime before he thought about Mako. When a roar from the berserk Ryuko tore through the air as she leapt at the Grand Couturier, Ichigo could not help but ask an equally disturbed Satsuki, "What happened to Ryuko?"

"I'm afraid Ryuko Matoi has lost control over her Kamui," Satsuki explained matter-of-factly as she landed next to him and rotated the shoulder of the arm Nui had grabbed. After clenching her fist several times, she turned her blue eyes to Ichigo, "By being pushed emotionally over the edge, Matoi's lost all control over Senketsu and has merged with her Kamui into an unholy monstrosity. There is nothing that can be done besides putting Matoi out of her misery before she focuses her attention on the students."

There was a large crash followed by a resounding boom as Ryuko swung her left arm at Nui only to miss and strike the ground instead. Wincing as he was buffeted by a burst of heavy wind, Ichigo tightened his grip around Tournesol, "I don't believe that."

Satsuki's eyes narrowed, "Believe what you want, Ichigo, but the fact of the matter is what you see before you. Matoi is no longer in control of her actions and is a threat to anything around her. If we do not put her down it is only a matter of time until she exhausts all the blood in her body and dies of exsanguination. Nui Harime knows that and will most likely drag out the battle as long as possible to make Matoi suffer."

"I still don't care!" Ichigo glared at Satsuki and noticed that her Elite Four, including Gamagori, had appeared behind her at attention. Not sparing them another look, Ichigo began walking back towards the fight, "I'm going to save Ryuko because she is my friend. I don't give a damn if I'm your stupid Vice President or even about what your mother's planning. All I care about right now is saving Ryuko before she dies!"

Satsuki stood aside as Ichigo shifted into his Zangetsu configuration and vanished in burst of speed. While her eyes were capable of following his increasingly fast movements, she noted that Ichigo's speed now outclassed her ability to react and dodge while wearing Junketsu. Crushing the envious feeling in her chest, Satsuki snapped her fingers and immediately all four members of her Elite Four were standing behind her. Closing her eyes and taking a second to focus her thoughts, Satsuki slammed Bakuzan into the ground, "The complete destruction of the battle arena means the Naturals Election must be put on hold. Gamagori, Inumuta and Sanageyama; you three shall evacuate the students."

"What about me Satsuki?" Nonon asked.

Satsuki gave Nonon a stern look before answering, "Jakuzure, since you are the only one with a Goku Uniform, you shall assist me in helping Ichigo neutralize Matoi."

While Satsuki was planning her next course of action, Nui Harime was having a grand time!

Dodging around the berserk Ryuko's fist, laughing as her opponent missed her once again, Nui brought a hand up to her cheek and sighed, "I thought this was going to be fun but it's just so boring when you can't put up any challenge whatsoever. I mean, your power is really high but you're just so darn slow! Gosh, if I knew this was what you were going to turn into I might have put off murdering your best friend for a little longer!"

Nui's words seemed to trigger something in Ryuko's mind because as soon as she mentioned Mako, Ryuko let out a loud roar before her speed abruptly increased. Spinning around the attack with her arms tucked cutely against her chest, Nui stuck her tongue out at Ryuko, "Nope! That's still not enough to even think of touching me!"

"Then how about this?"

Nui blinked owlishly as a fist impacted against the side of her head. As her body bent comically around the limb, Nui let out a giggle as she spun in the air before landing back on her feet with nary a scratch on her nearly perfect face. Humming quickly to herself, Nui clapped her hands together and laughed, "That was a really good attempt, Ichigo, but you're going to have to try a little harder if you want to hurt me."

With his arm outstretched and clad in his Zangetsu configuration, Ichigo noted with a small amount of satisfaction that he was now able to land at least a sneak attack against the Grand Couturier. After thinking back on all his past encounters with Nui, Ichigo had begun to realize that she had been letting him hit hurt the entire time. Grimacing as his heart pounded in his chest at the prospect of fighting Nui alone, Ichigo brought Tournesol up into a defensive stance.

"Well then, I suppose I'll just have to try a bit harder to kill you," Ichigo growled as every muscle in his body tensed from the anticipation, "After what you did to Mako, I don't think anything less will be appropriate."

"Why do you care about some dull and boring human, anyway? You and I are far better than them!"

Ichigo blinked and suddenly found Nui standing in front of him with a look of expectation evident in her sapphire iris. With a look of extreme sadness etched on her face, she asked, "Could it be that you think I'm not important, Ichigo? Why do you keep shoving me, you very own cousin, away when all I want to do is love you?"

"Like hell I care about any of that!" Ichigo blitzed around Nui and tried to stab her through the neck but found to his irritation that the Grand Couturier had simply leaned out of the way. Staring over her shoulder into Ichigo's angry eyes, Nui giggled as she gripped Tournesol in her hand.

"That was really amazing!" Nui complicated Ichigo before she absentmindedly brought her other arm up and blocked Ryuko's attack with her purple Scissor Blade. Ryuko let out an unholy moan of anger before Nui spun around and kicked her in the chin, causing a spurt of blood to rain through the air, before following up with a punch that sent Ryuko flying across the stadium into a wall. Pouting in disappointment at how easy that was, Nui turned her attention back to Ichigo and stared at Mugetsu's transformation, "Gosh! Your Kamui is really amazing, Ichigo! Looking at it up close and personal is way better than in the stands like a human!"

Ichigo leapt away from Nui and raised Tournesol, "I'm going to stop you and save Ryuko!"

Nui pursed her lips cutely as she seemed to think about what Ichigo was saying. After a couple of moments of intense internal debating, Nui shook her head and pouted, "Hmm... nope! You can only do one thing or the other and I'm sure not going to let you save Ryuko! I'm still somewhat mad at what her dad did to my eye. It's only fair that she suffer a painful death for what he did to me. Besides, I worked really hard on my big surprise for her and you had to go a ruin it by telling her all about it! Since you are my cousin I love you but that doesn't mean I'm just going to -"

There was a tense moment of silence as everyone stared in shock and amazement at what cut off the Grand Couturier in mid-sentence. Satsuki was staring in bewilderment from on top of Nonon's Symphony Regalia Mark III as she flew down towards the fight. Aikuro and Tsumugu could not believe their eyes even while the former prepared to fire the special adhesive bullet that would stop Ryuko but also potentially kill her.

"Ururu..."

Standing between Ichigo and Nui, with her fist lodged firmly in the latter's stomach, was Ururu Tsumugiyu. As her pigtails were buffeted by the wind she kicked up while moving so quickly, Ururu looked into her twin's eye, "... you killed Mako."

Nui gasped as pain, true pain, radiated out from her stomach. She was a Life Fiber hybrid that was supposed to be able to heal from any wounds, apart from those caused by the complete Sword Scissors, in a matter of seconds. That was why her eye refused to heal no matter how much Lady Ragyo tried. Isshin Matoi had been sure to strike her eye with both blades before dying, taking away one of the most beautiful aspects of her body in his dying breath. Nui couldn't understand why Ururu could continue to hurt her so badly. When Lady Ragyo stabbed and severed her limbs when she was younger, she did so just so Nui could see that she could recover in only a few seconds. None of those attacks had hurt but the single punch from Ururu was causing her to gag.

"What..." For once Nui had a lack of words as she tried to rationalize what was happening to her. Gripping Ururu's wrist with both of her hands, Nui grit her teeth and asked in a rare moment of complete normalcy, "How can you hurt me? This isn't supposed to be happening!"

If everyone was shocked by the Grand Couturier's alien outburst, Ururu was not showing it. Removing her fist from Nui's stomach, Ururu took a step back as the Grand Couturier managed to stay on her feet. Nui glared heatedly at Ururu even as her body finally began healing itself. As the pain in her stomach rapidly began vanishing, Nui held her Scissor Blade in a death grip and growled, "I don't care if you are my sister! You hurt me! ME! Now die!"

Nui did not like to use her full power in battle. Part of it was because as a Life Fiber hybrid using her full strength on a human, even if they were wearing a Kamui, was the same as saying they were strong enough to stop her. She would never admit that, not to herself or to others, and so Nui willingly held back her power whenever she was allowed to go out and have fun. When she fought against Satsuki and Ichigo's combined efforts at the Power Station, Nui hadn't used more than forty percent of her total strength and even that was more than enough to run circles around the two Kamui wearers. Even Ryuko's berserk form required no more than twenty percent of her power.

But Ururu was different.

Ururu was her twin sister, a fellow Life Fiber hybrid, and leagues above anything a human was capable of doing. That was why Nui was going to stop holding back. As her single sapphire eye darkened and her teeth appeared to file down to jagged daggers, Nui charged towards her twin sister with the sole intent of killing Ururu. She refused to feel pain ever again and even if it cost the twin sister she craved, Nui would never be hurt again.

"DIE! DIE! DIE!"

Nui charged at a speed that would have anyone at Honnouji Academy, even Ichigo, unable to follow. Every time one of her pink boots touched down the ground, Nui seemed to vanish before reappearing several feet away. With a maniacal look on her face and her Scissor Blade sparking against the ground, Nui swung her blade through the air with the singular intent of decapitating her twin sister for the crime of making her feel pain. No one would ever hurt Nui Harime again!

Ururu watched Nui charge to attack her with a stoic expression on her face. Even as her twin sister moved to kill her, Ururu did not allow the hatred she felt for the Grand Couturier to impact her judgment. Nui was just as strong as she was and thus was not an opponent she could afford to attack in a frothing rage. With the benefit of a clear mind aiding her, Ururu swiftly stepped to the side, barely avoiding being sliced by the Scissor Blade, and grabbed Nui's wrist in a gentle embrace.

"W-What?" Nui stared in shock and fear as Ururu calmly avoided her attack and grabbed her wrist. Staring into Ururu's emotionless gaze with a trembling eye, Nui tried to force her Scissor Blade forward and, when that failed, asked in a whisper, "How are you doing this? How can you make me feel pain?"

"Because I have friends," Ururu said bluntly as she slammed her knee into Nui's stomach. The Grand Couturier let out a gasp as she was propelled into the air before slamming hard into the walls of Honnouji Academy. With her foot still in the air, one hand holding down her skirt, Ururu continued emotionlessly, "You killed Mako. I could never lose to someone like you."

"Ururu," Ichigo wasn't as shocked as everyone else at Ururu's display of power. His dad had explained her relationship with Nui and at first Ichigo refused to believe it, but after thinking about it he started to see similarities between the two. Taking a single step towards Ururu, who hadn't moved since kicking Nui Harime, he raised his hand and promptly stopped when she turned towards him with emotionless eyes.

"She killed Mako, Ichigo." Even without emotions in her voice, Ichigo could sense the sadness permeating every word Ururu said. Mako had been one of the only people in the world that truly understood and got along with her. Even though she wasn't the smartest or the strongest, Mako had been able to make Ururu feel happy and now that Nui killed her, Ururu didn't know how to feel.

"I know, Ururu. Dammit, I know," Ichigo tried to say more but was forced to turn his attention to Ryuko. The berserk Kamui wearer had finally recovered from being knocked away by Nui and was making a beeline directly for him. Letting out a nervous breath as he understood what needed to be done, Ichigo began to walk towards Ryuko when it hit him. Quickly turning back to Ururu before she could take off after Nui, he quickly said, "Ururu, Mako may not be as gone as you thought. Orihime is here, remember?"

The look in Ururu's eyes as she realized what Ichigo meant changed instantly. As much as she would have liked to just grab Orihime and bring her to Mako, Ururu knew that Nui was only a few moments away from coming back. Ururu couldn't risk Nui killing Orihime before Mako could be healed. Pushing off the ground with enough force to leave a small crater in her wake, Ururu flew through the hole Nui's body had made in Honnouji Academy and slammed her feet against the Grand Couturier's Scissor Blade. As identical sapphire eyes stared with equal expressions into each other, both sisters mentally made the same promise to make the other one pay for what they did to them.

---

...

---

Aikuro Mikisugi cursed as he was forced to dodge to the side, his back roughly hitting the wall, when a piece of debris was flung into the air from far below. Carefully watching the nearly one ton block of rock and debris slowly fall back to the ground, the undercover nudist quickly pushed himself back to his feet and ran across the fallen glass and metal with the M-98 Widow slung across his shoulder as a resounding crash echoed from the impact behind him. Aikuro had woken up with such high hopes for the day and now it looked like it was going to be a total disaster. Kinue had specifically warned him about the Grand Couturier's plans concerning Ryuko and like a total fool he believed all his preparations were enough to stop whatever it was Nui planned to do.

"I was a fool," Aikuro mentally berated himself as a loud crash shook the outer wall of Honnouji Academy he was running across. Chancing a look down and noticing Ryuko's twisted, misshapen body, Aikuro grimaced, "How could I not see this coming? I severely underestimated the Grand Couturier's brutality."

There was one course of action left for Aikuro to take before he would even think about using the special adhesive bullet on Ryuko. As much as he promised he would be the one to take the shot if the worst came to pass, Aikuro was having a hard time rationalizing killing Professor Matoi's only daughter. Tossing the M-98 Widow resting on his shoulder over to Tsumugu Kinagase, who caught the weapon while he placed a clip into his sewing machine gun, Aikuro reached into his pocket and pulled out a cell phone.

"Is this really the time to be making a call?" Tsumugu asked rhetorically as he slung the M-98 Widow over his shoulder and holstered his sewing machine gun against the small of his back.

"This is the perfect time to make a call," Aikuro answered hastily, "Before we get ourselves mired into a mess that we can't get out of, I think it would be wise to call the one person that may be able to offer help in saving Ryuko."

"I warned you about Matoi's lack of self-control," Tsumugu angrily growled at his colleague. The younger Kinagase sibling was having a difficult time adjusting to the situation at hand and it was only because he knew what would happen if Ryuko escaped that his mind was focused. As memories of Kinue's own transformation and rampage ten years ago filtered through his mind, Tsumugu glanced down at the berserk Ryuko and cursed, "I damn well told you to take her down before she became too powerful. Even Kinue told you what would happen if she lost control! Mato wore her emotions on her sleeves and now she's been completely swallowed by her clothes."

Aikuro didn't respond to Tsumugu's harsh comments as they finally reached their destination. Skidding to a stop near the edge of the wall closest to the battle far below, Aikuro ducked down and pressed the phone against his ear. After he rang several times, and his heart rate increased at the prospect of no one answering it, a tired voice answered, "Hello?"

"Hello Isshin," Aikuro answered before he and Tsumugu were buffeted by a shockwave, "We have a problem - Code Veronica."

Despite the situation devolving around them into a mixture of chaos and death, Isshin Kurosaki's voice had a distinct lack of urgency. It was almost like he expected something like this to happen and when he spoke, Aikuro noticed a normalcy in the older man's tone.

" Code Veronica... that's not good. I know it may look bad but if Tsumugu's there then things might not be as bad as they appear. First things first, though. What triggered Ryuko's berserk configuration? I thought for sure Ichigo's presence and my conversation with Ryuko would have dampened her rage and hate towards Nui Harime enough for her not to lose control of Senketsu."

Aikuro grimaced as he struggled on what to say. Staring down over the side of the wall, the blue haired teacher was stunned when Ururu Tsumugiya appeared out of nowhere and hit the Grand Couturier hard enough to not only knock the air out of her but blast a crater into the far wall of Honnouji Academy. As the entire school shook from the impact, Aikuro regained control of his motor functions and answered, "Your plan did work. Ryuko was able to control herself enough that she did not recklessly charged at the Grand Couturier, but..."

"... but? What happened, Aikuro?"

As he was about to answer, Tsumugu tore the phone out of his hand and held it up to his ear. Stepping over to the edge of the wall and watching as the Grand Couturier was thrown into the main building of Honnouji Academy, Tsumugu narrowed his eyes before answering the question, "Isshin, Nui Harime had a backup plan in case her initial attempt at enraging Matoi failed. She killed Mako Mankanshoku right in front of Matoi's eyes. That's what triggered her current berserk state."

On the other end of the line, Isshin was relieved Yuzu and Karin weren't home to see him like this. There were not many times Isshin could recall being visibly enraged or upset enough to get angry. One of them had been when he was fighting that strange hollow the night he met Masaki and another was when he realized that Ragyo had been the one to kidnap Ichigo from right under his nose. As a sense of power stifled the air in the Kurosaki Household, Isshin moved into a room without a window as his black hair flaked away to silver and a bright rainbow light began shining from somewhere within it.

Isshin rubbed his now maroon eyes as his disguise failed due to his anger at the situation. He had anticipated Nui would be depraved enough to hurt one of Ryuko's friends in a misguided attempt at getting back at Souchiro for what he did to her eye. He may have done his best to live life as a normal human being, but he could not fully understand Nui Harime's innate rage at her injury. As a Life Fiber Hybrid, Nui was most likely unaccustomed to actual pain and injuries. To be hurt and not instantly heal probably filled her with fear that she was human, which was something Ragyo undoubtedly raised her to not believe.

"I wonder how you would have turned out if I could have saved you as well." Isshin muttered with his hand over the phone. He didn't need Aikuro or Tsumugu hearing this. There were many things Isshin regretted doing, and not doing, in his life and being unable to take Nui with him when he removed Ururu from Revocs was high on that list. Ururu had turned out fairly normal after being raised by Kisuke and it pained him to think of how Nui would have been in a similar situation if Ragyo hadn't been the sole person to raise her.

Tsumugu was starting to lose his patience when Isshin did not speak for nearly a minute. Just as he was about to put the phone down and deal with Matoi himself, the older man finally spoke, "I knew Nui would have a Plan B, she's a lot smarter than most people give her credit for, but I was certain Ururu's presence at Honnouji would be enough of a deterrent to keep Nui from trying anything."

"Who, or what, is Ururu Tsumugiya?" Tsumugu demanded tensely, "She's not a normal girl, Isshin, and the fact that she just kicked Nui Harime clear across the academy rubs me the wrong way."

" Ok. I'm going to tell you two everything so put the phone on speaker," Isshin waited a moment for Tsumugu to do just that before continuing, "This is very important. Ryuko can last no longer than fifteen minutes in her berserk state before she runs out of blood. I'm going to tell you two a couple of very important pieces of information. Do not ask any questions until Ryuko is saved, understood?"

Tsumugu seemed suspicious of where Isshin was going with this but the combined effort of Aikuro's glare and the adhesive bullet he still had hanging around his neck caused him to nevertheless nod in agreement, "Alright. Tell us what we need to know and start with Ururu Tsumugiya."

" I was going to start there anyway. Ururu is Nui Harime's twin sister."

Isshin waited a moment for the shock to pass through the two nudists before he continued, "About seventeen years ago I managed to remove Ururu from Revocs and Ragyo's control. I knew Ragyo would focus all her efforts on tracking me down and getting her daughter back so I did the best thing I could and left her in the hands of an old friend to be raised as a normal girl. He didn't know about Ururu's origins and I didn't make it a point to tell him. Even Ururu did not know of her true family until I told her on Parent Student Day."

"That explains a lot," Aikuro was still a bit stunned by the fact Ururu Tsumugiya was the twin sister of Nui Harime. Headquarters was going to have his head for not figuring this out on his own. Mentally noting to blame Isshin, which was the truth after all, Aikuro asked, "Now about Ryuko?"

"If Ryuko truly lost control over Senketsu, then she would be dead," Isshin answered bluntly, "Since she's still alive, some part of her is controlling what she does and going by what Nui did, it's probably the goal of killing Nui. I'm sure Ichigo is doing his best to try and break through to Ryuko but from what I've seen the only one able to do that without fail is Mako. That is why you need to find and bring Orihime Inoue to where Mako is. Tell her I said it's ok and she'll do the rest."

"I don't know how finding a random girl will help," Tsumugu muttered in annoyance before noticing Kon, who was sitting on his shoulder, appear to perk up considerably upon the mentioning of Orihime's name. Grasping the adhesive bullet in his hand, Tsumugu said, "Unless the girl is able to raise Mankanshoku from the dead, she's completely useless. It's better if I use the adhesive bullet on Mato. It will knock her out of her berserk state with a 45% chance of survival."

"That brings me to the second piece of information," Isshin's voice became cold and even across the phone Aikuro and Tsumugu broke out in a cold sweat as he spoke, "Do not repeat what I'm telling you to anyone. I've already made sure Satsuki's hacker friend can't hear my voice so do not speak a word of this to anyone at Nudist Beach. Orihime Inoue's survival is vital because she alone possesses the ability to reverse causality."

"Impossible!" Tsumugu shouted in a rare outburst of emotion and surprise, "That would mean - "

"She can reverse events to before Mako was killed, effectively bringing her back to a state before dying. Now you see why it is important you do not mention this to anyone. Orihime is the only one able to save Ryuko. If Ragyo were to find out about her powers, it would be bad, but if Nui were to realize her plans depended on a single girl's survival, nothing would be able to stand in her way."

"I understand," Aikuro grabbed the M-98 Widow from Tsumugu before lying down on his stomach. Staring through the scope at the twitching form of Ryuko, he sighed and said, "I'll do my best to keep Ryuko pinned down from up here while Tsumugu does his best to track down this Orihime Inoue. The problem is going to be time, Isshin, since we only have about ten minutes to find her."

"You can just leave finding Orihime to me!"

Kon jumped off Tsumugu's shoulder and turned off the phone before turning his undivided attention to a perplexed Aikuro. Tapping his stuffed chest proudly, he gloated, "Ichigo's dad made sure to build into my lovely body the ability to track down any of Ichigo's friends in case they got in trouble. I know exactly where my gorgeous princess is, so if you want to find Orihime in time and save Ryuko you will have to bring me along with you!"

"Very well, then."

Tsumugu roughly picked Kon off the ground and held him in front of his face, "I don't have time to tell you two useful pieces of information. Just bring me to Orihime Inoue and you will live to see the sunset, got it?"

Kon snapped off a nervous salute as Tsumugu pressed the muzzle of his sewing machine gun under his chin, "Y-Yes sir!"

Satisfied with Kon's answer, Tsumugu took a step back before running towards the edge of the wall. As he fell downwards towards the stadium, where hundreds of students had yet to flee to safety, he glanced at the mod soul plushie, "Tell me something. How far down the rabbit-hole am I going to have to go before Isshin explains just how this Orihime can do what she can do?"

"Oh trust me, there's a lot that Ichigo's dad hasn't told you," Kon explained mysteriously as Tsumugu landed in a crouch, "It's kind of annoying, isn't it?"

"Yes," Tsumugu answered stoically before grabbing Kon once more, "Now find Orihime Inoue."

---

...

---

When Ragyo Kiryuin failed to infuse her first two daughters with Life Fibers, even discarding the second one like trash soon after she was born, she realized her once human body would never be able to bear a child capable of bonding with Life Fibers at the same level as herself. Despite being blessed with a portion of its power and turning her into a Life Fiber Hybrid, Ragyo knew the power of ancient creature far eclipsed her own. If anything could grant her the children she needed, it would be the Original Life Fiber. After many weeks of failed experimentations and testing Ragyo was finally able to insert several of her fertilized eggs into artificial wombs built within the Original Life Fiber.

After several months passed with Souchiro growing suspicious of her constant excursions down to the Original Life Fiber, Ragyo finally decided to check on the progress of her experiment. She already knew most of her fertilized eggs would not survive the normally lethal process of being infused with Life Fibers, but Ragyo expected at least one of the nearly three dozen to have survived. It was to her eternal pride and amusement that not only had one actually survived but had split apart in the intervening months into two healthy embryos, each of which glowed with a satisfying purple color.

As she carefully examined the twins that would help herald the world into a new age, one that was ruled by Life Fibers, Ragyo had already come up with names for them. She could not call them Kiryuins, for that would draw too much attention from the public and Souchiro about where the twins had come from. Instead Ragyo decided for them names that would signal what they truly were and their purpose for existing.

Nui and Amu Harime.

More than seventeen years later Ururu Tsumugiya crashed through several floors of Honnouji Academy, her body leaving a nearly perfect imprint behind as she fell, before she exploded through the ceiling of the grand ballroom that had been the location of the Parent Student Day ceremony. Twisting around as she flew towards the ground, Ururu slammed feet-first into the ground, cracking it for a good fifteen feet around her. Moving to take a step forward, Ururu stumbled as a lance of pain shot up her left leg, courtesy of an injury sustained during her fight against Nui Harime. Biting her lip and pushing past the pain, Ururu took advantage of the momentary lapse in fighting to gather her thoughts.

"She's much tougher than I thought," Ururu muttered as the pain in her leg began to diminish. Perking up when she sensed her opponent rapidly falling towards her, Ururu spun around and punched upwards as Nui swung downwards. Her gauntlet-covered fist met Nui's purple Scissor Blade in a titanic shower of purple light and stars before both girls were thrown away from each other.

As she skidded to a stop, her pink boots destroying the polished marble flooring with ease, Nui's face lacked both the normal cheery and saccharine look she was known to wear as well as the psychotic rage she wore whenever things did not go her way. Instead of either of those, Nui simply possessed a seething anger towards Ururu. Staring at her broken left arm before focusing her sapphire eye upon her equally injured opponent, Nui still could not understand how her twin sister could be hurting her so badly. The Life Fibers in her body should have healed her a long time ago but every injury she's sustained in her battle against Ururu remained on her body. Tasting something weird in her mouth, Nui spat on the ground and noticing there was blood in her saliva.

Gritting her teeth angrily, her single eye narrowing in rage at yet another sign that something was wrong with her body, Nui dashed towards Ururu with her Scissor Blade ready to swing down towards her opponent's neck. Grinning savagely as she saw Ururu bring her arms up to block her attack, Nui took one more step before she vanished and reappeared behind Ururu with her Scissor Blade poised to skewer her.

"Take this!" Nui shouted angrily, her tone lacking any cheerfulness.

Years of training under shinigami like Kisuke Urahara and Yoruichi Shihoin allowed Ururu to sense Nui's incoming attack as soon as the Grand Couturier appeared behind her. Ducking down and spinning to the side as Nui's Scissor Blade attempted to pierce her body, Ururu felt pain radiate from her shoulder. While her quick reflexes had allowed her to avoid a major injury, Nui's speed managed to cut her shoulder, causing her uniform to stain red from her blood.

"You're really quick!" Nui shouted, her tone expressing a mix of anger and satisfaction. She was still incredibly angry that Ururu was not only making her feel pain but also seemed to be keeping up with all her attacks. At the same time she was immensely satisfied that there was someone out there besides Lady Ragyo and Isshin Shiba that could fight her on an even level. As much as Satsuki liked to say how strong and authoritative she was, the firstborn Kiryuin daughter could not hold a candle to Nui's full power even if she used Junketsu. Her sister, on the other hand, was forcing Nui to give it her all. Holding her Scissor Blade in front of her body, purple light reflecting off the blade onto her face, Nui grinned savagely, "But I'm really busy today so do me a big favor and just stand still!"

Nui sprinted at Ururu with her Scissor Blade already arcing through the air, her feet taking off fast enough to crumple the floor behind her. Even as she attacked her twin sister with a flurry of attacks too fast for even Ichigo in Mugetsu Zangetsu to avoid, Nui saw with irritation that Ururu was either dodging out of the way or deflecting her attacks with her Powersoul Mark II gauntlets. Every time her blade clashed against them, Nui could sense hardened Life Fibers within the gauntlets repel her strikes and could not help but be amazed at the craftsmanship. Lady Ragyo had told her that hardened Life Fibers could only be cast into bladed weapons in order to keep the Life Fibers stable, but whoever made Ururu's gauntlets had seemingly overcome a problem both Lady Ragyo and the Grand Couturier could not find a solution for.

"Those gloves of yours are simply to die for! You must tell me who made them!" Nui shouted as she spun around, her Scissor Blade dragging along the ground accompanied by a shower of sparks. Tensing the muscles in her right arm, she exploded forward at full power and connected her blade against Ururu's guard, causing Ururu to skid several dozen feet along the ground before coming to a stop.

Ururu narrowed her eyes as a cloud of dust was kicked up but she was still able to sense Nui Harime descending through the air towards her. Quickly crossing her arms in front of her body, she caught the Grand Couturier's Scissor Blade between the protected portions of her arms. As Nui floated in the air above her sister, her pink Lolita dress fluttering gently in an unfelt breeze, she leaned forward until her face was only inches away from Ururu's and asked, "Was it the same man that created Ichigo's Kamui and blade? Did Kisuke Urahara make these lovely gloves of yours?"

"Don't you mention Mr. Urahara's name!"

Nui let out a gasp of pain as Ururu managed to push her Scissor Blade away from her body and smashed her fist into her stomach. Using her Scissor Blade as a crutch, Nui pushed herself away from her twin sister until she was a comfortable distance away. Letting go of her weapon in order to hold her hurt stomach, Nui clenched her teeth and shouted, "What's so great about these naked apes that you would fight me? You're my sister. We were supposed to work together to bring Lady Ragyo's dreams to fruition!"

"I don't care if you're my sister," Ururu retorted as she began favoring her right leg, "You killed Mr. Urahara and Mako. I won't forgive you no matter what you say."

"Do you know how long I've been here watching you?" Nui asked as she reached for her Scissor Blade once more. The anger she was feeling toward Ururu was beginning to die down, only to be replaced by a feeling of betrayal. Amu was her sister, they were supposed to do everything together and make sure nothing could stop Lady Ragyo's plans. This wasn't how it was supposed to turn out. Amu wasn't supposed to be fighting her like this. It had to be the fault of all those humans she hung out with, "I've watched you and Ichigo mingle with Satsuki and the other humans and treat them as your equals. They're nothing but food for Life Fibers, so tell me why you care whether I killed one stupid human or twenty?"

Strafing to the left as Nui attacked her, Ururu reached out and clasped her hands around the Scissor Blade. Hooking her fingers inside the hole near the handle, Ururu held onto the blade firmly as she answered, "Mako was my friend. She didn't care that I was shy and didn't like to talk to other people. She did nothing to you, but you killed her because you were angry at Ryuko's dad for no reason."

"No reason?" Nui smashed her knee into Ururu's stomach, causing her to let go of the Scissor Blade and take a step back. In a move reminiscent of how the fight started, Nui immediately spun around and kicked Ururu squarely in the chest, sending her bouncing along the ground across the ballroom, "NO REASON? He tore out my eye!"

As Ururu flipped onto her feet and recovered from Nui's kick, she looked up and saw the Grand Couturier gripping the edge of the purple eyepatch covering her left eye with her hand. Staring intensely into her twin's eyes, Nui proceeded to tear off the eyepatch had been the sign of her disgraceful loss against Ryuko's dad seven months ago. Blue eyes widening from shock, Ururu asked, "What happened to your eye?"

Under the eyepatch that took up most of the left side of Nui's face was a jagged x-shaped scar stretching across her left eye. Where her eye should have been there was nothing but the telltale glow of the purple Life Fibers from inside her body. Crushing the eyepatch in her hand before throwing it away, Nui snarled at Ururu and said, "Ryuko's dad did this to my eye! I could live with him tricking me into taking this Scissor Blade instead of Ryuko's Kamui. If that had been all he did, I wouldn't have even bothered to try and kill Ryuko, but he destroyed my eye!"

"... that gives you no right to go after Ryuko," Ururu answered after a moment of hesitation. Sliding her foot back, wincing slightly from the pain, she brought up her purple gauntlets and asked, "You killed him though, so why would you go after Ryuko?"

Instead of answering her question, Nui sprinted towards Ururu and smashed her Scissor Blade against her Powersoul gauntlets. Staring angrily at the twin sapphire eyes that she should still possess, Nui spat, "You and I are both Life Fiber Hybrids! We're better than those lousy humans with their stupid problems and lack of power and intelligence, yet Ryuko's dad had to go and do this to me! I can regenerate my arm if it's cut off but what he did to my eye will never heal! I'm going to be half-blind for the rest of my life! As my sister you should know how that feels!"

"Unfortunately, I do not," Ururu answered with a hint of annoyance before she pushed Nui away from her body. Springing forward before the Grand Couturier could recover, Ururu delivered several quick punches to Nui before ending with an uppercut that sent her flying into the air and slamming into the ceiling.

"And then there's you," Nui continued while ignoring the blood streaming from several new cuts on her face. Flipping onto her feet while hanging upside-down on the ceiling, Nui pointed her Scissor Blade down at Ururu, "Every time you hit me, I feel pain and bleed, but the worst thing is that I can't heal! What have you done to me to make me feel so weak! Tell me!"

Nui crouched on the ceiling before pushing off with enough force to destroy a good chunk of it. Falling down towards Ururu while screaming angrily, Nui tried to bisect her sister only for Ururu to quickly jump out of the way. As her Scissor Blade cut deeply into the marble floor, Nui shook her blonde hair out from in front of her eyes, "Between you and me, I hope Ichigo is able to bring Ryuko back to her senses. I want to keep killing her friends so she feels the same amount of pain I feel whenever I look into the mirror!"

Forced onto the stage when she avoided Nui's downward slash, Ururu was about to attack when a thought passed through her mind. Several things Nui did over the past few weeks were bothering her and Ururu needed to understand more. Relaxing her body, Ururu asked, "What about Ichigo?"

Nui paused in mid-step, her Scissor Blade trembling from the force of her grip, as Ururu's words reached her. She truly loved Ichigo. He was the son of the man Lady Ragyo loved, was really strong and best of all was exactly like her. Lady Ragyo had taught her that family, especially those that were blessed by the Original Life Fiber, were more important than anything else. They were the only ones that would survive the Celestial Cocoon Seed Planet and help spread Life Fibers throughout the universe.

"Ichigo is my cousin," Nui's voice dropped to a low whisper as she tilted her head forward, her long blonde hair hanging in front of her face made it impossible for Ururu to see anything. Lowering her purple Scissor blade into the tip of the weapon barely touched the floor, Nui looked up at Ururu with a vacant expression in her eye, "I hate Ryuko for what her dad did to me so I plan to make her death as long and painful as possible, but don't you ever say I would hurt Ichigo. He's my family and family needs to stick together, but that's not something I expect someone like you to understand."

Ururu noticed Nui's arm tensing up and quickly spun to the side as the Grand Couturier swung her Scissor Blade and released a crescent of pressure that left a large gash in the wall behind her. Skidding to a stop before leaping into the air to dodge Nui's next long-range attack, she said, "Ichigo told me about what you did to him while Ryuko was fighting Mako. He said you nearly killed him."

"He wasn't supposed to still be asleep!" Nui shouted before flicking her wrist and morphing the purple Scissor Blade into a double-bladed scythe. Holding the transfigured weapon by the handle, she bit her lip and stared at her twin, "Ichigo was supposed to already be awake. I saw him heal from my attacks right before eyes. I wasn't trying to kill him, but when he kept playing dumb with me I just couldn't stand it any longer! If I needed to hurt him some more so he finally woke up, I was ok with that! Once he was awake and his eyes were opened to the real world, he would have forgiven me and we would have been a happy family... but then Satsuki had to come and interrupt it. She ruined everything!"

With one of her arms out of commission, Nui's prowess with her transformed purple Scissor Blade was greatly diminished. That did not mean she could not still fight. Spinning the scythe around her wrist, the purple weapon nothing more than a blur in the air, Nui dragged one end of it along the ground before slicing up through the air. There was a split second pause before a trail of purple energy raged across the ground towards Ururu, who only had a moment to defend herself before an explosion that could be seen from Honnou City enveloped her.

"Ha... Ha... Ha..."

Nui panted from exhaustion after having used so much of her energy in that one attack. She was experiencing so many new and ugly feelings this morning that she mentally promised herself to never be taken off guard again. Leaning on her Scissor Blade, Nui smirked and marveled at the destruction her attack caused, "Gosh, I guess I don't know my own strength."

As she waited for Ururu to emerge from the attack, since it was nowhere nearly strong enough to kill someone like her, Nui sensed something approaching from below her feet. Quickly leaping back, Nui barely avoided being blindsided by Ururu, who had forced her way upwards through the floor in an attempt to take the Grand Couturier by surprise. As she stared at the fist passing only inches from her face, Nui stared into her sister's eyes for several seconds before she brought her leg up and kicked Ururu in the arm. Propelling herself away from her sister, Nui flipped through the air before landing on the ground with nary a sound.

"That was quite scary," Nui beheld her sister's appearance. Ururu was covered in blood, all of which stemmed from the myriad of cuts dotting her face and arms. Intrigued by the prospect that her sister wasn't bothered at all by the pain, Nui pointed her Scissor Blade at her and asked, "But you look all worn out and bruised. Perhaps you would like to give up now?"

"You're wrong," Ururu countered emotionlessly as she brought her arms up into a fighting stance, "My friends are counting on me to defeat you. I cannot lose to someone like you."

"Someone like me...?" Nui tilted her head to the side, her hair falling down to cover up her missing left eye, "... that's not a nice thing to say. In fact, it was very mean of you to suggest we're any different. Mon-Mignon Prêt-à-Porter!"

Ururu watched as dozens of clones, identical in every way to the Grand Couturier, popped into existence around Nui. As she took a step back to assess the situation and think, Ururu sensed that none of Nui's clones possessed more than a fraction of the Grand Couturier's full power. While that would make defeating the clones not as difficult as she originally thought, Mr. Urahara had taught her to never underestimate an opponent despite their power. Just because the clones may not be as strong or fast as her doesn't mean they don't possess other abilities that more than make up for that.

"Don't you just love being around yourself?" Nui grabbed one of her clones, which still wore an eyepatch and had a saccharine smile plastered on its face, and brought it in for a one-armed hug. Smashing her face against her clone, both of them looking straight at Ururu, Nui grinned and said, "There's no better person to have around than yourself I always say! Now before I end this stupid spat between us, why don't you go ahead and use Mon-Mignon Prêt-à-Porter? It will make defeating you much more exciting, you know!"

"I'm sorry to disappoint you but I can't do anything like this," Ururu muttered back quietly.

"Of course you can!" Nui pushed away from her clone and walked towards Ururu with her hand on her chest right where her heart was, "Our hearts beat as one, Amu! We both came from the same bundle of Life Fibers so everything I can do, you can do as well! And I know you're thinking about how stupid it is of me to tell you all this. Just between the two of us, this is the only time in my entire life that I've fought someone at my full power. Lady Ragyo's little bodyguard squad is simply boring once they get their Raiment. You would think a uniform that's half Life Fibers would put up enough of a fight to last more than ten seconds against me. La vie est drôle."

As much as Ururu did not want to hear Nui talk, several things the Grand Couturier mentioned led her to reconsider for the time being. Apparently there existed a group under Ragyo Kiryuin that possessed the equivalent of a Five-Star Goku Uniform. Deciding to stall for time while she came up with a better plan to neutralize Nui long enough for Orihime to help Mako, Ururu asked, "If you are my twin sister then you must know what you're doing is wrong. We are the same and yet we have different ideas and concepts of morality. Why are you doing this?"

Nui was strangely silent as she pondered Ururu's question before she spoke, her voice as stoic and level as Ururu's usually was, "Lady Ragyo is my mother. There is nothing I would not do for her. Now that's enough expository banter! Go ahead and bring out your clones so we can have some real fun!"

"No."

Ururu shook her head in refusal. As Nui's eye widened in surprise as her twin's answer, she continued, "Maybe you're right. Perhaps I can create clones the same way you can, but despite all that I won't stoop to your level. We may be twins that are the same in almost every way, but I'm not you and I will never be you. I'm going to fight you and make you pay for what you did to Mako, Mr. Urahara and Ryuko's dad."

"Gosh, for some reason you sure are talkative lately. Are you sure you're feeling alright?" Nui's voice lacked any sort of amusement as she tried to understand what was going on inside Ururu's mind. Throughout her entire time watching Ichigo and Ryuko, Nui had never heard her sister utter more than a sentence or two at a time. There was something strange going on and it wasn't just affecting Ururu, but her as well. Nui had felt her normally expressive personality calming down more and more as the fight progressed. She had never been this passive in her life and it was annoying her to feel this way.

"Stooping down to my level? That wasn't a very nice thing to say, you know," Nui clenched her teeth and tightened her grip on her Scissor Blade. Hefting the weapon with ease onto her shoulder, Nui twirled around and exclaimed, "I think you need to learn proper manners! Go get her girls!"

With a resounding cry of 'Oui,' all the clones raced towards Ururu, who watched them approach with a dispassionate stare. She knew Nui wouldn't send her clones at her unless she had something planned so with a burst of power Ururu jumped up into the air. Waiting for the clones to come up after her, Ururu cocked her fists back and silently let loose a flurry of powerful punches that not only destroyed all the clones within range, which reverted to pink scraps of clothes upon being defeated, but also blew away every other airborne clone from the resulting shockwave.

"What the hell is going on?"

Nui seethed as she observed Ururu deal with her clones with practiced ease. Sure she could have done the same thing to her clones with only one arm, they were quite weak after all, but it was the fact she was at a disadvantage in a straight fight against her sister that had Nui's incredible intellect racing to find a solution to her problem. With her arm broken, thus limiting the effectiveness of her Scissor Blade, the worst scenario Nui could think of was Ururu blowing through all her clones and proceeded straight to her. She may have put up a good effort in their past clashes, but without her normally legendary regeneration it was all bluster. Ururu's left leg may be partially broken, courtesy of a lucky strike by her, but it seemed as if her sister's ability to use her legs hadn't diminished at all. As Ururu slammed into the ground in front of her, destroying most of her remaining clones, a completely foreign thought passed through her mind.

"I-I can't beat her..."

Summoning as many clones as she could, the scraps of cloth flying out of her large pigtails before transforming into her exact replicas, Nui's one eye trembled as she watched her sister destroy her clones while constantly moving closer and closer towards her. Holding her purple Scissor Blade in front of her body, ignorant of the sheen of cold sweat coating her skin, Nui began to slowly back away, "I have to get away from Amu until my arm heals. If I don't escape, she's really going to kill me!"

"Where are you going?" Ururu's calm voice asked from within the crowd of clones before, in a massive burst of purple energy, destroyed every single replica within twenty feet of her body.

"That's none of your business!" Nui shouted with false bravado before spinning around and sending out another wave of clones. As all her clones rushed towards Ururu at the same time, Nui spun around on her heel and headed in the opposite direction. Turning her head around and blowing a mocking kiss to her twin sister, Nui decided it was time to cut her losses and get away. She had perhaps thirty seconds before Ururu destroyed all her clones, but for Nui that was enough time for her regeneration to finally snap back into shape and start working again. In the meantime, there was something Nui wanted to check.

"Hmmm..." Nui's bubbly personality began to reassert itself, much to her joy, and she smiled widely as an idea came to her. Swinging her Scissor Blade lazily through the air with her right arm, Nui watched as the wall in front of her exploded into nonexistence, "Gosh, I wonder how Ichigo is doing against Ryuko? I haven't heard anything for a while, so he either killed her or managed to bring her back. I can work with both options but I really should go check up on him! My cousin could do with some cheering up after watching his friend die, after all!"

---

...

---

Ichigo grunted as his back hit the outer wall of Honnouji Academy hard enough to not only crack the surface around him, but cause a small hole to be blown out the other side of the wall. Pulling his body out of the indentation it made in the wall, Ichigo quickly leapt back to his feet and dodged to the side as Ryuko came crashing through the air. Running horizontally along the wall reminiscent of how Satsuki Kiryuin did in her fight against him, Ichigo began to realize that his plan wasn't working. Nothing he said seemed to be able to pierce the haze of rage and sorry clouding Ryuko's mind. The only person who could have possibly brought Ryuko out of her current state was Mako and she was dead.

" Damn it, where is Orihime?" Ichigo's eyes looked across the courtyard for any sign of his friend but with all the smoke and dust clogging the air from his fight against Ryuko it was damn near impossible to see anything.

"Mugetsu, can you try talking to Senketsu?" Ichigo asked as he turned around, his heels slightly digging into the wall as he skidded to a stop. Holding Tournesol out to the side in a one-handed grip, Ichigo's eyes narrowed and his body tensed as he sensed Ryuko beginning to chase him once more.

" I've been trying since Ryuko lost control of Senketsu," the Kamui answered seriously with a lack of her usually annoyance. Mugetsu might have found Senketsu's general attitude irritating to no end, but even she would never wish for what happened to her fellow Kamui, "Ryuko's raging emotions around Mako's murder by Nui Harime is swallowing up any conscious thoughts Senketsu might have. Ryuko and Senketsu have merged into a monster with the singular drive of taking out her rage on anything that catches her attention."

At that moment Ryuko leapt towards Ichigo, her enlarged left arm dragging along the wall as she let loose a roar and charged forward even faster. Swallowing his nervousness at fighting his friend, Ichigo raced towards Ryuko with Tournesol already moving through the air as Ryuko swung the red Scissor Blade fused with her right arm. Blue blade met red in a shower of energy and light as both combatants sought to overpower the other for different reasons. When Ryuko moaned in a distorted voice and began pushing back with more force as a spurt of blood arced out of her neck, Ichigo grimaced and pushed back with even more force. For a second there was nothing but silence as the light emanating from the fight intensified before the pressure reached a critical point and was released in an explosion powerful enough to envelop half of Honnouji Academy in a cloud of debris.

"Mugetsu Gufū!"

As his legs morphed into the familiar twin jets and Mugetsu's eyes extended back behind him, Ichigo flew up in the air as the segment of wall exploded into dust around him. Flying high above Honnouji Academy, Tournesol at the ready and his eyes scanning for Ryuko, he was stunned when he saw his body covered by a massive shadow. Descending towards him while emitting a bestial moan, Ryuko twisted her misshapen body around and swung her left arm at Ichigo. With no time to dodge the attack, Ichigo did the best thing he could think of and quickly brought Tournesol in front of his body. As her bloody fist hit Ichigo's blade, he was blasted down to the ground with enough force that he temporarily broke the sound barrier with a resounding crackle before slamming into the ground.

"Damn..."

Ichigo pulled himself out of the rubble a little worse for wear and watched as Ryuko hit the ground some distance away from him. While Mugetsu looked scuffed up with a few tears, he was relatively uninjured apart from a few scrapes and cuts on his face. Standing back on his feet and letting a deep sigh escape his lips, Ichigo began to move towards Ryuko, hoping that another plan to help her would come to mind, when Mugetsu spoke.

" Ryuko does not have much longer to live, Ichigo. The rate at which Senketsu is absorbing her blood means she has around seven or eight minutes before she dies."

"What?"

" It is as I said. Ryuko has lost control of Senketsu and, thus, will die soon," Mugetsu paused, her eyes narrowing as she thought back on something Ichigo said earlier. Looking towards her wearer with a suspicious stare, she asked, "You told Ururu that Orihime was here. What did that mean?"

Mugetsu's question caused Ichigo to pause. He was conflicted about whether he should say anything to his Kamui about Orihime. He knew he would never be able to keep his past a secret forever since trouble always seemed to find a way to come to him, but he hoped he would have more time. Looking around at the death and destruction surrounding him, Ichigo made up his mind, "I mentioned Orihime to Ururu because she has a special ability to reject events. If I can get Mako to her, Orihime can use her ability to reject Nui Harime ever killing her."

" That's impossible," Mugetsu's multicolored eyes widened in stunned shock as words seemed to temporarily fail her. She looked into Ichigo eyes, hoping he was kidding around, but when she saw nothing but truth in them she asked, "How is that possible. No human should possess such ability."

"Believe me, I know," Ichigo muttered. He was one of the few people that knew just how dangerous Orihime's ability truly was. Her current level of power was kept in check by her morality and lack of willingness to fight, but Ichigo knew what might happen if someone, such as Sosuke Aizen, were to have it.

When a pained moan followed by a scream of agony echoed through the smoke-filled area, Ichigo stepped back and readied himself for what was to come. Ryuko's attacks were getting faster and more powerful by the second. While he was confident he was stronger than her for the time being, Ichigo didn't want to risk Ryuko getting too out of control. He still wanted to save her, but if she killed him, there would be no stopping her until she died.

"God damn it!" Ichigo seethed in a mixture of anger and sorrow, "Don't make me do it, Ryuko!"

Ryuko appeared to not have heard him as she continued to half-shamble, half-sprint towards him, blood squirting into the air with every step she took. As she let loose a scream and leapt into the air to attack Ichigo, Ryuko was blindsided when Satsuki appeared out of nowhere and slammed her heel into her neck. Roaring in pain as a stream of blood spewed from her neck, Ryuko was sent flying across the courtyard before crashing into the far wall with a loud echo.

"I thought you were better than this, Matoi! Snap out of it!"

Satsuki clicked her heel against the ground as she held Bakuzan's hilt with both hands. Ichigo had done an admirable job holding down Ryuko without killing her, but that was going to change now that she was here. There was no way that a girl who's being worn by her Kamui would be a match for her. As she watched Ryuko getting back onto her feet, blood spraying out with every step she took, Satsuki placed the palm of her left hand on top of Bakuzan's blade and shouted, "Matoi! You are little more than a beast in your current state. I doubt you can understand a single word I'm saying!"

"What are you doing here?" Ichigo asked as he landed next to Satsuki, who gave him a quick glance but kept the majority of her attention on Ryuko. In Matoi's current state, she would be focusing all her misguided attention on the most recent focus of her ire. Thanks to her earlier kick, Satsuki knew that would be her.

"I'm here to offer assistance in taking out Matoi," Satsuki answered calmly. As twin blasts of steam shot out from Junketsu's shoulder pads, the Kamui silently wishing to fight against Ryuko and Senketsu. Satsuki would never say that she wanted to help Ichigo out of the goodness of her heart. If asked, she would explain that Matoi's rampage was putting the lives of her fellow students in danger, which was completely true. She would never confess that Ichigo's words caused her to rethink her priorities.

"I've already tried to talk Ryuko down," Ichigo said and shook his head as the memory of Mako being impaled from behind by Nui vividly passed before his eyes. He couldn't afford to lose his focus during the fight, "Ryuko doesn't have much longer and the only one that can help her at this point is Mako."

"I am uncertain if you hit your head during your valiant attempt to save Matoi, Ichigo, but Mako Mankanshoku is dead," Satsuki said bluntly. Ignoring Ichigo's angry glare to focus on Ryuko, who was undoubtedly already back on her feet, she added, "You can rest assured that Nui Harime shall not get away with this. The moment our fight against Matoi is concluded I will be informing my mother of the Grand Couturier's actions. Nui Harime has overstepped her boundaries as the Grand Couturier and she shall be punished severely for it."

"That doesn't help Mako," Ichigo bit back sarcastically.

Satsuki did not immediately answer as she slowly rotated Bakuzan through the air until she was holding it vertically in front of her face. Pressing her forehead against the cold black metal-like Life Fibers composing the blade, Satsuki snapped her eyes open, "There is no changing of the fact that Mako Mankanshoku is dead. Dwelling on the past will achieve nothing apart from forcing you to drown in your sorrows! Face the present with open eyes and a clear mind, Ichigo!

Racing forward as Ryuko came barreling towards them, Satsuki let out a defiant shout as she clashed blades with the berserk Kamui wearer. Bakuzan, tinged blue by the glow emanating from Junketsu, was naught but a black blur as Satsuki managed to counter and deflect all of Ryuko's haphazardly thrown attacks. Slamming her blade against Ryuko's deformed left arm, a burst of power causing the ground beneath their feet to crater inwards, Satsuki reversed her grip on Bakuzan and with Junketsu firing out a burst of steam forced Ryuko away, where she proceeded to crash through one of the pillars created for the Sudden Death Runoff before becoming embedded in the outer wall of Honnouji Academy.

"Rest assured, I will not hold you accountable for your reluctance, Ichigo," Satsuki panted, the exertion of using all of Junketsu's power causing the Kamui to test her willpower and determination. Gritting her teeth and pushing the Kamui's mental probes away from the sanctuary that was her mind, Satsuki turned to Ichigo, her blue eyes as cold as ice, and said, "I am aware of your relation with Matoi. It would be extremely dishonorable for me to force you to kill Matoi so step aside and let me finish this."

As Satsuki stepped forth to deal the final blow to Ryuko before she could recover, she felt a hand firmly gripping her wrist. With both his brown eyes and Mugetsu's multicolored ones narrowed, Ichigo warned, "I'm not going to let you kill Ryuko."

"It matters not what you think!" Satsuki declared. Pushing Junketsu's power upwards even more, the Kamui's blue lines beginning to glow, Satsuki pulled her wrist free of Ichigo's grip, "It is my duty as the Student Council President of Honnouji Academy to keep the student population safe from harm. If that means finishing off Matoi, who has already been consumed by the murderous impulses of her Kamui, than that is a burden I am willing to shoulder!"

Ichigo continued to ignore Satsuki's orders and stepped in front of her to bar her path before she could head towards Ryuko. Pointing Tournesol at the eldest Kiryuin daughter, he grimaced and said, "I took the position as your Vice President to keep my friends safe from Nui Harime, but I see that's amounted to fucking nothing ! Despite your promise to keep them safe from her, she's not only been here for days, but she murdered Mako right in front of my eyes! So tell me, Satsuki, why the hell I should listen to anything you have to say?"

Satsuki tried to speak but every time she tried to formulate a response the words just seemed to fail to come together. Ichigo was absolutely right about everything he just said. She had given him her promise as a Kiryuin to keep his friends and family safe from Nui Harime's machinations and now Mako Mankanshoku was dead. She had no right to order him around, whether through persuasion or force, and she couldn't find it in herself to argue with him. It was through either luck or coincidence that as Satsuki was beginning to pull her mind out of the slump from Ichigo's question that a familiar man dressed in guerrilla military gear landed nearby.

"Kurosaki!

With Mako's limp body cradled carefully in his arms, Tsumugu Kinagase barely flinched as an explosion erupted nearby. Gently placing Mako on the ground, Tsumugu gave Satsuki a cold sneer before looking at Ichigo, "Kurosaki, how much do you know about a girl called Orihime Inoue?"

The randomness of the question snapped Satsuki out of her self-induced slump. Turning around and pointing Bakuzan at Tsumugu, she narrowed her eyes, "I remember you. You were the Nudist Beach intruder who had the gall to invade my academy. Tell me one thing before I have you punished for your insolence, why have you -"

Before Satsuki could finish asking her question, Ichigo shoved past Satsuki and stepped forward until he was eye to eye with Tsumugu, "How do you know that name?"

Tsumugu stared back at Ichigo as he pulling out a cigarette and lit it. Taking a deep drag from the cigarette before expelling out a cloud of smoke, he grimaced and answered, "Your dad told me all about her.

He wanted me to keep it quiet but at this point I'm less concerned about a secret and more concerned with keeping the collateral damage to a minimum and saving Ryuko. Now answer my question, Ichigo. Are you familiar with Orihime's unique talents?"

Ichigo nodded, which was all Tsumugu seemed to need. Turning away from Ichigo, Tsumugu frowned and shouted, "Alright, get out here! We don't have much time!"

"R-Right away, sir!"

As Orihime, still dressed in her Karakura High School uniform jogged towards them from around a piece of debris, Ichigo found that he was more confused about how Tsumugu found her rather than the fact she was here.

"I see by your expression that you're confused, so let me break it down for you," Tsumugu bit the end of his cigarette and breathed out through his nose. He really hated have to explain things more than once, but kids these days just needed everything explained to them one step at a time. Picking the cigarette out of his mouth between two fingers, he growled and said, "That little Life Fiber plushie your dad sent was able to track this girl down, but the damn coward ran away as soon as I turned my back on it. Ok girl, do your thing before Ryuko Matoi decides to come over and join us."

"Um..." Orihime twirled her hands around nervously. She really didn't know what to do. Tsumugu had told her Ichigo's dad explained all about her powers, but after showing off her powers led to Aizen kidnapping her and nearly killing Ichigo, she was reluctant to show them around strangers. Looking down at Mako's body, whose chest was stained red from blood, Orihime's dark brown eyes dropped and she bit her lip before asking, "Ichigo, what should I do?"

"You do whatever you think is right, Orihime," Ichigo answered before the ground began shaking. At first he thought it was from Ryuko but the explosion he felt was coming from deep within Honnouji Academy. Twisting towards the building, Ichigo saw a column of purple-tinged energy explode out of the academy. Whatever was going on in the fight between Ururu and Nui, it was getting more intense. That one attack contained more power than the Getsuga Tenshou he used against Sanageyama.

"What are you talking about, Ichigo Kurosaki?" Satsuki demanded, using Ichigo's full name to emphasize the seriousness of the situation, "What can this girl possibly -"

"Soten Kisshun, I reject."

Everyone apart from Ichigo watched in stunned disbelief as Orihime pressed her fingers against the hairpins in her burnt orange hair before two balls of light shot out and began hovering around her head. Holding her hand out and allowing one of the Shun Shun Rikka to land on her palm, Orihime smiled as the spirit took off again. Twirling around each other in midair, the two spirits flew towards Mako's body before splitting apart and encasing her in an oval-shaped barrier. Holding her hands out and closing her eyes in order to better concentrate, Orihime pushed all of her willpower into bringing Mako back to life.

"This is impossible," Tsumugu muttered in disbelief as he watched the damage to Mako's chest slowly but surely reverse itself. Looking down at the lit cigarette in his fingers, he flicked it away and said, "That's it, I'm quitting smoking."

Satsuki's overall opinion was similar to that of Tsumugu's but at the same time was much more pronounced. She grew up around Life Fibers and thus she knew everything they were capable of doing. She would not have allowed her fellow students to wear Goku Uniforms if she thought otherwise, but what she was observing went above and beyond what normal Life Fibers were able to do. Walking past Ichigo, who was watching Orihime with reserved silence, Satsuki placed her hand on the glowing orange surface and noticed it was quite sturdy. Pushing down with more force, Satsuki realized her strength wasn't going to allow her to pierce the barrier.

"... human... ability... let... once... again..."

"What did you say?"

"Huh?" Orihime looked up from Mako's healing body when she heard Satsuki speak to her, "I didn't say anything."

"Never mind," Satsuki lowered her hand from Orihime's Soten Kisshun. There was something strangely familiar about the construct of light but she couldn't place just how it felt so familiar to her. Turning towards Ichigo, she sighed deeply as she sheathed Bakuzan, "Are you completely certain this girl can revive Mankanshoku?"

"This is our only shot of saving Ryuko," Ichigo answered passionately as his body tensed up. They didn't have long before Ryuko came back and from the volume of the scream she was really pissed off.

"Let me tell you two important pieces of information, girl. The first is that we don't have a lot of time before Mato crashes the party," Tsumugu growled as he held both of his sewing machine guns up and crouched behind a piece of upturned rock. Making sure his weapons had full clips, he propped his back against the debris and reached into his vest, "The second is that I don't have nearly enough supplies to stall her if she comes. The mines I placed around the area should buy you about a minute."

Ichigo turned towards the Nudist Beach mercenary, "What mines?"

In order to answer Ichigo's question, Tsumugu raised his hand and allowed everyone to see the detonator in his hand. Slamming his thumb down on the red button on the top, Tsumugu's body was highlighted in orange and red as the entire courtyard behind him exploded as fifty well-placed mines detonated nearly simultaneously. Glancing over the rubble as he watched Ryuko scream in agony as she fell into his well-placed trap, Tsumugu stood up and said, "Those mines, now quit talking to me and heal Mankanshoku. I don't think I did anything more than piss Matoi off."

"Don't worry," Orihime shook her head and lowered her arms. Turning her head and giving Ichigo a relieved smile, she said, "I'm almost done. Just a few more seconds and Mako should be good as new."

As Orihime's Soten Kisshun began dissolving into a myriad of orange-colored fireflies, the last touches to Mako's body were being finished. The wound in her chest where her heart was had already closed up, leaving nary a scar behind, while her No-Star uniform was nearly finished stitching itself back up. When the last traces of blood disappeared from Mako's body, Orihime let out a tired sigh and stood up, "I'm finished."

Despite watching Orihime defy the laws of nature as she knew them, Satsuki was still shocked into silence when she saw Mako's eyes open. The normally carefree girl blinked once, then twice, before quickly sitting up and patting down her chest where she remembered getting stabbed.

"Oh my gosh, what happened? I remember being kidnapped by this funny girl with really long blonde hair before a weird purple thing that looked like Ryuko's weapon skewered me like a shish kabob. Then I was all ghostly and see-through and I was floating around through the sky like a jet! Then I thought I might float away like a balloon so I looked down and saw my body and boy, was there a lot of blood. Oh! There was also this weird chain on my chest, but it's gone now. So anyway, where am I and how did I get here?"

"She's fucking alive?" If Kinue could see him now, she would most likely be sharing Tsumugu's disbelief in what they were seeing. Collapsing backwards against the outcropping of rock, Tsumugu's face was the picture of disbelief as he watched Mako get back to her feet and dust herself off.

" I can't believe what I'm seeing," Mugetsu muttered in a reserved tone. She was a Kamui, one of the most powerful things on the face of the planet, and yet nothing she did could compare to the miracle she just witnessed. Shaking her Life Fibers to remove the sense of strange familiarity she had surrounding the Soten Kisshun, Mugetsu didn't say anything further as she turned her eyes to Junketsu. While Satsuki was focused on Mako, her Kamui was looking right back at Mugetsu. It seemed that both Kamui, with a lack of words, had come to the same conclusion.

There was something nightmarishly familiar with Orihime Inoue's abilities.

"Huh, why is everyone staring at me?" Mako finished dusting off her uniform and looked around. Now that she thought about it, everything looked rather strange. The entire school looked to be in disarray but the most important thing was that all the snacks Ururu brought were missing! Twisting her body around and noticing Satsuki's intense stare, Mako quickly sputtered about and bowed, "Ah, Lady Satsuki! I'm sorry but I don't know how I got here. Did you come to hear more about my crazy dream where I died and was a ghost? Hey, where's Ryuko and why is Ichigo and the strange man that Ururu nearly beat up here?"

"There's no time to answer your questions!" Tsumugu leapt back and fired his sewing machine guns into the air as Ryuko emerged from the rubble with a loud roar. As soon as his weapons clicked empty, Tsumugu dropped them onto the ground before he reached into his vest and tossed several pin cushion bombs at Ryuko. While the Anti-Life Fiber weaponry detonated in a flash of different colors, Tsumugu was just about to resort to his spool grenades when Ryuko moaned painfully before her misshapen body emerged from the smoke and fire. Her neck spun and twisted painfully as her alien eyes focused intently on Tsumugu, who began to back up when he noticed her gaze squarely on him. With a resounding shout that destroyed everything within a few feet of her body, Ryuko leapt into the air at Tsumugu with the sole intent of killing him.

"Shiten Koushen!"

Right before Ryuko could kill Tsumugu a triangular golden shield appeared in front of him and blocked the entirety of Ryuko's attack. There was a pregnant silence for a split second before Ryuko began to scream in something that could only be described as resulting from the most intense torture one could conceive before she was violently and painfully thrown backwards along the same trajectory she had leapt from.

"I'm sorry, Ryuko," Orihime muttered defiantly, "But I won't let you hurt anyone!"

"Orihime..."

"Huh?" Orihime blinked and turned around when she heard Ichigo's voice. The former substitute shinigami was looking at her with surprise and she quickly realized that Ichigo had never seen her use Shiten Koushen, so blushing in embarrassment, Orihime let out a nervous chuckle, "O-Oh that? Well, you see, while you were here at Honnouji Academy I was really bored and decided to try and make myself stronger. Chad and Uryu helped me out a lot, you know, and eventually I found myself able to use Shiten Koushen!"

"No, it wasn't that," Ichigo's attention was on Ryuko in the distance, who still seemed to be screaming. He was worried about why she would have felt pain after running into Orihime's Shiten Koushen. Her Santen Kesshun and Soten Kisshun didn't actively damage anyone that tried to push through them, "I can be concerned over your new ability later on, right now we need to save Ryuko. She only has a few minutes remaining before she dies of blood loss."

"Why not just allow Matoi to die?" Satsuki asked in her usual pragmatic way. Sitting down on a piece of rubble with Bakuzan laying gently against her shoulder, the Kiryuin heiress was in a state of semi-meditation in order to get her raging emotions under control. She had seen many things in her privileged life but someone able to not only revive the dead but heal every single one of their injuries went above and beyond that. Even Nui Harime's monstrous regeneration couldn't help her if she was already dead. Sensing a strange feeling of apprehension from her Kamui, which manifested as a non-intrusive rippling of Junketsu's armor, Satsuki added, "If Orihime truly can raise the dead as we've seen, then wouldn't allowing Matoi to perish make saving her easier?"

"Eh?" Mako slapped her cheeks with her hands. Rushing over to Orihime, she grabbed the girl's much larger chest and started shaking her, "Ryuko will die if she's killed by blood loss! You have to use your superpowers like Lady Satsuki said to save her! My dad can't afford paying the insurance company if Ryuko gets anymore hurt!"

"I-I'm sorry, Mako, but Soten Kisshun doesn't work like that," Orihime held her hands in front of her face and looked away sadly so she couldn't see Mako's betrayed expression, "It's true Soten Kisshun can revive people who have died, but I'm not going to let Ryuko die just so I can bring her back to life. My powers are used to help people that did not have someone helping them. To use my powers like you say... that's not the kind of person I am! If... if I do that, then I wouldn't know who I was anymore."

"This is not the time for you to discuss your moralities!" Tsumugu growled as he clicked the last two needle clips into his sewing machine gun and spun around to delay Ryuko's arrival as long as possible, "Matoi is nearly back and she's pissed off to no end! So either you allow Mankanshoku to do what she needs to do or let Matoi die!"

"Do not worry!" Mako stepped forward and clenched her fist dramatically in front of her body. Giving Ichigo a look that possessed nothing but determination for the task she needed to accomplish, she declared, "Mako Mankanshoku will not allow her best friend in the entire world to die of blood loss! My dad's clinic won't survive the internet reviews if she did!"

Rushing past everyone in a blur of motion, Mako threw herself in the oncoming Ryuko's path. Spreading her arms outward and planting her feet firmly on the ground, she took a deep breath and shouted, "Snap out of it, Ryuko!"

For an instant it didn't seem to have any effect and both Satsuki and Ichigo moved to intercept Ryuko before she could kill Mako a second time. All their preparations and worry was for naught, however, as just when Ryuko's Scissor Blade arm was about to behead Mako, it stopped mere inches from her exposed neck.

Opening her eyes, which she had involuntarily shut a few seconds ago, Mako looked up and saw Ryuko's misshapen face hovering inches above her own. Her best friend's fang-filled mouth, in which the telltale red glow of Life Fibers could be seen, appeared to be opening and closing every few seconds while her large yellow eyes glanced over every inch of her body. Twitching once and taking a step back, Ryuko raised her right arm and gently, at least to her, touched Mako's face.

"Yeah, it's me Ryuko!" Mako cried and wrapped her arms around her best friend, heedless of the fact that the boiling blood inside Ryuko was starting to actually burn her. Even if she were to know that was happening, Mako wouldn't care. Saving her best friend was much more important than getting a stupid tan. Wrapping her entire body around Ryuko's green midsection, Mako cried and said, "I'm alright now, Ryuko, so please come back to normal. I know you must feel really bad about what happened but come back to normal so we can talk this over like friends! I'll bring popcorn and soda and we can watch a movie, just don't die on me! I-If you don't, I'm prepared to slap you until you're all better!"

Ryuko stood there with Mako holding her for several seconds before she spoke, her voice sounding like she and Senketsu were talking at the same time, "... Mako..."

Immediately after uttering that sole word, Ryuko began to groan as her body seemed to snap back and forth. As the Life Fibers within Senketsu realigned themselves out of the mess Ryuko's sorrow and rage had forced them in, Ryuko's body began to revert back to her normal appearance. As the last vestiges of her berserk transformation disappeared, her red Scissor Blade clanging against the ground as she lost her grip on it, Ryuko smiled at Mako with tears in her eyes before collapsing from blood loss.

"Ryuko!"

"Don't worry Mako, I'm just really tired," Ryuko muttered from on the ground as her best friend enveloped her in a tight hug that she was too tired to resist. Seeing Mako's burnt skin and looking around at the gathered people, Ryuko managed to gather up enough energy to force her body to sit up, "I didn't hurt you, did I Senketsu?"

"A little, but I'm alright," Senketsu said without hesitation, "I was also upset about what happened to Mako. It is understandable you would do what you did in that situation. If I were you, I would have done the same thing."

"I promise you I won't do something that stupid again," Ryuko smiled sadly and looked past Mako at Ichigo, who appeared to be relieved that she was alright. Turning from Orihime, who she still didn't know, to Tsumugu and Satsuki, both of whom were her enemies, she asked Ichigo, "Just what's going on? Why is that Mohawk guy and Satsuki Kiryuin here?"

Satsuki took Ryuko's defiance as her cue to stand up. Slowly sheathing Bakuzan, she said, "Believe what you will, Mato, but my priorities have always been the safety and security of Honnouji Academy. If working together with enemies allowed me to continue doing my duty, then that is what I shall do. Consider yourself lucky that Ichigo was able to convince me to spare your life after you were swallowed by your Kamui."

Ryuko wanted to say something spiteful back to Satsuki, but in light of actually trying to save her, she was willing to let it slide this one time. Turning back to Mako, who was looking at her recently burnt skin in awe, she asked the question that's been on her mind ever since she came back to her senses, "Hey Mako, how are you alive? I... I saw Nui Harime stab you through the chest."

"That's a super good question, you know. Just how are you still alive?"

Everyone present turned at the familiar saccharine voice and saw Nui Harime sitting on a piece of rubble with her legs kicking playfully in the air. Puffing out her cheeks and tapping her purple Scissor Blade against her shoulder, she looked at Mako and tilted her head, "Wow, I thought for sure you were dead. I did stab you right through the heart, you know, but you look as good and new as the latest fashions. How odd. I wonder how such a miraculous feat could have occurred. Oh wait. I know exactly how this happened!"

"Nui Harime..." Satsuki had already unsheathed Bakuzan once more and was standing between her and Ryuko alongside Ichigo.

"Oh wow, Junketsu looks totally awesome as usual and Mugetsu is simply to die for!" Nui clapped both of her hands together while ignoring Satsuki as a gust of wind blew the hair covering her face to the side. When she saw both of the Kamui wearers' eyes widen in surprise at something on her face, she brought her hand up and traced the x-shaped scar over her left eye, "Gosh, I totally forget my eyepatch was gone. Sometimes these things just get away from me, you know."

"What do you want?" Ichigo demanded and he gripped Tournesol tightly. He was not about to let Nui kill Mako a second time and he was prepared to use all of Mugetsu's willingly given power to make sure that never happened. From the way Mugetsu's emotions were bleeding through to him, Ichigo could tell his Kamui felt the exact same way.

"What I want, huh?" Nui crossed her legs and leaned forward with her chin resting on her arms. Giving Ichigo a happy smile before looking around at everyone else, she took a deep breath and answered, "What I want is really quite simple. I want to look my best for the entire world to see! As the Grand Couturier it is my duty to be the public face of Revocs, but this nasty little blemish on my face is really making me feel sad. I do wish there was some way I could get it fixed..."

Months of fighting and nearly dying as a shinigami honed Ichigo's battle senses to their maximum. As soon as Nui began talking about a blemish on her face, he was already moving towards Orihime, who could not be more than ten feet away. Just before he could reach her, Ichigo felt a pink boot slam into his chest and push him backwards. Grinding to a halt against the ground, Ichigo quickly flipped back to his feet and paused when he saw Nui had taken Orihime hostage.

"Gee, you really are excited today, Ichigo," Nui said in a happy tone as she held her Scissor Blade against Orihime's throat. Giggling once more before her focus seemed to shift to the side, Nui added, "I'm so happy that everyone's present! I really didn't want to have to repeat myself twice, you know."

"Let Orihime go," Ururu said as she landed in front of Nui. Despite having fought the Grand Couturier to a standstill not two minutes ago, Ururu looked as clean and healthy as her twin. There was not a blemish on her skin and her uniform, which had been torn and cut during her fight, was completely undamaged. Bringing her hands, which were still wearing her Powersoul gauntlets, up into a fighting stance, Ururu stared passively at her twin sister, "Do not make me defeat you again."

"Orihime?" Nui looked into the fearful eyes of her captive before a psychotic grin spread across her face. Orihime was such a really odd name for a human to have. Nui would almost say it was presumptuous for one of them to dare call themselves a princess. Pushing the edge of her Scissor Blade harder against Orihime's neck, Nui giggled and looked squarely into her sister's eyes, "She sure doesn't look like a princess, you know, but even I know if I let her go there will be nothing to stop you from coming after me. You almost did beat me just a few minutes ago."

"Do not speak another word, Nui Harime!" Satsuki declared as a backdrop of light appeared behind her. Pointing Bakuzan towards the Grand Couturier, Satsuki narrowed her eyes and shouted, "You have broken several of the sacred rules of Honnouji Academy. Do not think my mother will not hear of your casual murder of Mako Mankanshoku. Now let go of Orihime Inoue and leave! You are henceforth banned from Honnouji Academy!"

"Murder?" Nui looked around in wonder before her eye settled on Mako, "Are you sure you're feeling ok Satsuki? I don't see a dead human anywhere. Do you?"

"I don't know about Satsuki Kiryuin, but I'm feeling dandy."

Tsumugu had managed to sneak behind Nui in the commotion and was holding a Carnifex to the back of her head. Holding down the trigger and preparing for the powerful recoil his sister's weapons possessed, Tsumugu narrowed his eyes and could sense the smile on Nui's face disappearing, "This weapon was designed to take someone as persistent as you down. I don't think even you can dodge a point-blank shot to the back of the head so why don't you let go of the girl and put your hands in the air like a good little girl?"

"You stupid human..." Nui giggled menacingly and tilted her head backwards so that her dull sapphire eye was staring straight at Tsumugu, "Did you really think I didn't sense you sneaking up on me like a little rat?"

With barely a second of warning, Tsumugu was thrown through the air courtesy of a kick from Nui's sole remaining clone. As the Grand Couturier and her body double watched Tsumugu skid to a halt and slowly get back to his feet, they both laughed before the clone vanished in a puff of smoke.

"Now that I have your attention, are there any further questions?"

"Let... Orihime... go..." Ryuko managed to demand despite her exhausted state.

"Hmm... I guess I can do that, but only if she does one small favor for me," Nui pointed with her hand at her missing left eye. Exposing the ugly x-shaped scar that was the result of Ryuko's dad final strike once more to everyone, Nui pursed her lips before she stuck out her tongue childishly, "I saw everything Orihime did and I want in on the action! If she heals my eye back to the way it was, I promise on my job as the Grand Couturier that I will let her go safe and unharmed. In fact, I'll do one better! If she fixes my eye I'll turn around and leave Honnouji Academy without harming the hair on any more humans, including Ryuko!"

"I don't believe you," Ururu countered.

"I may be a lot of things, but I'm not a liar," Nui was insulted by her sister's accusations. Sure there were a lot of reasons why humans would not trust her, but if there was one thing Nui took pride in, it was the fact that she never ever lied to anyone. Lady Ragyo always said her truthfulness was an endearing trait that should be cultivated and grown into something spectacular, so when someone called her a liar, Nui never took it lightly. Staring emotionlessly at Ururu, she pushed Orihime away before seemingly teleporting over to Mako. With her Scissor Blade around Mako's throat, she said, "If you call me a liar once more, I'm going to kill Mako and I don't think Ryuko could survive watching her die a second time."

"Damn you, Nui Harime! Leave Mako alone!" Ryuko seethed and tried to stand up but found her legs unresponsive. Collapsing back down onto her hands and knees, Ryuko propped her body against her Scissor Blade and desperately tried to get up, much to Nui's amusement.

"Gosh, you just don't know when to quit, do you?" Nui puffed her cheeks out and smiled as she pressed the Scissor Blade closer to Mako's throat, "I'm going to guess that you must really want to see this girl die again."

"W-Wait!"

Before Nui could carry through on her threat, Orihime rushed forward, "I'll heal your eye, but I want you to promise that you'll let Mako go first."

"A promise is a promise, and I always keep my promises," Nui cheerfully ranted as she shoved Mako to the side with enough force to cause the girl to go tumbling across the ground until she hit Ryuko.

Giggling as she watched Ryuko groan in pain, Nui clapped her hands together and sighed, "Gosh, it sure is swell that you're cooperating with me. I thought for sure I would have to rough some of Ichigo's friends up to get you to heal me, but I'm glad I don't have to since that would make Ichigo sad and I sure do not want to make my cousin upset. Oh! I can see you trying to sneak up on me Amu, so I should warn that although you can certainly beat me in a fight, I'm pretty sure I will be able to kill Orihime before you can stop me! And if this girl dies, who will you have left to save Ryuko and Mako when I eventually come back to finish the job I started?"

Ururu stopped moving towards Nui once her sister called her out and looked at Orihime. She knew Nui would carry through on her threats given half a chance but Ururu didn't want to cause any of Ichigo's friends to get hurt because she couldn't control her actions.

Orihime turned away from Nui and looked at Ururu. The stoic girl had a miserable look on her face, almost as if to say that she was taking the blame for failing to stop Nui from taking Orihime and then Mako hostage and Orihime could not blame her. Nui Harime was a complete monster that put most of the arrancar she encountered while she was Aizen's prisoner to shame. It was amazing, but mostly terrifying, how Nui's strength and power would be more than enough to not only fight evenly against some of the espada but also kill them without trying. Steadying her nerves and preparing herself for what needed to be done, Orihime touched her fingers against her hairpins before throwing her arms forward, "Soten Kisshun, I reject."

As the golden oval-shaped barrier surrounded Nui Harime, Tsumugu limped towards Ichigo. Giving the Grand Couturier a look of hatred, he placed his hand on Ichigo's shoulder and said, "This is going to be bad."

With his eyes still firmly looked on the shadowed form of Nui from inside the barrier, Ichigo forced himself to turn towards the Nudist Beach operative and ask, "What are you talking about?"

Tsumugu gave Ichigo a scathing glare, "That wound over the Grand Couturier's eye was the only thing holding her back. Once she's healed, there is no doubt in my mind she will come after us with renewed interest."

"No, I don't think so. I think she was actually telling the truth when she promised not to attack us," Ichigo answered with a shake of his head. He didn't trust Nui Harime as far as he could throw her, but he had the strangest sense that she was telling the truth about promising to not attack them if Orihime was healed. He didn't know why he trusted her about that, but there was no chance he could fight Nui off if she was lying.

"Ichigo is correct. Perhaps the only admirable quality about the Grand Couturier is that she never lies. She will speak in half-truths and hide information, but she will never utter a single falsehood no matter the situation," Satsuki added stoically. Turning her blue eyes towards Tsumugu, who returned her gaze, Satsuki smirked haughtily and added, "I am willing to allow you some leeway for your assistance in dealing with Matoi. For the next ten seconds I will close my eyes and turn away, if you are no longer here I will assume you had escaped in the destruction and mayhem Matoi's rampage caused. One..."

Tsumugu took that as his cue to leave. Giving Ichigo a knowing glance, he ran off into the distance and jumped over a piece of rubble before vanishing into the chaos below. Staring at the spot where Tsumugu had disappeared, Ichigo frowned and said, "That wasn't like you at all."

"I do not know what you are talking about," Satsuki walked next to Ichigo and placed a hand on his shoulder, "But it would be dishonorable for a Kiryuin to not repay someone who risked life and limb to help their enemy. That man may be the enemy of my mother, but his services today have warranted a reprieve on his punishment."

"I-I can see again..."

Nui did not move as the last traces of Orihime's Soten Kisshun dissolved into particles and motes of orange light. Letting her Scissor Blade stab deeply into the ground at her side, Nui raised a trembling hand to her face in search of the x-shaped scar that had defined her behavior and purpose for the last seven months. When she ran her fingers over where it should have been and felt nothing but flawless skin, she smiled happily and would have jumped in joy if she had been alone at the time. Looking around with two sapphire blue eyes once again, Nui focused on Orihime and desperately wished to ask her how she healed her.

After Ryuko's dad tore out her eye with the Scissor Blades, Nui had immediately gone back to Revocs with the intent to discover why it hadn't healed already. She had been stabbed and cut many times in her life, mostly when Ragyo trained her, but all those wounds had healed up quickly. Ragyo had taken one look at her poor daughter and declared that Nui's beautiful blue eye would never regenerate. The Sword Scissors her former husband created had cut her regenerating Life Fibers both ways, severing them and preventing Nui from ever regenerating her precious eye. It was from that day forth that Nui covered up her shame with a purple eyepatch and vowed to kill Ryuko for what her dad did to her.

"I'm all back to normal now!" Nui exclaimed cheerfully and stuck her tongue out in a cute pose. Pulling her purple Scissor Blade out of the ground she stalked past Orihime, who wisely moved out of the way, and waved to Ururu, "Look! Now we're even more alike!"

"Your eye is now healed so do not forget your promise, Nui Harime!" Satsuki declared passionately.

Nui closed her eyes, a strange motion to the Grand Couturier after so many months of only have one eye, and scoffed, "Boy, you are really a wet blanket, Satsuki, but that's what I like about you! I'm just trying to show off my brand new eye and you have to go and ruin the fun for me, but I'm not going to complain! I thought today was going to be a real letdown when Ryuko didn't die but it's actually almost like my birthday again! There's just one thing I want to do before I go... and don't worry, I'm not going to harm a single hair on any of your precious humans..."

When the Grand Couturier vanished in a burst of speed, Ururu immediately began searching for her twin sister. With her eyes darting back and forth across the area and her innate ability to detect her twin's location quickly narrowing down where she was, Ururu turned and lightly gasped when she heard a squelching sound as a delicate hand tore through Ichigo's chest.

"F-Fuck..." Ichigo gasped as he stared at the thin arm stabbed into his chest. Coughing harshly as blood began leaking from the corners of his mouth, Ichigo felt his knees give out and was only held up by Nui's hand in his chest.

"... but there's no way you're a human, Ichigo, and this is the proof!" Nui cheerfully exclaimed as she pulled her hand out of his chest with one simple motion, exposing his still beating heart for the world to see. While that would have normally caused anyone to gaze at the Grand Couturier in a mixture of terror and horror, everyone, especially Ryuko, were transfixed on the blue glow emanating from the Life Fiber infused heart beating in Nui's hand.

"So you see, Ichigo, we're family!" Nui explained as a psychotic smile lit up her face.

---

...

---

Kamui Tales #18 - Life Fibers Can Do What?!

As soon as his eyes opened and he saw the sun streaming in through the window, Ichigo knew it was going to be one of those days. Yawning and sitting up, he looked at the alarm clock next to his bed and nearly panicked when he saw it was almost noon before remembering it was Winter Break.

"Damn," he yawned once more as he got dressed. Now that he was back home in Karakura Town for the next two weeks, he planned on doing as much as possible without any weird nonsense involving Life Fibers, Nui Harime or anyone trying to kill him. Before being sent to Honnouji Academy, he was depressed about losing his shinigami powers but after everything that happened over the past few months, being powerless and ignorant was looking pretty damn good again.

"Hey Mugetsu, you wanted me to show you around Karakura right?" Ichigo stretched out a kink in his shoulder and turned towards his Kamui only to find her sleeping sounding on her hanger.

"No Senketsu, that much starch isn't good for my fibers. I'll get all wrinkly," Mugetsu mumbling incoherently in her sleep.

"Right, I'm just going to get dressed and deal with the fallout later on," Ichigo shrugged and finished getting dressed before he headed downstairs. His dad was supposed to be out volunteering at Uryu's dad's hospital, so it was just going to be him, Karin and Yuzu for the entire day. As he walked downstairs with the intent to have some breakfast before seeing if Chad or anyone else was busy, the doorbell rang.

"Can one of you get it?" Karin's voice shouted from upstairs.

"But I'm busy making Ichigo breakfast!" Yuzu's voice shouted in return from the kitchen, "He slept in today so he's going to be really hungry!"

"I got it," Ichigo said just loud enough for his sisters to hear and not worry about it. Sighing as he turned away from the kitchen to head back towards the front door, he wondered who would be ringing the front bell. The only people who visit his house were patients and they usually used the side door since it was right next to the patient rooms. Opening the front door, Ichigo was about to ask who was there when he was immediately floored by the person standing with her arms folded across her ample chest.

"Hey Ichigo. Gosh, I haven't seen you in forever," the blonde haired woman waved happily with one hand in a voice that Ichigo had the vaguest sense he's heard before. Whoever the woman was, Ichigo didn't know how she knew him but that was the least of his concerns at the moment.

Ichigo had seen quite a few more than attractive women in his life ranging from Yoruichi and Rangiku to Ragyo Kiryuin. Sure, most of those encounters had involved the woman being overly friendly to him, but he could not deny that he had met a long of attractive women. This blond woman, however, put Rangiku's beauty to shame in the sense that she wasn't trying to be overly sexual about it.

The woman in front of him had twin pigtails that reached just below the nape of her neck and wore a pair of faded red jeans and a white shirt with a pink jacket over it. Smiling as she noticed Ichigo's eyes looking over her body, she sighed dramatically and pouted her cheeks, "Gee, it's almost like you've never seen a woman's body before."

Mentally slapping himself for acting like his dad for a moment, Ichigo shook his head and looked away as a red blush spread across his face, "Sorry about that. I'm not sure how you know me but I'm pretty sure I've never met you before."

"Never met me?" The woman pouted childishly and placed her fists on her hips as she leaned forward, "Gosh, that's quite rude of you to suggest you've never seen me before, Ichigo. I thought I told you our hearts beat as one, you know. So how could you pretend to not know me?"

As Ichigo's mind processed the woman's strange speech pattern, every thought that passed through it ground to a halt as he realized just who the woman actually was. Faster than he ever moved before, Ichigo tried to slam the front door closed on Nui Harime. Hopefully it would buy him just enough time to run upstairs and grab Mugetsu. Unfortunately for Ichigo, Nui had quickly realized what he was trying to do and placed a single finger against the door.

"So you do remember me?" Nui said in her same pattern of speech, which sounded a little odd coming from the woman in front of him. Pushing the door back open with ease, Nui hooked her hand around Ichigo's shirt and pulled him outside, "I bet you're wondering why I'm here."

"Yeah," Ichigo admitted as Nui let go of him. Quickly recovering, he took a step back and said, "But I'm more concerned about why you look like a supermodel!"

Nui looked down at her much more developed body, "The funny thing about Life Fibers is that they can do almost anything you want. After our unfortunate fight during Satsuki's little election, I realized I could never been your loving cousin if I remained how I was, so I forced the Life Fibers in my body to change my body until I actually looked seventeen. I really liked my original body but it was just so small compared to Lady Ragyo's beautiful body. I was so jealous that I just had to have one myself!"

"Ok," Ichigo conceded, "So why are you here?"

"To pay you back for all the help you gave me!" Nui cheerfully clapped as she grabbed Ichigo's hand and began pulling him down the street, "I never properly thanked you for having your friend heal my eye. Think of this as family bonding, Ichigo!"

"Family bonding?" Ichigo tried to free himself from Nui's monstrous grip, "The last time we met you tore out my heart and held it in your hand!"

"Gosh, you're still focusing on the past? Ichigo, that's so unlike you!" Nui stuck her tongue out, "You should know that when a woman changes her underwear, she puts the past behind her. Now come on, I wonder what interesting things we can find around town!"

Paranoid

Here's chapter 31. That review glitch last week really annoyed me. I woke up the next morning and saw I had around thirty reviews for the last chapter but I couldn't see nearly half of them. Luckily I didn't look any or I would be really upset. Anyway, here is the next chapter. There is one thing I should tell you and that is the omake IS CANON! Yes, that means what happens in the canon actually happened in the story. It's really helpful to read for the upcoming Karakura Occupation Arc. Also, this chapter is more than 20,000 words long.

---

...

---

Chapter 31 - Paranoid

"So you see, Ichigo, we're family!" Nui Harime exclaimed excited as she held Ichigo's beating heart in the palm of her hand. With her eyesight recently restored back to normal, she was able to see the look of terror and realization sweep across Ichigo's face.

"Isn't it amazing, Ichigo?" Nui continued off without a single care in the world. Sure she was upset that Ichigo was terrified she was holding his heart, but she knew that feeling would pass once he understood what she was talking about. Even Nui understood that destroying seventeen years' worth of memories and knowledge wasn't a simple thing to do without Mental Refitting and that just wouldn't work on Ichigo for a couple of reasons. Since Ichigo was a Life Fiber Hybrid like herself, trying to weave Life Fibers into his brain would automatically fail as the Life Fibers in his body would reject them. That is not to mention that Nui would never do something so heinous to her favorite cousin. He wasn't a human who didn't matter in the long run. Ichigo was a Life Fiber Hybrid like herself and so Nui would never do anything that insulting to him!

Ryuko Matoi stared at what was held in Nui's hand with a mixture of horror and mute shock. As she desperately managed to push her failing body back onto its feet, which was still immensely weakened from her earlier berserk rampage across Honnouji Academy, Ryuko leaned on her red Scissor Blade as a makeshift crutch. She was confused beyond belief why Ichigo had Life Fibers in his body but that was something she could ask him about later. Right now Nui Harime was literally holding Ichigo's life in the palm of her hand and as long as she could draw breathe, Ryuko was not about to let the Grand Couturier take anymore of her friends from her.

"Hey Mako," Ryuko whispered softly but just loud enough that her overactive best friend snapped to attention. Once she was certain Mako was paying close attention to her every word, Ryuko muttered, "You should get somewhere safe. Nui Harime is extremely dangerous and I have a feeling things are going to get bad again. I... I don't want to see you get hurt again."

Mako Mankanshoku puffed her cheeks out in a caricature of a pout and stepped closer to Ryuko until she was invading her friend's personal space, "The safest place is next to you, Ryuko! I don't remember much from what happened before my crazy dream of death, but I do remember seeing that girl over there appearing out of nowhere in a flash of super speed! Therefore, the safest place would be right next to you!"

Ryuko seemed ready to argue with Mako's insane leap of logic but instead she simply gave a tired smile. It felt strange to realize Mako had a valid point but Ryuko wasn't about to argue. If Mako staying close meant she would be kept safe, than Ryuko was willing to put up with it. With that particular conversation dealt with for the time being, Ryuko focused her ire on Satsuki Kiryuin, but her anger bled away when she saw the look of fear in her adversary's eyes. For as long as Ryuko could remember Satsuki's emotions, when she wasn't staring at everyone with her usual passive expression, consisted of either anger or smug superiority. To see the normally implacable Student Council President looking at Nui Harime with noticeable apprehension began to force Ryuko to question just how dangerous the Grand Couturier truly was.

"Huh? What's wrong, Ichigo?" Nui tilted her head to the side, her blonde pigtails bouncing softly while her eyes seemed to tear up, "You look sad. Is there something bothering you?"

Ichigo gasped heavily, his every ragged breath shortened to the point of hyperventilation, as he stared at his own beating heart held in the hand of a psychotic teenage girl. Damn it, he thought as beads of sweat poured down his face, he should have been used to this sort of crap already. During his short time as a substitute shinigami, he had his body nearly severed in two, a hand shoved through his chest and a hole shot clear through his body from front to back. That is not to mention the countless number of grievous wounds he'd accumulated fighting all his opponents. All of that paled in comparison, however, to watching someone holding his beating heart in their hand like it was nothing special.

"Don't tell me this actually hurts you. Oh! I know what I can do cheer you up!" Nui seemed to find Ichigo's panic-stricken expression disheartening and decided to show Ichigo that there shouldn't be any reason to worry. Stabbing her purple Scissor Blade into the ground, Nui raised her left arm into the air, wiggled her fingers mysteriously in the air and proceeded to thrust her hand into her chest right where her heart was.

"What the fuck..." Ryuko gasped as she watched the Grand Couturier appear to commit suicide with a smile on her face.

Ururu Tsumugiya watched worriedly as her twin dug into her own chest with a cheerful expression on her face. Nui didn't even seem to be the least bit perturbed by what she was doing. In fact, not a drop of blood was spilling out of the Grand Couturier's body from around her hand. As much as she wanted to help Ichigo, Ururu didn't want to risk trying only to end up harming Ichigo in the process of saving him. So with a feeling of powerlessness that was so strange to the normally quiet girl, Ururu lowered her arms with her hands clenched tightly into fists. As she watched Nui dig around in her chest, Ururu vowed to make her move the second she had an opening. This time there would be fight. Ururu was going to kill her sister if only to protect her friends from Nui's psychotic machinations.

"Here we go!"

Nui removed her hand from her chest with a wet squelching noise and brought out with it her own Life Fiber infused heart. As she held the organ glowing purple from the Life Fibers composing it up for all to see, Nui's line of thought revolved completely around showing Ichigo that they were actually family. After all, there was no one else here besides her sister that she could do this to without killing them. Humans were so fragile that it almost brought a tear of pity to the Grand Couturier's eyes when she thought about what was going to happen to them.

"See!" Nui laughed happily as she held her own beating heart next to Ichigo's. As the blue glow from Ichigo's heart mixed and swirled with the purple light her own heart was giving off, Nui stuck her tongue out childishly and gloated, "I wasn't lying when I said we're family, you know. The way our hearts beat in unison is proof that we're family! I really do care about you Ichigo! Family is family, after all, and one should always make sure to love their family."

"Like hell I believe that!"

Managing to pierce through the veil of helplessness that had permeated his nerves after watching his heart get pulled from his chest, Ichigo clasped a hand around Nui's wrist before tightening his grip hard enough that a crackling sound was heard as he temporarily shattered her forearm. Staring straight into the Grand Couturier's blue eyes even as he felt the bones in her arm shift around and regenerate, Ichigo swung Tournesol with the intent of hitting Nui's heart only to be frustrated when the Grand Couturier spun around his attack.

"Gosh, you are just full of energy!" Nui clapped her hands as she let her heart get pulled back into her chest with a faint sucking sound. As she stared enraptured while the veins and arteries connected to Ichigo's heart did the same, Nui clasped her hands behind her back and leaned forward, "So tell me how you feel Ichigo! Since you aren't human, there shouldn't be any reason for you to hang out with them anymore! Let's leave this dull place and go have lots of fun elsewhere!"

Ichigo watched his heart get pulled back into his body before his wound healed up without nary a scar or mark. Even Mugetsu's armor was repairing itself and within seconds was as good as new but was concerned Ichigo the most was how Life Fibers got into his body. It couldn't have been recent or he would have remembered it. The only conclusion that made any sense to him was that he was born with them, which just went and raised a lot more questions.

"Mugetsu..." Ichigo muttered as he stared at Nui Harime, "Are you alright?"

" Yes. My Life Fibers were able to regenerate the damage Nui Harime did to my body," Mugetsu answered with a concerned look in her eyes. It was odd that Ichigo was less concerned with why he had Life Fibers in his body than she was, "Ichigo, why aren't you -"

"There's no time for that now," Ichigo cut off his Kamui with a wave of his hand.

Pointing Tournesol at Nui, who was smiling as she observed Ichigo speak with Mugetsu, he shouted passionately, "I don't give a fuck what my body is made of! I could be made of nothing but Life Fibers but I will always consider myself a human because that is what I am! What my body is made of doesn't change a damn thing, so you can take your offer and go to hell!"

Nui didn't say anything to Ichigo, which caused him to worry more than anything else. She just continued to stare at him with her blue eyes framed in shadow with an expressionless face masking whatever it was she was truly thinking. After a couple of seconds, Nui reached for her purple Scissor Blade and turned around to leave.

"Oh well..." Nui shrugged childishly as she skipped away from the group. She hadn't really expected Ichigo to come to her side right away. If he did, it would really have lowered the respect she had for her cousin. Life Fiber Hybrids were supposed to have strong wills and minds. If Ichigo had caved in the first time she explained everything, Nui would have been really disappointed in her cousin. Turning her head around and blowing a kiss to Ichigo and then Ururu, Nui leapt up onto a piece of pillar and said, "I'll see you around Ichigo, so don't go being a stranger! Oh, and don't worry about me Satsuki, I won't be coming back to Honnouji Academy any time soon! I have much more important things to do now like figuring out what to do with my time. Since I don't want to kill Ryuko anymore, my schedule for the next few days just super opened up, you know."

"What..." Ryuko staggered forward and stared angrily at the Grand Couturier, "... the fuck are you blabbering about now?"

"Humph. Gosh, you really are a rude girl!" Nui pouted before she stuck her tongue out, "But since you asked so nicely, I was planning on donning a disguise to get you to let your guard down so I could destroy your Kamui and kill you all in one afternoon. But you don't have to worry about that anymore! I have no more interest in making you suffer. I have two eyes now and it's all thanks to Orihime, which is such a peculiar name..."

"Nui Harime!"

"Gee, you're really pushy today, Satsuki. Fine, I'll get going," Nui rolled her eyes at Satsuki's demanding tone before she mockingly spat at Ragyo's firstborn daughter and disappeared in a flash of speed.

Once he was certain Nui Harime was no longer in Honnouji Academy, Ichigo allowed Mugetsu to shift back into her normal uniform and immediately felt a wave of exhaustion hit him. He hadn't noticed it while wearing Mugetsu, but his battle against Ryuko had taken a toll on his body. Turning to walk away, his every muscle screaming in defiance at the motion, Ichigo barely took three steps before a familiar voice asked, "Where do you think you are going, Ichigo?"

Satsuki Kiryuin did not like what Nui Harime did to her school at all and she needed to consult with her Elite Four as well as Ichigo concerning what their countermove should be. Nui Harime's behavior was chaotic at best and Satsuki did not doubt that if the Grand Couturier truly wished to return, she would find some sort of loophole to exploit. She had underestimated Nui's cunning too much already and for future encounters, Satsuki planned view Nui as threat she truly was. When Ichigo continued to walk away from her, despite hearing her question, Satsuki decided to ask once more, "Where do you think you are going, Ichigo? Nui Harime may be gone but there are still things left to do."

"I don't need to tell you anything," Ichigo answered coldly, but despite his tone he wasn't angry at Satsuki. He was still reeling from what Nui had shown about his body and Ichigo needed to have some peace and quiet to think more about it. He also needed to call his dad up and demand answers but Ichigo preferred to do that in person. That way if his dad was being annoying he could hit him.

"W-Wait up, Ichigo!" Orihime stuttered as she rushed after Ichigo. After watching everything that happened she could not stand on the sides anymore. The callousness and brutality of Nui Harime's every action terrified her but Ichigo needed her more than ever and Orihime wasn't about to watch her friend just walk away without any help. Easily catching up to Ichigo, she wrapped one of his arms around her neck and suppressed the luminescent blush of embarrassment that threatened to highlight her face red.

"Orihime?"

"You shouldn't keep pushing yourself like this!" Orihime scolded childishly as she made sure not to look at Ichigo's face, "I know I can't say I understand what you feel. Watching someone hold your beating heart in front of your face is like something out of an old movie, but you're hurt Ichigo! Please let me look at your injuries once we get back to your room."

"Thanks Orihime," Ichigo admitted, "I could really use your help."

Satsuki watched Orihime and Ichigo leave before she turned her gaze away toward Ryuko. She knew she should have been disappointed with Matoi's lack of control over Kamui, but after everything that happened in the last twenty minutes, Satsuki couldn't help but let such matters slide in order to focus on more important matters. Watching Matoi lose control and turn into a berserk monster only to regain her mind was one thing, but seeing a girl bring Mako Mankanshoku back from the dead with the ease of breathing was something else entirely.

"You are free to go, Matoi," Satsuki mentioned offhandedly as she forced Junketsu to shift back to its normal military-style uniform. Noticing Jakuzure flying in to pick her up, Satsuki slowly sheathed Bakuzan and stared into Ryuko's defiant gaze, "Due to recent events I have canceled the Naturals Selection. Any infractions you have accumulated over the past week are hereby expunged. I recommend that you use what free time you have to understand just why you are so weak. If you couldn't handle Nui Harime's mind games, then there is no chance you will ever defeat her in battle."

Ryuko grit her teeth and tried to approach Satsuki only for her legs to give out under her. Staring heatedly at Satsuki's back while Mako blubbered about calling her dad, she growled, "Why you..."

Satsuki tuned out the rest of Ryuko's threat as she jumped up into the air and landed on top of Nonon's Symphony Regalia Mark III. Holding onto one of the clarinet thrusters as a wave of exhaustion washed over her body, Satsuki focused her thoughts inwards, "Orihime Inoue seems to be an old friend of Ichigo's going by his familiarity with her frightening powers. Both of them do come from Karakura Town, which is the only city in Japan to not be controlled by either my mother's company or the Takarada Conglomerate. Leaving such a location unclaimed might seriously affect my plans if Ichigo has more allies with other unique abilities. Perhaps I will need to consider revising the Tri-City Schools Raid Trip to account for this new variable..."

---

...

---

In one of the spacious boardrooms near the top of Revocs Headquarters, a young woman with long magenta hair growled angrily to anyone in hearing range as she sat down in one of the plush leather chairs. Tucking her knees up and spinning the chair around out of sheer boredom until she was dizzy, Riruka Dokugamine huffed as she slammed her feet onto the large table in the center of the room.

"God, where is everyone? You would think they would be on time," Riruka growled more from boredom than any true anger. She had no idea why Lady Ragyo had pulled her away from Tokyo back to headquarters and the fact that she only needed to take a one hour helicopter flight instead of an all-day one didn't matter one bit to her. As much as she was loyal to the Kiryuin matriarch, Riruka Dokugamine did not appreciate being recalled without at least a little information. When the only other person in the boardroom did not respond, Riruka's left eye started to twitch before she rounded on him and shouted, "Hey! I'm talking to you, you know, so pay attention!"

Giriko Kutsuzawa reluctantly pulled his attention away from the antique pocket-watch he was polishing, an heirloom from his grandfather, towards Riruka. Unlike the much younger member of Xcution yelling at him, Giriko was perhaps the oldest member of the group. Most people would assume Life Fiber Resistance was higher when one was young but Giriko was the perfect counter example to such a notion. With the hair near his temples already beginning to gray from age, Giriko stared out the full-length windows overlooking the rest of Revocs Headquarters and the early afternoon before calmly speaking, "I wish you would mind your manners, Miss Dokugamine. Lady Ragyo always has a reason for doing what she does and complaining about it would do nothing besides earn her ire. Also, I recommend you remove your feet from the table. Lady Ragyo would be most displeased if she sees you scuffing her property again."

"Yeah... well... who asked you anyone?" Riruka sputtered out indignantly as she quickly moved her feet off the table.

"I believe you just did," Giriko answered bluntly before his expression seemed to perk up. Momentarily looking at his pocket-watch before placing the device into his pocket, Giriko slowly walked over to his seat and sat down before saying, "Ah, it appears that Yukio has just arrived at headquarters. He shall be here in no more than forty-five seconds."

"Your Époque Raiment is as annoying as ever!" Riruka snapped, "How the hell does anything surprise you if you can predict the future? Hey, wait a minute, you already knew I was going to ask that, didn't you? Admit it!"

"It was nothing of the sort," Giriko explained calmly, much to Riruka's growing irritation. Folding his hands under his chin and giving her a sly smile, he continued, "I suppose you wish for me to say that I can read your thoughts or determine what someone is going to do before they do it. Is that correct? The truth is that I have exceptionally good eyesight and noticed Yukio walking into the lobby."

"What? That's impossible!" Riruko jumped out of her chair and ran towards the window. Pressing her face against the glass, smudging it slightly as she narrowed her eyes in order to see better, she eventually turned back around and pointed an accusatory finger at Giriko, "You're lying! There's no way anyone can see anything from all the way up here unless they had the eyes of a hawk!"

"Is she still putting off going to the optometrist?" Yukio Hans Vorarlberna asked as he walked into the boardroom and looked around before shrugging. It was a well-known fact that Rirukia had bad eyes, myopia if Yukio bothered to remember correctly. Every member of Xcution has the best health care in the world and yet Riruka refused to go have her eyes checked. Lady Ragyo had suggested once for Riruka to go and while the magenta haired girl had gone, once she left the eye doctor, she immediately tore up the prescription they gave her. The only reason the rest of them knew how bad her eyes actually were was because Ginjo somehow managed to gather all the discarded pieces of the prescription after Riruka stormed away.

"Hey, how's it going Riruka! Long time no see!"

Riruka froze up with her face pressed against the window. With her nails beginning to leave jagged crevasses on the clear surface, Riruka narrowed her magenta eyes and growled, "I'm going to count to four and when I turn around you better not be there, Shishigawara, or you're dead!"

Moe Shishigawara felt his survival instincts kicking in and he immediately backtracked away from Riruka before sitting down and making sure he wasn't looking at the enraged girl. He might have a crush on Riruka but he wasn't stupid enough to risk dying over something like that. Once he heard Riruka sit down, he glanced over at Giriko and asked, "Yo Giriko, where is Ginjo and Tsukishima? Usually those two are always the first to these meetings."

"I do not know," Giriko admitted pensively, "But Miss Hououmaru will undoubtedly inform us about the situation once she arrives."

After nearly ten awkward minutes of silence, only punctuated by Riruka's valiant attempt to destroy the game console Yukio was playing and failing due to the shorter member of Xcution seeing it coming long before she tried, the doors to the boardrooms opened and Rei Hououmaru walked in. Rei was not just the secretary to Ragyo Kiryuin but also the head of Xcution, the security division created to defend the head of Revocs from any and all threats to her person.

As her white high heels clicked across the marble flooring, Rei headed towards the large screen taking up the entire wall at the far end of the conference table and entered in a very specific set of numbers known only to her before pressing her thumb against the finger scanner. Instantly a large amount of data and charts began to flash across the screen and as Rei walked over to her seat, all the members of Xcution put on their sunglasses as Ragyo Kiryuin walked through the door with the usual intense rainbow light filtering in behind her.

"Good afternoon, Lady Ragyo," the present members of Xcution shouted respectfully while they stood up and bowed in unison at the Kiryuin matriarch.

Ragyo did not speak until she was seating firmly at the far side of the table. Crossing her hands in front of her face and gazing at her assistant with maroon eyes, Ragyo asked, "Hououmaru, have you informed the rest of Xcution about the purpose of this meeting?"

"I did not, Ma'am," Rei apologized, "I was under the impression that you wished to inform them yourself."

"Indeed," Ragyo paused momentarily as her eyes glanced around the table at the five members of Xcution present. Standing up once more and placing her hands gently on the table, Ragyo took a second to think before she began to speak, "As you may have noticed, three of your fellow Xcution members have failed to heed the order to return to Revocs. Hououmaru?"

"Right away, Ma'am," Rei stood up and faced the rest of Xcution. Folding her hands in front of her body, she began explaining, "Earlier this week Jackie Tristan was defeated by an unknown Kamui wearer while working in Paris. She was defeated after an intense battle against this Kamui wearer before her Sanguinaire Raiment was destroyed. Both the remains of the Raiment and Jackie Tristan were taken prisoner by this woman, who we know works for Nudist Beach."

With a flick of her wrist, Rei pressed a button and the screen changed to a full body picture of Kinue Kinagase wearing Danketsu. The reactions of Xcution upon seeing the previously unknown Kamui were common. They all had grown used to the power and respect their raiment gave them but to hear of how a Kamui could so easily best one of them gave them reason to be nervous. Jackie Tristan's Sanguinaire Raiment's overall power was on the higher end and she could defeat most of them in a straight up fight if it lasted long enough. For her to be defeated after being bloodied spoke wonders for Kinue's power.

"Yo, I don't mean to be rude, Lady Ragyo, but shouldn't we wait for Ginjo and Tsukishima to show up?" Shishigawara asked nervously. He may be a member of Xcution but even that wouldn't protect him from Ragyo's wrath if he said the wrong thing.

"Ginjo will not be showing up," Ragyo said coolly, not betraying the anger festering in her heart. As the rainbow light behind her head intensified alongside her emotions, her eyes narrowed angrily, "He has betrayed Revocs."

"My word..." Giriko's eyes were wide in shock while the rest of Xcution apart from Hououmaru were equally stunned. Ginjo had always been the most loyal of them all, second only to Hououmaru in terms of respect and power. For him to betray Lady Ragyo was an unexpected slap to the face.

"I-Impossible!" Riruka shouted passionately, "Ginjo may have been a stuck up prick, but he's not a traitor!"

"For once I agree with Riruka. Ginjo was always one hundred percent loyal to you, Lady Ragyo. What could cause him to commit such a traitorous act?" Yukio felt a weight sink in his stomach and for the first time in memory he found that he lacked the urge to play video games whatsoever. Ginjo had been the one to help train his Fantaisie Raiment to its current state. Yukio would never have been able to join Xcution if Ginjo hadn't helped him push through the Grand Couturier's intense and deadly training.

